At Pepperdine there were experiments and research on the nature of higher consciousness, how the brain intercepts thought, why some brains process higher thought and others don't, how pure diet and water effects the brain, the effects of meditation on the brain, remote viewing and out-of-body experiments. I was programmed to meet with a group in a small room at the University where we watched movies. My attendance was carefully tied to my use in the projects and with Ronald Reagan. There were others in the room robotically watching the movies. They treated us like monkeys.

Telepathic Experiments

Among other things at Pepperdine, tests were done on studying and learning in altered states of consciousness. I began reading endless books on psychic phenomena and began being psychically trained and further experimented on. Each day at lunch I reported to the large cross that graces the hillside at the University, in order to sit in the small area inside and go into a meditative state. I did this each and every day and felt as if I was communicating with the whales and dolphins in the vast ocean that spanned the panoramic view from that location.

Part of the experiments focused on telepathic communication and my controllers were sending messages to me via satellite systems to see if I could pick them up. They tasked me with these assignments that had to be performed in the ocean or near the ocean so it would be easier to pick up the telepathic messages sent over the airwaves that they were broadcasting to me. There were times I consciously thought I was just going to go for a drive, to have the day to myself, when in reality I was instructed and directed to different locations. One day I drove into a remote canyon high in the hills above Malibu. I positioned myself on top of a mountain in my beach chair and sat all by myself and read a book on Edgar Cayce. When I looked to the sprawling mountaintops, my eyes focused on all sorts of satellite dishes and instrumentation on the hill in front of me. After spending a few hours there I returned to my home in Agoura Hills. Later that day, the phone rang. I picked it up and a man asked me questions before saying, "We see you picked up the message about where to go today and followed our instructions impeccably. Good work and be waiting for the next set of instructions." Click, he hung up. Robotically I hung up the phone and went on like nothing had happened. Immediately this slice of reality submerged itself deep within the programmed recesses of my mind, and was kept there until a later time when I was reaccessed.

There were many places I was telepathically directed to in response to messages sent to me by my controllers. Often I was led to believe that incarnate guides and masters were leading me when I was really being led by the men who were instilling these thoughts in order to direct me to various places where they wanted me.

Further Adventures Along the California Coast

The American government seemed to be willing to sell anything, including children, to foreign countries in order to gain monies to fund the mind control and other research projects. Reagan presented it saying that it was the only way we would survive - that we would all be killed by nuclear destruction at the hands of these "foreign morons" unless we were able to have more control, and the mind control projects insured American safety. He made it sound like something the United States had to have to stay a safe and free nation. But the Council knows the bigger picture lies beyond what Reagan thought was "national security." It was really an international takeover by a group of megalomaniacs who have decided to insure the future for their own genetically advanced progeny. From my perspective, it had nothing to do with American freedom or safety. But Reagan was a pawn and didn't have all the information or know about the Council's higher agenda. If he had, he would have known the United States was being duped.

Reagan sent for me and I was picked up, once again at noontime, while I was 'meditating' under the cross at Pepperdine, in order to be taken for demonstration to men from all over. They were usually small groups because Henry or the Council was working that angle, too, putting together different foreign scientists or foreign leaders who would naturally be competitive so they could get the most out of them. Often Reagan, or a military officer, would explain the project to them as a group and they would toy with their national pride and play off their natural competitiveness and ego. Then after the meeting, one of our people would take them aside, into a separate room and tell them we were interested but that such and such a country (Saudi Arabia for example) had more to offer. They worked them like that to get more cooperation in hopes that maybe the leader or scientist would offer more favors, resources, connections, etc., so we would get even more out of the deal. Henry really knew how to work people, and he knew how to be very convincing. He told Reagan and others that it was all for national security, American safety, and these men all believed it, they all thought Henry was so smart and so pro-American, but he never really was. He just talked that way to get people to do what he and the Council wanted. "Reagan isn't a robot, but he might as well be," Kissinger said. I'm not so sure.

During the 80's I was keyed to a computer in my bedroom, where I began to get instructions at home from the Council. I didn't think I was very good at computers since I'd taken a computer class and felt I really couldn't learn the technology. But while the "I," the conscious part of my personality, was unaware of my computer proficiency, other parts were completely in tune! Upon awakening, before I brushed my teeth, I was instructed to report to my computer. It displayed a symbol if I had instructions and was to continue for further instructions. They made it simple for me to access. There were codes for 'regulars,' people I met with weekly, like some of the movie stars in Malibu and Beverly Hills. I was given schedules and lists of people to meet, or to be expecting to meet, and dates to be at certain places at certain times, so I would know to have my hair done, nails polished, what time, location, etc. I didn't any longer have to report to the room at the Holiday Inn; I could get my instructions from home. After the mid 80's, my controllers began accessing me more directly without Craig being so much in charge. They took more direct control.

Often my instructions were to wait in meditation beneath the cross at the University. I was used heavily during this time, and spent less and less time with my family. Men in suits or men that looked and dressed like they were gardeners at Pepperdine would come up to me and give me messages while I was in a meditative state. Later, men in suits would pick me up, tapping me in code on my shoulder two or three times, after which I would get up and go with them. This particular time, the men drove me to weapons warehouses where I delivered detailed messages to arms dealers and recorded their responses to take back. Lots of foreign countries' arms 'deals' took place in warehouses, at least the original dealings. After that I would take the message back and deliver it that night wherever I was directed. Then I would return home in the evening to my family, having thought I had 'studied' in the university library the whole day. Fat chance!

An Iran-Contra arms trade took place in a warehouse in Santa Monica. Nothing was ever to have been traced back to Reagan because it was to have been a covert operation to raise funds for other projects, "research projects." They felt justified in selling arms to anyone, including our enemies, because they felt that the days of armed conflict were over. Instead we could now win wars using our high tech psychological, chemical and electronic warfare, if we ever needed to, and be able to use mind control technologies to insure the enemy laid down their weapons. But in the meantime, we could sell them comparatively obsolete weapons and make money for furthering the research in mind control.

Lots of drug and arms deals took place in warehouses in California, especially in and near Santa Monica and Malibu. A lot of foreign connections were made in order to increase the funds for the continuation of the research projects. And they used the mind-controlled robots they had created to earn money for them. Many, many people are under mind control and have been working for them for years - men and women who are dentists, attorneys, stockbrokers, doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists, politicians, bankers, corporate heads, engineers, newspaper editors or owners, nurses, teachers, principals, etc. etc. etc. And all these programmed people are used to further "the cause," each placed in strategic positions for use by the Council.

The technology available is so advanced that most people couldn't even dream of it. It far surpasses anything yet seen on sci-fi movies or read about in books -- total automation, even of people.

They put mind control operatives into jobs that included travel and then used them internationally to further their cause. They felt there was no way that they couldn't succeed since so many are now under their complete control and are able to be controlled by universal signals, enabling them to put certain words, phrases, or symbols into the current media (movies, television, newpapers, music, etc.) and the mind-controlled robots are programmed to step up their pace. Certain words have been paired through programming to different tasks these robots are assigned to do. So all they have to do is to hear the word combinations, tones, frequency, etc., and they can all be commanded within a very short time to carry out their programmed instructions.

Fun in the Sun?

At other times I would report to Zuma Beach and think I spent the day relaxing in the sun by myself. In actuality I climbed out of my beach chair and walked out into the surf, swam into the waves, sometimes for long distances, easily and effortlessly, as my programming commanded, to meet a boat just outside the wave break. A man in the boat who helped me on board, dripping wet, handed me a towel and once said, "My, but you must be an important person." I couldn't comprehend or respond because I was in total program and this event 'wasn't really happening.'

He drove me to Point Mugu and apologized when due to large surf conditions he couldn't get in closer when we neared the rear entrance. I told him not to worry that I was used to swimming long distances and was adept at swimming waves. I told him I'd just use the waves to get me in easily. I had a program that rendered my body incapable of feeling the temperature of the water, so I could enter very cold water and not get cold. So I dove off the boat in my bikini and swam to shore. There were some pens and an underwater screen that I knew to swim around to get to the shore. I walked onto the beach area, to the cement and the chain link fence, then waited until a man in a white naval uniform let me in and escorted me to an outside shower they used when they swam. He took me inside to a bathroom, where I found a naval uniform, white blouse with navy blue and gold trim, and a white skirt and navy blue heels neatly piled up for me to wear. My hair was trimmed every 4 weeks so that I could just run my fingers through it and it would look okay, since it was naturally curly. The same officer took me through an area where they used a metal scanner on me for security purposes and I had to pass through a light monitor and did so with flying colors. Then I was escorted in to see whomever I was to report to - an officer, Commander, Reagan or sometimes Bush. But this time I was there to meet Reagan and to be demonstrated to a group of foreign scientists they wanted to recruit for research.

I was put into a clear cylindrical capsule, maybe for show, and then Reagan showed these men how I reacted upon command. He demonstrated the use of my mind files by quickly asking me for detailed information and descriptions of schematics. I performed up to speed, dictating to them the elaborate 3-D holographic craft images that I was viewing in my head. All the men clapped. In the beginning they had to condition me to the clapping because it flipped me out and switched me, and then I would be surprised to find myself where I was. Usually after the demonstrations were finished, Reagan would limo me out with him and we went for a quick sexual encounter somewhere, locally. Later, they put me into another car and dropped me back at the beach, where I changed once again into my bikini. Lying on my beach chair, enjoying the California sun, I obeyed my program that commanded, "Slowly come out of the meditative state."

Later when I returned home I would stand in front of my computer and hit the buttons I was programmed to select in order to type in a message or answer from Reagan or whomever I had been with, so Henry would get the message. I don't know how it worked but there would often be an instant reply typed back on the screen, coupled with a command to "erase the day, that it was a relaxing day in the sun and surf."

Working Girl

There were times I was taken by the life guard boat to Point Mugu and escorted to a Captain's quarters to be used. They gave me other clothes to wear and then helicoptered me to Reagan's Ranch, usually for meetings with foreign leaders. And when Henry wasn't there (he often wasn't), I was there standing in for him, but the attendees thought I was a secretary to Reagan. Reagan relied on information I had in my mind files, put there for his access by Kissinger. Kissinger ran large portions of the foreign diplomacy of the United States Government by sending me to these meetings.

Over the years when people like Rebozo, Sinatra and Bush wanted to take me out (kill me), Henry would stop it because he and the Council had worked years, even decades, to set up the connections I had with people. Henry had key robots in key situations so that everyone was working in perfect three-part harmony. I had been put close to U.S. government leaders, British royalty, Margaret Thatcher, and leaders of other countries, and these relationships were "seasoned with time," Henry would say, and so he wanted to keep me in as long as possible. Henry said these relationships were priceless because these contacts knew and trusted me over time, with no ill effects, so in the future they would share information with me about more important things without worry.

Henry had me tested often, especially after the accident and when I began psychotherapy full time. I was breaking down but they were building me back up in other directions without my missing a beat in my assignments. My personalities who were close to foreign leaders had not had the accident and were cut off from that experience. Instead they enjoyed total health and well being in order to continue their work. Different personalities had been created for different leaders so Henry could easily instill new information or messages, yet retain the personality as it had been created especially for the individual leaders.

I was flown by helicopters that took off from naval ships out at sea, into foreign countries to be the connection maker for munitions or drug transactions with various countries - Columbia, Bolivia, Mexico, Jamaica - I can't remember them all. But I was dressed in a military uniform and flown in helicopters down into these places to deliver messages, usually to a man in uniform who was heavily guarded. But here again, they didn't have a clue that our country possessed weaponry that looked like anything but weapons - that couldn't even be seen: invisible weapons that could drop people to their knees and render them incapable of functioning. No need to kill them, just send targeted energy and control their brain wave activity.

I remembered a time when the pilot called to a foreign bank to see if the money was in the account before he would release the sale of weapons. Money was made not only on the sale of the weapons, but even more on the financial arrangements made that created huge revenues from the interest on the loans to desperate countries, willing to pay whatever it took to save the lives of their people. So they paid top dollar for the weapons and paid interest on the loans in addition. All this was planned, down to the instigation of wars that would create an international weapons market. It also kept nations busy buying obsolete weapons America said were the best. We kept them looking the other way as we were secretly using the copious profits from the sales to fund more mind control research, so the plan for the world takeover could be implemented. All this was done by very smart and manipulative people who used very strategic planning. Saudi Arabia and other foreign countries inadvertently funded a lot of NASA research and, when there were arms embargoes or other embargoes, all it meant was the price was forced up and the United States made even more money.

Point Mugu Demonstrations

After demonstrations at the circular arena in Point Mugu, Reagan left in a limo with Secret Service agents flanking him heavily because of the assassination attempt. I was escorted out and after the agents put Reagan into the back of the limo, one of the agents took the passenger spot in the front seat opposite the driver and gave him instructions on where to go. Then, after some of the agents left to report to their next duty, a remaining agent opened the back door and put me in next to Reagan and we were off. The glass was put up between the front and back seats before I got in.

Reagan became very good at saying things to me in order that I might feel like he was being polite, when he was really getting around the fact that I wasn't allowed to eat. One day we were taken to a fish restaurant in Malibu on a Monday, when the restaurant was normally closed, but they opened it for the opportunity of serving the President. Reagan went in first with a phalanx of Secret Service agents flanking him on all sides. You couldn't even see him in the group and after he was seated in a secluded booth in the back I was brought in and they told the waiter I was his visiting niece. With a towel on his arm, the waiter asked Reagan, "And what will the young lady be eating this afternoon?"

Reagan looked at me and I said, "Thanks, but I've already eaten."

Then he made some joke about it as he began eating his fish, carrots, rice and salad. I sat and smiled at him while he ate, and listened intently. When he was finished, the Secret Service took care of the bill and he was escorted back out to the limo in the same way he went into the restaurant - then they put me back beside him. Our next destination was a grouping of small rustic cottages along Pacific Coast Highway. The driver drove around back and the Secret Service agents went to the room first, opened it, checked it out, and then came back to the car. opened my door, escorted me in, shut the door and I waited, parked in robotic mode, while they Reagan in.

After the agents left the room, Reagan commented that he liked the place, that it reminded him of the Ranch. He took my right hand and asked, "Should we do our dance?"

"You bet," I answered. So he twirled me around several times, for programming purposes and then laid me on the bed. I was wearing a white pantsuit with fancy tassels on the front and short white boots. He had given me a Reagan watch to wear for the day, but later the agents took it away. Reagan loved the watch. He unbuttoned my shirt as he lay on the bed next to me and went directly for my belly button and began tracing his fingers around my navel. Waiting for my programming to kick in, he laid on his back for me to satisfy him. Afterwards, he took a short nap and then sent me out to notify the agent who was waiting in the limo. The agent snapped to attention and directed the driver to get into position, and they escorted Reagan back to the limo.

We took off down Pacific Coast Highway again and they stopped to drop me off at a gas station in Malibu, where I met a man in an unmarked car who drove me back to the cross at Pepperdine. When he let me out he said, "Weren't you meditating?" In response, I robotically walked under the cross and sat there again. He yelled, "Not too long!" and drove off. I stood up, totally unaware I had been with anyone, thinking I had only been in deep meditation for a long time. I found my car and drove through the canyon home where, with the help of our maid, I prepared dinner. I was pretty out of it.

I was used with Reagan hundreds of times if not more, ever since I was a teenager. He knew that I had to have time in between when he used my mind files for demonstration or information and sex. So having a leisurely lunch provided the time necessary. A cue or signal had to be given to shut down the mind files and then, from that time on, a certain amount of time had to elapse before sex. Once he was President, the Pepperdine cross served as a pick-up point where I was taken to cabins, cottages, or out of the way homes to be with him sexually after the Council had input me with information for him via my home computer. Many messages were phoned to me by Bob, or more often Henry, when they were of a political nature, because political details were more complicated and took more time than the simple well-grooved routines of sexually satisfying stars or political friends of Bob's.

In the early 80's I also rendezvoused with Reagan for sex on nights I drove off by myself in the car, telling my husband I needed to learn to become more independent. I got in my car and played the 'metaphysical game' I learned from books I was suggested to read. For example, I just drove spontaneously and magically stopped when it 'felt right.' One evening, it just 'tell right' to stop at a very expensive hotel in Santa Barbara and I checked into a room and waited for Ronnie. Naturally, before he got there two men in suits, carrying briefcases full of programming equipment, let themselves into my hotel room and tortured me in preparation for the President.

Another time it just 'felt right' to stop at a large hotel near the pier in Santa Monica, where again, I met with Reagan.

Point Mugu Naval Weapons Station and Dolphins

I remembered being on a gurney at Point Mugu, with a white sheet over my body, a white electrode cap over my head and an IV in my arm. I was hooked up to electrodes all over my scalp and on my wrists and they were having me listen to whale and dolphin sounds via headsets. Huge banks of audio equipment and big tapes on recorders were all running. They often played music or sounds in one ear and tones or word instructions in the other. Sometimes the sound was excruciatingly loud in one ear and nearly inaudible in the other. The words were barely audible but I often tried really hard to listen to what was being played in my ear, though it was impossible to hear. The loudness hurt my ear and the two extremes coupled together nearly drove me crazy.

There were dolphins in tanks at Point Mugu that were also used in research. At times, they also had electrodes on their heads. I think they were attempting to measure thoughts and telepathic communication. At one point they directed me to send a message to the dolphin with my mind, and then listen and decode the language of the dolphin's reply. They tried it with whale language also. The swim programs that allowed me to swim long distances without tiring, were also coupled with the hypnotic suggestion that I was like a dolphin and could swim forever like one.

I think the dolphin research was a secondary project, and among other things was a project to further U.S. Intelligence technology in telepathy. The dolphin research continued because we could communicate long distance with the dolphins, sending messages, and when I received them, I was given a number to call immediately to report what I heard. They paired this need to report with having to go to the bathroom and once in the bathroom I would dissociate, switch personalities and phone in to report, sort of like "ET phone home."

Just a week before my husband and I were getting ready to go on a sailing trip to the Channel Islands, I remembered performing a visualization I was taught, where in my mind, I pictured myself in the middle of a group of dolphin. I performed this whole process in an attempt to actually link up with the dolphin on our trip. Before we left, I told Craig I was going to have a dolphin experience! Low and behold, way out in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, a whole pod of dolphin swarmed our boat. When I saw them coming I got so excited that I slipped on my diving mask, and jumped off the boat into the middle of them. No one on board could believe my impulsive actions! It seemed that time stood still and I felt like I was held in a state of suspended animation as one large dolphin seemed to energetically link up with me. Time seemed to stand still and it was an amazing experience! After that I began to "see light in everything." I still don't have an understanding for exactly what happened, but I began having incredibly prophetic dreams and more psychic experiences. I believe this also was part of an experiment.

There was extensive "dolphin programming" done on me. Movies, stills and motion pictures with beautiful music were shown, administered together with drugs they injected into my arm in order to put me in a state of utter euphoria while I was viewing the dolphin pictures. These movies and other positive stimuli reinforced good feelings that emerged in order to deter me from the Star Wars information. Dolphin programming covered the Star Wars Project. Whales covered a NASA project. This all-powerful programming was meant to keep me from accessing the information stored neatly in my brain away from my conscious awareness.

There were movies I felt drawn to all of a sudden leave my family at night to attend. I went to different new age bookstores or other places where I was told to go to see dolphin movies, some very sophisticatedly created with music. A couple who created and traveled to share their dolphin movie, told the small audience to go into a meditative state and watch the film in order to gain expanded consciousness. The movie contained different geometric shapes shown along with the dolphins in underground cities. The dolphin theme was continued when I was living on the island of Kauai.

President Reagan's project, STAR WARS, was located in my mind files under Dolphin programming. I accompanied Reagan lots of times to Point Mugu and other military bases, but Point Mugu was the original site where I would download top secret information from the mind files, first. Then I was taken to different bases all over, usually without Reagan, to deliver the same information, over and over and over again; all over the world to the major players. The Around the World In 80 Days movie and song was used to cover this activity. So I'd think of that movie and believe I was remembering that instead of my actual assignment. Other movies were used in an attempt to cover and intentionally scramble my experiences. As I retrieved memory of ways I was used, I sorted through the 'movie realities' to discover what actually happened.

Star Wars was a global network working together for global control. This network continued as I was transferred to the island of Kauai where I reported often to Barking Sands Missile Base.

Dolphin Programming and Pornography

Another auxiliary project, one that brought in proceeds, was dolphin pornography. Dolphin porn was filmed in Malibu and in the dolphin tanks at Point Mugu. It was convenient because they had cages already built and so the dolphins could be housed there for use almost anytime. Reagan really loved the dolphin stuff. He watched a porn video of Kelly and I with a couple of dolphins. During the viewing he smiled, patted my leg and said, "I'll be with you later." He wasn't into sex with children and didn't have sex with my daughter. When the film was over he said, "Watching you do underwater ballet is beautiful, but seeing you with the dolphin is out of this world!" He laughed and looked up, like he was seeing a missile or shuttle launch. Lots of dolphin porn was filmed. I believe Bob gave copies of it to Prince Charles, Prince Phillip and Margaret Thatcher, who is a lesbian.

Over the years my daughter Kelly was often programmed next to me. We would be instructed to both touch our noses at the same time and then a shock would be delivered though the electrodes stuck all over our bodies. We both had IV's in our arms and despite the trauma, we were giggling like we were both drunk. She was very young and they continued this over the years. In addition to all the regular programming, they also programmed us to be a mother-daughter sex team. There was lots of programming laid in that made us believe that we were twin souls, "two peas in a pod." I was programmed to believe that half of me was in her and half of her was in me. There was lots of identity confusion. They programmed us to be totally synchronous, so we could flow together and work harmoniously while sexually servicing whomever they sent us to.

Our controllers' used the movie ET as a "screen memory" to cover memory of these actual experiences by telling Kelly and I that we were like ET and Elliot, and if one of us got free the other would die. The message given was, "If you get deprogrammed or a hospital frees you, you will get separated from each other for the rest of your lives. ET almost died and had to go to another planet away from Elliott. A wilted Chrysanthemum flower plant will remind you, it will wither and die if it's off the vine, away from its source."

At three months old Kelly was able to float on her back with no assistance, and further swimming lessons early on enabled her to be an excellent swimmer, natural in the water. She also had programming that enhanced her natural swimming capabilities, enabling her to swim long distances. Kelly was good with the dolphins. She was specially trained this way from the time she was very small.

Years later, in 1993, as I became aware that my children and I had been taken to Point Mugu for programming, I returned, trying to get a closer look in an attempt to understand what these people were doing. But it was heavily guarded; now I know why. Interestingly enough, last year on a plane flight, I had the opportunity to sit next to a man from California. I was spiritually guided to share with him my experience of programming at Point Mugu Naval Base. When I got to the part about the dolphin tanks and banks of recording equipment, his eyes widened and he said, "You must have been there; no one knows about those unless they have been there; it's a classified area." After our conversation he just kept shaking his head.

My family and I bounced from Point Mugu to UCLA for programming often, and when necessary were taken to Edwards Air Force Base for further programming.

The Star-Spangled Banner

Oh, say can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming.
Whose broad stripes and bright stars through the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming.
And the rockets red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there.
Oh, say does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Yeah, it still waves, but not over the land of the free and the home of the brave.

"Fear them not therefore: For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; nothing hid, that shall not be known. " -- Matthew 10:26

Chapter Thirty: UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute

Is It East or West?

I experienced many, many episodes of brainwashing, mind control, electroshock and tortures of the mind at the University of California at Los Angeles, Neuropsychiatric Institute in Westwood. Their involvement was the government's insurance that I would remain functional and amnestic of my use. Dr. Louis Jolyon 'Joly' West's horrific expertise was involved so that I could be used at the highest levels over the years without risk of my breaking down and remembering. Henry sent me with messages to give Dr. West, with instruction in regard to things within me that he wanted checked out. Bob Hope didn't have that connection, only Henry had access to West. I reported there for years but began going regularly after Craig got into University of Southern California Dental School in 1973 and we made the connection in Westwood with Dr. Milo Brooks, my original childhood pediatrician.

Nurses there checked me and wrote notes in regard to my pulse, eye movement, foot responses, etc. In an attempt to scramble and confuse my conscious mind as to who Dr. West actually was, he would cross his arms and point in both directions saying, "Is it east or is it west." And even now when someone asks me for directions and mentions east or west I become momentarily confused and can't give them the directions. Dr. West also programmed me to the red and green freeway on and off ramp signals, by hypnotically suggesting that when I saw the sign upon entering Westwood it would make me switch to the personality who had the information and knew where to go to report into the hospital. After my visit, when I saw the signal on my way home, the sign was to remind me to forget what happened.

I was never allowed to walk near or ever act like I knew Dr. West when I saw him walking in the corridor of the Neuropsychiatric Institute. I was instructed to walk by him with no recognition whatsoever. He was a very large, heavy man, the "big wig" around there, and seemed to be in charge of everything and everybody. I was programmed to report there to see his doctors for many years. There was a younger doctor who put me in an examination room and did lots of neurological testing on me and checked my responses to make sure I was still reacting within the normal range. He also directed me to walk into the hall and go into a bathroom and wait for him. When he arrived he had sex with me and afterwards gave me the suggestion that I wouldn't remember.

There was a room with a two-way window/mirror. After awhile I knew there were others watching from the other side of the two-way mirror, since the doctor testing and asking me questions would occasionally glance up at the window/mirror as if to communicate to those watching - "see, I told you," or "pay attention." They asked me lots of questions and at times I was displayed so other doctors could see how I worked. I was seen as a high-level success since I was so split that I could be used in many different modes without conscious awareness. I had actually been directed to enroll in the study of psychology at Pepperdine University in Malibu. They were concerned that, if what I'd been privy to hearing there at the NPI leaked into my conscious mind, they could have problems. So they had me get my degree in psychology and study enough to make sense should my vast reservoir of psychiatric knowledge and jargon leak into conscious awareness.

They had to check me more often after my accidents in 1985 and 1987. During the time I was a student at Pepperdine University, I was more accessible to the Malibu and Point Mugu areas, and so, available to Reagan at a moment's notice in the Malibu area when he was in California. Occasionally Dr. West would slip into an examining room when the younger doctor was examining me. He explained that there were some things he wanted to see for himself. He was arrogant with the young doctors and very authoritarian. I heard him make condescending remarks about psychiatrists and clinical psychologists as being beneath his level of expertise, since he was an MD neuropsychiatrist. He thought my therapist in Westwood, Stuart Perlman, Ph.D. was uninformed and easily controlled in my therapy in 1988-91, since Stuart didn't consider the biochemical aspects of my case. I reported to NPI on an irregular basis when I was told to report and I took Kelly there when instructed. As my functioning level decreased when my early childhood memories began leaking back into my conscious mind, I was instructed to report more often to UCLA-NPI. They knew the chemical combinations to shut me down at night so that I couldn't access certain portions of my brain and memory during dream state, which I had begun to do. That was why they had me take halcyon with a glass of wine every night during my term of therapy with Stuart. Whatever this chemical combination was, the nurse told me to, "take 1/2 or 1/4 of a halcyon tablet followed immediately with a glass of wine, preferably white, and you'll notice immediate sleepiness and will fall into a very deep, peaceful sleep."

Then a doctor came back into the room after the nurse left, and said, "Repeat the directions to me." So I did and he said, "Exactly right. You're to follow these directions every day in every way in order to feel better. You will not, I repeat, you will not jump off of any building. You will not harm yourself in any way. Do you understand my directions?"

Eyes closed and listening intently to his instructions from a deep trance state, I nodded yes.

He said, "Fine, you may go home now."

And I got up, walked out of the hospital and all the way through the campus to my car that I parked near the library. When I drove past the stop sign on the freeway on-ramp it reminded me to "tuck this experience into the deepest recesses of your mind," and I returned home.

When the memory of events I was programmed to forget began flooding into my conscious awareness, I began responding by wanting to cut, burn myself or jump from the top of a high-rise building in Los Angeles. I just thought I must be really psychologically disturbed to want to do something like that. I simply could not fathom what was wrong with me and why these selfinjurious commands continually caused me to feel like compulsively hurting or killing myself. And I had no way of knowing that my controllers were not actually ready for me to do myself in, at least not until my assignments with them were completed.

Mind Control Tune-ups

There was a surgeon at UCLA who instructed me to drive to the hospital to have sex with him. He had dark hair, lightly dark skin, brown eyes and hairy arms. He was 6' tall, of good build and on the young side. I was instructed to meet him at the doctors' cafeteria. Usually he had on his surgery greens or blues and we would have lunch together. He was a vegetarian, and I watched him eat and later he had sex with me in a small bathroom in the Neuropsychiatric Institute. The bathrooms in the NPI were unisex and he would open the door, wave his hand for me to pass inside, and then he would quickly slip in behind me and whisper, "shhh," so I wouldn't say anything. He switched the light off and began feeling me all over and he usually preferred entering me from behind. As programmed, I smiled and laughed and acted pleased no matter what. He liked for me to give him oral sex in his red sports car, but not when the top was down. For programming purposes, he jingled keys in front of my face and then he'd take me out and sometimes we walked in Westwood or went to lunch in a back booth at The Bratskeller restaurant. He had a good laugh when I told him about my therapy with Stuart. He said, "Dressed in little shorts like that and looking innocent like you do, how do you think he can keep his mind on business?" I laughed and told him Stuart didn't understand. Truth was, Stuart wasn't sexually addicted.

This UCLA doctor took me to different rooms in the NPI for reconditioning and "tune-ups," he called them. One day he lifted me up on the examining table and I was giggling. He said they were taking real good care of me, keeping all my parts oiled and lubricated to keep me in good working condition. There were large tube-like machines that they put me into. When they closed the door, shutting me inside, it made a vacuumlike sound as it closed tightly and it kind of echoed inside. I lay on my back and there was a small square mirror, mounted over my face. I think it was suppose to make normal, regular customers feel safe or less claustrophobic. Although this doctor stayed with me during the horrible tests, he was kind to me most of the time. I didn't like the tests, but he told me what the doctors would do and when. One time two doctors used a scalpel and cut a small incision behind my right ear for something. I didn't know exactly what they were doing to me. They were always testing, probing and x-raying me. They must have a stack of records on me a mile high.

They put me into a machine that was like a cylinder that spun me. I saw lights, and color; blues, pinks, yellow, white, coupled with sound and electroshock. I watched and recorded in my photographic memory as the doctors in white coats mapped my forehead and face and attached wires to me. At this event there was a whole room of people sitting still like zombies, all with our heads totally mapped out. Each mind-controlled individual has code numbers that follow them no matter what research projects we were assigned to. They were studying our brains in all different contexts, in all different environments, with different stimulation. They were also studying the genetic effects. They studied a wide and varied range of the effect of environment and genes on a persons brain function, their life function, their longevity, and their productivity. They monitored brain function by reading EEG printouts taken from electrodes placed on my head, and registered and mapped lots of data that was inputted.

Mind Control Technology of the Future

There were lots of times they laid me on a gurney and injected me with drugs, and then the doctors talked to me while I was under the influence. There were many doctors at UCLA who knew all about mind control and were well-trained for the technology of the future. They were told they were specially selected because of their intellectual abilities "to participate in an effort at world peace in the only method known to man." They were trained in the latest methods in how to program and operate under mind control. There were lots of doctors involved, different ones at different times in different places. I was "demonstrated and modeled" often over years for their learning, understanding, and financial benefit. There were demonstrations for doctors, scientists, prison officials, and other professionals who were selected to receive this top-secret mind control information.

Reagan was involved in this endeavor for years, ever since he was Governor and because he was cooperative and "went along with the program." Then in later years, as President, the amount of people who witnessed the demonstrations grew as the plan for the New World Order grew closer to implementation. Those who were brought in to see the mind control technology could never go back to not knowing. They needed an army of professionals to carry out the plan and the numbers of people involved increased dramatically in the 80's after Reagan and Bush got into office and cooperated to the fullest.

During Reagan's administrations the doctors at UCLA did tests and demonstrations in front of other doctors explaining how I worked, but they called this "studies" of the mind or brain. They didn't refer to any of it as mind control, but instead gave it the catchy name "behavior modification." They had a circular arena where they conducted the demonstrations while I laid on a table or sat in a chair naked, responding like a puppet to their cues. The demonstrations involved simple mind control techniques as well as telekinesis. Once the doctor directed me to bend a spoon across the room with the power of my mind. They told me to see the spoon bend in my mind and to focus solely on this thought to see it, and hear the words that played in my mind; then the spoon would bend and sometimes it would even move and fall off a table from across the room. Once I was programmed to hold out my hand with a key in it and with my mind I bent the key. I curled it all up while I held my palm and fingers still, my mind totally focused on the key. Most people have no idea the power a focused mind has. The doctors watching would gasp. They also programmed me to start a fire from across the room with my mind.

Large grants were given to doctors who wanted to do further research into the power of the mind or the mind/body connection, or studies of the brain. During one such demonstration, a group of doctors witnessed the presenting doctor give me the hypnotic suggestion that I would not be burned. He held a lighted match to my arm, and just as he said, I didn't get burned. One particular doctor filed by at the end of the demonstration to get a closer look at my arm to see if, indeed, I was not burned. After viewing my unburned arm, tears welled in his eyes, and in Catholic fashion he performed the sign of the cross on himself and said, "Forgive us," and walked away.

Over the years, most scientists and doctors didn't respond as this sympathetic, compassionate, scientific human being did. I believe that many were uninformed as to the level of the mind control experiments and usages, and did not know exactly how the mind control was accomplished. But my controllers were well aware of these technologies and used them to have me appear as "supernatural" to people they wanted to influence. They could pre-program in these manifestations and have them occur seemingly spontaneously without outside interference. This was how they rigged so-called miracles for the Pope and other Catholic leaders at the Vatican. They programmed in 'miracles' like making my hands bleed at the palms like Christ did or making me speak in high Latin tongue to the Pope or Bishops, delivering messages that dropped them to their knees, kissing their rosaries or necklaces or my feet. I didn't know what they were saying to me because I didn't really know Latin. They, like many others, were open to these miracles delivered to them on what they thought were the 'wings of angels' (me) to influence them. They thought I was some oracle delivering God's messages or angelic messages. I even delivered messages to Reagan with a religious theme, but it only worked on those who were religious.

I went between UCLA and Point Mugu Naval Base often for this technology. Point Mugu had large banks of audio equipment, dolphin tanks, and a pool, and UCLA had brain-testing equipment, MRI, and virtual reality gear.

Chapter Thirty-one: Weaponry Technology of the Future

Kissinger and Nixon Visit the Reagan White House

Nixon and Reagan talked a lot together. I know because I was there a number of times when that happened. They even talked at the White House after Reagan became President. One time, Reagan was sitting at his desk in the oval office when Kissinger escorted Nixon in. Kissinger greeted Reagan by saying, "Mr. President, Dick is here to talk with you. He has some very useful information on foreign policy that will help us." Then he added quietly, "Now I know as you do that no one is to know where this information came from, but I thought you should be informed."

"Sure, have a seat Dick." Reagan said. Nixon smiled awkwardly as he held out his hand to Reagan.

Initially, Reagan didn't seem too happy, as if he had some reservation, but appeared to quickly work through his feelings, and gathering more acceptance, reached out and shook Nixon's hand.

Nixon said, "I have information on some key foreign policy that needs to be implemented before the year's end to insure smooth diplomatic relations with Russia and Saudi Arabia and a few other minor European Countries." Standing there in his light brown suit, Nixon looked pretty nervous.

Kissinger said, "This information may be key to unlocking broader and deeper foreign relations, especially with the Soviets."

Reagan leaned back in his chair and clasped his hands behind his head. Then, he closed his eyes. I could see what he did because Henry had placed me off to the side by the wall on a wooden bench, in my "parked" mode, waiting for further direction.

"Russia will be an ally if we can provide the following." Kissinger said.

"Guns (munitions), corn and," Nixon added, following his comment with a laugh like this was absurd or something, "they would like free surplus wheat and grain - whatever we have in the stockades. We wouldn't have to go to any expense. These surpluses have already been subsidized by our government, so there will be no further cost to us. It's all just a layout on paper with no money exchange, just surpluses in exchange for information."

"What sort of information?" Reagan asked.

"The sort of information that is held in top secret abeyance. It will have to be approved by the higher-ups." Nixon said, continuing, "If we don't agree, there could be dire consequences for our country. The higher-ups said we have no idea the havoc that will be created if we don't comply with their requests. There's little to lose - just some excess surpluses."

"So you're saying I need to authorize the transfer of these surpluses?"

"Yes, Sir," Kissinger said, "the others will take care of this information on their end. You need not be worried with the details, they will be taken care of and if there are any loose ends, I will personally see to it that they are wrapped up." He handed Reagan a piece of paper to sign. "We need your authorization for the shipments."

Reagan put on his glasses, picked up a pen and signed the paper Kissinger set before him. "Dick, I appreciate your help in this matter. Foreign policy always came so naturally for you and I appreciate your continued interest." He leaned back in his chair again.

"Anything I can ever do to help." Nixon said, standing and offering his hand to Reagan again. Then he turned to Kissinger, shook his hand and left saying he would see himself out the side door.

Henry sat down across from the President, leaned forward and with great seriousness, looked down at his folded hands, "I don't have to tell you how damaging this would be to the American public if it got out that Nixon was advising us on foreign policy."

"No, no of course not Henry. Look, I have a meeting at 10 with the White House Staff. I appreciate your help with this foreign policy. We all have our strengths and weaknesses." He smiled apologetically to Kissinger and reached out to shake his hand good-bye.

Henry stood up, shook Reagan's hand, completing the handshake by putting his other hand over the top of their handshake. I don't know what that meant, if anything. Then Kissinger nodded to me and we walked out to a waiting black limo. Lots of times in DC I waited in the limo for Henry while he went in and out of places. We were all over the place. Henry had keys to lots of offices. I don't know why, but he did.

Lots of times I sat in on the meetings Kissinger had with Reagan and others, so I could report back to the Council (in a debriefing) accurately, exactly what was said and done at different meetings.

Arms Distribution - Guns for Drugs

Some countries wouldn't take anything except guns in exchange for their drugs. Reagan knew all about it--Costa Rica, El Salvador, Jamaica, and other countries. Reagan cooperated with the Council fully, doing everything they asked. He okayed American ships to meet with Soviet tankers to exchange guns. Sometimes drugs were laundered through several foreign embassies so they couldn't be traced to their original source and then the American guns would be transferred to Russia, China, Japan, etc.

The Council members were kingpins of drug coordination and money laundering down through specific American corporations in order to get political favors and laws enacted in their favor to keep their top companies. AT&T was one of them. The Council insured the financial success of these companies so they could continue using them as fronts for their operations. The Council is at the top of the powerbrokers. Each President went along with them or they are killed like JFK was.

My mind files were filled with information on guns, armories, and statistics on where the guns were located and the inventory. Involved foreign dignitaries or leaders could access this information in my mind files so they could know what was available to trade, then they would send me back with a message regarding how much the gun supply could wield or buy in exchange for drugs. Then I would be debriefed by the Council and prepared with a return message for the foreign leaders. From what I witnessed, illicit drugs and gun running backed much of the American economy.

Reagan was not in any way unaware of the arms deals we made with foreign countries as he publicly portrayed. I know because the Council sent many arms trade messages through me to him and then he would give me the message and the Council would retrieve it through debriefing me. This was a message I gave him from the Council: "Mr. President, the Council sends their amicable message to you. Arms will go to Iraq in exchange for hostages." Sometimes after I delivered the recited message, Reagan got really nervous and paced back and forth. But finally he would give his answer for me to take back to the Council. Usually it was just a "yes." Lots of times Reagan made the decision without Bush's knowledge. For some reason I felt like Bush really knew what was going on. Reagan always seemed so uninformed, he never seemed to know what was happening and he made many decisions blindly without knowing the details.

More on Guns and Drugs

There were wooden boxes of munitions on a dock that were to be loaded onto a large ship. I was there to make sure the load of "sugar" got on safely and that payment was made. The men accepting the shipment waited until the men in black police uniforms walked away and then they opened one of the boxes and lifted guns, rifles, and hand grenades out of the packing. Packed on top were bags of sugar to make it look like the whole shipment was sugar, but it was only a cover for what was really underneath. This was a government operation - a highly camouflaged, covered up government operation. A group of American officials were selling munitions to a nation we were at war with. It made the United States government lots of money. They didn't even care that the guns were being used to kill our own soldiers. Noriega was involved. It was a dangerous operation. The orders were that if there was any chance of being caught, the shipment was to be thrown overboard. It was too risky to get caught.

There was also a naval officer that was involved. He was shaking hands with a man that I came with and they were talking privately out of my earshot so I couldn't hear. The officer gave commands to one of the members of the crew to unload the shipment onto the docks and then they rolled the cargo down the docks and stacked it on large carts. I climbed aboard the ship and we left immediately. There was a window of time that was opened to get in and out to complete the deal. It began at 0800. So we left port immediately and were quickly underway. There were some kind of devices on board that rendered our ship untrackable at sea, so that they could not be detected. This way no one would even know that the United States ship had been to the port. Sometimes the big naval or other kinds of ships would unload their cargoes onto smaller ships that would then go into the port to deliver the goods. Our government had very dirty operations. I was sent to deliver messages, many of them in foreign languages to whomever the delivery was going to.

Another time I was used in a drug operation, I was delivered aboard a large Navy ship to an Admiral who was standing behind his desk giving directions to a lieutenant. The blue eyed, heavyset admiral was dressed in a white uniform and hat with navy blue and gold trim. He had on black patent leather shoes and was very brutal. I think his name was Brimhall or something like that. I was ordered to give him oral sex and some of his ejaculate fell onto his shoe. For that he slapped me with the back of his hand so hard that I fell backwards.

We were going out to sea and when we neared Mexico we went into port for "supplies," which meant a drug transaction. There were transactions in the Caribbean, also usually aboard Navy ships. I was on board to service the Admiral and then complete a drug transaction. The Navy ships went the route and to destinations of a major drug cartel. What looked like the defense of our nation or training of our troops was really drug transportation that made lots of money for the U.S. The Presidents were usually well aware of this business. The revenue was justified as funding large projects deemed necessary for American defense. It was all a vicious cycle of lies and manipulations.

I was sent ashore to meet "the man with the parrot" and was usually dressed appropriately for him to recognize me. They dressed me with a parrot shirt to match the parrot man I was meeting. The messages were always different; sometimes I told the man to meet us with the stuff at 0800 at a certain latitude and longitude out at sea off this or that coast. Lots of the deals and the boarding of goods (drugs) took place out at sea. This way no one could detect illegal drug trafficking, as there was no one to monitor the transactions late at night, out in the middle of the ocean.

Everyone in the government that held any position of power was well aware of these drug transactions and their importance to our country's economy. In part, this is what keeps America head and shoulders above the world economically. These ships went all over the world Mexico, Caribbean, Costa Rica, Haiti, Cancun, Cozumel, Cabo San Lucas, Panama, Brazil, even Germany and USSR.

For years, I was used off and on to carry messages. They used lots of different slaves for these activities because, otherwise, someone could get familiar and be detected. I know because I overheard them talking about that type of security and how important it was for the Lieutenant Colonel to widely vary the "pigeons," used for messages. I was taken from my home late at night and boarded onto a ship, did my assignment, and was returned back home late at night. I was just phased back into bed with my husband, as if I'd never left. I was kept at Point Mugu or other bases in isolation, and then debriefed before I was driven home in a sedan to Agoura Hills. Sometimes I was helicoptered to Point Mugu, but always transported late at night. During the drug transports I was always assigned to top men on the ships with orders to please them in any way they desired. Then I was usually taken into the Admiral's or Captain's private quarters. These rooms were nice, but small, and I was told to wait for further instructions or to have sex with him. There were portholes in the room and it was simple but very expensively done, as far as the materials: nice wood, brass and usually decorated in red, white and blue. Sometimes after sex I would sleep in his bed with him until it was time for the transaction. Then he would wake me up and instruct me in what to do, what to wear, what to say. Sometimes there were palm trees on the beaches where we dropped off a load of 'goods,' on a remote beach. It was always at a different time, different location; so no one could detect or monitor what was occurring. Sometimes the coast guard in certain locations was involved but not on a regular basis. They must have been individually involved.

On many of these excursions, other factions would interrogate me in an attempt to find out information. They would use bright lights, exhaust me, yell questions, withhold food and pull my hair or take hold of my hair and smash my face into a desk in an attempt to gain information about my job, why I wouldn't talk, who I was working for, endless questions. But nothing would come of it, because they didn't know the keys and codes to access my mind file information, nor did I consciously know.

Some of the big deals I witnessed, involving more international figures, took place in the Hawaiian Islands, like on Maui. And the deals involving Mexico took place in Mexico, often in Mazatlan. While vacationing one year on Maui with my husband, I was taken away from him by men in suits, put on a commercial airline by two Secret Service agents and flown to a location like Jamaica or Costa Rica to deliver a message. I was given a clever disguise, dressed in a tourist costume - a fruit patterned skirt and blouse, with a big straw hat with fruit on top of it, and made to look like an overweight old lady. The place I was taken to was about an hour's drive from the airport by limo, and I was delivered through a dirty and poverty-stricken town full of dark-skinned people, to a harbor seaport, then taken down to the docks to make the deal. This way the person I was meeting on the ship could simply cut the deal and leave by ocean without ever needing to be on land. There were palm trees by the ocean and the coastline area was pretty much uninhabited toward the port. It was a rocky seacoast in many areas with few sandy beaches. I was instructed to deliver the message only to the man in the white uniform who took a hold of my left hand and elbow and asked me if I was lost. A man in a white Naval uniform and hat brought me on board the large ship, momentarily, to receive the message I delivered, "Sir, the bird is flying north." Then he quickly shuffled me off the boat and the Secret Service agents took me away by limo and I was flown back to Maui. I was kept in isolation, without food or water for a day, before I was returned by my husband's side at the pool where we were vacationing at the Hyatt Regency in Maui.

Weaponry Technology of the Future

While money was made during those days from the sale of weapons, the Council said guns and munitions would be obsolete by the year 2000. The frequency warfare technology they possess will make guns and munitions powerless because those wielding guns will have their brainwave frequencies altered by the new weaponry to such a degree that they won't be able to think to commit a violent act. Society is being kept unaware of this until these self-appointed overseers of our world have completely stepped up the mind control within the populace. Then the people won't care about having obsolete weapons because they will be under the total lull and control of specific, targeted electromagnetic frequencies. Individuals won't be able to commit crimes against the populace. My controllers spoke about this as, "creating peace on earth, contemporary style." (For more information on this still classified technology read: Angels Don't Play This HAARP, Nick Begich Ph.D.)

Kissinger Displays His Robot Technology

Over the years, Henry had me programmed to deliver information regarding the mind control robot technology to different groups of men. These meetings took place my whole life. He or a spokesman introduced me and explained to the audience, which were usually small, pre-tested groups, that I would deliver a very powerful message.

But, the most important message they were eventually to take away with them was that I was a human robot delivering highly technical information and that this was to be the technology of the future.

While I was being introduced, I sat at the front table looking straight ahead, waiting in "park mode." Then I went to the front and initially explained, "Due to the inherent leap in technology, what you are about to see and witness is very real. Along those lines it would be most appreciated if you would hold all of your questions until the end and our moderator will be more than happy at that time to field any questions you might have. Thank you and now we'll begin." Certainly, I was delivering this message verbatim, as preprogrammed and couldn't have thought on my own to answer any questions.

And so I began, "The history of controlling man is old. Could we have the screen turned on please?" I asked the man at the projector.

"As you can see, man was attempting to control his fellow man even in the cave man days. Actually this attempt for control goes back even further." Meanwhile the moderator flipped to a slide showing androgynous man pulling a woman by the hair where he wanted her to go. "So," I continued, "man's control of man is ancient. What is on the cutting edge of technology today is what we choose to call, 'harnessing the mind.' Who among us wouldn't like to be able to have instant recall? Or to be able to read and retain information or documents." At this point they flashed slides pertaining to whatever career paths these men were involved in and I had documents pertaining to each field, e.g., legal documents for attorneys, medical reports for doctors, case histories for psychologists, account ledgers for bankers.

"Who wouldn't like to have at your fingertips all the millions of minute details we find we need everyday to function efficiently in our places of employment? Gentlemen, you are not alone in your needs and desires. Since I have not seen a single hand in the room raised, I take this to mean that you, too, could highly benefit from this new state-of-the-art technology in the future of mankind's ability to think clearly, efficiently, and above all, with complete accuracy."

"Sound too good to be true? You will be pleasantly surprised to find that this technology is not only true, but you also could benefit from its use. Other corporations, (or if it was a professional group, I'd mention doctors, dentists, lawyers, etc.) around the country are at this time utilizing many facets of this state-of-theart technology. The computer will one day soon be hardware of the past and the companies that have this new technology will be among those on the leading edge. It will be impossible to compete with individuals or corporations who are currently adapting to our new modes of technology."

"Now, I'm sure you didn't get to your current level of success by using outdated modes of operation. Why no, I'm sure each of you was among the first to own the latest in computer technology. That is what sets you apart from business people (doctors, lawyers, CEO's, etc.) who did not have the foresight that you had to opt for the latest technology has to offer."

After listening to this whole spiel, they were taken to their first demo, and afterwards they were asked to fill out a brief questionnaire. They were asked to fill it out in order to insure the perfection of future presentations. The questions were slanted toward gathering data -)n each participant's attitude, openness, etc. They were also told they had the right to remain anonymous; however, they were told there was no risk due to the fact that no one else would have access to these questionnaires.

As a final note, I said, "And to thank you, we will be sending every person who takes the time to fill out this questionnaire a very special booklet we've been privy to call, "How To Insure Success in Business: Without Burnout." So gentlemen, please loosen your ties, sit back, relax and enjoy the final portion of today's presentation.

At which time, they were shown some more slides and given a little more information.

After 12 such sessions, if their returned questionnaires kept indicating they were "remaining on track," they were introduced to the higher level of being let in on the secret. Then they were told that I was "a robot" and they too could own one, at very little cost to them. At that point they were asked to, "just sign here for more information and one of our representatives will be glad to further assist you."

These demonstrations took place all over the world, for all different professions, including the scientific research and medical communities. Even as a child of eight, Henry said I demoed so well and had such an enormous impact on audiences that they would have their mouths gaping open, and Henry was so proud of himself. By the time I was eighteen, I had spoken to groups all over the world.

Over time I went to "mini-conventions" for people who owned slaves, where slave tips, slave toys, slave trades, etc. were exchanged amongst this certain group of men. "Men in the know" is how they referred to themselves, who met to share their latest information.

I was there to hand out brochures before I was demonstrated. People loved the continual line of programmed jokes that I spewed out and thought it was hilarious that I was handing out my own brochure, miming like 'a perfect robot.' At times both men and women were in attendance. There was some other business I was promoting, initially - not mind-controlled slaves - but that was what really was being promoted under cover at these meetings. Certain pre-selected men were given large wooden, golden keys, each displaying a phrase or word to unlock me. These individuals were allowed to unlock and use me for the evening at pre-specified times. It was explained to these so-called gentlemen that these "keys" only worked for this one night. It was further explained that due to the kaleidoscopic programming effect, that the keys would revolve a band on the outside of my skull and would stop in just the right place so the eyes of the personality specifically keyed would lock in each and every time. I think those men who were given keys were the only ones allowed to know the true nature of my mind control programming. They must have been interested in purchasing "their own." But publicly acceptable business also took place at these events parallel to this subterranean line of business, so that money was made from all angles.

In later years, Kissinger used the movie Working Girl as a scramble in an attempt to keep these memories from being clear to me. It was not only used for me but for lots of other corporate robots like me. Henry said it should sufficiently remedy any problems or questions... should any of us robots begin to remember.

Chapter Thirty-two: Robot Breakdown

The Second Accident on April 12 was No Accident

On April 12, 1987, at 9:15 a.m. I had another accident. I couldn't fathom how or why I could have another accident at the same precise date and time, two years later. But, after smashing my head into a tree and breaking my back in a horseback accident I began flooding with more memories of the past and began having even more trouble functioning in my day to day world of responsibilities. I was forced to take more time out to rest and heal in my conscious life. I sought more chiropractic care and began deep healing with prayer, herbs, and increased body therapies. During this time of physical healing I also grew spiritually closer to God and gained the strength of perspective I would need to face further reality.

A Visit to the Mental Hospital

It took a couple of years but as my programmed systems began breaking down, causing memories of my past to begin flooding uncontrollably into my present awareness, I became increasingly more dysfunctional. I had trouble performing my daily duties as my past came crashing into my awareness, often with many memories flooding in at the same time. I had trouble dealing with my outer physical reality, because there was so much going on inside my head to distract me. Paying attention simultaneously to both inner and outer realities was a challenge, especially with my programming throwing up hypnotic commands to become confused, have a migraine, burn or kill myself, or redirect my thoughts in another direction my controllers dictated. After numerous memories of abuse by my father, mother, brothers and others, including ways in which I myself was used within the system to abuse others, I asked my therapist, Stuart Perlman, to call Department of Human Services (DHS) with me and report all of us. He did as I asked and I gave lengthy interviews to authorities, hoping someone would help me stop this abuse and insure that my children and the other children in the family would be safe.

As I became increasingly more dysfunctional, I was admitted to a mental hospital in Westwood for ten days and got another dose of reality. While in the mental hospital, a suited man entered my room at night while I was in my bed sleeping. He opened the door, came in, sat down on my bed, hypnotically commanded me, looked around to insure we were alone, then quickly put a tourniquet on my arm and injected me. Very quietly he said, "You are safe, you are very, very, safe. Nothing you are remembering is real; it's all just a bad nightmare. Close down section 34 and remember you are safe, very calm and very safe. You don't need to worry about anything anymore, everything's been handled." Adding another vial of the drug to the syringe, he injected it into my arm and began round two, "Stuart Perlman is your friend. He is your trusted friend helping you through these difficult times. He and he alone can help you, no one else can quite fill his shoes and every time you look at his shoes when he is sitting in front of you, you will remember this. Now you will sleep very deeply and when you wake you will not remember any of this or the sound of my voice, but now you will sleep very, very deeply. Your children are safe, you are safe and you will rest and sleep very deeply. Remember, you are very safe." When he was through, he took the needle out of my arm, put all of his paraphernalia into a black doctor's bag, and quietly slipped out of the darkened room. As usual, I viewed all of this from other personalities within, ones that were not asleep.

What these programmers need to know is that when a person has multiple personalities, especially personalities that have been programmed to have superb memory capabilities, those personalities can and do take note of everything that is occurring. If the presenting personality is drugged, there are still other personalities left inside, untouched by the drugs who 'take note' of what is happening. Due to this, myself and others have recovered volumes of experiences, as we healed and reintegrated, in order to be able to put together this larger picture to present to you. Their misuse of the technology failed. Sorry Henry, back to the drawing board. I guess you need a further distilled diagram, because, Henry, your security system was not locked up as tightly as you might have thought.

During my hospital stay, I brought up the issue of my children's abuse. To my utter disappointment, DHS failed to take seriously the allegations of abuse to the young members of our families. Further, as I was released from the hospital I leaned over the desk to see my medical chart, which read, "Delusional." No one took me seriously then. I hope you the reader will now.

Further Monitoring at UCLA

My visits to UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute (NPI) occurred more often after my 1985 and 1987 accidents, and the ensuing head and back injuries. I waited in a room lined with chairs and, when called, I robotically walked where they told me to and did everything just like they requested. If they said, "take off your blouse," I did. Anything they asked of me, I did. They put me into an examining room, and tested me neurologically, saying things like, "touch your nose, move your eyes up to the left," that sort of thing. Then they tested me walking, bending over, etc. I saw the white uniformed doctor refer to a list in a little notebook. He asked me questions to which I replied robotically. He asked me, "What is your name? Where do you live? Who is your husband?" All these were standard neurological examination procedures.

Then an older doctor came in and told me to follow him into a different room. Things got more technical then. There was a room full of large recorders, the reel-to-reel type with a chair positioned next to them. He sat me down next to the equipment and gave me long round bars of metal to hold in my hands. They were always testing different things. I didn't know what, but tried my best to do them "right." If I did it wrong they got angry and then I got hurt. The doctor hooked me up to headphones and told me to hold the metal bars real tightly, and I was instructed to go into a very deep trance state.

After certain word phrases, I was electroshocked. I never knew when it was coming and was told not to let go of the metal bars. When the phrases didn't apply to me, like for instance, "I'm an Eskimo" there were no shocks. But after a true statement that was applicable to me, I was shocked. Some things felt very personal and could have only been applied to me. Like, "I love my husband Craig." Or, "I am a good mother," or, "I am happy in my life; therapy is making me a better person." All kinds of statements like that were played through the headphones. Sometimes they shocked my feet instead of my hands or my head. Things varied often and so did the people administering the 'tests.'

At other times a white van picked me up from the streets of Westwood, after a therapy session, and took me to UCLA. Sometimes they did stuff to me right inside the van. They had equipment inside and they said things to me and delivered electroshock. It happened often when I was in therapy with Stuart, in Westwood. The van would pull up to the curb and when the driver leaned toward the passenger window with his arm across the seatback and looked at me, I was programmed to come toward the van and step inside. The driver's uniforms varied, like a mail delivery or some bogus repair service, and the man accompanying him would do the work on me. Sometimes they would initially slap me around. I never knew what they were going to do, it was always different and I was caught off guard and couldn't protect myself. I couldn't ever think to protect myself, even if I knew it was coming. They caused all sorts of violence in order to keep me under control; they tied me up in a chair and put a gun to my head, or raped or tortured me in some other way. They put knives to my throat - anything they thought would scare me. At times there was a large mirror in the back of the van and they would stand me in front of it, tell me I was so and so, and give instructions to that part of me to do jobs or report things. There was a wide variety of electronic equipment in the back of the van. They injected my arm with some drug and then showed me clips from a video. One time they showed me a clip of a person unscrewing a big round cap that let water into the room that they told me I was in. I was told it was real and that I would be safe if I didn't remember the past. In this virtual reality session they told me that the water would come over my head and I would drown if I continued to remember. All this was done in the name of "national security." There was great personal confusion over being in charge of my body or its safety, as a result of all these tests. It was like my mind was removed from my body and acted separately, and it was very scary because I wasn't able to be there to protect or help my own body, or my children's.

When the men in the van were finished with me, they pulled. up next to my car, which was parked in Westwood. When I saw my car I was programmed to switch to Sue and not remember anything that had just happened, but the other personalities were given the hypnotic suggestion to remember to keep their instructions hidden and separate from Sue. The men told me to get inside of my car, sit there for awhile and drive home when I was ready. If I was running late they told me an excuse to deliver to my family when I got home. This happened more often and the trauma got more intense while I was in daily therapy with Stuart and Margie.

Another time at UCLA-NPI, I was sitting on a stainless steel table where they had been photographing my brain from a x-ray machine that stopped and shot pictures in four separate places as it scanned my head. The doctor said my brain was in a perfect state for some sort of link up. Next they laid me on a stretcher and tied my ankles and wrists to the bars on the side then they slid me naked into a long silver metal tube. They placed a small black mask over my eyes just before they shut the door. I thought maybe they were going to kill me but they said only parts of me died for others to be reborn. A continuous cycle of life and death for personalities kept things in order, preventing chaos from an overcrowded internal system. This was how my personality system was kept neat and clean, maintained for their use.

The scientists and doctors turned everything into a study. They merely turned a mind control slave system breakdown or "containment problem" into another project to further their research.

"You have heard that it was said, 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.' But I say to you, do not resist one who is evil. But if any one strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also; and if any one would sue you and take your coat, let him have your cloak as well; and if any one forces you to go one mile, go with him two miles. Give to him who begs from you, and do not refuse him who would borrow from you.

"You have heard that it was said, 'You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.' But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the just and on the unjust. For if you love those who love you, what reward have you?" -- Matthew 5:38

Chapter Thirty-three: Bill Clinton and Hillary

Over the years Bill Clinton surfaced in higher level political circles. At one of Bob's parties Bill was all made up in a Statue of Liberty costume, decorated in red, white and blue, complete with blinking lights. He was holding a torch and he acted feminine. I had to have sex with him later on and it felt confusing to me because it was like having sex with a girl in a man's body. That was strange to me even under mind control, even compared with all the other strange and perverted experiences to which my controllers subjected me.

In 1992, before he was inaugurated, Kelly and I were prostituted to Bill Clinton in Klamath Falls, Oregon. On the ride to meet him, we were told, "Remember Chappaquiddick - that same type of accident could befall you."

When we met Clinton, he said, "Did you know that I am now your boss, and you will do exactly as I say. You are under my command." With a robotical tone of voice he told me to give him oral sex and to get down on the floor where I belonged. Then Kelly robotically sexually serviced him after which I gave him a message before we were let out of his room.

Later on, I delivered messages to Clinton from the Council, from Kauai, before he was President. I was delivered aboard a very large ship, put into a stateroom and told to stay on the bed and wait for him. I did. He slipped into the room without knocking and locked the door behind him. He said, smiling coyly, "I believe you have something for me?" He had sex with me, with my dress and his pants still on. It was a quickie and then I gave him the message. It required a simple answer that I was to deliver back to the Council. His answer was agreeable.

Bill liked to be sung to and have his forehead rubbed. He liked to play mommy and baby baby Bill. He was often very strange.

When it came to Bill Clinton, Henry would stoop low. He even sent up bags of cocaine with me to use when I was with Bill or Hillary in order to get them off guard. Bill and Hillary both did the cocaine. I placed it on a small mirror for them and they had glass nose straws they snorted it through. Bill could do the whole little white pile with one snort. Hillary took two or three sniffs to get all of hers. Then we usually had sex.

When I said certain things, they thought I was a gift from Bob Hope, the entertainer. Bob and Henry's real relationship was kept quiet. The Clintons didn't seem to know that Henry and Bob were working so closely together, one getting me into the White House while the "Expert" Henry Kissinger delivered the goods in order to find ways to hang the Clintons. Henry said, "I want them so badly."

After I was through, two men in black uniforms with yellow-braided stripes on their shoulders came to get me and one stood on each side as they escorted me back to the helicopter that was on one end of the ship. It was a white helicopter. They put me in with the pilot and I was flown back to the small airport on Maui, near the Coconut Inn, where I was staying, as I worked on the writing of my first book, Starshine.

Before he was President, there was an occasion in a large hotel in Los Angeles. The Clintons were already heavily guarded with a whole group of Secret Service agents.

For my use as a sexual slave, I was trained to make love to married couples by always bringing the focus back to them. "Isn't your wife beautiful! Isn't your husband strong," or, whatever statements would strengthen their bond and love for each other, if they were to be kept together. When I got through with couples they were totally enamoured with each other and hardly noticed when I dressed and left the room. I was used in this way with the Clintons. There was usually cocaine, often a gift from someone they knew, routed through me.

After the Clintons went to sleep I left. A man stepped toward me as I exited the room and escorted me down a red carpeted hall, to the elevator, and down to the lobby, as he held my elbow and lower forearm. At this point, another man took over, making a very smooth transition. I was pushed down into a waiting limo (I think it was a black Mercedes), as the man hurried and slammed the door. I was taken to the airport and the driver radioed ahead, and a man met us at the curb and hurried me onto my plane.

Now Clinton is President

Kelly had a school function or a friend's party at the Beverly Hilton. I hadn't seen her in awhile as she was living in California and I was living on Kauai, but I was brought in to help her with "The Prez," who was then newly-elected Bill Clinton. He had a group of girls and women there and that night he wanted only oral sex, along with chocolate and fruit slices. Afterwards, it was my job to redirect the girls back into their social function so there would be no mix-ups.

Sex slaves were used to sexually service both male and female members of the White House when our controllers called for it, and I was not to be exempt. Once when I was flown to the White House from Hawaii, Hillary played what she called "the tease game." She tied me up so she could be safe, she said. When she was through with me she looked at her gold watch, said she had to go, put on her dress and left. I put on my clothes and headed out to the waiting limo to Henry.

Henry always wanted to know exactly what Hillary's verbal responses were to things I said to her and he listened very carefully for speech patterning. They were trying to create a phrase of words that would stop her dead in her tracks when she went to court for the Whitewater incident. They had been planning this one even before Clinton took office. Henry knew and so did his people. They were trying to destabilize the government by ousting the President. Their plan was that "A cornerstone will fall, and further destabilize the American people. First Nixon, now Clinton, thus the people will lose faith in their leaders and the democratic way of life. So they will want to change it and will lean toward World Order." I knew in 1993, long before the Monica Lewinsky affair, that if Clinton was ousted, they had succeeded again in their plan and movement toward the New World Order.

The programs I had for the White House were pretty well-worn and grooved. Henry often rode with me in the limo to the White House if he hadn't had time to load me up beforehand. Sometimes, he wanted to sharpen me up or check my systems. He often went to have a cup of coffee or a cigar while I was doing the job. When I came out of the White House, flanked by Secret Service agents, I'd get into the limo and he would ask me to repeat verbatim what was said. I'd tell him exactly what they said and how they enunciated it. I could record not only what they said, but I could repeat it back just like they said it - tone, inflection, and all. And from that, Henry and his boys could run a voice print; then, using it, they developed a way to control people through their own language patterns. Henry put his cigar to his mouth before saying, "If you can get their patterns, you can control their minds." They put me close to the Clintons so they could obtain speech patterns, information about weaknesses they had and ammunition to get Clinton thrown out of office. They would stop at nothing in their effort to chip away at the Constitution and democracy.

Henry Kissinger hated Bill Clinton, but he especially hated Hillary. He wanted to publicly humiliate and disgrace her by showing that she had illegal investments and that she lied. Henry said, "People (the public) will be manageable after this is exposed."

Al Gore was easy for the Council because I believe he is a robot like me. Al Gore had me perform oral sex on him. He didn't do cocaine, though. He adamantly refused. Henry said, "He's a robot of choice."

I also had memories of experiences where I was at the White House with Hillary, Chelsea and a famous female vocalist, involved in a sex ritual.

My personal belief, based on my experiences, is that over the years, more leaders were under mind control. I believe it to be vitally important to dismantle the system that has created this, as well as gain aid for the victims, but not to further punish or humiliate the victims who are in need of professional help to heal. I know there has been corruption at the highest levels in the White House, and whether compromised through blackmail, lack of spiritual integrity, or mind control, I believe the Clintons are caught in a "Catch-22."

In a society where mind control is insidious, the whole of society is responsible in some way, whether through ignorance, denial, spiritual disintegration or greed. To the extent that some of us are not free, none of us are free. I believe it is God's perfect plan for those able persons to come to the aid of those who are in need.

In the center of the flame there is a hollow place and nothing can burn in this sheltered space.
For the fire builds a wall, scientific fact claims, and insures a safe area in the midst of the flames.
And in the hurricane's fury there's a center of peace where the winds of destruction suddenly cease.
And this same truth prevails in life's tribulations;
there's an island of calm in the soul's meditations.
A place that is quiet where we're shielded from harms secure in the haven of a kind Father's arms, where the hot flames of anger have no power to sear and the high winds of hatred and violence and fear lose all the wrath and their savage course is softly subdued as faith weakens force.
So when the fires of life burn deep in your heart and the winds of destruction seem to tear you apart remember God loves you and wants to protect you.
So seek that small haven and be guided by prayer to that place of protection within God's loving Care.

Chapter Thirty-four: Excuse Me, I Would Like My Life Back

As parts of my personality tried to break free, there were many, many attempts to bring me back into the fold; all of which included torture and trauma. In an attempt to understand what was wrong with me, I began reading every technical book I could get my hands regarding Multiple Personality Disorder. In the 80's, there wasn't much written. As I read I recognized symptom similarities but didn't seem to fit the mold of the 'garden variety' version of MPD, caused by abuse without programming. My search for the truth was unceasing.

Desert Hot Springs

Between 1985 and 1990 my husband and I often went to Two Bunch Palms, a spa resort in Desert Hot Springs, which is a neighboring desert city bordering Palm Springs. Craig and I would go for a few days to rest in the mineral pools and utilize the luxurious massage therapy and green clay facemasks that were a part of the resort's celebrity reputation. Once before I went, I watched a King Arthur video and when a shaft of white light shown down on the oracle as he kneeled to deliver a message from God to the king, I began crying and knew at once I needed to go to Two Bunch, alone. Witnessing this, my husband said, "Fine, it's okay. Just go. Do what you need to, honey." I left immediately. Arriving at Two Bunch in the dark around 10 o'clock at night, I was terribly afraid, but didn't know why.

"Two Bunch" as we referred to it, was a 'double edge sword' where I was accessed by Bob Hope and a group of men, including the Council. At the same time I was receiving intense bodywork from professional practitioners, which helped shake loose memories at a cellular level, other dedicated parts of my personality structure who were skilled to withstand torture and humiliation continued to do so on an increased level so that I could continue therapy and healing. I prayed daily for the Holy Spirit to bring to mind those things that needed healing in the perfect time frame, and that is just what occurred. These personalities cooperated over the years of my battle for freedom by absorbing the threats and abuse and, in addition, kept it separate from my conscious mind so I could continue my quest for freedom, unencumbered by fear or resistance. After an intense session with a gentle little old man who was an expert in Trager bodywork, my memories began to increase. During the same visit, I was instructed to attend secret meetings at Two Bunch where I stood back while a group of men talked. My husband was seldom there. I believe one meeting was "The Palm Springs Civic Committee." Bob golfed with them and they had business dealings together.

There were times I was picked up in the parking lot by a silver limo and taken to Bob. Sometimes I wouldn't even get out of the limo; I'd wait for Bob and he would enter to direct me. Other times I would spend the day with him. One night I was directed to a bunch of palm trees late at night to look for the White Owl. Bob Hope ended up being the White Owl I was looking for. At the time, I was unaware that this was a program. I walked outside into the late night breezes to report to the Palm Trees and to Bob, the White Owl.

Late on another night at Two Bunch, in a nightmarish reminiscence of the movie, Stepford Wives, that I had been required to watch years before, I robotically responded to programming as I trekked out to the parking lot in the white robe provided by the spa. A limo pulled up and mindlessly I climbed inside where a man immediately injected me with a drug. When we arrived at a big warehouse-type building in the desert that was like a robot reconditioning facility, the man had to help me out of the limo because I was so drugged. Once inside, doctors in surgical greens placed me on a gurney and started an IV. It may have been filled with a truth serum drug, because that is the type of questions they fielded me. They were trying to identify what I was doing in therapy, what I was remembering. Repositioning me to a chair, they slapped me over and over and I wasn't allowed to go to sleep. If I began to fall asleep, they slapped me again. They were very upset about the therapy and told me lots of lies while they made me look into bright white lights. If I didn't keep my eyes open long enough, they would hold my eyes open and face me directly into the bright lights. They kept injecting my arm, as they yelled at me.

A man, approximately 35 years old, dark-skinned with brown hair, wearing a green tie, tan tweed jacket, white shirt and tan pants, entered the room. He directed the doctors what to do and told them what he wanted to find out, then they supplied the drugs, electroshock and lights. Returned to a metal gurney, he asked me questions over and over that didn't make sense to me, while I sat on the edge of the gurney with my head hanging down, totally out of it. He showed me pictures of people, men usually, and asked me questions about them and kept slapping me. Parts of my personality system would not comply and talk to him and it was making him very angry. In response, he took something sharp to the bottom of my feet. Then he called in the bright lights, and when my eyes could no longer stay open as he commanded, he had another man hold my head up, prop my eyes open and direct the lights in my eyes. They kept this up for what felt like forever. Then he laid me down and put a long rod up my vagina to shock me as he said, "She'll talk, just give her time - we have all the time in the world."

But I was dissociated deep within myself and really didn't care if they killed me or not. I had been conditioned from birth to take what they dished out and if I died, I just wouldn't have to endure any more. No more suffering, it would be over. His frustration level saturated, this man instructed his assistants to lay me down and they took an electric sheer, the type you use to clip a dog, or prep a person for surgery and ran it up my pubic hair, up my stomach, all the way up to my chin. He said it was something to remember him by, "To keep remembering what happens if you don't comply."

After I'd given up and was "gone" they pulled a plastic cap dotted with little metal electrodes over my head. They told me over and over that they would make it much easier on me if I would just cooperate and quit therapy. But I didn't stop. They had to carry me out to the limo and when we arrived back at Two Bunch, the man accompanying me snapped his fingers in my ear and commanded, "Snap out of it!" and followed up with the suggestion that I was very, very tired and wanted a nap. Slowly, I trudged back to the room and went to sleep. I don't know where Craig was.

Desert Hot Springs was a place of horror for me as I attempted to get well by working hard in therapy with Stuart and Margie. I remember Stuart saying to me after I continued to show up day after day with more pieces of my painful past to process in therapy, "I have never seen anyone who is more motivated than you; it's like you're running a marathon."

I responded, "I don't feel like I'm doing this fast enough." No wonder - neither he nor I consciously knew that I was still being tortured and reprogrammed; reporting to the Federal Building, to UCLA, to my political abusers and to Bob Hope when assigned. Consciously, I thought Two Bunch Palms was a place where I went to get rejuvenated to do more abreactive work in order to recover. But even in the midst of the chaos there was a divine plan and timing to my life; I just had to be extremely patient.

As my healing defiance continued, I was returned to Two Bunch. One night I got dressed to go eat in the restaurant. There was a very large clock that hung over the entrance of the restaurant and my instructions were to, "walk to the clock at 6 o'clock." But instead of going inside, I was instructed to turn and walk to the parking lot where a man in a white suit drove me by limo late at night to a club. He took me inside and seated me in a maroon colored booth tucked away in the darkened club. Sonny Bono came out and told me to enter the cleared area. He was twirling a whip like he was going to lasso something. Then he cracked the whip. He did it over and over and it terrified me, because I felt he was going to hit me with it. Sonny said there was nobody there to hear my screams. "Scream all you like," he said laughing. Jokingly he added, "I kinda like it." He went on to explain that he was "giving me what I deserved for trying to break the mold."

I was helped up off the floor where I was huddled and delivered to a group of men in suits. They said I was the guest of honor, but it wasn't fun. They said I was stirring up a bit of trouble back there in Southern California and they just wanted to make sure that nothing bad happened to me. They took a long time to tell me all this, slowly, calmly and smoothly, before another man took me to a dressing room type of partition in a back room and, holding me up by one arm, threw me up against the wall and beat the living breath out of me. I ended up in a heap on the floor with my mouth bleeding. Giving me one final kick with his pointed boot, he said, "There, that ought to do ya."

Another suited man came in and began "taking care of me," he said, while he took pictures of me all beat up to send to my family and friends, and he told me over and over, things that didn't make sense to me like, "You are a queen. You will always be a queen; you have no successor so you must always remain the queen. It's a matter of privilege; you must remain the queen." His last instruction was, "Lay by the pool and get a tan," that I was going to be visited by "the man." I knew the man he spoke of was Bob Hope.

After I was returned and spent the next day recuperating and tanning by the pool, I was picked up again. On the way to see Bob they said my clothes weren't suitable to see him so they stopped at a dress shop in the Springs and one of the suits went in with me and picked out white slacks, a yellow shirt, a gold belt and sandals. Throwing my clothes in the trash he said, "these are more befitting."

We met Bob in a public place. I was taken to him and he broke free for a moment and came over to me, "Tsk, tsk, is this anyway for a woman to be showing a good example to her offspring?" He was referring to my attempts at freedom.

To further frighten and intimidate me, he pulled a picture out of his coat pocket of Kelly and I naked together and said, "The time will come my fairy princess to speak of better things," and he continued, finally commenting that he needed to, "teach me appreciation." Roughly, he took hold and squeezed my collar then abruptly let it go and walked away, like he was through with me. Unfortunately, he wasn't. I was taken back to Two Bunch where I left the new clothes in a massage room and returned to my room with another white robe on.

Another occasion Craig was with me at Two Bunch, when late at night a limo picked us up in the parking lot. We were taken some place and reprimanded for the therapy I was doing and were threatened with the "loss of many things," if I didn't stop and if my husband didn't make me stop. A man in the limo took hold of Craig by the shirt and warned, "Bob doesn't want to have anything happen to his important asset. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," my husband replied. He was very scared and for some reason I started laughing.

Within seconds the man delivered a blow to my face. I felt the stinging of my cheek as his attention turned to me, "Do you find something funny, young lady?" I became very serious and stopped laughing.

I didn't have any way to know then the uphill battle I faced, the magnitude of the system I was attempting to break out of, or the many obstacles, heartaches and abuses I would have to withstand over time in my battle for freedom. Despite the threats, my husband continued to pay $3,000-$5,000 a month for psychotherapy and bodywork, for four more years of my recovery. My controllers found the fact that I was in therapy amusing, totally assured that I was processing from anywhere but the National Security guaranteed, mind-controlled area of my brain. Since they saw me as a robot, they didn't worry about being discovered. Plus, they felt their secrets were protected by their sheer incredulity.

I was programmed to report to the Federal Building, which was in very close proximity to Stuart's office and to UCLA. I went upstairs to the 7th floor, exited the elevator and went down two doors on my left. I was told, "You will find a room with a view," which cryptically meant there was a closed circuit television for instructions. Further I was told, "Sit down, soak up the view, then go back downstairs and try to read the newspaper in the stand and report back if you can." Due to programming against it, I couldn't read it but always followed orders and tried. I was at the Federal Building often. It was a place of "orders headquarters" from Henry. He gave me instructions over closed circuit television when he couldn't gain access or time with me anywhere else.

I had a lot of disguises to wear into the Federal Building. Hats, dark glasses, old baggy dresses, or skirts I'd throw on over my short shorts. I received closed circuit instructions at other locations also, like in rooms in hotels or at corporate offices, office buildings in Los Angeles, Santa Monica, or in the San Fernando Valley. But, at times, Henry had something urgent and needed access to me immediately, so he sent me to the Federal Building. I also delivered my own medical reports from UCLA to the Federal Building to send back to Henry. I guess it was like a mind control report card. My continual breakdown created more need for "check-ups."

Hope Tries to Bring Me Back Into the Fold

During this time as my memory began bleeding through, per program, I suffered with severe migraine headaches and other programmed responses to this security breech. In another of a series of containment efforts, Bob directed me to hike up to China Flats, a small waterhole area located on the Jordan Ranch, down the street from my home. He told me to meet him there at 4 p.m. Bob was flown in on a two-seater helicopter. This meeting was intended to bring me back in line and was not much different from the little chats he and others had been giving me. Like always he started out very calmly and before he was through ended up shouting at me as he paced all over. He always said a lot of, "When are you ever going to learn?" in between the programs he triggered me with and he called me, "my child." What he and others didn't understand was that I was not any more capable of really controlling of myself and my actions than I had ever been. The actual problem was that now I had parts of me who were becoming conscious, which was triggering the acting out of their program commands and this was disrupting my usage and threatened to destroy their plan for my life. In my soul I wanted to be free, but it would take time to accomplish that.

Robot Breakdown Strategies

One day, Henry and George Bush were having a "meeting of the minds," as they called it, to decide what to do with me since the efforts to keep me 'in line' and 'on line' were continually failing. As I sat in 'park mode,' overhearing their conversation, George Bush said, "We're going to have to waste her Hank."

Henry replied, "George, we have to be rational and calmly think ahead to the future. Just look at the situation we are faced with. This isn't one isolated case. Sure, she has been my closest watched, but if she's breaking down after all we've done, then the others can do the same thing. We could have a world of trouble on our hands and I don't mean that lightly. We have got to restore her and send her back out there. We'll need a hundred of them like her to help keep the others marching in line. We'll just create a new scenario. It's our game, we can create it anyway we choose, like we always have. I just need some time to figure out a plan. Take her out now and we actually will lose control. We can use her to learn from our mistakes to correct them next time. I'm sure I can devise a plan that will capitalize on this. I just need time to go back to the think tank."

As I continued to break down even further, I overheard Henry Kissinger say to a man I didn't know, "We may as well monitor her closely and watch how she breaks down. We've got a lot of others like her out there that are going to need tending to. So we'll learn from her how to best take care of the others." Through my therapy with Stuart, Henry was hoping to seal up the holes in my consciousness that were leaking memory of my past, especially the over the rainbow parts of my life experience that I was programmed not to remember. They were attempting to do a repair in my mind from my childhood so it would shore me up for further use. They also wanted to set me up to keep others locked into programming, while they listened to me lecture on how I got out, which I wouldn't really have accomplished. After the culmination of their plan, they felt they would have the masses' minds under control and would no longer need to continue the charade since no one would be able to think to question anything that was occurring. They felt this would greatly simplify the human condition so that those self-chosen elite who were qualified could exist in peace and have superb quality of life. Henry said he had been witnessing too many robots cracking up and he needed me to be restored so I could complete the business that was planned for me with the contacts that, over the years, had grown to know and love me. He said I had put in the time and had gained an intimate trust with many important key players and I had to finish out my time by continuing to be of service to the people that had grown accustomed to me. So they shored me up with therapy, submerged me in the new age healing program lock-ins and began getting me conditioned to not be with my husband so much. Craig and I had been inseparable for many, many years, so this was a slow but steady change.

Henry had me peruse the leading bookstores, buy a variety of new age books from different categories, read them and report back a synopsis. This gave him plenty of current 'rages,' he called them and data that he could tap into to devise a strategic plan for the future.

And Henry's plan soon emerged. One day after my therapy session, men in suits accessed me in Westwood as I went down the stairs that faced the back parking lot and confiscated my whole journal. Skimming through it, one said, "She's written out a whole agenda." They told me I didn't need to worry about this anymore, that they would be glad to handle it for me. And they walked away with my journal. Then I had to report for more reconditioning in their attempt to shut down the leaks. This was in the late 80's. Henry felt it was crucial to monitor me heavily until I'd made the transition fully into the new 'persona' they were creating me to be: increasingly a more independent woman, very together, good speaker, writer, etc., for the future. In this way I could serve as an attraction and ultimately a containment person, with an agenda of speaking out about satanic ritual abuse. Then others would miss the real story about the mind control while their own programming would be sealed even tighter by words they would program me to deliver. "Like one of those Chinese finger puzzles," Henry said referring to the containment web. This was all done so when they transferred me to Hawaii, the transition would go smoothly.

Was it Escape or Relocation and Redirection?

After I fled California to Kauai, what I was still not yet aware of was that as parts of me celebrated their freedom, other programmed parts were still intact, fully programmed and still serving "the cause" my controllers dictated. Actually my "flight to freedom" was not yet fully realized; instead it turned out to be a clever plan my controllers devised in order to use me to the fullest during the stepped up culmination years of their plan. They went about destroying my marriage and having me watch movies that superimposed the reality they wanted me to believe. I was directed to watch the movie Shirley Valentine and when I went to the Whole Life Expo, a psychic that I walked by reached out to me and told me that I would be making a trip across the oceans to a new life. My life was still out of my own control and unbeknownst to me I continued to serve their plan, only now from the tiny island of Kauai.

A Heavenly Message

Feeling lost, disoriented, and missing my family I left behind, I sought out places of solace on the island. One day I had an incredible experience. The white sand beach on Kauai felt warm beneath my skin as I allowed my body to melt into the relaxation of the soft sand, basking in the warm gentle rays of the Hawaiian sun as the wind gently caressed my aching body and spirit. The sweet smell of the pungent plumeria flowers that I laid near my head continued to waft a heavenly aroma. My body felt exhilarated from the swim in the beautiful blue Hawaiian sea water. The uplifting Christian praise music that played through my Walkman lifted me ever higher, soothing and easing the tension in my wounded, terrified, disoriented mind and body. As I rested, I once again heard, very clearly, the words of the Holy Spirit, "Doesn't one so wounded, deserve to heal in the most beautiful place in the world?" Tears of acknowledgement streamed down my cheeks and dropped onto my large magenta beach towel.

Silently I cried out in desperation and despair, "God, I miss my kids and my husband. I'm so confused, I feel lost and weak, what should I do? Help me Father, please help me." Soon I felt comfort as the Holy Spirit wrapped His huge loving, soothing arms around what I was to later discover was this most wounded of souls. I fell into a deep, peaceful slumber, momentarily letting go of all of my cares and burdens and was entered into that peace that passes all understanding. And I began to realize the meaning of those words learned so long ago in Sunday school. This peace, enveloping me in the midst of the chaos and confusion of my life, gave the promise of hope. And this time it wasn't Bob.

When I awoke from this peaceful slumber, I was guided by the Holy Spirit to take a walk. Silently, I was led in the direction of an old sign that read, "This is the site of an ancient Hawaiian refuge, a sanctuary for natives escaping unjust accusations and retaliation by their accusers where those seeking protection can find refuge." Tears came to my eyes as I realized 1, too, was being allowed to take refuge there. And for the moment I felt safe. The Holy Spirit gently nudged me, like a loving father caring for his young, in the direction of the crescent shaped rock wall bordering and enclosing into safety, the small swimming beach called Lydegate. I stopped to take in the incredible view, the turquoise blue waters, sending wave upon wave crashing into the large rock fortress that protected the beach. I marveled at the glorious sense I felt that the Almighty Creator of the heavens and the earth was gently rocking the world, thus creating the beautifully graceful, never ending wave formations.

Breaking my thought the Holy Spirit spoke again, calling me by the nickname He has used over the years, "Starshine, look to the right of the large rock beside your foot. There you will find a gift."

Hardly believing my ears, I questioned, "A gift for me from my Heavenly Father? Was I hearing correctly?"

Curious now and with the anticipation of a small child awaiting the opening of the first gift on Christmas, I bent to discover what sort of gift from God was there for me to receive. Reaching out, my hand found it before my eyes, and I pulled the small object from it's home on the sand and held it before me, carefully examining each and every detail. It was so tiny, so intricately detailed and so, so fragile. The paper thin shell remains of the mini sea urchin was so extremely fragile that I was afraid I would crush it and break it simply by holding it.

As I continued gazing on this miniature gift from God, I listened with quiet intent as my Heavenly Father spoke to me once again, "My child, you are so precious to me. I will hold you in the palm of My hand, just like you are holding this small gift from me. You need to know that as this shell is extremely fragile, so are you at this time, in ways you have yet to understand. Do not fear, be patient with yourself and know that I am guiding you step by step. Most of all remember, you are never alone."

Deeply touched by this message, yet completely without understanding of the ways in which I might be as fragile as the tiny, delicate shell that I held in my hand, I cautiously wrapped my fingers around it and went back over to my place on the beach. Lying down, with the gift still carefully held in my hand, I contemplated, "How could I be that fragile?" As I thought, the only explanation I could come up with was how at times, due to the many still unintegrated multiple personality states I often found myself in, I was often unable to perform even the simplest of tasks. For instance one afternoon, alone at Kay's, so far away from my home in California, I found myself hungry yet unable to even think to remember how to go about making my lunch. Feeling two years old and indeed locked, for the moment, into a very childlike personality, I could not even begin to think how to make myself a sandwich. The perfected gears in my mind were not turning on their own, as the sophisticated machinery created by Henry Kissinger, Bob Hope and others, broke down and came to a screeching halt. And where it stopped, left me often locked into the mindset of a two-year-old. I just couldn't function. And so I thought, perhaps this was the type of situation that my Heavenly Father was aware of and was reassuring me that He was there for me, all I had to do was trust. Broken and unable to do anything on my own, yet with the trust of a child, I allowed myself to relax into His promise.

Later that night as I got ready for bed, I placed the tiny, fragile shell on my windowsill, to remind me of the promise. And so it was that God led me to healing and complete recovery, in His time, and in His way, so that I could be with you to share His message today. For God wants all of the wounded, mind-controlled slaves to be freed and he has tasked me with the assignment of being the fiduciary, His trusted servant, willing to facilitate the release and healing of those wounded souls locked into the bondage of mind control. And so if you find yourself not free, God will make your way to freedom, and will lead you every step of the way, just like He did for me. He has promised to make your way. Jesus said, "Ask and it will be given to you; seek and you will find; knock and the door will be opened to you. For everyone who asks receives; he who seeks finds; and to him who knocks, the door will be opened." All you have to do is ask.

Interwoven into the many experiences I had where the Holy Spirit came to guide me, were also other experiences where the parts of me that were still programmed realized that I was still not free. Soon after I moved to Kauai, without my conscious awareness, I was delivered to Barking Sands Missile Weapon Site, located on the south shore of the island, and at other times serviced people like Ronald Reagan, Bob Hope and his friends on the golf course in Princeville. George Bush met me at the tiny Princeville Airport in order to direct me into further assignments and threatened me in his attempt to keep my renegade freedom fighter personalities under wraps.

In spite of my controllers' attempts to shut down conscious access of how I had been used, I continued to have flashbacks of many of my political experiences and I began to more fully understand the way my programming worked. These memories, that often included my family, gave me a fuller picture of reality and helped me understand why I couldn't yet safely return to California. As I grieved the loss of my husband and children I had left behind in California, I was spiritually guided to thank God no matter how bad things looked. I found myself sobbing through my tears as I cried out, "Thank you, God, I love it!" even as they eventually took custody of my children away. The Holy Spirit continually showed me that no matter how it looked, I was still in the right place. And while it appeared that I served two masters, all along God knew that I was still in service to a greater plan that I would need to experience and be a part of in order to chronicle it and share it with you now.

Kauai Containment Center

The friendly recovery network I was connected to while on the island of Kauai was still carefully held within a network of programmed people so I would be surrounded by the programming themes intended to keep me in bondage. It is a very clever plan. I was welcomed with loving arms by Kay Snow Davis and Charles Davis. But mixed in with incredible love, healing, and Holy Spirit insight, was also a secret agenda, one that to this day I believe they also were unconscious of. Charles drove me around the island to welcome me and orient me to my new surroundings. While we drove, he set in barrier blocks within my mind that would later block memory of my use at different areas including large hotels, like the Westin, Hyatt, Princeville, CoCo Palms Resort, and Garden Isle Inn.

The Westin Hotel on Kauai was full of big white statues, huge indoor pools, waterfalls, and large cultural art pieces. Kay took Kelly and I there one evening, when Kelly was visiting, and as we walked around the hotel, she hypnotically laid in number systems from one to eight, designating different areas. Later when I received the little post cards in the mail, alerting me to my assignments, I could decipher the simple codes. All they needed to say was W- l and I knew that would mean the Westin, a room on the first floor. An eight would mean the far restaurant and so on. Each hotel had a letter assigned to it and numbers identifying areas where I was to go.

Not yet in touch with the many reporting personalities I had that were still intact, I thought I was safe. Actually, I was contained by many things in my environment. First I was contained by the network of programmed individuals I was living amongst as their programmed statements and hand signals continually reinforced my 'remember to forget' programs. My memory was also blocked by the endless visual images that were linked in my subconscious mind with hypnotic program commands to forget. Many of these images in my daily environment were things like the large building-size murals of whales, dolphins and rainbows that I drove by every day. I was also still reporting back to California to old friends and other people who I didn't know were programmed. Then, I was reporting to the 800 numbers I was instructed to. The containment plan was and is large, and will continue to work very effectively - until enough people are able to see what is actually happening.

Still a Working Girl

I was actually kept very busy on assignments, yet consciously thought that I went to the beach every day. There were blocks of assignments but I never was to enter a hotel from the same direction twice so I wouldn't be detected or become a familiar face to the wrong people. Some places Kay cued me to and other places Charles did. But I was cued to large hotels all over Kauai and some of the neighboring islands.

I was programmed to stand on the corner of the highway and was picked up by a military jeep and taken to Barking Sands Missile Range. There were underground facilities and if the base was threatened, even for the security of classified, top secret information, then they had missiles and bombs set to go off which later would be explained as an enemy attack. I don't believe the military guards knew exactly what they were protecting. When I'd round the corner with a senior officer-in-charge, they'd look surprised at first, but I was waved through before being taken to a high-tech operations room. Once inside they sat me in a large thick metal chair that spun and did all sorts of torturous things, but they told me my mind was numbed so I couldn't feel the pain. They numbed my mind with hypnotic suggestion while my body spun. Then I was instructed to lean into position to look into the big goggles. The pictures I saw began with a bee and other nature scenes and then it all went so fast I couldn't see the individual pictures. That way the information went directly into the subconscious mind without any conscious intrusion or filters to connect the two. As long as the programmed information bypassed the conscious mind they felt I couldn't remember because I wouldn't be able to connect the information.

When I was to meet Reagan on the island, I received a post card in the mail and it had the date, time and place on it to meet Reagan. When he came alone I met him at the Princeville Airport. He arrived anonymously by helicopter with Secret Service agents. A limo was waiting inside the fence to the airport and the helicopter would land right by it and Reagan would be rushed off the helicopter, and hurried into the limo and we'd be taken to the Princeville Hotel.

Another time I was programmed to meet Reagan at the Princeville Hotel on the north shore of the island. He entered through the large sliding glass doorway and I was sitting in a chair in the lobby, instructed to watch for him. This was in 1991 and Reagan had come to the island for a visit. When he saw me he quickly pointed toward the left side of the hotel indicating that I was to walk that way. Immediately I walked in the direction he pointed. As I got out of sight of people and into a back hallway he quickly walked over to me, said hello and told me that he missed me, then he spun me around for programming purposes and escorted me to the elevator. Men in suits followed close behind and he explained that he still had agents guarding him that we would have to contend with.

We entered into a large peach colored room that overlooked the bay. Reagan said Nancy was flying in to meet him later and said he just wanted a reminder of me. He went on to explain that he really missed me and he really missed being President. He said he was really surprised just how much he missed it. We had sex in the usual stance, with him passively beneath me. Afterwards he smiled and said, "You've still got it kid." He patted me and I lay next to him until he fell asleep and then I let myself out of the room. I passed the agents in the hallway having a cigarette by the elevator and waited mindlessly for the valet to bring my rental car around. When I returned home, I was in a stupor and went straight to bed, all traces of the memory neatly locked beneath the programming that protected it.

The Last Time I Saw Bob Hope Goodbye Cruel World

Another day when I drove my Lexus to Princeville, I accompanied Reagan and Bob on the golf course. I rode in the golf cart and was pretty out of it while we were on the green. All I could do was clap and smile when they did well and I kept score manually for them. While Reagan was taking his turn, Bob said to me, "So you think you got away, huh?" Shaking his head he continued, "There are bigger fish in the sea that got away, but you my dear are not one of them."

I smiled and curtsied to Bob, like I had done for years.

Bob softened and said, "Feels like old times out on the course, doesn't it?"

"Yes it does, Bob." I answered just before he began to relive and rehash the past, constantly referring to old times, old movies he'd starred in, old performances, USO tours, old people - THE PAST! He said he loved the Princeville course, loved the view and said that the ocean air was good for him. He had some sinus problems and said they cleared right up when he was out in the ocean air. He never once mentioned sex, maybe he'd become to old.

They didn't bother playing the whole green. Bob wasn't real strong and one time he fell into the golf cart and took a hold of it like he was having trouble seeing and walking. Reagan asked him if he was okay and Bob replied, "Hell yes, let's go on, I'll be fine." I didn't know then that this was to be the very last time I would see my owner in person.

Prince Charles Visits the Island

Prince Charles came to the island when he and Di were having marital problems. He came just to relax and get some perspective. The Council instilled a whole agenda into me for the week I entertained, toured, listened, and had sex with Prince Charles. Retrieving this memory made me really nauseated.

My Children are Reprogrammed

In an attempt to rescue my children and provide them with a safe home and believing I was actually safe and free, I brought them to the island. I had no idea that I was still being accessed, and that they were also. Consciously I thought we just went to the beach everyday, while the kids played with friends and surfed. But later I remembered that when they arrived they also were taken to Barking Sands Missile Base. Their programs were stepped up to match my new level after which Danny was very sick and laid on his futon and cried for two days.

While on Kauai, when Kelly was with me for the summer we were programmed to perform as a mother-daughter sex team. We were also filmed in underwater ballet and sex with dolphins and other sea creatures in pornography. Sometimes we swam with underwater sea turtles, they were such docile creatures and they weren't interested in sex. I could relate to them because all they tried to do was get to safety so they could relax and finally be at peace. There was lots of porn filmed on the island. They felt the natural splendor would only enhance the productions and they filmed lots of slaves with dolphins. They filmed us in shimmery suits, or braid wraps, all sorts of fancy hair and body jewels and ornaments or jeweled waist belts while otherwise naked. There was quite a following of dolphin porn lovers. When a male dolphin got excited, his penis stuck up and looked like a Bird of Paradise flower. We all learned that if you weren't scared and approached him lovingly the sexual encounter wouldn't be as painful. There was a rich local attorney named Ken whose job was to sufficiently launder the proceeds. I delivered money to him from Sylvester Stallone and from other less prominent men on the island.

Sylvester Stallone

Stallone liked to have group sex with lots of women and he liked Kelly and I together. He had us the first time when we were staying in a cottage in Anahola. As programmed, during the middle of the night I went to my daughter and said, "Kelly, Kelly, wake up, we have work to do.

"No Mom," Kelly said, "I'm tired."

"Wake up now!" I commanded, snapping my fingers drawing my 13-year-old daughter into a wideawake state. I held her hand all the way to the rental car we drove when I first arrived onto the island. We drove to Stallone's house in Anini Beach and parked in the drive. He said that since it was a rental car it would be fine. Kelly and I went into the house and out to a oval room where there were other girls waiting. One was Japanese and another brunette. At first we all just sat and looked at each other, smiling in awkward embarrassment. Sly walked in with a white towel around his otherwise naked body and held his hands out to us. He told us we were waiting for the 5th wheel but she never arrived. He laughed and directed us into the bedroom. He pointed to Kelly and said, "I want her first." He told her she had the Bo Derek look and he kissed her before she began her trained, skillful sexual repertoire. Stallone was snorting cocaine and during the group sex it was my job to remember to offer him more. He had a small spoon that he stuck up his nose to snort the white powder. Kissing Kelly he said, "Bob has good taste." Pulling her hair back and kissing her more deeply he added, "and it's getting better all the time." When he was finished sexually satisfying himself with her he rolled her over and said, "rest little baby," as he went to the other girls in turn. We never spent the night, stayed just a few hours and after Stallone went to sleep I kissed his cheek, took Kelly's hand and we tip-toed out.

Stallone once said, "There's nothing quite like a slave. I love getting them from the underground. You're all so cooperative, don't give me no shit. This is the life I tell ya'. No bitchy, demanding women, not when I can have beautiful, sweet, white women who set me free. It's all about freedom," he rambled, while laying on his back in a seemingly drugged stupor, about "America the Beautiful and the home of the brave." He was high on cocaine. The higher he got the better the animal lover he was to become. That was his code name, "Animal." And when they told me, "the Animal" wanted Kelly and 1, then I knew it was Stallone. I also gave him massages, often in open air areas.

Sly thought the dolphin porn was the greatest new combo and he directed a lot of the porn videos. It was filmed at areas at the North Shore, Poipu or, he had us helicoptered into remote areas for filming. Large cameras were taken out to these remote island areas. I delivered some money from Stallone and from other less prominent men on the island to Ken, the wealthy attorney who had a big beautiful house in Kilauea. I believe it was his job to see that the money was sufficiently laundered.

Sly wore a wet suit but we were always naked in the water. There were trained dolphins that we did water ballet and swam with. When we swam gracefully the male dolphin got excited and started nudging us. We grabbed onto them and went for the ride; if we didn't, they told us, "one wrong move and you could get ripped to shreds." The dolphin actually remembered us over time and the same male would consistently choose the same girl, even when the group size changed from small to large. They got to know us and didn't forget in between. When my sons were on the island they were filmed also. One day after the filming, Sly said to Kelly, "You come back soon, ya here?"

During other visits, where I was supposedly allowed to see my children, Kelly and I were prostituted to Charlton Heston, and I was to Kareem Abdul Jabaar. Taj Mahal, the jazz musician, was on the island to keep other slaves in line through satanic rituals. One time I was programmed to drive to Secret Beach at night to attend a 'gathering' where, unbeknownst to my conscious personality, I was raped in a ritual.

Consciously I thought, as my programmed reality dictated, that I had escaped from my controllers in California and I was now safe. I believed I had rescued my children, and as the summer came to an end, I began the process of enrolling them in island schools. I moved from house to house, attempting to keep our whereabouts anonymous, only to have my stillprogrammed children call back to their father in California and report our current location and phone number. It was terrifying. And I thought I would die of grief and terror when Craig told the kids and I that if I didn't return them to California he would be sending in a police escort to bring them home. Devastated and panicked but not knowing what else to do, I returned my children to their father in California. Shortly afterwards, my attorney notified me that if I wanted to ever see my children again I needed to attend a court hearing in California. Frightened of the danger of being accessed, I called Ted Gunderson (retired FBI official) who helped me hire a bodyguard. I flew to California, where behind the judge's closed doors, I lost custody of my children. My attorney, Doug Wolfe, let me in on the news when he informed me in the Courthouse hallway, "You're lucky to be alive, just get back to the island and get a job."

My children's programmed father and our controllers were now in even more total control of their lives.

The Wind Beneath My Wings

Extremely sad and depressed, I returned to the island. The job I took when I returned was to begin to more fully document many of my memories and I began writing my first book STARSHINE. It wasn't an easy task because first I had to undo the endless programs that kept me from being able to use the word processor without a programmed part of me destroying the information I had just typed. But I was determined to do whatever it took to get eventual help for my children. Memories of a political and international nature often flooded my awareness and I documented them each time something new came to mind. Due to the vivid nature of flashbacks I experienced, I spent nearly two years stuck in the body memory part of my Kissinger experiences and had to live with the smell of this cigar smoke and listening within to the sound of his accented voice. Similarly, I flooded with sexual memories about Pete Wilson and Ted Kennedy. Talk about intrusion!

Since I had no money, I hired the 'ocean' to be my therapist and with God's guiding, I actually did some of my best memory recovery work alone on the beach, with the ocean holding the space of peace, love and strength for me so I could delve to the depths of my own mind. With the solid foundation built from years of memory recovery done while I was still in California, and after a year on the island retrieving still deeper layers of memories, and programming, I had a pretty clear picture that something was up - exactly what I wasn't sure. I couldn't imagine why I would be with Henry Kissinger, Nixon or Reagan, or what was so important about me that people were following me and overly interested in what I was doing. But all my memories, held together by the pages in my journals, began to neatly fill in the picture. In 1992, 1 purchased a light and sound machine of my own, and after mastering the fear associated with using some of the same technology my controllers had used on me, I began to more easily recover even deeper layers of memory. Soon I realized the programs that controlled me were broken and nullified as I became consciously aware of them.

Bush Flies Into Princeville

But my other secret jobs didn't stop and with my family out of their way, I was now freer and more unencumbered than ever to work for my controllers. George Bush met me at Princeville Airport, a very small airport on the north shore of the small island. Then we would both be helicoptered to Barking Sands Missile Range. When we arrived he and a military officer saluted each other and then he was escorted to an outside structure that had glass doors.

At another time, George Bush met me at Barking Sands Missile Range, for a talk about "getting back in line." I was parked in my Lexus waiting near the entrance when Bush drove up in a military jeep. A military officer was driving him. Bush told me to start my engine and follow him. I followed through the gates that were opened for him into the missile site. He motioned me out of my car and stomped over to me. He stood and yelled in my face about being irresponsible. I had a hard time hearing or understanding him because it was extremely windy. I also think personalities inside of me were attempting to shield me from his barrage of programmed verbiage. He waved his glasses around while he yelled at me. In his cryptic mind control lingo Bush said, "Get into line or Kelly will be on a #9." He was referring to the well known freedom train mind control theme, of being thrown off the train, which cryptically meant her death. Angrily, Bush saluted and told me to get back in my car and get the hell home. He was very angry.

An Act of Nature Sets Me One Step Closer to Freedom

But "category five" Hurricane Iniki changed many of their plans and this act of nature ultimately worked in my favor, freeing me a little more each day. I lost the home that I attempted to recreate on the island to the hurricane, and as I healed my mind, body and spirit, I realized more and more every day that I still wasn't safe. In order to have the electricity to continue powering my laptop, Patrick Stone, the man who helped me write Starshine, (himself an unrecovered victim of mind control), and I were forced to leave the island. Military planes evacuated us to the island of Maui, where we continued writing. There we were continually visited and harassed by men my controllers sent to the hotel that we later discovered was also a "containment center." True to the network containment strategy, our friends on Kauai referred us to this place and we continued writing while we were monitored. It frightened me because I was now conscious enough to realize that I continually ended up in places where I thought I was free, but I wasn't. This was due to the fact that I wasn't fully integrated and half of my programming was still intact and affecting me, still binding me hopelessly to my controllers. In many ways I felt free though, and continued to heal and dedicate my life to service and God. While I, Susan, wrote, my 'inner twin sister' Sharon took the heat and once again endured the physical and mental tortures so I could be free to write Starshine. My dissociative state was now being used in my favor, although it often wasn't easy.

One night while in Maui, I had a dream and saw a map with a check mark identifying Oregon. At that time I was unaware that I was receiving telepathic messages, often at night. I called Margie Paul and told her about the dream and that I felt guided to move. So she talked to a famous movie star that was also her client and asked her to recommend a place. Through that recommendation, I moved off Maui and took what few belongings I had left with me to Ashland, Oregon. I rented a home, referred to me by this movie star's realtor friend, and began writing. Kelly and Danny visited me at Christmas. Soon after, Kelly and I were prostituted as a motherdaughter sex team to Clinton, who had just been elected, but not yet inaugurated as President.

I didn't realize that I was still programmed not to notice when I was 'missing time.' Healing, integration and deprogramming didn't come as quickly as I wanted it to. Healing took time. But my continued motivation to heal and figure out what this all meant kept me uncovering more and more in regard to my own programming and how the system all worked.

Months later I mustered the courage to move back to California. I desperately wanted to help my children, and felt I was recovered enough and safe enough to do that. I didn't know I still had layers of personalities and programs still intact that would keep me under control, and unfortunately neither did David Neswald, the therapist I worked with there in Southern California. To make matters worse, upon the completion of Starshine, as I readied it for print, my brother, Rick, who was one of my programmed controllers, and whom I had chosen not to see for years, was able to access me one last time. This accessing allowed him to gain entrance to my apartment in Calabasas and rape me, threatening that if I didn't stop with Starshine they would publicly display the compromising pictures that he then took of my children and me. The next morning, I awoke disoriented, terrified, and confused and had no idea the source. But later that day, I "remembered" the horrific scene and was grateful to have at least remembered it because, in the past, it had taken me months, often years to remember traumatic events.

In hysterical panic, I once again phoned Ted Gunderson for further advice on how to stay safe. He told me to get special locks for my doors, and a security system, and I had alarms that I bought for each door so if anyone, including myself, went in or out, they would sound off. I even purchased an alarm that I wore on my body and set it off if anyone of a suspicious nature approached me. It was terrifying, as I realized I was still not able to keep myself safe, due to programming that operated beyond my control. Soon I realized, though, that this traumatic event was actually another "gift" to me, without which I would never have known I was still under program. I continued working in therapy with Dave Neswald who, although well intentioned, was not informed in regard to how my sophisticated government programming worked. I had hired bodyguards in the past and now he and Ted were suggesting that for my safety I hire one again, only full-time now. With very limited funds, and enormous mounting therapy bills, I wondered how I could afford a bodyguard? I compromised and hired a live-in housekeeper who would at least be with me most of the time, as my therapist was afraid that my controllers would switch me with my "twin sister" and take me away. I lived in absolute terror, trying to keep the trauma from occurring not only at my controller's hands, but also at my own. I was scared all the time, because I couldn't even trust myself, not knowing if I would involuntarily switch and put myself or my children in danger. Most of the time, in those days during 1993, 1 couldn't even complete a sentence when I attempted to communicate and my mind felt confused and exhausted.

I persevered toward getting Starshine into print. When I began to ponder just what the cover should be like, I found a booklet in a craft store with a picture of an angel that I just knew had to be on the cover. The events that occurred later that day, proved to me without a shadow of a doubt that God's angels were indeed watching over me. When I called the artist and explained that I wanted her angel to grace the cover of Starshine, she agreed without question. The only thing she wanted me to know was that this was the angel she had designed for the White House Christmas tree that year! Talk about synchronicities and miracles.

Attempts to Stop Me

Over the years, as I attempted to heal, break free, write and get my book into print, I was harassed in many ways. Over time, I paid more and more attention to the triggers that were sent my way to stop me from remembering and becoming free. These messages and triggers actually provided a guide, a road map of sorts, toward discovering and dismantling deeper layers of my programming.

For years, I have been tailed, my phones are usually tapped, people have been "sent in on me" in my controllers' attempt to reprogram and regain control of me. Other people were 'sent in on me' in a timely fashion, such as in 1992 when Patrick Stone and I 'bumped into' Dutch Schroeder, his Baylor University coach, who just happened to be vacationing on Maui during the exact same time we were writing the FBI chapter in Starshine. When we had lunch with he and his wife, he told us he was one of Bill Sessions' friends. At that time, William 'Bill' Sessions was still the Director of the CIA.

At other times, men in suits found me in homes of acquaintances, beaches, restaurants, hotels and cabins alike and made their threats; physical and verbal. My car tires were slashed, my mail was tampered with, often held back for months, only to mysteriously arrive in bunches up to two years after the postmark date! Phone messages, powerfully, cryptically encoded and laced with programming intended to keep me under control were played over the phone or recorded on my answering machine.

Shrill sounds and/or tones were also played over the phone to tap into my programming. Disturbing written "triggers" intended to either frighten me into submission or keep me from remembering, were sent by mail. As I ran for my life from state to state, two separate individuals rear-ended my car on the same day, within hours of each other. I was set up and programmed to pose for compromising photos in an attempt to blackmail me should the need arise. And, as I mentioned earlier, during 1993, in my quest to get Starshine into print, I was threatened and warned to cease with its self-publication. And, when I didn't stop, I was raped.

The CIA Lends a Hand? Tennessee Bound

But a breakthrough occurred. Ted Gunderson called to inform me that he had just heard from another woman who lived across the nation, who had also sent him her memory work about being used as a sex slave to Ronald Reagan. Although it was a terrifying time for me, it also was an amazing time of discovery for all of us. Mark Phillips, her so-called therapist and deprogrammer flew across the nation and told me that "Jimmy Carter's people" had called him in an attempt to stop him from meeting with me. I flew Mark and Cathy O'Brien to California to meet with me for the first time and I put on a seminar where they were the featured speakers. Mark Phillips knew all about my programming. Looking back on it now, he seemed to know way too much. He asked me if I had "a twin sister who was two inches shorter than me." This was a very powerful key and code into the programming of my "inner twin sister," Sharon, and this seemingly simple statement controlled my body in a very intimate way from the outside, showing me while in normal consciousness that I was indeed a robot, and not in control of my own body. Shortly after Mark and Cathy's arrival and seminar, a series of events occurred including an accident and ensuing hospitalization of the person that was living with me as my safe person. Mark Phillips explained that I was not safe in California and once again I ended up running. I paid to fly Mark, Cathy and I back to his mother's home in Charlotte, Tennessee where we began my process of what we then called "deprogramming."

Several weeks later, with nearly 10 years of recovery behind me, this so-called "retired?!" CIA operative made dramatic changes in his living arrangements just to "help me deprogram." After relocating across the country, to a home in Arab, Alabama where I paid all domestic expenses for the three of us, a large sum of money for traveling expenses for both he, his girlfriend Cathy, and myself, and a large 'consulting fee,' this renegade CIA operative read my lengthy journal entries daily for a year and a half and agreed that in his own words, "the memory work contains absolute elements of fact laced with verifiable details." But one and one-half years, forty-two journals, and $50,000+ traveling and living expenses later, Mark Phillips informed me that nothing had ever happened to me ...nothing what-so-ever!

Cathy O'Brien said, "Well, you should be happy that nothing happened and that your children have not been abused!" I couldn't believe she was saying that, after all the common details of our histories we had shared.

I was devastated and went to bed and could not eat for three days and remained noncommunicative and totally subdued for nearly a month afterwards. After all this time of intensely focused attention on my history, Mark informed me that I had never even been abused, and that I just had a big imagination. But, he had seemed to appreciate that I was around to cover all of his expenses.

I suspect that Mark is some kind of "containment agent" who is being directed through his "handlers" whose motivations ultimately serve the New World Order. Through his containment expertise, the information I have conveyed to you in this book you are now reading was delayed in reaching you by nearly seven years. After I moved, I found out that Mark had initially told Walter Bowart (author of Operation Mind Control and eyewitness to my use with Bob Hope in Palm Springs) that I was schizophrenic, and since then, I have uncovered a string of lies he told others in an attempt to discredit me. I also reconnected with another Kissinger survivor that Mark Phillips had worked with for a time. Mark Phillips told her the same thing he told me - "THIS NEVER HAPPENED TO YOU!" With my trust shattered, Ted Gunderson, Catherine Gould, Margaret Paul, Walter Bowart and many others supported me in what I knew to be the truth of my life. I left that home where I had paid all expenses for Mark Phillips and Cathy O'Brien and went to live in Carbondale, Illinois. I had a slower pace there and life was sweet while the situation lasted. It was a time of rest and recuperation as the final integration I had achieved in 1996, solidified into even greater strength and unification while I remained safe.

Baby Monarch Breakdown

After a suicide attempt and hospitalization in California, Kelly was released to me and even went to high school for a short time in Carbondale. My heart was broken when in June, after only being with me for a few months, she announced that she missed her Southern California lifestyle and the rest of her family, and told me she was leaving. Due to her unrecovered, still programmed state of mind, Kelly was not free to make up her own mind, and was often puppeted by our controllers and the inner web of programming that dictated her actions. After she left, an opportunity arose and I moved once again, this time to South Carolina in a quest to open a healing center. All the while, I continued writing my sequel to Starshine, the book you are reading now.

Going to Carolina to Open a Healing Center

Over the years of my escape, Kelly's programming began to further break down, partially due, perhaps, to the lack of contact with me. In turn a series of suicide attempts landed her again in the hospital. Twice I flew to California and brought her back home with me. During these intense times, Kelly had lucid moments where she told me she knew everything that had happened. She talked to me about white vans, limos, being in London, hand signals, being sexually abused, and made me promise I would write about the drugs and how the doctors drugged her, which she told me was destroying her brain. These medical doctors felt my daughter was psychotic, because they were unaware of her programming. Kelly thanked me in a card on Mother's Day (see photo section) for her freedom, and as we spent time together she relayed more and more events that she remembered, which validated my own experiences

Knowing what a crucial step it is for mind control victims to wear a watch, I bought Kelly a new watch. One day while we were swimming in a nearby lake, Kelly looked me right in the eye, took the watch from her wrist and purposefully dropped it into the lake. I bought her several other watches and she did the same thing. She was not "allowed" to monitor the time and her programming dictated that she lose it, quickly, before she got hurt for disobeying her program.

My move to South Carolina to plan and coordinate a healing center for mind control survivors fell through but God was not to disappoint me in my desire for the healing center. Although I could not yet see the perfection of the Divine plan, I was soon to begin on a path that would lead me to the creation of a healing center for survivors, a center furnished with the latest, state-of-the-art technology, with the capability of bringing survivors into recovery and whole brain synchrony in a more efficient and quicker manner than my years in 'talk therapy' ever could. The psychotherapy I received, although helpful, didn't touch or recognize the powerful programming that ruled my every action, and couldn't help me learn to not dissociate. EEG Neurofeedback helped me learn to not dissociate and to be more present and attentive.

By April of 1997, Kelly was diagnosed Dissociative Identity Disorder (DID) by two separate therapists, one in North Carolina and one in South Carolina. In previous years, since 1988 I had attempted to get Kelly informed, qualified help in and out of California, but her father denied her right to see any therapist who had any awareness of the one thing she needed in order to heal. He interviewed each therapist I recommended, and if they had any knowledge of DID or ritual abuse, he would not allow her to see them. But, once again I created a home and in my attempt to help my daughter, I began studying and training to become a certified EEG Neurofeedback Clinician. I bought an EEG machine and began working with Kelly at home. She responded well to the neurotherapy, but was reaccessed and soon became completely catatonic.

But by the summer of 1997, when my daughter's worsening condition rendered her totally catatonic and non-responsive; unable to eat, drink, walk, talk, use the bathroom or move, I was forced to hospitalize her. Luckily, I found a female psychiatrist who had read my book, was familiar with MPD, ritual abuse and government mind control, and was willing to admit my daughter to the hospital while enacting the security required to keep her safe. While she was hospitalized, another recovered survivor and I gave an inservice training for the hospital staff. I also completed further EEG Neurofeedback training and opened my own business.

One time when I visited Kelly in the hospital, my car window was smashed, my briefcase, mind control literature and the electronic equipment I used to speak publicly was stolen. And to top it off, New Year's Day, 1998, the Holistic Health Care Clinic that housed my new EEG Neurofeedback business and the EEG Spectrum equipment that I used to help victims and non-victims alike, was totally destroyed by fire. Although the official fire department report was that the fire was the result of faulty wiring, I felt the fire was due to arson. To validate my suspicions, and just in case I forgot and needed "re-minding," two bags of the ashes from that fire were mysteriously delivered to my home.

Later in the year when another Bob Hope survivor visited me, I had to call the local police to report a man who was surveilling us late at night outside my home. And, as recently as February 1999, as I sent out the initial copies of this manuscript, my phone lines to my office were cut and I was tailed.

Each time I am harassed, instead of silencing me, it spurs me into greater action, and the result is another radio interview, another book or article, and more speaking engagements. I still stay as public as I can, speaking publicly whenever I am asked, so I can continue to share the truth.

This harassment cannot and will not stop being used against victims attempting to live free, until this dark system of mind control is exposed and brought to light.

Chapter Thirty-five: Secret Societies

What's the Secret Goal at the Top of Freemasonry?
Answer: A Luciferian New World Order

Living in and amongst those planning the New World Order as their programmed mind file, meticulously recording their deeds and activities, has allowed me to be here now to report their plan to you. Their agenda includes keeping the populations of the world under control as they hold the key to secret knowledge. Knowledge is power. If you are uninformed as to their secret agenda and especially of their use of advanced mind control technology in order to bring about their plan, then you can't protect yourself or begin to work toward stopping this plan.

If there is any one thing I could tell you about the inner workings of the New World Order it's that it is subtle, organized and calculated. This plan has an agenda that spans generations with obvious long-term goals--as long term as the intergenerational abuse pattern that was passed down through my family creating within our generational line Multiple Personality Disorder.

And, I can tell you that the New World Order plan serves a belief system that is based on power and control, confusion, greed, and the use and manipulation of others, most often without their consent. The system's "cogs" are well oiled and greased, and are interlaced and protected by mens' secret societies like the Masons, who have at the pinnacle of their organization a belief in secret knowledge. The Masonic order is funded from the bottom up by first through third degree Masons, hoodwinked and mesmerized into working for the agenda of those members at the top-an agenda they work "toward" knowing but they aren't allowed to know until they arrive at the top through oath and initiation to possess the elusive "secret knowledge."

Found in Morals and Dogma, the cornerstone of every higher Mason's library, in the 32°d Chapter (Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret) are subtle hints of the character of this 'secret knowledge,' specifically geared toward the 32°d Degree Mason (Master of the Royal Secret). Here, in the guise of acknowledging a Universal Equilibrium between good and evil, as the natural balance and harmony of earthly existence, it promotes the acceptance of the belief that evil actions are a necessary counter-balance to good ones and asks the aspirant to accept this dichotomy in human affairs. From this sublime seed of half-truth, evil is allowed flourish within the protective secrecy of the organization.

To gain this knowledge, a man must go through a series of Luciferian initiations and, as he progresses toward the top, he finds that he is trapped into keeping the secret, through threat of consequences, including death. Once gaining the upper levels, he believes that he or his family will be killed if he should ever divulge the secret knowledge. This initation where he is ultimately compromised involves blood ritual and rape. Now many of these men have had to "sell their soul to the devil," taking an oath through satanic ritual to serve and protect their fellow lodge brother regardless of the deeds done in order to accomplish that. Through the secret handshakes and signals they give to each other, they alert one another to the needs of a brother and thereby this fellow member who may be in court for charges of criminal activity, or apprehended by the police for breaking the law, is protected by his "brother." It may be a judge, who when a case is presented before him, sees a brother in trouble, and looks the other direction, allowing the lodge brother to go free or with light sentencing. Or, it may be an attorney who finds himself unable through the court system to really "defend" his client, as he secretly serves the system in which he is oath bound. Often in court cases throughout the legal system, children who are sexually or physically abused are sent back to live with a perpetrating parent while the other parent seeking protection of their child is sent away, alone and powerless to do anything to protect their child. All this happens because a judge or an attorney is part of an organization that has at its very foundation, protection of its members, right or wrong, and sometimes protection at all costs.

Are you aware that many of our Presidents have been Masons? In fact, the majority have. This means that they have taken an oath to serve their organization and the brothers who belong, without question, even above and beyond God and country. Instead of justice we have camaraderie. Instead of protecting citizens, especially our youngest ones, we have a system of individuals who serve each other, blindly I might add, without question of right or wrong, good or bad, without consideration for the Constitution and the high spiritual ideals set forth for our country. We have instead a "boys club," where many men join in order to belong, to be a part of a group that they may believe furthers civic interest, financial gain, and offers security.

Our nation is undermined by this group that operates in the dark, shrouded by secrecy and serving to protect their fellow lodge members above all else-including truth and justice. A man cannot serve the Lodge and at the same time serve God, for the good Lord calls us to love one another, to uphold one another, to love and serve our fellow humans, to protect and love the children, and cause no harm. This Masonic Order, this secret men's society, as harmless as it may seem to it's members teeming at the bottom, demands an oath to allegiance over truth, brotherhood over justice, and it often serves a need to protect a man's financial assets. There is no way a man can choose God's values when he is bound by an oath to protect and defend his fellow lodge member without question. Even if a first-degree lodge member doesn't find himself "called upon" to protect a brother, he is still serving a master at the top of the pinnacle, without knowledge of what the top directors-the 32°d and 33rd Degree Masons--are doing. Yet these worker bees at the bottom fuel the deeds and goals of those brothers at the top, who possess the secret knowledge, and use that secret knowledge. I can tell you from personal experience of being there, that it is not of God but is evil in nature. It seeks control for power and ultimately it wreaks havoc and destruction upon the innocents that may be in its path.

A man cannot serve two masters. Those who are Masons are taught secret handshakes and hand signals that pass secretly between members without outsiders' knowledge that a subversive agenda is occurring, right there before the public's eyes. This secret communication between lodge brothers guarantees that the members are protected. But I guarantee you that unless a brother rises through the ranks, he won't find out that what he is supporting at the top of the organization he has sworn allegiance to, is the highest evil known to man. To possess this secret knowledge, men allow their morality and conscience to be stripped away; they have to, because the secret knowledge has to do with bringing in the New World Order through atrocity that comes with power and control, certainly not love and service. It is pure evil, shrouded in secrecy, and masked as a service organization. It's quite the opposite, as the many emerging victims of satanic rituals at the hands of high-ranking Masons and Shriners will attest to.

If you are currently a Mason, you may want to know that the secret knowledge at the top of your organization entails the ritualized abuse of young women who are raped on an altar as part of an initiation process. I know because I was there. It happened to me. I was taken to outdoor places in the 50's and 60's and subjected to satanic rituals performed by various men's fraternal societies, including the Masons and Shriners. I have also known and listened to other women who were healing from this mind control abuse, whose father's were Masons and through that affiliation came to be young members of Job's Daughters or the Eastern Star, and were healing from the mind control abuse they suffered in secret.

"For this reason I bow my knees before the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named, that according to the riches of his glory he may grant you to be strengthened with might through his Spirit in the inner man, and that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; that you, being rooted and grounded in love, may have the power to comprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge, that you may be filled with all the fullness of God." -- Ephesians 3:14

Chapter Thirty-six: The Council's Plan

I began passing messages to and from the Council early on, and in those days my use at that level had to be earned. On an occasion where I was sent to deliver messages adroitly to a group of men aboard a ferry in Canada, my reliability and security was finally proven. After the debriefing from that trip, Henry learned where and how this group would covertly funnel funds into Canada. He clapped, shook my hand and said, "Congratulations, you've passed this level!"

I didn't 'officially' begin working for the Council until I was 'of age' in 1969, when I turned 18. Up until then, as I've stated, they were very cautious, watching and testing me from a distance as I functioned at the White House and in other private settings where one of their contacts could report back to them my progress. My involvement with them increased over the years as they witnessed my reliability. I never violated that trust, couldn't think to, and worked amongst them for many years.

Henry was the Council's mastermind and I was his other brain so he could keep the whole plan, and everyone involved, straight and organized.

One day, a group of powerful men met in a room in the Wrigley Mansion high atop the hill in Avalon on Catalina Island. I was there supposedly to serve the men beverages and light snacks on silver platters. Hours before the meeting I was kept in isolation in a side room. Two men in suits injected my arm with drugs and I was readied, like always, before use. I was dressed in a very expensive white eyelet, embroidered cotton dress that was provided for me to wear. One man that stands out was a tall man in a dark pinstriped suit. He had thick white hair and sometimes wore glasses. He was often at these Wrigley meetings. The meetings seemed very important and secretive.

Afterwards, I had sex with different men I was assigned to. I met with them on private yachts or rooms in the Wrigley Mansion. Some of them were possessive of my time and didn't realize who I was; they thought I was just a maid I guess. Some even tried to bribe me with money, jewelry or trips.

Jeff Foltz, Craig's best friend and USC oral surgeon, went with us, on occasion, to Catalina when these meetings were being held. Craig and I sailed over with Jeff and his wife or flew on seaplanes. Jeff cued me to different places at the Wrigley Mansion and other sites on Catalina Island. Consciously it seemed that we were just touring the Mansion with friends, but at certain areas Jeff would say certain words and press my hand in the middle and say a word or two and then we would walk on. I was a robot and he talked to me like I was retarded. I followed closely behind Jeff as he walked us through the Wrigley Estate. It seems like this was done to keep me from consciously remembering being there at the Estate later on. Jeff took me into rooms that were all beautifully decorated in pastels. He held my hand, despite the fact that Lisa, his wife, was there. No one really spoke and I felt like a very small child being taken around by an adult. Of course, at the time my conscious personality wasn't present, so I was not aware of these events. Later, on this same trip, I went to meetings to assist. At times, Henry was there. He wasn't in office at the time but to him that only meant he "could do more with his hands less encumbered," at least that's what he said.

During my use as a tool to coordinate liaisons between the Council and the President, when a President was flown places, like aboard large military aircraft, I was briefed and sent along so that I could apprise him of situations or 'key' reasons for his being in certain locations. For example, if the Council deemed it necessary to control the attitudes of a certain branch of the military in order to have their 'full cooperation' in a strategic military position or assignment, they would brief me in the complete attitude required. They would supply me with the correct words for whomever (President, Vice-President, Bob Hope, etc.) was delivering the speech to the troops. Then the troops would respond favorably because their programming would be reinforced, creating the desired effect - that is - their full obedience and cooperation.

I accompanied Nixon, Reagan, Ford, Bush and others in these ways, bringing them information from the Council. Later, I was debriefed about the results of my time with the President. I also reported what the skillfully trained parts of me carefully recorded during the entire 'action,' including reporting back what the President said, how it was received by the audience and any messages the President wanted to send back to the Council.

As I explained before, the Council is made up of a secret and powerful group of men who are not public and meet in the shadows. Their true power and ability to rule over the masses comes from the fact that they are publicly unknown. They exist in their own environments, with little outside contact. But they have many highly tested, tried and true programmed or aligned individuals who go out and do their work, bringing back the information they need, making the contacts necessary to insure the success of their mighty plan for world domination. They have the power to insure the election of a President, to bring a celebrity to fame, to decide the fate of a nation, to bring about war, to incite riot, to bring down whole cities or countries, to kill out a certain ethnic race, to introduce a new chemical into the food of the masses for control, to loose upon a community a new virus, to decide which people are to live and which are to die. They gave direction to people like Ronald Reagan, George Bush, Henry Kissinger and the Rockefeller's, but they are not ignorant enough to allow a public identity to make them vulnerable to any kind of investigation or public knowledge of their lives and their purpose. They seek people out in their own time; people don't contact them. Sometimes the contact comes in the form of another person slipping a message in or telling someone to be at a certain place at a specified time, but their whereabouts is not ever known. And to report this to you, I had to dismantle lots of death programming that was installed in an attempt to keep me from remembering any of this.

Geneva

There were times when the Council met in Geneva and I was taken there so they could send information and messages, via my mind files, to people who weren't supposed to be publicly connected with them. All this cross communication was sent safely through me and no one would have suspected who I was or what type of secret information I contained. Henry usually put the information in my head and sent me in with instructions - usually amusing ones - to the men at the meetings in Geneva and other places. These men don't just want to control the world; they already do that to a certain extent.

The rules the Council had between its contacts was that they were never to have physical contact, or talk by telephone. They decided where a message would be posted, via cryptic codes that only they understood, and often placed them in a certain section of the newspaper. Like for instance, they would weave the place and time of a meeting into the business investment section if one had to be called on short notice. Otherwise meetings were set up ahead of time and there was no contact in between. In cases of emergency or crisis they could use someone like me to deliver secretly coded messages. The men they are networked into are some of the most powerful businessmen in the world - steel magnates, furriers, oil and gas company owners, telephone company owners, media owners, munitions makers, among others - and their business dealings are highly illegal. They break all the rules and laws set up to protect small businesses from monopolies. They create huge monopolies. They control the world through the economy. Most people who opposed them didn't have a chance. They simply ran them out of business, got them prosecuted legally, or manipulated them in any way that was successful to insure they maintained total control.

During the late 70's and early 80's the Council often met out in the middle of the ocean, aboard yachts, where they could all come together anonymously. They sailed or motored around until they connected with each member. They navigated to precise areas where a yacht would be waiting. Everyone had to be expert navigators and Craig's dental friend, Jeff, was just that. He constantly read a complex nautical map with special tools and combined that information with the placement of the stars in the sky in order to deliver me to a preplanned destination. He had to navigate to different places around the Channel Islands to areas we were supposed to go to. I was usually the first to be picked up by the yacht the Council was to meet on, because I was the least important and they didn't want to waste these important men's time. The captain pulled us in close, side-by-side, and the member aboard the other yacht would leave his yacht and come aboard. Each man was picked up in this way. There were usually three or four rendezvous after they picked me up. The men never arrived on the same yachts but used different vessels and crews so as not to ever be identified. Once every member was picked up they met in the largest room on board ship, and I was brought in to sit at the table during certain junctures when they wanted to send a message back to the President, foreign leaders, etc. This way later, I just delivered the message to whomever they directed me, usually during sex, and so everything remained anonymous.

Reagan was a big receiver of messages during his presidency. I was kept very busy delivering to him and he 'followed' orders to a 'T.' The group was "very pleased with his performance," were the words they used. Pete Wilson was the same way and so was George Bush. Anyway, the Council met on board yachts, had meetings, and then were navigated back to planned areas. They never met in the same place twice and everything was done with precision. That was one of their favorite words -"PRECISION"- and they always had the very best of everything. They even had "the chessboard" on board. They showed me one move each time and I was instructed to watch VERY CAREFULLY because there was no room for a mistake. Later I delivered the move on the chess board to Henry in New York. The chess move was ALWAYS taken back to Henry.

Disguises To Protect Kissinger

Henry literally built me so I could be a safe arm to reach out and touch the Council. I flew to New York regularly in the 70's and 80's. Just a quick trip to deliver the information to Henry. He had various and sundry disguises for me that he used to protect himself. A man in a suit always picked me up at the airport in a limo and gave me a bag. I knew to go to the restroom and change into everything in the bag, which included clothes, shoes, wig, teeth overlays, make up, purse, everything I needed was there. Craig had made me several sets of maxillary and mandibular overlays that I could just snap onto my teeth. I looked totally different and the switch was to be total and complete when I looked at my image in the mirror. "Become the image," Henry told me. So I changed my face, my voice, my walk; everything I was told to alter, in order to fit the image. I took the bag filled with my clothes back to the man in the limo and he put it in the front seat next to him and escorted me into the backseat. After I switched personalities and dress, he closed the glass window between the seats and never had conversation with me from that time on. He let me out at Henry's office, which was a large, older, very cultured building and someone escorted me right to Henry's office.

I sat down in an upholstered chair across from Henry's dark wooden desk. He snapped his fingers and ran his hand before my face to ready me for debriefing. I told him what the Council advised and the final message was the Chess move. He was very anxious to get that and always had me double-check the information so there wouldn't be any miscommunication. I was programmed that it wasn't possible for me to ever make a mistake.

After I delivered the information to Henry, he walked me to the door and gave me a small piece of folded paper to give the driver. I think it may have had my airline instructions on it or something. For some reason I never flew with a round trip ticket, and always had the return flight booked under a different name than the one I used on the initial leg of the trip. The driver gave me the special bag that now had all my original clothes in it, and I would go back into the public restroom and change. Then he took me back to the airport in New York and I'd fly to LAX. Usually my Mom or Craig would pick me up. It was a long trip but didn't seem like it because I was programmed to sleep. They were always proud that the precision was so good that I could be back within 24 hours or less. Somehow they 'folded' that amount of time and I never missed it. My assignments often began or culminated on Friday or Saturday night but usually I was home by Saturday. These meetings with Henry usually took place at the end of the work week. He liked to have the information delivered to him at that time because he would have the weekend to mull it over, undisturbed and uninterrupted by any other business. He said, "That's the secret to my success-FOCUS," then he would smile and take a cigar out of a case on the table. He also had a separate apartment away from home where he did his best thinking and strategizing. I met with him there, also, but always had to do the disguise routine before I met him anywhere.

When I returned home I was programmed to have cheese Danish to 're-mind' me to forget. Even when I was having therapy sessions with Stuart Perlman, I was programmed to have cheese Danish on the mornings I had therapy sessions with Stuart by phone. I was also cleverly programmed to misdial Stuart's phone number by one number. Every time I dialed his number I would get frustrated and wonder why I kept dialing the wrong number, and every time it was the same wrong number I dialed. My controllers had me dialing a number that contained a code to remind me to maintain security. During this period, I often met with Henry or others, so the Danish was the 'icing on the cake,' and served to make sure I didn't ever remember. I was still meeting with Henry when I was in therapy with both Stuart and Margie. My controllers told me they were trying to shore me up so I would make it to the end of my job in the year 2000.

Jaws

My job was to be over in the year 2000, and programmed parts of me were told that I was to be shot in the head and dropped overboard out in the middle of the Pacific where no one would ever miss me, including the sharks. In order to impress me, they made me watch shark-feeding frenzies. One time after Craig and I returned from a long weekend sail and scuba diving trip, another dentist friend of ours came over and said, "You weren't scuba diving in the Channel Islands this weekend, were you? They were having shark contests and were chumming the whole area!"

Shark themes were used heavily, and I was continually reminded by the Shark diver's wristwatch that I was given to wear.

My job as a go-between from the Council to others was my most important task. Bob was 'my owner' and Henry masterminded their plan, but the Council always called the ultimate shots. They said I was theirs until, "the end of time," and that time for me was supposed to be the year 2000. Then they said I could sleep with the fishes. Deep inside I couldn't wait until it was over.

Although the Council didn't ever meet on the same yachts, when they did meet, there often was an aquarium on board with sharks in it that was used to remind me what would happen if I stepped out of line. Craig and I had previously been directed to the big theatre with the stars on the ceiling on Catalina Island to watch James Bond movies. I constantly gazed upward at those stars per programmed instructions to, "look at the stars to be safe and forget."

I also was made to watch while a man in a suit threw an attendant into the shark aquarium when it was feeding time. He said to the man, "You wouldn't mind standing in for the fish this morning so this young lady can see what her fate is if she steps out of line?" The attendant looked at him quizzically and then the suited man threw him into the tank and quickly poured a pan of fish and blood all over the poor man in the water. The sharks went right for him. He screamed and flailed his arms but it didn't last long.

It was horrific and terrifying. The suited man looked me in the eye, and in a very quiet, soothing tone of voice said, "There, see what happens if you step out of line?"

"Yes, I see," I agreed, wholeheartedly.

This type of life and death terror tactic is enough to dissociate a person for a very long time, especially if they are under mind control. This shark theme ran throughout my victimization. After my children were born, we were at a theme park and all donned wet suits to swim with the fish; some were even small sharks. Danny and Kevin were even given small rubber sharks in order to remember the experience. The message was always the same, "Step out of line, you will be fed to the sharks." By now they probably only need to use virtual reality traumas.

Kauai Central Location

I was relocated on Kauai because it was a remote area with easier access to me, unencumbered by my family. It was a two-year phase. Then they didn't have to coordinate things so carefully between us all. I was free to go on their assignments and I was used heavily. They flew me to New York, England, South of France, Italy (Rome), the Netherlands, even Catalina and the Channel Islands, except now I was helicoptered to the yachts and tethered in on a chair. Often it was a two-seater helicopter, the 'glass bubble' type. The helicopter pilot seemed connected to the yacht as they radioed to coordinate the rendezvous with precision. When I lived on Kauai I was taken directly from the meetings of the Council to Henry, going through the whole disguise bit, and then returned to the island. I was usually gone two days (48 hours) or less, and when I returned I slept a lot because I had been without sleep or food and the time difference caused jet lag. Although, they tried everything to nullify the jet lag so I could, as they called it, "re-emerge into my life without stress or strain."

While I was on Kauai I even was reunited with Kelly (who still lived in California with her father) in England and France to "sexulate" some members in the royal family and a violent leader in France. Kelly has personalities that speak French, also. It was necessary for both of us to know French in order to communicate with this man. Kelly was trained to step into my shoes in the year 2000 and take over and I was supposed to give her a diamond ring to make this an initiation.

Further Council Adventures

I was programmed with personalities to emulate Jackie Kennedy's charm and dignity. Aristotle Onassis was a powerful arm of the Council, with the ability to move business holdings around. The Council poured money into these businesses and used people like Onassis as a front, since they had to remain anonymous. That was how they used a lot of business tycoons. The men who operated independently were the most ideal since they could maneuver without the oversight of a large corporation or business partners. Some of the richest entrepreneurs in the world were used this way and I was sent into them to have sex and deliver Council messages. I met with many of these men in the open seas on yachts for anonymity and security.

I also was rendezvoused with Reagan and Bush out in the middle of the Pacific during Reagan's Presidency. They were on separate yachts, and met with me during a three-day sailing trip with the Foltz's. Jeff Foltz secretly brought the drugs necessary for my use on board the sailing vessel we rented for sailing trips. Ile also brought electronic equipment, including a black box with wires that he hooked us up to; all three of us, his wife, my husband and myself, for programming. This happened before and after I was used. He probably got his 'tune up' before the sail.

The Council worked Reagan and Bush a lot, giving them instructions. Reagan went along blindly while Bush seemed to know more but not as much as Henry. I always slept with Reagan on the yacht he was on and then delivered the message to him. I was delivered to Reagan and Bush as Jeff navigated to a precise destination and when we came alongside their vessel I crossed 'over the rainbow' as I came on board. Sometimes I spent the entire night sleeping with Reagan after I had delivered the message because, he said he would, "prefer company while out in the middle of the lonely Pacific." So I stayed, and the next morning Jeff came back and picked me up and transferred me back.

As soon as I got on board, Jeff immediately stun gunned me in the back. My husband and Jeff's wife stayed down in the kitchen until Jeff finished with me, which meant drugs and the use of the black box. In later years, instead of an injection, the drug was a circular, oral wafer, like a small water chestnut. Then Jeff would announce to our spouses, "Time for lunch!" and they would start preparing lunch. After we ate, I would go take a very long nap or lay out on the deck and sleep while we sailed to our next destination. We often moored for the night in three separate areas; all strategically mapped and navigated so I would be in place for the rendezvous. I always felt so out of it after these events and consciously felt embarrassed that I was too tired or couldn't think to communicate with our friends. Now I know why.

Certain members of the American Dental Association have been heavily involved in this project and many of the people from USC Dental School that Craig knew. Uncle Charlie made Craig's way into USC, because Craig needed to be part of the project so he and Jeff could be "prepared," to ready me for use at the highest levels with the Council. The Council stepped up their plans beginning in 1980 and on into the 90's. Then it was supposed to be "clear sailing," as their plans snowballed and they began reaping what had been earlier sown. Until in the year 2000, when they would be able to cinch the purse strings shut, thus, being totally in charge of everything worldwide. But things didn't go exactly according to plan, especially regarding my situation.

They began to target more heavily, and more often, people that had been put in place over the years. They were bombarding them, certain individuals more heavily than others, depending on their usefulness and power potential. People like Onassis, Iacocca and the Rockefellers who were part of 'level two,' and others. Anyone who made big money was targeted. The Council was apprised of the wealthy, and people like Henry went to great lengths to strategize how those with wealth could be brought into their game for the highest effect or benefit to the cause. The Council saw this as a huge game to attain total and absolute power by the dawning of the next century-the Age of Aquarius. As an Aquarian I was told I was heralding the advancement of the planet-the global transformation to a new way of life through advanced technologies.

They plan to "market" the mind/brain technologies they themselves have been using for decades, to the general public, and are doing so already. This will allow them to make mega money in this new market as well as allow them to begin to educate the masses in regard to the new technologies of the mind, "The Frontiers of the Mind." But, while the public is spending vast sums of money on this new technology, they will also be conditioned through advanced forms of electronics, harmonics, and subliminal conditioning to accept this shift to a 'new existence.' The Council plans are to have a robotical working class that won't cause any problems, but will simply work to supply the needs of the Elite-those who by their breeding and intellect are deemed worthy of being allowed to be "awake" so they can rule, live and create without any interference from the common man. They say that the working class already makes non-thinking robots of their own everyday lives, and it might as well be more planned and regulated so that others who want to create, invent, and otherwise use their minds, can do so without hindrance from the common man.

They view the "common man" with great disdain as a lower form of the human species. And they figure that by the time the year 2000 rolls around, when the purse cinches shut, and they are in full control, that people will already be sufficiently conditioned and won't even be able to think to figure out or even be aware that a change has taken place. They see it as the perfect cover up for the continuation of the experiments in mind control they have participated in and feel very assured that the public will never be able to discover what happened because the more intelligent pubic has been sufficiently "tamed" and conditioned to go along with the rest of the herd.

Society is being weeded out right now, as minority species are being eliminated very specifically by biological germ warfare and other tactics meant to insure the elimination of those less genetically favorable. They figure with the reduction of the population there will be sufficient natural resources for the working class robots to support the genetically astute intellectuals who will be in power. Then, this is supposed to lead into a new age of peace. They even unleashed New Age principles to target and control the groups of people they previously programmed while they continued developing the mind control technology, in order to maintain control until the year 2000 when, supposedly, no one would be able to think to question or cause problems.

Our food is being tampered with, by the insertion of food additives and substances like aspartame which can alter brain chemistry and affect our minds. Music and movies are another powerful tool used to condition the masses. The Council views these measures as the kind, humane way to handle this matter, instead of a direct violent takeover, which would just cause even more chaos and human suffering. They envisioned that, this way, there would be no dissent and after the takeover there will be no need for wars, ever again. These men don't believe in wars, but needed to use them to achieve their goals. As they see it, the rest of the species will be living in harmony, able to create and enjoy while the lower, now robotical, forms of the human species do all the grunt work they are accustomed to: common labor, food production, and life maintenance for the higher forms of human species, the intellectuals, those who matter and are deemed eligible to be awake.

The Master Plan is Accomplished by Robots

There has been a master plan for years and many, including myself, were involuntarily enlisted to work for it, as Dr. Henry Kissinger, 'Mr. Global Internationalist,' masterminded much of their plan. My controllers viewed anyone with a small intellect as 'non-existing' anyway, so they will either be weeded out or retained on the mind-controlled work force that's already been created. Masses of daycare centers were targeted to insure the success of the takeover, where large numbers of children from normal families were programmed because they will be the ones who will be of the age to resist or fight the Council plan. But now, many won't be able to because their minds have been manipulated and conditioned during childhood, so they will go along with the global program. It is all a carefully laid out plan that has spanned decades and generations, with one generation handing down to the next their inheritance. The children of the elite families, such as the Rockefeller's and Kennedy's will inherit a guaranteed future on a planet that can survive due to the fact that the population and, in turn, pollution, food supplies, etc. will be totally controlled. These intellectual, genetically 'worthy' individuals plan to have their own guaranteed 'utopian dreamworld' after they kill off the inferior human species that they believe are overcrowding a planet that cannot support us all. The Council feels that they are insuring the future of the species of mankind by what they are doing. And, those from intergenerational ritually abused families and others will be placed under total mind control, to become the planetary 'workforce' so the elite doesn't have to waste their precious time on menial labor. The Council feels everyone 'wins' this way because it puts the non-thinking and genetically inferior populations "out of their misery," by taking their minds away, and insures a glorious future for the brightest intellects on earth. To them intellect is everything and without it, they think people shouldn't be allowed to waste precious time on earth, taking up space for those who can and will use their brains to create. They view this as a massive genetic clean up.

Then, when their agenda has been met, the world will be free from ignorance and chaos. According to their reasoning, there will be no abortion issue because the genetically intelligent won't bear children by accident. There will be no wars because they won't have a need to use wars to manipulate people for power or money. There will be no famines because there will be plenty of food grown naturally by the robot class and the world will no longer be overpopulated. Then, they can bring in their new form of world government and there won't be fighting or resistance because the Elite will see eye-to-eye and will all benefit, and are intellectually capable of understanding how they can all work together for the benefit of themselves. Crime will cease since the commoners, 'the robots' won't be able to think to commit acts of violence or any other forms of crime. The Elite think of themselves as intellectually above petty crime and will have no necessity of it since they will be getting their needs met, royally, by all of their mind-controlled 'worker-bees.' No more disease will be brought in by the 'unwashed' lower classes. So there will be less disease all-around because the Elite will take immaculate care of their bodies and won't have to deal with the stress and strain created by the problems of today. These will have been eliminated by eliminating the source of these problems-the genetically deficient. The Council has guaranteed survival and freedom for those at the top. What they have done to the human species in this Twentieth Century is tragic and they justify it by the rationale that they are protecting the future of the human species by insuring that only the best specimens survive.

The Council took a serious stand to clean up the environment as it served their needs for a healthy, pollution-free, life-sustaining environment for their future progeny. Since they have access to, as well as direct, major new discoveries in advanced technologies, they have disdain for the uneducated, ignorant, common people who trash their own environment. They said that even animals knew better than to defecate in their own sleeping area. But this would be remedied in the future when the genetically deficient were weeded out and extinguished.

They also were very condescending to those individuals who didn't eat properly or exercise. They take immaculate care of their bodies as far as health goes. They are fit and trim and they use natural medicines. The American Medical Association is fashioned to prescribe drugs and perform various treatments that although they may be unsuspecting, tend to weed out the weaker species. The Council views the AMA's 'modern medicine' as barbaric. Their plans are to have mind-enhanced health associates, like some of the USC medical and dental graduates, who will provide the new health care for the Elite, after the takeover. Precision surgery with laser technology will make the so-called "modern methods" of surgery obsolete. Miracle medicines and herbs (God's pharmacy) will keep the body healthy. An understanding of the way the electro-molecular energy field around the body operates will allow the healthy body to be kept in perfect alignment creating perpetual perfect health or it can be brought back into alignment easily with the use of high-tech field variation equipment. This will be the modern medicine of the future and upcoming doctors will be trained in these methods in order to further the evolution of the Elite. The Elite plan to enjoy total and complete health due to their technology in electromagnetic fields. They also have antibodies against the diseases they let loose and make sure they are protected. Of course all of these findings came about by research and experiments on unsuspecting groups of people.

The health care program they were attempting to implement in the United States was one they were hoping would though so that the lower class robots would have a health care system to serve their needs in the future, while allowing the government, the Council and those involved in the global takeover to remain in control. As you can see, it is a system designed for control. It is all about further conditioning the populace so that there won't be any drastic changes that would cause stress to the nation or upset the apple cart.

They believe they have learned what form of government would work best by installing different varieties of governments in different countries with leaders they chose, studied, and watched to see which form would be likely to meet their needs in the year 2000 and beyond. They saw different national governments as 'projects.' For awhile, they thought communism would be the best, until the mind control technology showed them they could covertly rule the masses without communism. With this technology, they believe they can rule the masses easily and effortlessly, and governing can be limited because they feel all of the Elite will have much the same wants, needs, and goals. They already have the central banking system in place and have a master plan for the laws, rules, and regulations that will govern those that are left.

Sons of the Elite are conditioned to be leaders in the New World. Robotic mind control won't be necessary for their compliance. They have been conditioned to accept this new agenda without being given all the information and will be allowed to be "free thinkers," unless they don't follow directions. The Elite are used to having servants so this overall concept is not especially different for them because they have been brought up to believe that they are born privileged, are of a superior genetic strain and have a responsibility to lead. I was used, under mind control, to further many of these attitudes with the sons of many world figures. It was just a matter of conditioning them with the beliefs, a little at a time, which would support the changeover. The egos of these young men have been very carefully created and conditioned. Prince Charles' boys are possibly doomed to the same form of conditioning.

The Council sees this as a planetary enhancement, with the globe entering a time of health, new excitement, and abundance for those deemed capable of making a difference in the future of the human species.

"And I saw an new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away; and the sea was no more. And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice from heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and the very God shall be with them and be their God; And he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor wailing, neither shall there be anymore pain; for the former things have passed away. And he who sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. Then he said to me, Write; for these are the trustworthy and true words of God. And he said to me, I am the alpha and the omega, the beginning and the end. I will freely give of the fountain of living water to him who is thirsty. He who overcomes shall inherit these things; and I will be his God, and be shall be my son." -- Revelation 21:1-7

Chapter Thirty-seven: What the World Needs Now

What Now? We Are Called To Love

And so for many, many years, Henry Kissinger and Bob Hope strategically placed me and members of my family in locations to further their interests. During those times, my children and I were used in various ways and prostituted to more worldly-affluent, famous, publicly adored leaders and entertainers than I care to remember. Personally, I would like to stay in denial and believe this never could have happened. But for the interests of many, I cannot afford to believe anything less than what I have discovered is the truth. I have chosen to share a fragment of these experiences with you so that you could know the level of technology that has been developed and to show you the danger of the ways those who carry a belief of power and control, and who at this time are out of alignment with their true spiritual nature, have misappropriated their duties to our nation and to the world.

Spiritually I have grown to realize that while the worldly Elite's positions are often determined by heredity, and in the business world nobility comes from ability, ambition, or success; in the eyes of God, nobility comes from those who serve others. Through all of my experiences at the hands of leaders from all over the world, I have learned that to be a true leader is to know your stewardship to those you serve, not to gobble and hoard the benefits for self while fooling and robbing those who count on you, who elect and trust you to serve the good of the whole. I also know now that truly great leaders are humble and their joy comes from the glorious privilege of serving others.

And I will tell you, as would my precious daughter Kelly if she could, that the current leadership under President Clinton is no different than the ones before. Indeed Kelly could start up the next chapter on William Clinton and could tell you the size of his genitals, the perverted ways he chooses to utilize his sexuality and how he, like many of the Presidents before him, is locked into the bondage of a power hungry system that will continue with each new President after him, unless this system is dismantled and a new system of governing, one based on the needs of the people, a true republic, born of God, for the good of the whole, is reinstated. But it will take each of us, all those who the Elitists feel have no intellect and no motivation, to stand up and speak out for what we believe in---perhaps even sharing our 'simple minds and spiritual natures' with those who for years have felt the right and the need to lord over us. For, once society has seen the problem, the solution is in sight.

I believe each individual is imbued with a gift from God to contribute to society as a whole and as each individual finds their true purpose and joins in, contributing that gift, we will then have a full-bodied, rich orchestration of individuals, evolving to the highest possible levels. That is when we as a society reach a more perfect state!

I also learned that freedom is not free and we must now stand in the battle, not through violence and war, but through knowledge, truth, and love, claiming our true spiritual power and willing to take a stand so our voices can be heard!

Healing

Healing spiritually, through a life such as mine, has been my ultimate challenge, and God has continued to keep my focus on this healing aspect, despite worldly opinion, which would lead me to seek in other directions. During the years of pain and suffering that led me out of mind control bondage, Margie Paul shared with me the following passage, by Emmet Fox, which I read constantly. It uplifted and strengthened me and reminded me of the truth. I would like to share it here with you.

LOVE

There is no difficulty that enough love will not conquer;
No disease that enough love will not heal;
No door that enough love will not open;
No gulf that enough love will not bridge;
No wall that enough love will not throw down;
No sin that enough love will not redeem...

It makes no difference how deeply seated may be the trouble;
How hopeless the outlook;
How muddled the tangle;
How great the mistake;
A sufficient realization of love will dissolve it all...
If only you could love enough you would be the happiest and most powerful being in the world...

In 1998, when all of my former life lay in ruin around me, I heard the Holy Spirit ask me who was the one person I hated most? The answer came quickly and easily. Silently I responded, "George Bush," since he was a man who repeatedly hurt my baby girl from very early on. The same day the Holy Spirit questioned me, I received a hospital advertisement in the mail cheerfully announcing that George Bush would be visiting a local hospital just 25 minutes from my home. I was devastated that people still looked at him as a person of honor, and associated him with charity and healing? Then the challenge from Jesus came when he called me to love George Bush. I couldn't do that initially, it took many prayerful hours for me to ask God to please change within me the attitudes that needed changing in order for me to love and forgive George Bush. Obviously, that didn't happen overnight, but it did take place, at first just for a fleeting moment and then for longer periods of time. That doesn't mean that I stop working toward exposing the system that has caused this misuse of human life, nor does it mean that I think what my perpetrators did was right or excusable. It simply means that no matter what they or anyone else does to me, they do not have the power to make me hate, or the power to take away my right to love, for love is my continuing goal.

Forgiveness

I was confused and tormented as I awakened to the realization that my father and others had abused me in such horrific ways and that they had actually taken control of my life for nearly 40 years. The awareness that churches had been places where I was often victimized, by individuals who I associated with being the most loving, added to my torment and bewilderment. I searched for answers, through reading about many religions, trying to find the truth, and one night I had a dream in which I heard the word "Beatitudes." Upon waking, the word stuck in my mind and later, while attending a religion class at Pepperdine University, I went to my professor and asked him what the word meant. He told me and later on that day, I went across the street to the Malibu Presbyterian Church to speak to the assistant minister. Little did I know that through my seeking, the Great Master Healer himself would appear to me, but that is exactly what happened. The minister ushered me into his office and after I confessed that I had been severely abused as a child, had Multiple Personality Disorder, had been forced to participate in satanic rituals where infants, children, and animals were killed - and as I went on and on - he looked at me in horror, and said, "Get down on your knees, and ask God to forgive you of your transgressions. You are a sinner."

The moment my knees hit the floor, Jesus appeared to me and said, "Get up off your knees, and leave. You my child are innocent, you have done nothing wrong." Taking the authority of the Lord, over this human who stood ministering in His name, I did as commanded and left. I couldn't understand yet what Jesus was trying to help me understand. It took time for Him to reassure me that those acts, committed in a programmed state, acting from other person's commands and not from my own free will, were not my sin. In the days that followed, Jesus showed me that He wanted me to stand in the name of Mercy for others who had been similarly tortured and abused. Over time, He called me to minister and share His words of mercy and forgiveness with other victims who presented themselves to me in women's shelters, at my office, at mental health conferences, and through letters of response to victims who wrote, pouring out their hurts to me after they read my book I know that this message from Jesus, one of complete forgiveness, touched the hearts and minds of the people I spoke with, as deeply as it did me because I saw the tears of relief and understanding well up in their eyes. God wants His people free.

I had many experiences where His Angels demonstrated that they were guiding me. I heard the Holy Spirit whisper, "get up from your reading, and go down to the Bazaar." I hadn't known that there was a Christmas bazaar at Pepperdine, but I followed the voice of the Holy Spirit and was led to a small purple book entitled, "Angels Are Watching Over Me. " And if I doubted that it was true, in the months and years that followed, the voice of the Holy Spirit led me to books, places, and people to help me heal and gain freedom. Books even fell off of shelves in libraries, many of them reminding me that the Angels of the Lord were ever present and that I was not to worry. Other books I was led to helped me organize my healing in such ways that, when healing took place, it was core healing and not superficial or drugged.

I often tell the story of the experience I had at traffic school. During the early stages of my recovery, despite the smile that betrayed my true inner feelings, I was so full of repressed, subconscious rage that it often found its release in driving too fast and I continually got traffic tickets for speeding; one day I got two! Since I was already on assigned risk and my insurance rates were extremely high, my husband suggested I go to traffic school, so I did. The traffic schoolteacher was younger than I, but that day she had an important message for me. I had been wrestling with just how I was going to forgive these people who had done this to my children and myself. As I explained my dilemma she said, "All you have to do is heal yourself so you have something left for giving." I know now that what she said was true and I understand the wisdom because, now in a healed state, I do have much to give. And, I thank God for that.

In Carbondale, Illinois, in 1995, nearly one year after my final integration and deprogramming, I was working in the garden. It was a warm day and I luxuriated in the midst of the peace and solitude that I found among my tomato and zucchini plants. Very clearly, I once again heard the voice of the Holy Spirit, this time instructing me to go visit my father.

"God, you want me to do what?" I couldn't believe I was being asked to go and visit this man who had tortured and programmed me for so many years, besides it wasn't safe for me in California, I had actually been raped there as 1 made my initial attempt to get Starshine into print in 1993. But I heard the words very clearly, "Go visit your father, fly under your real name, stay 24 hours and then return. An intelligence officer will approach you. Do not be afraid. Tell him what happened to you and to your children."

I thought maybe I hadn't heard correctly. So, I took this into prayer and in a very short while I knew I was to go to California. Soon God showed me a vision where I saw lights on in the White House symbolizing individuals who would wake up and help. Then He shared with me that, like the men's secret society (freemasonry) that has allowed secret knowledge to be passed between men, that He also had a secret society that was more powerful-The Holy Spirit. Then He showed me that as men's secret societies fund and support each other, so shall God's people fund and support their own. He showed me that through Him, and in His time, the Holy Spirit would connect people and allow them to be of like mind, so the truth could come to light. Although I didn't actually understand how this was going to come about, I was encouraged.

I booked my ticket, and the next day I went to California, to the nursing home where my father was being cared for. When I walked in, I was moved seeing my father sitting in a chair, withered and small, a whisper of the physical stature he had been before. When he saw me, he immediately began crying, and through his tears he cried, "I love you. I knew you'd come."

I got down on my knees before my father and said, "Dad, I forgive you."

Looking me directly in the eyes, he replied in a childlike manner, "I forgive you too." At that moment I knew without a shadow of a doubt that my father, this man who had tortured me for years, had no idea, no memory, no awareness of what he had done. Still crying he said, "Jesus brought me here." This statement caught me totally off guard, as here was a man who together with my brothers had ridiculed and berated me for my belief in Christ for years. I had so much I wanted to ask my father, but was overwhelmed with emotion. Trying to gather myself, I looked around his room. There on his bookcase, was a golden spider web with a crystal spider in the middle. Woven into this art piece was a Ronald Reagan wristwatch. My thoughts raced to information an Intelligence officer "in the know" once explained to me, that victims will surround themselves with their programming and often will display objects that speak to that which they verbally can't, as a form of subconscious communication. This spider web spoke to me deeply through subconscious communication, and although my father could not tell me what he knew, he had carefully preserved this piece to speak what he could not. Again deeply touched, I asked him if I could have it. He said, "Sure, take anything you want." My father and I cried together. There was so much I wanted to tell him and have him tell me but he was no longer able. But God knew that I needed to see my father this one last time, in order to complete my healing and forgiveness process. And that day, I totally and completely forgave my father. I understood why he had done what he had done. As I stood to leave, I kissed him one last time and told him I loved him, and looking back I am so grateful that God led me to that culmination and completion with my father. Less than three months after that meeting my father passed away.

As I drove my rental car to the airport to fly back to Illinois I realized that the intelligence officer experience had not yet occurred. But I was not to be disappointed because, shortly after I took my window seat on the aircraft, a distinguished looking black man took the isle seat. After takeoff he flashed his badge and identified himself as White House intelligence for the last 29 years. Taking his business card out of an organizer, he laid it on the seat between us. Unconsciously, still bound to the protocol of my controllers, as much us I wanted to, I couldn't pick up his card. Nervously, I thought to myself, 'Oh God, this is it'

This suited man began by telling me, "There are some things you need to know. One is that once in the company always in the company. Don't believe anyone that tells you they've retired from the company (CIA)." Next he said, "When you speak publicly don't name the names."

I told him I wouldn't. At that moment the words spoken to me by the Holy Spirit in the garden, came back to me, "Tell him what happened." So, I told this man about the abuse of my children and myself that often led to our victimization in the White House. He told me that he thought women like me "just liked to be with Presidents." And finally, as we walked off the plane, the words he spoke surprised me as I realized maybe this man had a spiritual awakening, was serving a higher calling, and was one of the 'lights on the White House' that God had shown me. He said that he was committed to informing ministers of churches to do their jobs in helping victims. I was encouraged.

Over the years, what I witnessed in my father was something that I have noticed in many of the victims of the mind control projects. He was extremely inventive and futuristic and had many personalities that were extremely loving. My father designed and built solar water heaters that he installed on the roof of our Woodland Hills home in the 1950's, and shared thoughts and ideas that continually astounded me. Due to the shattering of his own psyche through the ritual abuse he endured as a child, coupled with the mind control programming forced upon this already vulnerable man, he was never in control of his own mind. From birth, his free will was taken from him through the abuse he endured at the hands of his parents who themselves had been through the same victimization passed through intergenerational, subconscious mental illness. Then, in a final attempt to harness the complete control of his daughter, the doctors at UCLA took the last vestiges of my father's free will when they performed the brain surgery that gave them total control.

Breaking the Denial That Holds Us Captive

Honestly, I can understand the denial many of you may be facing in regard to all that I have shared with you, as I faced the same denial over and over. I did not want to believe that any of the reality that kept intruding into my mind was real. Often I wanted to believe I was insane, and at times even wished I could choose to live out the rest of my days rocking back and forth in a drugged stupor in some sanatorium. Then not only in response to programming, but also feeling trapped in a pain and confusion I often felt I could not bear alone another day, initially, I had moments when I contemplated suicide. But due to the ramifications that act would have had on my children, that was never a choice I could make. I had to keep asking God to strengthen me so I could face the painful reality and heal in order to make a difference in the lives of my children.

Forget the Past, Live in the Present?

It has been said that those who forget the past are doomed to repeat it and I believe this is part of the situation we face today because until now we haven't been told enough valid historical information. Before my recovery, like most Americans, I was more interested in my future than in my past but was soon forced to deal with it due to constant flashbacks. But what if a person's past holds a potent key to his or her future? And what if that past holds intergenerational and worldly information that when realized and righted will resonate throughout future generations, causing freedom and a better quality of life? Knowing my past has set me free and I am grateful for the spiritual guidance that told me that I had to go backward before I could go forward. Although dire circumstances forced me to revisit my past, I now know that the inner work I completed in researching and healing the dark, hidden areas of my own past will reverberate throughout the spiritual genes of my progeny's future and I am glad for that.

Don't Worry, Be Happy!

At first when these bits and pieces of memory began surfacing in my mind, I was terrified and continually dismissed them, as others told me things like, "You're just too tired. You have a big imagination. You have everything a woman could want. Why don't you just quit therapy, get a job and be productive. Stop living in the past. Don't worry, be happy!" Or, new age belief systems that created comments like, "These are only your past lives. What you put your attention and focus on grows. I don't choose to think about negative things. I like to focus on the light instead of the darkness. I create my own reality. This is not part of my reality. If it's this painful to deal with and causing you this much stress, it must not be the right thing to do." The list was endless. But over time when these flashbacks and thoughts intruded into my present life with subjects and events that didn't interest me (politics, glamour and glitz, golf, baseball games, football games, and sex orgies), I had to wonder and question what it all meant. That started the quest that has led to my knowing and my understanding. I am hoping you, too, will be able to overcome your own denial and to question these issues put before you, because the safety of our children and, yes, even our human freedoms depend on it.

Over time I have had a plethora of responses to the telling of my life history. People have come to their own conclusions, based on their own belief systems and understanding at the time. Over the years it has continually pained me to speak publicly, sharing bits and pieces of what happened to me in an attempt to stop this abuse and gain help for my children and others, only to finish my speech, look out in the audience and see blank faces. Perhaps many were numbed by the magnitude of the information I delivered, or thought I had lost my mind instead of finding it. But I can tell you that my healing came from the one or two loving persons who threw their arms around me after I spoke, and with tears in their eyes that clearly communicated to me that they understood the magnitude of the what had happened said, "I am so sorry this happened to you. What can I do?"

Celebrity

Other people have said, "At least you met famous people and had incredible experiences!" In response, I say that the years of my life that I lived as a mind controlled robot to Bob Hope, Henry Kissinger and others were not mine, they were stolen from me. I was not consciously present. Those years were tragically altered and woven with horrific and painful abuse that separated me from my core self and from the family I love. I have painfully witnessed individuals and society as a whole, hold in a protective reverence the "media-portrayed persona" of many famous persons. I watched as people in all walks of life - housewives, ministers, attorneys, newscasters, and professors, etc. - held firmly to their view of famous people they never personally knew, in order to maintain some sort of fantasy relationship or belief system they held about these famous persons. People have said to me, "Not Bob Hope, he wouldn't do these things," and I am left to wonder why they need to hold onto their media-created reality in lieu of opening their minds and using their spiritual discernment to examine the possibility that what myself and others are reporting might be true. My controllers, the authors of this plan of enslavement, are counting on you to believe the media image they have thrust forward. They are counting on you to do nothing.

Another person said to her husband, "She must have watched too many X-Files!"

I shared that, with the exception of occasionally catching a show at someone else's house while they had the television on, I haven't watched television since 1989. I have never seen X-Files. But I know that through media avenues, the authors of the New World Order Plan have been able to very cleverly hide this reality out in the open.

I'll Do It My Way

I can tell you that if I could only choose my life over again, I would leave all the 'celebrities' out of it and would live a simple, basic life, enriched with love and deep connection to God and my family. To me that is where life's richness lies, not in wealth or celebrity status. Wealth and fame have never been important to me, and thank God, because if I had been attached to the affluent lifestyle I had been living in California, I never could have chosen to break away and go for my freedom, regardless of the cost. For me, there is no price tag on freedom and morality: it is priceless.

In the earliest stages of memory breakthrough, when I had flashes of insight of what my husband and I were involved in, I had moments before my programming kicked in, when I was lucid before I switched personalities again, in order to try to figure out what to do. There were many times before I left California and the life I lived with my husband, when I begged him to heal and stand with me. He could never hear me. Hand in hand on a walk one day, I proposed, "Let's sell the house and spend the money on our healing; yours, mine and the kids." He couldn't hear of it.

In weeks that followed, he returned home from a conference and said, "They asked us who we looked up to and I told them, you."

"God help us," was my reply and in total and compete devastation, I realized for the first time in my life, that I was bankrupt in my marriage, that my husband did not serve the same God that many parts of me did. I felt alone, frightened and unprotected by the lack of spirituality that I knew could have guided our lives together.

During times when I devoted endless hours to exercise and nutrition, people have said, "You look too good to have been through that much trauma," and during periods when my expressed grief has left me looking pale and haggard, or over or under weight, people have said, "You don't look good enough to have been used with celebrities."

I was forced to invest in hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of therapy ($300,000+) and physical therapy (thousands of dollars) in order to heal. All I can say is that it is a miracle that my body is still intact at all, and I thank God for that. There are telltale signs of the abuse recognizable by those "in the know," scarred skin from electroshock that left prod marks, and my eyes often look as if something of an electronic nature has happened to me. But the major ailments I had while in the midst of my mind control are healed; the migraines are gone, the continual sinus infections, sore throats, breathing problems and hoarseness that often necessitated the use of an inhaler are gone; no more colitis, stomachaches and nausea, constant fatigue and body pain. All these symptoms are gone. As my mind healed and I was able to hold my reality mentally, and as I released the traumas of the past, my body healed. My healing from this abuse is to God's glory and I know that without seeking and heeding the Holy Spirit's leading, I never would have made it out. "It is not I, but the Father within me, He does the works. "--John 14:10.

We Are Called To Love and Forgiveness

Prayerfully and with immense love and compassion, I ask, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do."--Luke 23:24.

My family and many of our fellow humankind are still locked in the bondage of the mind control projects and experiments due to the fact that their birth into intergenerational dissociative families, and their genetic DNA encoding made them capable of advanced abilities for which they have been targeted for use by those who seek to control. Please help these survivors to freedom and release by donating whatever you can, even if it is a simple kind word to show you care.

One awareness that weaves through my entire life under mind control is that the love that shone through from people's spirits, even while under mind control, was never wasted, nor was it ever lost; indeed, it seemed to be catalogued within me on some higher plane that never goes away. So often, I witnessed the love of those under mind control who lived among and near me. These creative people, all full of so much love that, even when I lay the often hurtful mind control abuse experiences side by side with who I knew in spirit they really were, the love I felt from them often blasted beyond their programming, allowing their soul essence to shine through. Immense love and inherent behavior of loving souls, all interwoven with intense agonizing soul pain and tragedy as the mind control technology and those who created the reality we were programmed to live, manipulated and controlled our inherent natures, our spiritual life force and the love that lives within us. It is for our controllers and our perpetrators that I write these words. For many survivors, in our souls, even in physical and mental programmed bondage, already know the truth. But the world needs to know. The soul is free and LOVE is lasting. Jesus was right, and he called us to love above all else. He didn't call us to worship power, monetary gain, or the control of others. He called us to love. He taught us that there was no greater gift than to lay our life down for a friend, and, He wants His people free. Please help me to help these most beautiful souls, who have been locked in anguish and bondage, who, from birth have been locked away from their inherent loving nature, to find the light of day and be freed from the agenda of those who seek to benefit by robbing their talents and abilities.

And in the final curtain call is the Council actually the old, worn, frazzled Wizard of Oz hiding behind the curtain, frantic that he has been exposed and defrocked of his power? Those in search of Oz - Dorothy finding her home and family, the Cowardly Lion finding courage, and the Tin Man finding his brain - these were the ones who were strong in the end, not the one pulling the strings!

In truth I believe we are all one, and together we can find the answer, if we choose ...Let that answer be guided by love.

"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." --Acts 26:19. "To this end was I born, and for this cause 1 came to you, that I should witness to the Truth." --John 18:37. "You shall know the Truth and the Truth will set you free." --John 8:32. "For the Son of man has not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." --Luke 9:56. "For 1 have come that they shall have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." --John 10:10. "I am not alone, because the Father is with Me."--John 16:32. "1 and the Father are one." --John 10:30.

"For you were called to freedom, brethren; only do not use your freedom as an opportunity for the flesh, but through love be servants of one another. For the whole of the law if fu flied in one word, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself." -- Galatians. 5:13-14.

Chapter Thirty-eight: A Mother and Grandmother's Sorrow

A GRANDMOTHER'S SORROW: SUE'S MOM

A Family Torn Apart

My husband was a welder and when we were first married he worked at the shipyards where he got hurt. One night, while working in the dark, he ran into a steel plate, hit his head, and was knocked unconscious. He sustained serious neck injuries and six months later his neck became very painful and shook uncontrollably. The diagnosis was torticollis of the neck. He was in so much pain that he would try anything the doctors suggested; such as shock treatments, being injected with typhoid fever, endless experimental drugs, brain surgery and many other medical interventions.

When he was 45 years old he was told by a doctor that he only had five years to live. He wanted to be sure his young family would be taken care of so he bought all the life insurance he could get.

In the meantime, he quit the shipyards and opened his own welding shop. My youngest son loved welding and became very good at it. My oldest son went to college and graduated as a geologist. Eventually, though, they both worked at the welding shop. They fought constantly. It was driving my husband nuts. He got up one morning and was acting like a crazy man. He said he was going to the shop and fire one of them, he didn't know which. I was scared and devastated. I begged and pleaded with him but I could not reason with him. He came home later and told me he had fired the older son. I was surprised that he hadn't fired the youngest son. He had always nagged him and verbally abused him.

A few weeks later my husband asked me for a tape recorder. He said he wanted to make a tape for his oldest son. I helped him get it ready and left the room. A short time later when I looked in on him, he was holding the tape recorder and crying. Later, I found out he had said that he had to fire the oldest boy because the younger son held something over him. The older son asked if it was business and my husband said, "No, personal."

Our son asked, "What was it Pop, did you have an affair?"

"Much worse," my husband answered.

Years later, he went to his deathbed carrying the secret. The thought that it might be incest, child pornography or any of these other horrors never crossed my mind.

My two sons are estranged. I've tried many times since 1974 to talk to my sons, to get them to at least talk to one another, but to no avail. The younger boy was willing but the older one said, "No way." It hurt me so bad for so long I thought I would go crazy. One night I said to God in my prayers, "God, I can't handle this, you take over."

In 1967, my husband had brain surgery to stop the pain and shaking in his neck. They went down through the brain to sever the nerves that were causing the pain. It helped but he was in the hospital for a long time.

A few years later he had a heart attack and finally had open-heart surgery. There were complications. During the surgery he went without oxygen for four minutes. They said because he had brain surgery, his brain became swollen and he had edema of the brain. He was coma-like for 12 days. When he came out of it he was like a vegetable, didn't know any of us. He was helpless, couldn't feed himself, go to the bathroom or walk. After months of physical therapy he was able to walk and could pick up food with his hand. His memory was partially blocked. This deficit impaired his whole left side. He never regained all of his memory. I took him home and took care of him.

My daughter stopped by one day, which was not unusual, as she lived down the street. She asked if she could talk to me. She said she had something to tell me so we went outside and sat on the swing in the back yard. She told me her father had sexually abused her. I was shocked, stunned, sad, and couldn't believe what I was hearing. She also said, "You and grandma also abused me."

I started crying and thought, "Where was I?" I had no memory of any of this happening. I finally said to her, "It's not that I don't believe you, it's just that I can't remember." But I was so naive when I got married right out of High School. I thought we were a normal, happy family and this accusation shocked me to the roots. I thought and thought but could not remember a thing. I do remember often saying when the kids were little that life seemed to good to be true.

Later she told me that I had abused all three of her children. I couldn't believe that I had done that, as I love those children like my own. I was heartsick and kept praying it was not true. She gave me a booklet from Los Angeles Women's Task Force on Ritual Abuse, and wouldn't let me see her children anymore. I could hardly function. I was heartsick, like in a trance.

As my daughter told me more about the abuse, I tried so hard to remember, but couldn't. In going over her allegations and remembering her childhood, I thought there were times the abuse could have happened. But she appeared to be a normal, happy little girl. She was such a good little girl, obedient, loving and just a little angel.

Sometime in the late 80's my daughter told me her father had sexually molested her from the time she was a baby. After Sue continued to tell me more, I began to believe her and that this really happened. I could hardly stand to look at my husband or take care of him any longer but he was a sick old, helpless man so I continued to care for him, every second hating him. But no matter what happened, he never complained.

Shortly after this she came to confront her father. She told him he had sexually abused her. He had a very hard, angry look as he looked at me and said, "Your daughter is crazy." She left and we didn't see her for a very long time. I would call but she wouldn't answer the phone or talk to me.

My husband continued to be a very sick man and had to be taken care of. From then on, I only spoke to him when I had to. To think he had abused our daughter made me hate him. I had loved him for over 50 years. Now I couldn't even let him touch me at night. If he happened to put his leg or arm across me, I'd kick him.

After my daughter's two accidents that both happened on April 12th, two years apart, my daughter disappeared. I didn't know where she was. I was so afraid for her. She had not spoken to me for many months. It was like losing my arm. We were, I thought, so close and now she wanted nothing to do with me. I felt like it was a dream or a terrible nightmare that I'd wake up from in the morning and it wouldn't be true. I was so worried about her. Without talking and praying to God, I never would have gotten through that separation from her.

I felt like I was going crazy, so I went to a therapist. The therapist did not seem to be helping me. After Sue fled from California, she called me and told me she was running for her life. One day I told my therapist that I had sent Sue money to help her write the book she explained she was needing to write to stay alive. The therapist surprised me when she said emphatically, "Don't give her any more money."

I told this therapist, "God told me to help my daughter." That's when I stopped going to her. Sue was my daughter and my heart said to help her. In spite of the abuse allegations, her father kept saying to me, "Help her, Honey. Help her."

I continued caring for my husband; he was helpless and couldn't do anything for himself. I gritted my teeth and helped him, all the while hating him. He never mentioned the abuse again.

I got a call one day from my daughter. I was elated to hear from her. She was in Hawaii and she wanted me to know that she was going to be hit by this hurricane and didn't know what would happen to her. Later on the news, they showed the island of Kauai damage from Hurricane Inniki. It was in ruins. I tried to call her but all lines of communication were down. Finally after a few days, she called to say she was alright, but lost everything she had.

When she came back to the states she called and told me more about her abuse. I was so confused but even though I could not remember anything, I began to believe it was all true. She moved from place to place to stay alive and finally called and said she was safe, but wouldn't tell me where she was. I felt so relieved that she was safe and getting help.

First it's My Daughter, Then My Granddaughter

Then her teenage daughter started having problems. Without any apparent reason, she tried to commit suicide three separate times. She is such a sweet, loving girl. I could hardly let myself think of her being sexually abused. And if I had abused her, I shouldn't be allowed to live. We talked but my granddaughter couldn't seem to tell me why she had made those attempts. She finally decided to go live with her mother. She had only three months of school here in California until she graduated. We thought she could finish her school there. She was okay for awhile with her mother and then she started being dysfunctional and finally became catatonic. My daughter was frantic. She couldn't handle her, as Sue is much smaller in stature and not as physically strong as my granddaughter is. She called and told me she was taking her to the hospital. She didn't know what else to do.

My granddaughter was in the hospital a very short time when somehow she was able to call her father. She told him she was being held against her will and would he please come get her. He did fly there and get her. But, instead of taking her to their home where she thought she would be going, he explained to her that she needed help and he was taking her to a halfway house, a place that other teenagers who needed help lived. She shared a room with a teenage girl who also had problems. They had a lot of rules. She began functioning, taking care of herself, and doing her chores. She often just went to bed and slept. I started picking her up on Sundays. We would eat, shop, or take a ride. She was always so happy to see me. I called her almost every day; she would call me, too, not for anything in particular, just to talk. I asked her one time how she felt when she thought she was going home with her dad and found out she was really going to a halfway house. She said she felt abandoned.

Her mother suggested that EEG Biofeedback might help her, so every Thursday, I'd pick her up and take her. She loved frozen yogurt so we'd always stop for that. We'd talk and she always said she hated where she was living. She was able to finish her high school course. They taught her how to take the bus, so one day she enrolled at Pierce Junior College to take a psychology class. She had only 10 days to finish the class when she called her Mom and said she couldn't stand it there at the home anymore. Together my daughter and I got her a ticket, that was a Saturday and she was to leave on Monday. Saturday night her father picked her up and tried to talk her out of going, but she stood firm and said she was going. She was so scared to go alone. She kept saying, "What if I can't find the gate I'm suppose to go to?"

I told her to go to the counter and tell them, "I need help." I called the day of her flight to be sure the shuttle had picked her up. I prayed all day that God would watch over her and keep her safe. She arrived safely and my daughter was there to meet her and take her home. She was okay for awhile then started staring off again as if she were in a trance and didn't seem aware of anything going on around her. I feel so helpless, I want to help her but I don't know how.

Her brothers and I went for a visit with her and her mother. She would be fine one minute and then she would start staring and not talking, then she'd be okay again.

When I think about my granddaughter and all she is going through I can hardly bear it. Such a waste of a young, loving, life and what a horrible thing that she has to suffer and go through all the pain. These are things that should not happen to anyone.

My daughter is now healed and is doing everything she can to help and heal her daughter. I pray constantly that my granddaughter can be healed and lead a normal life. I am so proud of both of them.

My husband was a man who had been severely physically, sexually, and verbally abused as a child. I loved him and trusted him. He was so loving and sweet sometimes and other times he would be so nasty and mean. He was like two different people. I know now he suffered from Multiple Personality Disorder.

He dearly loved his family. He was very proud of his two sons and dearly loved his little girl. I was not aware at the time that he was sexually abusing our daughter.

By 1990 I was physically unable to take care of him. He was in a wheelchair and had to be lifted many times during the day. I found a nice board and care for him and, although I hadn't seen my oldest son in years, I called and asked if he would come and morally support me while I told my husband about the move. He said, "Okay, what have I got to lose." He came and explained to his dad how I couldn't physically take care of him and had found a nice place for him.

My husband said, "Okay, if that's what you want to do with me."

At that time I was seeing all of my kids, but always separately. I couldn't speak about any of them to the one I was seeing. It was hell. When I would call my oldest son's wife, she was very cool. Finally she called and started questioning me about Sue's sexual abuse. I told her, "I don't remember anything, but I believe her."

She said, "How could you believe your daughter and still take care of your husband?"

I was shocked. I told her he was a sick, old, helpless man, what did she want me to do with him? She called later and asked how I could see my younger son after all the things he had done and I told her, "I guess I have unconditional love for my children."

Her reply was, "Not me, my kids have to earn my love and they have."

After that my oldest son and daughter-in-law wanted nothing more to do with me. I was not to call, send birthday cards or presents of any kind. I once asked my oldest son if he had forgiven his father for firing him. He said, "In my head I have, but in my heart I haven't."

My husband died alone in a rest home in April of 1996.

I notified my children. The only thing the oldest boy said was, "I'm sorry to hear that." My husband was cremated and there was no service.

My family is ruined. Not one of my children speaks to the other. I have ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. I dream sometimes of us all sitting around the table on holidays and just enjoying each other and being a loving family, then I wake up to reality.

This generational sexual abuse and mind control has ruined this family. It breaks my heart as it seems I can't help to stop this, only by supporting my daughter. I pray for all my grandchildren's safety. Thank God, the truth about this abuse is finally coming out so other little children will be safe from it.

In the last three years, I have thought so much about my husband's abuse and have finally forgiven him. I hope he is at peace and looking down on us all, happy to see his daughter working so hard to end this abuse for so many children.

Sue's Mom

A MOTHER'S SORROW: SUE FORD

Turning the Tide

The pain and loss of family locked into the bondage of mind control is more excruciating than losing them to physical death. I miss my family more than they could ever imagine, in truth, more than I could have ever imagined. I will never be able to replace my husband, or the life I thought we were living. I just wished he had chosen to heal with me. Why didn't he? Or is it really, why couldn't he? Whatever it is or was, he didn't or couldn't, and so I have gone ahead and forged a path for freedom and sweet release for my children and myself, and have lighted a path for others if they choose. Perhaps my husband was never consciously able to know that we were programmed together and never really had a chance to comprehend who we really were independently or as a couple, but I feel sure that I knew his spirit. In truth, he was the most gentle, loving and giving man I have ever known. I know why my daughter is having so much trouble coming out of a catatonic state, because it is so painful to deal with the reality that the very ones that you love and that love you are the ones that are programmed to hurt you so much. That is the nature of the evil system that has kept so many under mind control bondage. But, the truth is that all of us were programmed by a source outside of ourselves, at birth; a time when none of us were able to change any of the horrendous circumstances we faced.

To have had this seemingly beautiful family and then to wake up to reality only to find that it wasn't beautiful, that instead our lives were interlaced with terror, abusive horrors, and atrocity; nothing was as it seemed. To wake and find that I wasn't safe, and then to retrieve the agonizing memories that led to discovering that my children were not safe, was harrowing. And then to deal with the fact that my husband, the father of my children, was programmed to drug, rape and deliver us, was as painful, if not more painful than my father doing the same to me. I find myself curled into a fetal position on the floor more nights than I care to think about, crying out in desperation and in a pain that never seems to go away, a pain that really never lessens. The pain is a great burden and yet I find that to carry it is to feel what is real. And, with that, I feel the great love and strength that has carried me this far.

Like my daughter, I want my family back. I want the love that we all thought was there. I want everyone healed. I want especially for my children to be freed and released. If I had to give my life for that, I would indeed feel that it was spent wisely. I pray daily that God will carry me to make whatever contribution I can, and that He will light the path for my children's freedom. Indeed, for the freedom of all those who suffer.

I have never felt so uncertain about the future. I have given up the hope that any of the wrong's will be righted overnight. I never could have left, in my attempt to save my life and heal in order to get help for my family, had I known that it would have taken this many years and that my family would still not be free. Still under mind control, and not yet recovered enough to have the full memories that made the picture of our high level slavery more complete, I naively thought that I could get my children out of danger and into safety and healing much quicker. I never thought that it would take this many years to ignite public intervention and outcry - and then to have my sweet, loving, gentle daughter Kelly left in a completely dysfunctional state, and my two sons in total disbelief and unable to hear anything I have to say to point their way to safety and freedom, due to their own programming.

I will never again tell survivors that I live in peace and contentment, because I don't. I have been given the Grace of God that allows me to live in a somewhat dissociated state of mind with the painful reality of all that has happened in the background as I presently live a somewhat successful life. But it doesn't stop the pain. There are times when I want to pretend none of this is real, I want to escape into dissociation, right along with Kelly. I miss her. I miss Craig, I miss Kevin and Danny. God, I miss them all! Please God, use me in my brokenness to help others not have to hurt this much.

I must be very dangerous to the architects of this evil system and my high level controllers. For I am a woman who loves God and her family more than life itself, and will not bow down to fear. In many ways I am fearless for I have nothing left to loose. Everything precious to me has been taken away. Every bond that was sacred, has been tainted, and broken. Birth, life, marriage, children; family relationships of father, mother, brother, husband, son, daughter, all tainted and destroyed. All that was before lies in ruins. Total and complete ruins. And what remains in the future is in your hands. For I have laid down the burden. I have spent the past 14 years communicating what happened to me to as many persons possible. I am tired and spent and the future depends on humanity's decisions and actions. I pray for the release of the many. I pray for the release to be timely. I pray for the release to be gentle and full of grace, love, and ease, instead of through pain and suffering. I love God and I am grateful for His leading. I pray for strength in the face of what God has planned for my life, that I might fulfill my purpose.

Writing this manuscript has been so excruciatingly painful, that I found myself wandering the house looking for some undone chore to take me away from facing the full ramification of the experiences that bring me to this writing; somewhere, anywhere to escape to. The pain is so deep, so present, and so pervasive. My heart aches for the love lost, for the suffering endured, for the souls locked in bondage. Many nights I cry until the tears won't come any longer. Just when I feel like I couldn't possibly cry another moment, another wave of grief strikes and I hold my body, in an attempt to survive the aftermath of emotional pain. If it were not for Jesus, I could not have endured. For He has put this appointment before me. When I was a child, and the torture that often took me near death was too much to bear, Jesus sent His angels to minister to me, to gently and lovingly guide me back to my body, so I could be here now to tell you what has happened, so it can stop. And when as an adult I reached a point in my spiritual healing that I could begin to put the terror associated with Him, created from satanic ritual abuse, aside, the Master Himself began appearing before me, leading me, guiding me, and interceding when I was totally alone and in need. Believe me, Jesus is alive today. The Great Healer can heal anything, everything, we only need to ask. And now we must join together to stop this sinister agenda so the children won't have to suffer any longer and so humanity can be assured of life free of mind control. Jesus has asked me to ask you to help. Please help me to help the others. They are so worthy and have suffered so much. More than anyone I know they deserve a gigantic measure of Christ love. Recently, as I watched the movie, Schindler's List, I could relate to his frantic desperation and hard work to rescue and save the lives of as many Jewish people as he could, finally selling his last possessions to do so. This man realized the precious value of a soul. Jesus calls us to give to those who are in need. Most victims of mind control and ritual abuse who are trying to break free, are forced to live in stark poverty and degradation; physically, emotionally and spiritually. They need safety from further abuse and shelter from the cold; they need blankets, food and clothing. They need nurturing touch and love, EEG Neurofeedback, therapy with informed clinicians, body therapies, natural healthcare, and they need skilled and compassionate people to listen to their pain in order to heal the wounds and scars from the past. Please help in whatever ways you can.

Brice Taylor - Thanks for the Memories

EPILOGUE

A New Vision for the Future

What initially began as journaling in order to sort out my mind, became more of a project once I began to break free and see that there was some insane organized plan behind the mysteries of my life. The singularity of my one voice has been lonely over the years, but there were moments when the good Lord caused my path to cross with at first one, and then two, and then whole groups full of beautiful but wounded persons who had been though similar experiences. Together all of our voices, telling the same truths, have gained strength over the years. And today I am not alone in my recovery, for I have many brothers and sisters all over the globe that have recovered to inform you of much the same grim picture that I have shared with you here. I have spent the last 14 years cataloging this information, and am now able to report to you what has been going on behind the scenes so that the truth might set us all free. God only knows the full ramifications of what has occurred, but this information that I have presented to you in the clearest manner I know how, will give you a glimpse of the plans and agenda of those who at the present time are not only pulling the purse strings, but are manipulating the very life force of the nation and ultimately of the world.

We find ourselves at a time when, in order to survive and insure that our freedoms are reinstated, we must take action. It no longer serves us as a nation and as a world to turn a deaf ear to what has occurred. These actions taken by those whose consciousness is dwarfed by the belief in power and control have, in actuality, called us to a new time of choice. We stand at the crossroads of a new era, indeed a new millenium. And now it is truly our choice as to where to go from here. Will we continue to be uninvolved, feeling that the chaos, created intentionally to confuse and disrupt, has caused our world to seem so unbalanced and turbulent that we feel we don't know how to choose, that we don't know which way to turn? Or will we see clearly though the chaos and confusion, and rise above their smokescreen attempts to hide their New World Order plan to enslave the human race, so we can create another option? We do have many choices. As a matter of fact, what these controllers have led us to is a clear view of what needs attending to anyway, in our technologically advancing world. Armed with the information of what is askew, we can now right the wrongs and clearly envision what could be. The lives of our children and future generations depend upon the choices we make at this pivotal juncture.

We can create a new world. We can create a new reality to include freedoms not yet known to this planet. We can create new institutions, new ways of ordering society with God's leading and God's guiding. Many clamor for lives filled with more time: time to rest, to enjoy nature, to spend with family and friends in simple modes of comradery, time to reflect and time to come closer to God and our higher nature. These can all be part of a new reality we create together, as God's people. But we have to realize that to make the choice to stand silent is to let those whose belief in power and control of the masses, take control in order to enslave us all. They led us to this point in time where we are nearly out of time.

God has called me to sound the wake up call as I join with others around the nation and the world who are sounding the same alarm. We must wake up and we must act. This is a call to action in order to avert the culmination of their New World Order plan. Never was there more critical time than now for standing for what we believe in, unintimidated by disconnected, unhealed beings who are bullying us around on this beautiful planet of ours, taking control where we have neglected to maintain our vigilance. The technology that has been created has been used in an evil way, causing harm and separation among and between individuals, families, groups, and from God, indeed from the higher nature of our inner being. We can continue to allow our university medical research, military, and space programs to be filled with an alternate secret agenda, or we can call into account those working within secret systems that have allowed these mind control atrocities to operate behind protected walls, as those who participate at the highest levels go unpoliced and undetected.

The Holy Spirit has shown me that once you have completed this book and the veil that once clouded your eyes has been lifted, many will know how they are called to bring about the swift change necessary for averting the One World Government and the intended totalitarian New World Order agenda planned by our controllers. He has shown me that many will know their exact positions and will know just what part they are to play in reuniting this once strong, free nation. Indeed the vision I see is a beautiful orchestration of souls. May God bless those individuals with the courage, wisdom, insight, and love needed to set us back on course. You who are called know who you are and will remember why you've come. Let us stand as a united front to speak out and take action to protect one of the most precious gifts we each have: our minds. We must stand up to those who seek control and say, "NO MORE. THIS ABUSE MUST STOP!" It is time to cast our denial aside and take action as we are spiritually directed. For we have been called to protect the children.

Please join me in united solidarity. Let's create a safer, beautiful world where children can be born into peace, safety, and love. If we start at the beginning where life initiates and insure that doorway is clear, we will go a long way toward insuring the survival of the human race. Many are now more aware of the damage done to a baby or young child when abuse occurs. Indeed this unconscious state of the abuse of children continues to snowball as one generation takes the wounding, only to inflict it unconsciously, without knowledge or understanding, on the next generation. Let us heal these areas within us that were caused by abuse in our own childhood's, so that we do not continue to inflict those wounds on the most precious resource we have, our innocent children. Let us protect the doorway for others born to this planet, that they might discover that it is safe to be born here on earth once again. Together we can let love prevail. The past has served to clearly show us where we have gone astray. Let's begin again, by choosing a different outcome and then work together in order to create a new world.

We need the strongest, most courageous among us to stand and call into account those individuals and groups who have participated in this atrocity; their version of this 'Utopian Hell,' in order to stop this abuse of children. We need individuals to initiate laws and measures that will not only insure freedom of the mind, but other very fundamental freedoms taken for granted, that we now stand to loose. The course of our actions now will determine the future. What will we choose, fear or love?

And now as my job of exposing the deeds and plans of those who worship power and control comes to a close, I am once again redirected to my job of helping the victims heal. God has commissioned me to stand at the doorway, to accept donations in whatever way they flow to me as fiduciary for others who have been abused in similar ways and to set about busily setting up safe healing centers for victims to seek aid if they choose. The quantity and magnitude of these centers is up to you, for my job is to be there, and your job, if so called, is to help fund it. Many have been wounded and are needing our help. The Holy Spirit that guides me has shown me that the outpouring of generosity, in whatever form, can alleviate much of the suffering and help to avert even much of the earth calamities and chaos, for the outpouring of love for fellow humanity heals the mass consciousness on the planet. As we unite around the world in prayer and action we create a very powerful vibration of love; a frequency that unlocks and heals the hearts of those who have yet to learn the awesome power of Christ love.

We stand at the crossroads to a very important time of choice, action, and giving. Instead of a One-World Government we can create a One-World Healing. Please help the young and the wounded among us who depend on our strength and courage to show them a better day. Please give what you can to insure that this abuse stops and insure the victims a means of healing. They are counting on us. Don't miss the call.

Shared with love in the celebration of Christ,

Susan Ford

Some of you, after reading this book, may be left with many unanswered questions about your own relationship to the material in this book. You may wonder how you fit into this picture ...are you, too, under mind control? Let me share with you the following inspiration from a survivor of mind control who discovered that her own experiences paralleled, even at times interwove, with those presented in this book:

A Survivor's Experience

"I, too, have a story. Some of the details are all too similar to Sue's. Much I don't yet remember. What I do know is that ten years ago, I began having memories of abuse ...first by my uncle, then my father, then floods of memories of Satanic and ritual abuse. This is where I stalled, if you will, for five years. I believed during that time that I was free from my captors, as long as I kept my distance. And I went about rebuilding a life for myself, carefully controlling my environment so that I wouldn't be triggered by "my past" any more than I could handle. I thought I was being a really good mom, and wife, and friend. And yet, I continued to be tormented by nightmares, memories, feelings of agitation, anger, rage, and depression. Deep inside of me, I knew that I wasn't free. And yet, I still believed that I was re-experiencing the past. Now what I know is that I was still involved, unconsciously triggered even to return to satanic rituals while the abuse continued and, under mind control, I was still carrying out the wishes of those attempting to bring in the "New World Order." Now I have seen what I could not see before - a "reality" that is being carried out by some misguided souls on earth at this time.

Through the help of EEG Neurofeedback, I have been able to reclaim my mind, for my own use. I am aware of what a gift it is to have the use of some of the same technology that was previously used to control me, to now set me free. I am finding that EEG Neurofeedback is helping me to integrate quickly, as I learn to stay alert and attentive and not dissociate. I am also learning to keep myself safe by discovering the ways that others have been able to "access" me through programming.

I would say that the major focus of these past five years has been strengthening my connection to God and learning to discern the different voices, or promptings, from within. How do I decide what to trust? Who or what is worthy of my trust? The key for me has been prayer. When I haven't known what to believe in, I have prayed to know. I have learned to trust that there is a God ...a Power greater than any that humans can wield on this planet. And so, I go directly to that Source. Those prayers continue to bring me the healing and the safety that I seek. Please join me and the many others who are committed to living our true purpose, and loving ourselves and each other into freedom."

Tech Torture

Technological Torture

In international occultic groups and many governmental organizations, the trend has increasingly been to use technological torture (tech torture) on individuals being programmed.

What is tech torture? In general, this refers to a combination of technologies and techniques that are used to simulate, entrain and install punishment within individuals.

Virtual Reality

The state of virtual reality (VR) used by modern cult groups is at least 50 to 75 years ahead of the latest state-of-the-art equipment publicly available. While VR and holograms were initially used in the late 1950's and early 1960's (by groups with the funds to purchase them), the technology has improved radically since 1995. In the past decade, the technology can create extremely realistic alternate realities that are almost indistinguishable from true reality.

Using VR, programmers can:

- Take photos and videos of therapists and their offices using microtechnology cameras, and create a VR "session" to program a survivor against the therapist.
- Install programming sequences of any type, from "ascension to celestial heaven" for an infant, to "demons from hell tearing a child apart" and others. When final installation of a program is checked for loyalty and obedience programming, for instance, the child may be told to "shoot and kill" a family member in highly realistic VR.
- Create horrendous punishment and pain sequences, using brain prints and scans downloaded from actual victims, in which the individual being programmed experiences extremely realistic renditions of things such as:
  - Legs and arms being torn off, with realistic pain
  - Hot rods inserted into orifices
  - Being burned alive
  - All bones in the body being broken, and then radiated (which causes swelling and intense pain)
  - Being skinned alive
  - Bees swarming over the person, and stinging them

Follow

These and other tortures (the list goes on, based on the demonic creativity of the pr[illegible] are so realistic and terrible, that those undergoing it must be monitored for "VR shock" which can actually cause the person to go into shock and die if untreated. VR can be one reason for memories that seem "impossible" based upon the individual's being alive and unscarred, since VR leaves emotional and spiritual scars, but no physical ones. Demonic healing is another reason that no scars after torture remain.

Machine Programming: Tesla waves and Microbursts

For years, the cults have been aware of Tesla waves and its applications to create changes within tissue that rival microwave and laser, but with greater energy. This energy wave was harnessed, first for use over larger areas, and then in the 1970's, research was done upon harnessing the waves at the micro level. Eventually in the mid-1990's, a machine was developed that was able to use Tesla waves and microbursts of energy to change brain waves and develop internal resonance within the brain.

This technology was further developed, and eventually was used to create deep stimulation of the neural pain centers during programming. This type of tech torture creates agonizing pain throughout the neural chain, and is used as the base for modern pain and punishment systems that guard high-security information inside. Various waveforms are created to create pain and terror through direct stimulation of the pain areas; the terror areas, or the despair areas within the brain.

Entrainment is used in combination with this type of torture. In a typical session, the individual is placed in a machine (called the "God machine" by some groups), which appears as clear plastic. Inside, the individual is surrounded by a holographic screen that appears when the programming session is active. Their brain scans are continuously displayed for the programmers to view, in order to see when the programming "takes" (there are specific changes in the brain scans that occur when this happens).

The entrainment will begin over several hours at a time, with various tones that reflect brain states played in a sequence. In one example, the tones for gamma, beta, alpha, epsilon, theta and delta, then deep delta and death state are played in sequence, and the individual being programmed is slowly entrained to "follow" the tones, and go from one brain state to another in sequence. Very gradually, the tones become more rapid, until the brain is entrained and taught to perform a very rapid drop from high gamma (or even omicron) state, to deep delta or even death state. This rapid drop in brain state creates a sense of "falling" or "dropping" in the parts (often infants or fetuses) being programmed, and is extremely painful, creating terror in the parts that undergo it.

There are many other forms of entrainment. The entrainment takes weeks and months to be programmed in fully.

7 X7 Programming

7 X & is a specific form of punishment and pain programming that involves the entrainment within the brain of 7 lines of tech torture, at 7 levels of pain. While at the lowest level of it running, the first line runs at the lowest level, continued disobedience to cult commands and directives (such as failure to recontact; or failure to forget, or dismantling programming) can eventually cause all 7 lines to run simultaneously at the highest (7^{th}) level of pain.

This is very difficult, painful and terrifying programming to undo, and is installed in individuals who work in high-security areas. Undoing it requires significant emotional support, pain medication if available when running, and the ability to abreact the programming lines. Eventually, if the survivor does not recontact, the programming does fail, but can take a significant amount of time to run down.

Side effects of Tech Torture can include:

- Feeling as if the individual is "vibrating" internally at a rapid rate. This lasts for roughly 6 weeks after a programming session, then becomes less intense over time.
- Severe, deep headaches at the back of the head, and in the center of the brain (including feeling as if the center of the brain is a "hot coal" inside). Because the deep neural centers have been directly stimulated, the headaches are atypical.
- Hyperthermia and hypothermia: during the tech torture and entrainment, the individual's core temperature often rises, and cooling blankets are put on them. As the programming is broken, they may re-experience these body memories. They become less frequent and less intense with time.
- Extreme restlessness and feeling as if the individual is "crawling out of their skin": this is associated with the tesla waves vibrating internally
- Tingling and even shocking (electrically) if the head is touched: because the entrainment literally trains the brain to shock itself, this is one side effect that can occur. Supporters may feel a mild to moderate shock if they place their hand on the survivor's head, as the electrical activity works its way out of the body.
- Extreme soreness on the top of the head, or the back (bottom) of the head

All of the above symptoms will pass with time and healing; and it is important to reassure the survivor that these are normal side effects when breaking the programming.

Mobile tech (helmets, VR goggles)

Unfortunately, the above technology (which began being used more widely in 2003) has become mobile in recent years. While programming in a machine is done at programming centers, there are helmets and VR goggles/nets that can simulate the entrainment and reinforce tech torture programming. The VR goggles have a silver net that fits over the head, and will create a virtual "machine" that simulates machine torture as described above. Programmers will have libraries of microdiscs that they insert into the VR equipment, and will use tablet-sized computers for monitoring brain scans and other vital parameters during the programming.

For this reason, if a person is accessed in a van, or small space, they may undergo a rapid re-programming session using mobile technology. This is yet another reason to break recontact programming as quickly as possible.

Voices of the Taken

"Perfectly real aliens exist out there," Angie acknowledged, "and it seems one kind wants to help us and another kind wants to deceive us."

"Emotionally and deep in my mind I trust certain ones of the aliens more than anything else in the universe," Polly said. "And I have been confronting bit by bit the evidence that They made me feel this way for their purposes, to fulfill their agenda, not for my good."

"What do you need all those pieces of me for?" eleven-year-old Pat asked.

We are making a new you, the tall White entity replied.

"Are you an angel?' Pat wondered.

Yes, the entity told her, but not as you have been taught.

"The alien pointed the wand at my forehead," Lisa explained. "It made me feel dizzy, and I was out. That's the night they made me have sex while they watched. The other abductee told me his name and said he was sorry. They had been taking him since he was a child."

"Two beings, one on either side, were leading me to the entrance of the big room," Amy said. "I remember noticing the wall clearly. The wall was rough rock. I remember sucking in air through my teeth and saying to myself, We're underground!"

Foreword

When Karla Turner asked me to write a foreword to her new book, TAKEN, she knew that in my own work as a documentary filmmaker, television producer and author I have been struggling to see a bigger picture behind many anomalous phenomena that affect our planet. My own investigations have included mysterious worldwide crop formations, animal mutilations, and the human abduction syndrome. I am convinced that humanity is moving from the paradigm that we are alone in the universe to a new one in which we are not alone and something out there is interacting with us, our animals, and our plant life, forcing glimpses of other realities upon us.

The true nature and purpose of the intelligence, or intelligences, remains an enigma. The eight women in this book report communications ranging from telepathic thoughts to virtual reality dreams, but there is no coherent single truth that emerges from their experiences, nor from the hundreds of others in the abduction syndrome since the 1960s. The sheer number of different messages, often contradictory, produces confusion, mistrust and a sense of manipulation, even if that manipulation inspires positively or disturbs negatively.

"Perfectly real aliens exist out there," says one of the women in TAKEN, "and it seems one kind wants to help us and another kind wants to deceive us."

As each voice is offered for public consideration, there are themes that repeat. One of the most prominent is genetic harvesting from earth life to create a hybrid species. TAKEN suggests the possibility that an alien intelligence has been using genetic manipulation to create evolving species on our planet over eons and that Homo sapiens sapiens might be one such genetically engineered species. If so, we on the Petri dish might paradoxically be trying to study whatever watches and studies us. Consciousness of this Other without running from it or getting down on our knees to it could be a significant, perhaps unexpected, step in human evolution and survival.

Linda Moulton Howe, Creator and Supervising TV Producer, UFO Report: Sightings and author of An Alien Harvest and Glimpses of Other Realities

Indiana, 1954...

'They came in our house and set up equipment in the living room," Pat said. 'The Army men wanted to talk to me the most. Me, an eleven-year-old girl with secrets in my head. But the aliens told me I couldn't tell because 'there will be those who will tamper with your mind.' And here they were, the tamperers, the Army men."

Two female doctors set up their gear in the bedroom, where Pat was given an injection. "It made me sleepy," she said, "and I lay on my mom's bed on some towels and told them my story. I even told them, 'You're in my mom's room where the White, glowing ones were. You don't belong here, but they do'."

Two aliens took Beth down a curved hall and through a door, into a different area. It looked like "a surgery room," and she became afraid they were going to kill her there. A third entity, holding a black box, moved to a position behind Beth. She could not see what he did, but she felt as if her head was being opened and her brain removed, all without any sensation of pain. After she was "all put back together again," a cold liquid was poured over her head.

When this procedure was finished, the aliens stood in front of her, and Beth realized that mentally she was different. Her thoughts about everything were changed, and she was filled with new ideas about God and the unity of all life within that supreme source.

This very spiritual moment was followed by a quite physical exam, as the aliens took samples from her skin and hair. A human-looking man with a widow's-peak hairline entered and made a full examination of her body, including a gynecological procedure. Then he explained many things, telling her that she and other humans had been "chosen" to carry out certain "jobs" in the future.

Texas, 1992...

"The masked alien explained that her race had been doing things to humans that they should not be doing," Amy said. "She and several groups of her race, and others, wanted to stop the 'abuse' of the humans by her race. They were working with certain people on Earth to stop the process. The other humans in the room were ex-pilots, military officials, and other professionals. They were all working together to stop the alien intrusions.

"She showed me the thing she had pulled out of my neck and said, 'This is embedded deep in the spinal cord.' The thing controlled the muscles of the body when activated. It blocked the brain and became the 'central command' of the body. I don't want to remember how or why this thing functioned."

I. Redefinition

Like Pat, Beth, and Amy, I am an abductee. I have been forcibly taken and controlled by non-human entities. When I told my story of alien encounters in INTO THE FRINGE, I was contacted by these women and many other people with similar experiences, in need of support and assistance.

I am also a researcher of abduction reports, and from these contacts emerged a number of accounts that shed important light on the alien agenda of human interaction. This book is the result of lengthy investigations into the abduction experiences of eight women from various parts of the country. The correlation of evidence from their accounts greatly widens the parameters of the abduction scenario and points to certain aspects, previously disregarded or avoided, in need of serious exploration.

This is also a personal book, a collation of unique, intimate accounts of alien-human interactions. The people who share their experiences here are courageous representatives of the many others in this country and elsewhere whose lives partake of parallel realities. They function successfully in a world shared by everyone else, as housewives, mothers, grandmothers, artists, nurses, counselors, teachers, computer engineers, and blue-collar workers.

But in the blink of an eye-or the flash of multicolored lights strobing in the hall late at night-their normal lives can disappear, and they find themselves taken into the time and space of an alien world.

It is difficult for most abduction memories to be investigated in a purely scientific manner, especially since they are often suppressed, surfacing only as vague flashbacks and dreamlike episodes. In this field there has been strong objection to anecdotal information. But the scientific approach to the study of the UFO phenomenon as a whole has proven less than successful. In spite of half a century of many intelligent people researching the UFO and alien presence with scientific methods, reliable answers to the primary questions have not been found. Investigations of sightings reports, landing traces, photos and video tapes, alleged implants, and related government documents have amassed a mountain of data and a number of theories-but nothing indisputably true about the nature of UFOs and their non-human occupants, their origin, or the reason for their presence here among us now.

Great gains have been made in the area of abduction therapy, providing help and support for those who are living with the phenomenon and working to resolve their emotional trauma, to keep the disruption of their everyday lives to a minimum, and to transform or assimilate these experiences in a positive way. And while is this laudable, it is not necessarily research. Therapy's goal is one of personal balance, but the goal of research is a larger, clearer understanding of the phenomenon. The point is not so much learning to live with abductions as it is finding out why they happen, what they mean, and whether and how the situation can be altered.

The need for reliable answers is nowhere greater than in the abduction phenomenon. It intimately affects people of all ages and backgrounds, irrevocably altering their personal lives and their perceptions of reality, and it raises immense questions about our past, present, and future as a species. But in spite of the best scientific approaches to the question, all that ufological research has brought to most people is a realization that UFOs exist-and perhaps a few cute, harmless aliens-but no confrontation with what this means.

Science has been trying to measure a dream, it seems, using traditional ideas and practices, and it has proved elusive. The UFO phenomenon is not confined to our current scientific understanding of perceived reality. We do not yet have the technology or natural perceptive abilities to capture and assess it. That is why the scientific approach to photographic evidence, landing traces, implants, and document analyses has so little in the way of hard evidence to show for its work. Instead, its best results offer only circumstantial data, carrying very little more weight than the anecdotal data of abduction research in the scales of traditional science.

It is in the abduction phenomenon that we come most urgently face to face with the alien presence and thus have our best opportunity to observe the activity and assess its purpose or agenda. All of the UFO photos in the world tell us nothing compared to the words of those who have encountered the alien force in their lives and those of their families.

And there are many, like Pat and Amy and the others presented here. From the response to INTO THE FRINGE, it sometimes seemed that abduction experiences were becoming virtually epidemic. Yet studies by mental health professionals show that the people who make these reports are eminently sane, that the aftermath of these events is real, and that they do not spring from any mass psychosis but from experienced anomalous trauma.

I also found that many of the reports contained details very similar to certain things my family and I had experienced. Still, in every case there was always present the "unique factor" within the situations, providing highly individualized episodes for each abductee. I often wondered if these unique events, these "one-time shots," might not prove to have some unperceived correlations, to form a pattern as yet out of focus, and give us more information than the now-recognized patterns of certain exams, baby presentations, and the like. Far from being a neat, limited phenomenon, alien interaction with humans is still very much a riddle, mystery, enigma, and more.

Abduction research has not yet produced answers, but there are certainly different theories to be had-an embarrassment of riches, really. Unfortunately, these theories rest on a very partial, highly selective use of the data, rather than dealing with the complexities of the entire, life-long and minute-by-minute, reality of the abduction scenario.

It is more than the sum of its parts. The intermittent UFO sightings, missing-time episodes, conscious encounters, and virtual-reality scenarios are like blank milestones on a journey which, for the abductee, is continuous and headed in an unknown direction. More accurately, they are like lights that suddenly appear in the dark, which we hope will shed illumination and lead to understanding. Instead, however, these startling lights either blind us with their intensity, so that we cannot see their source, or they cast strange shadows, whose false appearances and misleading movements can easily confuse and disorient us.

No one knows this better than an abductee. Investigators who have not had personal experiences with the phenomenon can listen to abduction accounts and then ponder the possibilities. Was the person lying? Was it a real event, or did it occur on a mental level? What parts of the recollection are real, and which are illusionary? But the abductee understands that it may very well be both possibilities at once, both real and mental, real and illusionary. The aliens, whether by intellectual, psychic, or technological means, are able to create any perception, and therefore any illusion, for the person in their hands.

The implications are explosive. Perhaps that is why the logical conclusions of these implications are so rarely taken into account. If we credit the idea of illusionary mastery with serious validity, then we must either come up with a reliable acid test to discern illusion and actuality in abduction events, or we may have to admit that the truth behind these events is unknowable in current scientific terms. Dealing with the aliens' deceptive abilities may be the most crucial problem facing abduction research today.

Once the illusionary capability has been demonstrated and experienced, new perceptions and insights often emerge. The witness usually has no trouble recognizing the non-human nature of the force behind the events. The manipulation of time and space by these beings, the way they play with our psychology and our perceptions, all bespeak a technology far beyond the human. Or certainly, if any human agency did have this sort of capability, it would have plenty of applications far better than pulling hundreds of 3 a.m. raids on bedrooms around the globe every night, decade after decade, in which thousands of humans pretend to be aliens.

The abductee also learns from experience that the aliens induce an altered perceptive state in humans during every encounter. Employed for control, it can be used to prevent any undesired responses from the abductee. And the altered state prevents any objective assessment of the situation by the witness. This means that the witness can only report what was seen, felt, and heard-which is not necessarily a reflection of what actually occurred. By inducing and manipulating altered consciousness in the abductee, the aliens assume full control of the situation and thus exert great control over the data reported by the witness.

Abductees report alien-controlled information.

This is a fact abduction researchers must face. Then, perhaps, work can begin on solving this problem, on finding ways around the memory blocks and screen illusions, in order to discover the real events and the agenda behind them. Until the day we can unmask the alien illusions, however, we can at least study the entire body of reported data, controlled though it may be, trying to learn more about why certain images and events are employed and what they can tell us about the covert directors of these scenarios.

Many of the people who contacted me after reading INTO THE FRINGE are looking for answers, just as I am compelled to do. This present work is an attempt to aid in the search, making a number of representative cases available for public scrutiny and assessment. Too often, reports on abduction activity are presented entirely in second-hand form by investigators, and too often these reports are incomplete, focusing only on some parts of an event and discarding or ignoring others.

Such omissions are clearly a hindrance to research, for the censored reports cannot present a total picture of the abduction phenomenon. It must include a real feeling for what it is like to live with such events. Abductees operate in parallel realities, searching for the strength to cope with the real and the unreal at the same time because, as they have learned, one can never be sure which is which in this phenomenon.

The number of abduction reports around the country shows just how widespread the phenomenon may be, and the numbers continue to increase. Eight different abductees, all women, from various parts of the country have volunteered to share their experiences here. Born between 1943 and 1966, they live in five different states and Puerto Rico. They were unacquainted with one another at the time of their contacts with me. Their backgrounds are as varied as their occupations, and so are their ideas about the abduction phenomenon.

Like most of us who've had alien encounters, these women are uncertain about the nature of the events they've reported. They have many questions and very few answers. Four of the women have never undergone regressive hypnosis and thus are only reporting events they consciously recalled. The other four women have used hypnosis, although very minimally as will be noted in their accounts, and almost everything in their reports also comes from conscious, pre-hypnosis, recollections.

I point this out because there are some who have raised doubts and questions about the use of regressive hypnosis in abduction research. Some feel that hypnotically retrieved information is no more reliable than conscious recollections; some believe that the use of hypnosis can contaminate and damage an investigation; and some have said they believe hypnotically retrieved information is far more reliable in abduction situations than the witness's conscious memories. The presentation here provides access to both types of data, but the majority comes from conscious recollections.

Although I believe it is extremely useful to employ regressive hypnosis in the retrieval of this information, I also think it is important to present accounts from women whose knowledge and understanding of their situations is gleaned only from the incomplete, ambiguous memories of events they have consciously retained. Their stories and their lives are much more representative of a "typical" abductee's situation than are the accounts of those who have benefited from hypnosis, simply because most abductees have no access to this tool.

The women are not seeking notoriety, and in order to protect them from public harassment, pseudonyms have been used. But all of the details are accurate, and as bizarre as they may seem, it is important to remember that they are very real to the people involved, that in many instances there have been more than one witness to the events, as well as other corroborative evidence, and that they are highly consistent with numerous abduction reports.

These women have shared their stories because they understand the gravity of the phenomenon and hope to contribute their information to its research. They also understand the need for support which many silent abductees are experiencing. The self-doubt, isolation, even fear that result from living with alien encounters can sometimes be severe, and the need to forge bonds of mutual understanding and support is vital. These, then, are the motivations of the eight women. My own purpose is similar, which is why an update of the experiences my husband and I have witnessed is also included.

An overview of all our experiences, as well as reports of other abductees, shows a much more complex program of activity in the phenomenon than is usually acknowledged. To begin with, the abduction scenario comprises a number of different types of events. On the most immediate level are the physical abductions, in which a person is forcibly removed from the normal environment by 'alien' (in the most generic sense) entities, the person's awareness is altered, and some interaction occurs. Subsequent conscious memories of the event are usually quite incomplete. Only when the event is witnessed by more than one person, or when there are physical marks on the abductee's body-punctures, scoops, patterns of bruises, artificial designs-does the witness usually feel safe in asserting the 'reality' of the encounter.

To complicate matters, many reports show that some interactions occur on a mental rather than a physical level. One type is an artificially induced virtual-reality scenario (VRS), an externally introduced event, that to the witness is practically indistinguishable from objective reality. The person may experience a situation with full sensory input and react with genuine physical and emotional responses, although in 'reality' the person may be lying immobile on an exam table, or sitting attached to some alien apparatus, or even asleep in bed with no outward sign of disturbance.

While the VRS may have been a matter of theory in the past, a possible explanation for some of the more "unacceptable" abduction accounts, it has now been confirmed in a three-witness, conscious event. It came to light when I was investigating the abduction experiences of Ted Rice, a psychic of excellent reputation throughout the southern states.

Ted witnessed a virtual-reality scenario when he was in Florida visiting a friend, Marie, along with another house guest, Amelia. The two women occupied twin beds in one room, and Ted slept down the hall in another. Not long after going to bed one night during his visit, he was awakened by Marie shouting for him to "come quickly!"

Heading down the hall, Ted saw a pervasive blue glow emanating from the other bedroom doorway. Entering, he found Marie pressed against the far wall, staring at the twin beds in shock.

And he saw where the blue light was coming from. Amelia lay immobile in one bed, surrounded by a huge, blue, glowing, "electrical" sphere of light. Her eyes were open, and she didn't seem to be in any distress as she carried on a conversation with someone Ted and Marie couldn't see. Terrified, they tried to talk to her, but they could hardly hear one another even when shouting. Amelia continued to speak within the sphere for several minutes, until the blue light suddenly disappeared, at which point she was finally free of the paralysis that had kept her in the bed.

Amelia told Ted and Marie that the experience started with the loud sound of a helicopter low over the house. When she opened her eyes she could see through the ceiling and roof, as if they'd disappeared, to where the helicopter was hovering just above the house. She described two entities in the craft, whom she said also appeared at the foot of the bed before the blue light vanished. One being was tall, with greenish skin, an egg-shaped head, and slanted eyes as the only visible facial features. The other, shorter, entity, Amelia said, was blue-black in color.

Ted and Marie had seen absolutely nothing of these creatures, nor had they heard a helicopter at any time. But they had seen the sphere of light, with brighter, darting lights shooting through it, and Amelia frozen in a slightly raised position inside it, for she had been starting to sit up when the light coalesced and paralyzed her.

Amelia's perception of the experience was completely "real" for her. She was conscious when it began and throughout the entire event, as Ted and Marie attested. From everything her sensory input told her, Amelia had experienced an actual event with the craft and entities. Virtual reality. And the conscious and unaffected witnesses, Ted and Marie, observed objectively real effects of the mechanism which manipulated the event, verifying its external origin.

VRS technology exists and is in use, this much is clear. And unless there are outside witnesses, such as in this rare instance, the experiencer cannot personally discern between a VRS and an actual event. The virtual-reality scenario may occur while the person is conscious, as in Amelia's case, or it may be introduced into the person's dream state. According to those who've experienced the VRS dream-and I am one of those, as will be discussed later-it is an intrusive event that suddenly interrupts a normal dream. The experiencer is aware of a total, abrupt change in consciousness and finds himself in an event altogether different from his dream.

What follows may be a perceived event, with action, location, and personnel, or it may be a communication or even a vision. At its conclusion, the experiencer normally awakens, and, finding himself in his own bed, he rationalizes the whole thing as an extraordinary dream, in spite of the event's decidedly non-dreamlike qualities. Without physical proof of the event's reality, or even a name for this altered perceptive experiential event, he is left to call it a dream.

In addition to the abductions and virtual-reality scenarios, abductees also report telepathic contacts from entities who are not physically or perceivably present. These contacts include messages about spiritual matters, warnings of future disasters, "teaching" sessions, displays of symbols, and information on mathematics, physics, religion, politics, and the nature of the human species.

On a secondary level, there are events that occur, not during encounters, but subsequent to them, affecting things in the abductee's normal environment. Lights and electronic equipment malfunction; voices and unexplained sounds are heard; animals are physiologically affected; lights appear both inside and outside the house; there are odd and disturbing phone calls; and sometimes traces of a UFO's presence or landing on the property.

And finally there are the internal changes that take place with most abductees, reshaping their attitudes, belief structures, and perceptions of reality. Thus, the externally induced, temporary, altered awareness which occurs during abductions is paralleled by a permanent, internal alteration, and the abductee's life is forever changed.

There is much more to the abduction phenomenon than the public has been told, and this book is in part an attempt to correct that situation and expand our definition of the abduction scenario. Its primary purpose is not to offer scientific data or to convince a disbelieving audience that UFOs and aliens exist. People are coming to this awareness on their own, one by one, as the phenomenon intrudes into their lives and shatters their old reality in a way that cannot be imagined until it is experienced.

The following accounts from Pat, Polly, Lisa, Anita, Beth, Jane, Angie, and Amy show what it is like to live with this awareness far more thoroughly than any scientific analysis can hope to do. By allowing entrance into their lives, they permit others to witness the events from the inside rather than from a distance. Their experiences, while individually unique, taken together make a choir of voices expressing the range and intensity of life in the altered world of the alien abduction agenda.

2. Pat

My investigation with Pat began when a mutual acquaintance heard her story of an unusual UFO event and suggested she contact me. A fifty-year-old divorced mother of grown children, Pat lives in Florida, but the story she related concerned an event that occurred in 1954 when she lived in Floyd's Knob, Indiana.

Pat's memory of this event, as in the case of so many people who have had UFO experiences, was totally suppressed after the occurrence. It all came flooding back into her consciousness in 1986-scenes of a brilliant orange ball of light, little gray entities both inside and outside the farmhouse, and, most disturbing of all, military personnel on the property.

"I thought I must be crazy when these memories came back, " Pat said. "But they were so strong and real, I finally got in touch with my brother and sister and asked if they recalled anything similar. My sister Rose said she recalled the aliens and the military people, too. But although my brother didn't remember the orange ball of light, he clearly remembered the military personnel and some of his interactions with them."

Through extensive conversations, letters, and drawings from Pat and her siblings, the following extraordinary scenario emerged, raising serious questions not only about the nature of the alien abduction agenda but also about the involvement of our military with citizens who have been the target of such interactions.

The setting was a sixteen-acre farm near Floyd's Knob, Indiana, in the summer of 1954. Eleven-year-old Pat lived there with her mother, step-father, grandmother, a nine-year-old brother and six-year-old sister. One night several family members saw a large orange ball of light appear outside the farmhouse. Pat had already gone to bed but was awakened by either her grandmother or her sister to look out the window. In the sky she saw the orange light sitting motionless at first, then moving rapidly out of sight around the back of the house.

"I remember vaguely thinking, J will go back to bed to wait. It seems to me that I knew 'they' were coming," Pat said. "I saw my mother running to the kitchen door to make sure it was locked and to see the ball come over the yard. I remember thinking, It won't do any good to lock the door, they can come in anyway. It was as if I 'knew' what to expect." Pat suddenly felt sleepy but didn't remember going back to bed. Her next memory was of a multicolored light slowly spinning around the room in total silence, emitting blue, purple, and violet hues. She got out of bed and went to the window where she saw a Gray floating just outside.

hook at those eyesl she thought. They can film usl The gaze of the Gray seemed to penetrate her entire being, and she sensed a familiarity with him.

Do not be afraid, it communicated to Pat. You are the chosen child. We will not harm you.

Pat turned around and saw several taller white entities coming into the bedroom. As they began to float her grandmother out of the door, Pat sensed the older woman's terror, and she, too, was feeling fearful. When the room was filled with the strange beings, a sparkling shaft of light came down through the ceiling. As it coalesced, Pat saw in the midst of the light a figure which she perceived as a blond-haired, blue-eyed Jesus, in a resplendent robe. He took Pat's right hand and said, Do not be afraid, my child. These are mine, gesturing to the beings who were standing all around the room.

The Jesus figure looked at Pat and said, I am the light of the world. Then he was again surrounded by the sparkling shaft of light, which ascended back into the ceiling and took him with it.

She and her grandmother were floated out of the room by the entities. Passing by her mother's bedroom, Pat saw a brilliant white light coming out of the room. Five of the taller Whites were around her step-father's bed, and they seemed to be examining one of his atrophied legs, the result of polio. A glowing green bar of light, about five inches long, floated over him. Continuing on through the house and out into the yard, Pat saw a bright crystalline flying craft hovering low to the ground. A beam of light came out of the bottom of the craft and engulfed her.

"I remember my sister's blonde curly head next to mine as we went up inside the craft," Pat said. "We were looking down at the ground and saw my mom and grandmother there looking up, like zombies." She could also see that the entire yard was swarming with Grays hurrying about the area. Although neither she nor Rose is certain of the exact sequence of events, they recalled a group of the smaller gray beings near a ditch beside the cellar door. Rose saw the beings in a line, walking across a board spanning the ditch. But Pat's memory included a line or wall of fire in the ditch and a row of "small, gray, skinny" aliens wearing "Chinese rice-paddy hats with big brims."

"I was on one side of the long ditch, and they were on the other. They were mentally telling me Pass through the light, it will not burn you-which I was thinking at that time, that I would get burned. The fire was not hot, and it was supposed to cleanse me. I did go through it to the other side, but I do not remember doing it or what happened after that."

After the light transported her and Rose up into the craft, Pat recalled sitting on a table in a room with Grays present. A taller White came over with a file-type instrument and scraped skin from her inner forearm and the bottoms of her feet, clipped some of her hair, and then peeled away samples of her fingernails.

"What do you need all those pieces of me for?" she asked.

We are making a new you, the entity replied.

"Are you an angel?" Pat inquired.

Yes, the entity told her, but not like you have been taught.

Pat was taken into another room where she lay on a table, above which was a dark instrument. One of the Grays came in and pulled down a tube from this device which had a thin needle on the end. Pat became afraid, but the Gray told her, This is the part you don't have to remember. Pat knew that the needle was about to be inserted up into her right nostril, but before it happened she passed out.

Pat recalled another event during the physical exam, being "fused" with a silver light. "It was done from something over my body," she said, "up high in the room. He [alien] 'fused me' into my head with the silver light; it will keep me from violent harm; it let me be perfect in human form for a few seconds; it was a protective light. I get the idea that when this silver light goes into my 'other body' I will be made into the 'new me.' In other words, the 'new me' will come to life with my soul in it."

Pat came back to consciousness after the episode with the needle and found herself back in the first room on the table. She was crying because she couldn't stay with the Grays. When they told her, It isn't time yet, she asked for a souvenir as proof that the experience had really occurred: the green "healer" rock she'd seen above her step-father's body. Although the aliens apparently gave her this device, they told her that it would not "work" properly for her, only for them. She was also told, You are going to have to forget this.

"Why?" Pat asked.

Because there are those who will tamper with your mind, the Gray replied.

Pat was returned to the house, where she saw all of her family sitting in the living room in a daze. 'They looked like zombies," Pat said. Even her step-father was propped up on the floor leaning against a sofa. She was placed in her bed and saw one of the Grays outside her window gesturing a farewell. She responded with a wave and was immediately asleep again.

The next day, there doesn't seem to have been any discussion about the previous night's extraordinary events. But Pat's brother recalls that it was that day when the military personnel arrived. A white staff car, a green car, a jeep, and several white vans came onto the property carrying instruments and equipment. There was also a troop carrier with soldiers who proceeded to comb over the entire sixteen acres of the farm. The large truck was hidden in the barn, and Pat's brother said that he had to move the animal feed to the smokehouse because the soldiers wouldn't let him into the barn once their equipment was stored there.

"They came in our house and set up equipment in the living room," Pat recalled. "The army men wanted to talk to me the most, me, an eleven-year-old girl with secrets in my head. But the beings told me I couldn't tell because 'there will be those who will tamper with your mind.' And here they were, the tamperers, the army men."

Everyone except her brother-who was allowed to go out in order to take care of the farm animals-was kept inside the house for the four days in which the military personnel were present. Only her brother saw what was going on outside the house. He remembers more than twenty soldiers brought in the big truck and told to man their stations on the farm. Two of the men stayed at the end of the driveway, and the others performed various duties on the grounds.

When he was allowed outside to take care of the chores, Pat's brother remembers being questioned by a man dressed in a white lab coat, who asked about the chickens and pigs.

"Are your pigs out there?" the man asked, gesturing, and the boy nodded affirmatively.

"Have the pigs been acting funny?"

"No," the boy said, "why?"

The man said something about the minerals in the soil making the animals act strangely. Pat's brother said he felt comfortable with this man and wasn't afraid to answer his questions or to ask some of his own. He even asked if the man wanted some fresh mint, a favorite treat, from a patch near the cellar.

But the man refused. "They're taking samples there and we'll be in the way," he explained. "When they're done, we'll go get some."

Pat said she was "mad" about being restricted. "I felt scared like they would take away my family and put me somewhere like in a jail or something. But I also felt protected by the being who was my friend. I was calling him a little boy then, but I knew the being wasn't a real little boy."

Two female doctors set up their gear in the parents' bedroom, where Pat was given an injection. "It made me sleepy," she said, "and I lay on my mom's bed on some towels and told them my story. I even told them, 'You're in my mom's room where the white glowing ones were. You don't belong here, but they do'."

I asked Pat to start back at the beginning and tell me everything she could remember about this event. She put herself back into an eleven-year-old frame of mind and began to relive the situation.

"I see this man dressed up in a uniform of some kind, a full-dress uniform, but it is brown," she said. "He has on a coat jacket and pants that match and what I call a captain's hat. He is talking to my mother and grandmother, holding a file envelope in his hands. He has thick silver-gray hair. There is another man in a dress uniform, and he took off his coat and rolled up his sleeves. His name is Mr. Donaldson. He's an army man, too," she explained, "but the other people are setting up a 'three-TV-screen' thing in our living room. It's a little taller than I was."

Mr. Donaldson then opened out "arms" on the machine and told Pat that the device looked like a robot. "See, Pat," he said, "if we open the panels out, they look like arms, so maybe you saw a robot like this?"

"No," Pat told him adamantly, "I didn't see a robot. I saw a real little boy."

She recalled the "lady doctors" clearly. "One lady had on a white coat," she described. "One was named Dr. Susan, and she had on a light orange coat. Dr. Susan seemed to have brown-blonde hair with bangs over her forehead, and the rest of her hair was pulled back away from her face. She had what looked like stuff from a dentist's office set up in my mom's room. It had instruments of some kind on it, but it is not clear what they were. The really clear picture is of the shot thing. It was wrapped in cellophane or plastic, and there was this little hose that went with it. Both the shot thing and the hose were in the same clear plastic bag. Dr. Susan began to open the shot bag, and I got scared and asked her if I had to get a shot with that thing."

Dr. Susan then directed Pat to Mr. Donaldson, who was in the living room, speaking angrily to some men dressed in what she described as "white moon suits" holding "white metal boxes without handles." He was saying, "I told you to use the ones with the handles."

Pat said the shot made her feel "dreamy" and willing to talk about her "secret" memories." She was upset that Mr. Donaldson didn't believe her. "I always told the truth," Pat said, "because my mom hated a liar, so in my wide-eyed innocence I told the army men about my visit with the beings. And I cried when they told me I didn't see what I thought I saw. They treated me like I was lying about it. After I cried, I guess Mr. Donaldson felt sorry for me because everyone started being 'sugar' nice. But I didn't like that at all because I knew it was fake. Why did they say I didn't see the little boy? Why did such a wonderful thing as this visit get everyone so upset and mad? And why did I have to get a shot?"

Someone asked about the glowing white beings and Pat said they were angels.

"How do you know they are angels?" her interrogator asked.

"Because they told me so," Pat replied.

"And what else did they tell you, Pat? Did they tell you anything else?"

"Yes," Pat answered, "they told me a lot of things, but I can't remember now. Someday I will remember, but not now."

"Why can't you remember now?" she was asked.

"Because ," Pat replied, "they said it's not time to remember, and besides, you were coming here, and I can't tell you because it's a special thing. When I'm a lot older I'll remember what they said and what's going to happen."

"Did they tell you what's going to happen?"

"Yes, they did, they told me about the 'bad time on earth.' I'm not supposed to tell about that. I can't remember now. Well," she admitted, "some of it I remember, like the crystalline ship they were in. It was full of lights, and I called it the crystalline ship because it wasn't metal like a plane. The lights made everything work by itself, and they move things without touching them, and even me, they moved me without touching me. They moved me up and down, and they are full of love, and they protected me with a silver light in me, and I love them."

One of the army men then asked her to describe the little boy's hair and clothes. Pat said she felt as if the army man was dumb, asking such a question. "Don't you know," she told him, "that the beings don't have hair and they don't wear clothes? The little boy has real big, slanty eyes that can film everything inside me, in my head and my soul. He talks to me in my head and doesn't use his mouth because he only has a line there. He's really skinny, but he doesn't have to eat because he's an angel.

"I thought angels had wings, and I laughed because he laughed with his eyes because he knew what I was thinking about the wings. I got kind of scared because I knew he was really an angel then. He knew what I thought, and only angels can tell what you think all the time, except so can Jesus. So I thought in my head, Do you know Jesusl and the beings and I filled up with a 'love' feeling that kind of made me cry and 'know' something special. And the being said, Yes in my head. I said, Are you like the angels? And the being said, Yes, but not as you have been taught. I wanted to stay with them and go back with them."

"Pat, stop for a minute," the interrogator interrupted, "and let us ask you a question. You said you wanted to go back with them? Where did you want to go back to?"

"I can't tell you that," Pat replied, "I'm not supposed to tell that part. But the angel said when it was time to go they would come back, they promised me. I made them promise me. I made them promise not to forget me and I begged them to take me, but he said it wasn't time yet. I begged and cried and felt real sad. Mr. Donaldson asked me why I was crying, and I told him, 'Because you're making me cry and you're making me tell, and I'm not supposed to tell, and you think I'm lying, but I'm not."

"Okay, stop crying, Pat," Mr. Donaldson told her. "Calm down and listen to my voice. I don't think you're lying, and we won't ask you any more questions if you tell us about your souvenirs. Where are they, Pat? Do you have souvenirs?"

Pat began to feel very stressful and mistrustful of the army men. She tried not to say anything more, but Mr. Donaldson kept badgering her, "Where are your souvenirs?"

"I cried," Pat said, "and told him they were mine and why did he want them? I said they were in my cigar box under my bed. I wouldn't give them the box, but my sister went and got it for them."

When they took the cigar box, which contained Pat's "green healer rock," it was put into one of the metal boxes by the men dressed in the white protective suits.

"I saw my grandmother sitting on my bed with the little kids, and she was crying," Pat recalled. "I asked her if the army men were going to hurt the little boy."

"Oh, Patty," the grandmother said, "there is no little boy."

"I told her there was, too, because I sat with him and did things. She just cried some more. And then Mr. Donaldson showed me the triple-TV thing and tried to convince me that I had seen something like it, a robot, and not a little boy. I got real mad and told him, 'I saw a real little boy and not a robot."

"Well, Pat," he said then, maybe you just had a d ream about the little boy. Was he in your dream?"

"I didn't dream him," Pat insisted, "he was real."

"Pat," the man continued, "it was a dream, a kind of dream that just seems real. You did not see a real little boy because there are no such things."

"Yes, I did," Pat said, "and he came in the orange ball and looked in my window and filmed me with his eyes."

"Did the dream frighten you?" Mr. Donaldson asked.

"It wasn't a dream," Pat said stubbornly, "and I was only scared a little bit because he looked so different from me, because he was skinny and gray, but I knew he wouldn't hurt me."

Pat remembered almost nothing else after the interrogation, although the military people were present for several days. "After the army men left," she recalled, "my whole family seemed sad, kind of in a daze, and I had no memory of anything after that. We moved to town before my twelfth birthday in August 1955."

It wasn't until 1986 that the memories of the aliens and the military came back. Pat does not want any personal publicity because of these events, but she has asked me to include the actual location and date of this event-Floyd's Knob, Indiana, in 1954-in the hope that there may be readers from that area who remember seeing the military vehicles that came into the town and who can thus provide some outside verification of the things she and her brother and sister have recalled.

I asked if any other unusual events had occurred since then, knowing from my research that most abductees have reported multiple experiences in their lives. Pat, it turns out, was no exception.

In the fall of 1962, making a trip to Kentucky with a friend, Pat got lost for a while before spotting a sign for Ft. Knox. Laughing about the confusion, they retraced the route in search of their destination. But instead, they ended up in a deserted train yard, sitting in the car with the engine off. Pat said they felt as if they'd just "come out" of some unremembered experience, with no idea why the car was stopped. They never found their destination and finally gave up, returning home at dark.

But later in a dream Pat recalled being out of the car with her friend beside her. She saw a ripple of golden light like an "elevator" moving up at an angle and "angels" on each side. She said they were "respectful" of a blond man who seemed to her like Jesus. Her friend was screaming hysterically, "They want you!"

Pat replied, "Don't be afraid, it's okay." She went up to the blond man who was surrounded by a beautiful light. He talked to her about becoming a mother and about a "seed of life." He said he had the power of all seed in his hand. At the end of the experience, he held out his hand to her and showed her a seed, telling her it was for her benefit and to have no fear.

A few months later, Pat, who was now pregnant, moved to Florida. She remembers telling her husband that the baby would be a boy, but that it wouldn't be viable. "I'm going to have it but not keep it," she told him, unable to explain how she knew this. For the next several months she and her two children lived in a garage apartment. One night, Pat came to consciousness just as she was walking into the apartment as if she had been outside, although she didn't recall being there. She felt an odd, pleasant vibratory sensation and remembered thinking,

They came and got me.

Nothing more seems to have happened at this time, and Pat continued to have her prenatal checkups which showed that everything was progressing fine with the baby. But then in the eighth month, the doctor could not find a fetal heartbeat. And when she delivered at full-term in May, the baby boy was stillborn. The foreknowledge proved true.

Later that same year, Pat remembers finding herself in a quiet room, surrounded by Grays and waiting for something. The Gray she thought of as her "friend" appeared in the doorway, showing her a baby. He told her that she had a choice to see the baby.

"No," Pat replied, "it's okay, it's fine. You'll take better care of it than I could." But in that brief glimpse, she saw a tiny, skinny baby with blue, slanted eyes. She felt that somehow this baby was a repository for the soul of the child who had died at birth, and she said she felt trusting and thankful toward her friend for showing her that the little boy had, in a sense, survived.

Of the memories which have surfaced in the past several years, none raises more questions than the "cocoon people." "I can't remember when the actual event might have occurred," Pat told me. "All I recall is being in a large room with soft white lighting, and one of the Grays was there. I vaguely recall seeing a human male there, but not what he was doing."

Part of the large room was filled with what looked to be sarcophagus-like boxes, and in these boxes were human forms. "They were alive," Pat recalled, "but not animated. There was white misty stuff all over them, and I knew the misty stuff kept them alive. I knew they were waiting to come to life in the future."

The being asked Pat, Do you want to see yours ?

Pat said, "Yes," and was shown a human female body in one of the containers. "Don't ask how I knew it was female," she continued, "I just felt it. I saw a little bit of human face through the mist, like a nose mouth, eyes, definitely human. I knew this was connected with the 1954 visit, because I remembered they told me they were making a 'new me.' I felt this cocoon was the new me. I felt that they are waiting for the resurrection," she said, "or reanimation, and we will all be able to see and talk with them here on earth. If I were to die now, I believe that my 'other body' will house my soul when Jesus says it is time, and I, too, will come back. If I live through all the destruction (to come) into the new world, I will still need my other body, as this one I have will die anyway."

In her mid-forties, Pat had another experience with the beings, and this time she recalled being in a room lit with a golden glow. She was taken to a desk-sized device in the top of which were circular openings. In each opening was a different colored vibrating light, and she was told to put her hands in the lights. As she did, she heard the most beautiful sounds she had ever heard. Each light made a different sound.

That is the sound of your soul, the Gray told her.

Pat understood that this had something to do with the inanimate human bodies she had been shown, bodies which didn't have a "soul power" activating them.

In 1987, Pat had another possible experience-much more typical of the usual abduction reports- which included her young grandson. "Was this a dream?" she mused when relating it to me. "I have no proof. I was in my daughter's house, and it was nighttime. I seemed to be floating to my grandson's room. I took his hand, and we floated together, upright, about six inches off the floor. We floated out the front door, out to the driveway, and stopped while the gate swung open to the road. There were about ten or fifteen beings across the road in the woods. They all rose up out of the woods at the same time. I could hear my grandson think, Mamaw, can I play with those kids ?

"I thought back to him, No, honey, these are special kids, they don't play like regular kids. We floated down the road to the cul-de-sac. There in the dead-end circle was a ship with red 'blips' that went around it, a saucer. There was a 'door' with light. We floated up a ramp, and I saw my 'being friend' and then I don't remember any more. Anyway, my grandson and I went together on this trip. Or I'd rather call it a dream-I'm not sure."

Pat had a number of intensely affecting experiences that occurred while she was in a meditative or dream state, and so she has been unable to feel confident that they were "real." In some of these dream-events she has seen a variety of flying craft; she has had apparent out-of-body experiences; and she has received telepathic communications.

One such event in October 1992 seemed related to some of her previous experiences. "I dreamed someone was talking to me mentally," she said, "telling me things. I couldn't grasp the exact words, but I heard one sentence like this: The destruction comes in four quariens. 'Quarien' is not a word we know, but I took it to mean four parts of some kind. Then I saw what I call a graph. I felt as though I was getting a gentle warning of the 'bad time on earth' like it is very near to happening now."

Such warnings had not only been given to Pat at various times in her life, but they have been part of many abductees' experiences and are indeed one of the most commonly reported events in this phenomenon.

So are unexplained physical marks on abductees' bodies, and here again Pat fits the pattern. In the summer of 1993, Pat discovered an unusual design on her inner wrist, a circle of six dots with a seventh dot in the center. This design, incidentally, was reported in a handful of cases in 1991 and 1992, and it may not be a coincidence that these cases have mostly come from Florida, where Pat lives.

A couple of months after the design appeared, Pat had an experience relating to this circular pattern. "I had a dream August 7, in the middle of the afternoon," she explained. "It was one of those 'naps' that [makes you] 'hit the bed and you're out like a light.' There were voices in my dream that sounded like soft whispers, and I began to listen more closely.

'There was something said about 'being innocent like a child,' and this feeling flooded my whole body and soul. It felt like being in the state of pure innocence without knowing anything about fear, hate, prejudice...a pure, wonderful state of being in love, secure, protected, and 'without sin' as we call it. I saw a scene from my childhood of the town I lived in. It looked like it did way back then. I saw myself, about eleven years old. My feeling in the dream was of great

'Then a voice said to me, Get up, child, and look to the Nebulous. It can take you there. And in my dream I got up and unlocked my back door and looked up in a daytime sky and saw a most beautiful circle of lights with one light in the middle, spinning around like marquee lights on a movie house, all spinning in golden color. It was beautiful, and the voice said I could not go now, because in that dream I was pleading to go to the Nebulous now. When he said I couldn't go now, I begged him to let me see it when I was in my conscious mind. He said he would, but I haven't seen it yet. It was like a wondrous thing for another time in my life. But my overall feeling was that I would have died to go to this Nebulous.

"I woke up very groggy, like I was on drugs, and hurried to write it down before I could forget. The nebulous design was the same as the design on my wrist."

Pat felt she understood what "Nebulous" meant, associating it with the lighted circular object she first saw. But "nebulous" is an adjective rather than a noun-" nebula" is the proper form-and thus there is no specific definition for reference other than "cloudy," "lacking form," and "unidentified," according to the dictionary.

Exactly two months later, on October 7, Pat received a related communication while in a conscious state of mind, explaining the "Nebulous." A voice said, The Nebulous is a code; the code has been broken. Pat saw a whole Nebulous followed by a broken one. "I could see a jellylike stuff that connected the dots," she described. "I knew that the Nebulous was then something that was in our bodies when we were created. When we were created, we were supposed to have a perfect Nebulous. This gave us personal contact with our Creator. When the Nebulous was broken, by disobedience, we no longer had personal contact with the Creator. We had to adapt to living on our own, thus losing our innocence and pure state of being in human form."

This image reinforces Pat's altered understanding of God and a spiritual plan. Overall, her experiences with the alien entities have, to the best of her conscious recollection, felt very positive. With a strong religious faith, she has accepted them as angels.

"In my abductions," she has said, "I have never gotten a feeling of evil. In fact, I felt most protected while in the presence of the beings. Some people may say that the beings have the power to control what you feel and think at the time of the abduction, which they most certainly do. But I am hanging on to the childlike faith that Jesus tried to teach us and believe that what I felt was true and good. Why would an all-loving God allow little children to be abducted if the beings were evil and meant to do us harm? I don't believe God would allow it. Even so," Pat conceded, "there are things which the beings do that seem wrong to us and seem violent."

There has been one very disturbing experience, however, which occurred on July 24, 1993. It involved not only an alien entity but also what clearly appeared to be two human men and a human environment. In the early morning hours, Pat awoke in a very groggy condition, feeling as if she'd been drugged, and hearing a strange noise very near her, making staccato psss, pssss, psss, psss sounds.

Then she remembered. Two men had come into her bedroom, carried her outside and into a waiting vehicle, a large "military-type" truck. She was in a drugged state, merging in and out of consciousness as the truck took off and rode smoothly for forty-five minutes to an hour. In her brief lucid moments, Pat heard the men engaged in low conversation that she couldn't understand. She tried to speak up, but her tongue was thick and unwieldy. When the truck turned left onto a rough surface, Pat came awake again and in the dark night caught only a glimpse of the countryside out of the large, square front windshield.

The truck slowed down and finally stopped with the engine running. Through the window Pat saw they were parked next to a large mound or hillside. Incredibly, she saw a large doorway open outward, and the truck pulled inside, into the hill. The interior was very dimly lit, but as the vehicle stopped inside, Pat saw a strange being standing as if waiting for their arrival. The being was no more than three (eel tall, dressed in a black hooded cape.

Looking at the being groggily, Pat thought, What is an oriental girl doing here?

And immediately a telepathic message came back from the being, / know you don't like me.

No, Pat thought, no, I don't. I don't want to do this again. But they can't break me, because they couldn't do it before.

When the truck parked and she was assisted out, stepping a long way down from the high passenger compartment, Pat saw that the area was crowded and "dirty" feeling, with boxes and "junk" stacked along one wall. In the middle of the large room was a stainless steel table, more human-looking than the tables she remembered from alien encounters, and she felt very uneasy.

"They wanted me to get on it," she said, "but I didn't want to. Not that table." But she did get on it, although she didn't remember much about what may have happened. The "oriental girl" hovered around her, moving close and poking at her with some object Pat couldn't see. But she did see the entity's face close to hers, its skin a greenish-gray color. When the creature's eyes blinked and its lids met in the middle, Pat said the effect was repugnant, reminding her of a lizard.

Her next recollection was of getting down from the table and trying to see what the "oriental girl" was doing to her. The entity kept moving around Pat, much to her irritation, making an erratic psss, pssss, psss sound. Trying to support herself by holding to the table, she moved away from the entity, but it continued to poke at her. Pat was more alert but still unsteady, and as she circled the table she stubbed her toe painfully against it. Looking down at her foot, she noticed in surprise that the floor was covered with sawdust. God, she thought, this isn't even a real floor!

With a bit more awareness, Pat avoided the being as much as she could, feeling that whatever it was doing was a sort of "torment." Suddenly she blacked out, and when she came back to consciousness, in her bed, the psss, pssss was audible there beside her briefly.

Two days later, Pat noticed a slight bruise on her wrist, with a red dot or puncture inside it. And she also saw that one of her toenails was badly chipped, almost into the quick, as if it had forcefully struck something hard.

"I didn't like that situation at all," Pat told me, "and I knew that it wasn't the first time I had seen that 'oriental girl.' I've been on that table before, too," she added, remembering how uneasy it made her feel.

She knew that the greenish-skinned, lizard-eyed being was not human, even though the men, the truck, the travel, and the underground facility all certainly seemed to be.

"What kind of aliens," she wondered, "are involved with the government or military?"

3. Polly

Polly first contacted me in late 1992, before she even finished reading INTO THE FRINGE. "I am on page 176,'" her letter said, "and I had to stop to write you."

A passage discussing alien interest in human sexuality had struck a chord that resonated with some of her possible experiences. In the small town where she lived, Polly said, she couldn't find a good support system because the only UFO study group in the area had no women. She asked if I could put her in touch with other female abductees "for mutually beneficial correspondence." What she needed to discuss was too intimate for sharing with anyone other than another woman with similar experiences.

"I have been involved with the UFO phenomenon apparently all my life, and my children also are or have been involved," she wrote. "My father also has had experiences, but he is very careful whom he talks to about them, as he is respected as a technical person and is active still in [a military organization]."

Polly explained that she needed "a woman abductee buddy" because of the sexual nature of some of the events she had endured. "I have all my life been seriously traumatized, with the symptoms of a victim of long-term incest," she wrote, noting that her obsession with "fantasies of strange sexual abuse involving [unfamiliar] intrusive instruments" began when she was four years old.

And its consequences had deeply affected her adult life. "You stopped me short with your discussion of alien-instigated sexual obsessions," she continued. "I have since my teen years found myself every few years in a totally irrational sexually obsessive relationship, characterized by some intelligence talking to me in my mind, directing my actions, and apparently setting up bizarre coincidences to stage interactions."

For the most part, Polly noted, her personal relationships had not been obsessive. But having learned from experience that she could be externally manipulated in her sexual activities, she no longer sought out such involvements. "I now simply stay out of all relationships of a sexual nature," she told me. "The sexual and 'psychic' energy in [the last relationship] was intense to the point of being ridiculous, totally 'directed' and involved frequent telepathy and transference of feelings. I am in counseling for childhood incest, but there is only so far I can go with it, because I don't have a human incest background."

Polly's letter listed several UFO sightings and alien-encounter incidents in her family's experiences, and most of the details were familiar from my research with other abductees. The list included "interactions with 'Elves'; a creature that seemed to slosh through physical objects as if they were water; the usual zigzagging lights; lights that appeared outside my window every night at about the same time and watched me for several hours; maddening poltergeist activity; and many, many vivid 'abduction' dreams."

"I make no claim for them," Polly wrote, "but I know how they felt, a sense since young childhood that something was in my head to keep track of me, a squealing sound sort of in my head which seems associated with contact, and bedroom visitors which my dog, my son, and I all saw."

Polly had merely listed these events, but as a researcher I was interested in the details. I was also interested in the person who was trying to cope with this phenomenon. Replying to her letter, I asked for more information about her experiences and offered to be a good listener, both as an abductee and a woman. Although I had no recollection of any sexually oriented encounters myself, I had learned much from others who had been through such events. And my husband Casey, whose full account is related in INTO THE FRINGE, had himself experienced a sexual scenario with what appeared to be a hybrid alien female when he was a very young teen. Such events, I knew, were real in terms of their sensations and aftereffects, and any understanding of these scenarios would shed important light on the overall abduction agenda.

I explained these two concerns when I answered Polly's letter, and she agreed to share her information with me as part of my ongoing research. Through letters, phone calls, and taped discussions, I learned much about Polly and the things she and her children had experienced. A tall, fair, striking woman in her mid-forties, Polly's ethnic background is European, primarily Celtic, and Scandinavian. She is an excellent artist, but much of the time in supporting her family she has worked at rather physical jobs. Polly was born in 1946 in New Jersey and grew up in the Southeast. Widowed, she now lives with her children in the Adirondacks.

In addition to the various UFO sightings they had witnessed in this area, it soon became clear that her youngest son, Sam, was also having current alien encounters. In his taped communications and the drawings and reports to Polly which were shared with me, Sam showed unusual maturity and insight for an eleven-year-old.

Everything they told me came strictly from their conscious recollections which, concerning any given event, were very incomplete. Polly relegated some of her experiences to the "vivid dream" category, a common response of many abductees. The statement, "I make no claim for them," meant that she could not objectively verify these events as part of our "usual" reality. Some of them are similar to the virtual-reality scenario (VRS) dream discussed earlier, and some seem to have been simply the surfacing memories of actual events. Nonetheless, to Polly they were "experienced" events, and if they occurred strictly within a mental or psychic framework they still gave her every semblance of reality. The nature of that "reality" was often ambiguous, however, but there were some experiences she had verified as "real" because they had been multiply witnessed or perceived while she knew herself to be in a conscious state of mind.

These began very early in Polly's childhood. "When I was four years old," she told me, "I saw the skinny being who appeared in silhouette against my window shade. It was night, but a bright light, perhaps orangish in color, shone from the other side of the shade. The room was dark except for the illumination outside the shaded window. The being turned to approach me. When I get to this point in the memory, I start shaking my head and saying, 'No, no/ and then the memory stops. I tell myself if the memory comes over me again, I will get beyond this point and find out what happens next, but I never do."

This was also the age, probably not coincidentally, at which she began having the sexual fantasies of "intrusive unfamiliar instruments" used on her. Additionally she reported, "About age four, I had a sense of something having been put behind my left ear."

The next event possibly related to alien activity occurred around the age of fourteen: the onset of an obsession with understanding "the workings of the universe." She explained, "It was like I awakened to a sense of cosmic mission and to an apocalyptic sort of sense of human destiny. I felt I must understand the universe. It became a constant undercurrent of striving which persists even now." Given the reports of other abductees, some of which will be presented later, it was interesting that she related this "job and task on earth" to "Armageddon."

When she was in her late twenties, living in a different location, the next event took place. "Outside the cabin in the Blue Ridge Mountains," she said, "very loud stomping, like several men in work boots, suddenly began on our front porch after no sound of approach. We saw shadowy figures accompanying the very loud stomping. But I don't remember it stopping. I recollect we went to sleep in the midst of all this commotion, which of course makes no sense if we were lying only a few yards from prowlers. We awoke in the morning, remembered the stomping and shadowy figures, and went outside to hunt for footprints but found none."

In early 1987, however, Polly had a conscious look at her mysterious intruders. While sick in bed, she said, "I had a couple of bedroom visitations by two black-robed figures. They had large slanted, glowing, lemon-yellow eyes with no pupils, just like lights. The black-robed figures were about four feet tall. They were identical except that one was a little lighter, like charcoal gray instead of black. When they moved they did everything simultaneously to each other. They glided through my son's toy box when they left-the lower parts of their robes just went right through it."

Polly noted that this event occurred before she had ever seen the cover of Whitley Strieber's COMMUNION or any other representation of the typical Gray alien figures.

"Someone asked me if I had asked the figures what they wanted. My response was NO! I didn't want to give them any openers! My feeling was that they had come to take me permanently, and I devoted all my energy to rebuking them."

An extremely unusual series of events commenced in late 1987. "The whole thing started with a dream," Polly explained. "I dreamed I was flying over the Atlantic toward the Mediterranean. A white plane with red markings shaped like a small Concorde was approaching me from the opposite direction, the east.

"Shortly after this dream," Polly continued, "I noticed that I was having conversations in my head in French. This was most apt to happen around 4 p.m. My communicator identified himself as a professor in a Russian university. I had a sense of it being near Kiev. At night he would privately beam out psychic messages toward the West in an effort to expose a situation of psychic warfare which he claimed was being waged between political powers worldwide, and in an effort to help bring about peace between the then-USSR and the West.

"One thing I remember him saying very strongly was maintenant c'est la guerre, maintenant c'est la guerre, and he emphasized maintenant, telling me that psychic warfare was now being waged, directed to influence people in high positions and others who could serve the purposes of the perpetrators-perhaps obscure people who could nevertheless influence events and public opinion."

Her last contact with Evec was in December 1987 as she drove her son, through a snowstorm, to another town. The driving conditions took all her concentration, so she was startled when the French communication began.

"Evec was saying that he wanted me to join with him in prayer for world peace. So I tried praying in French, and that was a total disaster. I don't remember whose idea it was, but we decided to pray in Latin, and that went much better. I was saying things from the Mass in Latin, clearly seeing the snowy surroundings and driving competently, but just as clearly I began to see, like in some sort of parallel vision, the inside of a (probably Russian Orthodox) cathedral. There was a priest in a dark red robe with some kind of tall, funny hat. The interior was not ornate, but the ceiling was high and there was a lot of rich, polished wood. There was a choir consisting of both men and women. "I wish I had had a tape recorder in my head. The choir was singing the most magnificent mass I had ever heard. I could clearly distinguish that it was sometimes in eight-part harmony. It was all in Latin, and it was definitely not any mass that I have sung or heard. This went on for a long time, the whole rest of the ride. I don't recollect it ending, but we did arrive at our destination. This was the last time I ever heard from Evec. I had the feeling we had accomplished all we could together. He had not been seeking me-just 'broadcasting'-he was sending in general, and I happened to pick him up."

These two events in 1987, Polly's visitations by the black-robed beings and the recurrent telepathic conversations with Evec, marked the onset of what would prove to be frequent UFO and alien-related activities in her family's lives. It seemed to focus on Polly and her youngest child, Sam.

A few months after Evec's last communication, Sam had an encounter that paralleled Polly's experience with the black-robed beings. At age six, he saw "black figures flying about the room." Although they were similar to the beings Polly had witnessed, Sam described these characters as "smoke-like" with red eyes. They told him, Come with us, we'll take you to a better place.

But Sam wasn't convinced of their good intentions, and even though he was quite young he refused the offer. "No way," he replied, "I'm not going anywhere with you guys!"

After this incident both he and Polly had a number of experiences involving UFO sightings, mainly witnessed from a nearby hill, and a series of the "vivid dream" events that indicated repeated alien encounters.

"We've seen many UFOs with colored lights around them or shooting out from them," she said, reporting that it was "common to see white central lights flash amber, red, and blue."

This was also the onset of several experiences with what Polly and her family referred to as the "Elves." These beings, she said, "would squeak-talk very loud at night" and were extremely frightening to another of her children who also witnessed some of this activity during the most intense period of activity in 1989 and 1990.

Around this same time, in September 1989, Polly's family also had an experience with a different sort of creature. They perceived it as "sloshing" through solid matter, moving "through physical objects as if they were water." In spite of no clear confrontation with this being, Polly felt that it was "reptilian, huge and loud," making "crashing sounds in the woods like some very large two-legged creature lumbering through the woods in a very wet area. This sound had no approach and no departure," she said, "but there was the definite sense that the perpetrator of all this noise was approaching us. This occurred on a night which included a lot of UFO activity. We witnessed UFOs apparently pursued by fighter-reconnaisance at the air base."

Polly, Sam, and others in her family have had a number of UFO sightings, not only from the hill but also from other parts of the area. In June 1993, for instance, while Sam was traveling in a car driven by a family friend, he watched three UFOs cavort in the sky. "Sam saw three bright UFOs," Polly related. "A bright light suddenly appeared high above and a little ahead of them. It moved quickly downward, then disappeared as suddenly as it had appeared. Then a second appeared suddenly with no gradual approach, to the left of where the first one had, then zoomed across the sky to the right and disappeared." Shortly after this, the car turned onto another street, and Sam watched a third light appear suddenly. It flew a short distance and then went out of sight.

Within a matter of a few weeks, Sam had another sighting, this time of three UFOs together. And the following month, after yet another impressive sighting, Sam wrote me himself about what he'd seen on the night of August 19. "Last night was awesome for UFOs," his account began. "I saw one triangle-shaped one which made a whooshing sound for a long time. It looked like it might have been similar to the triangular one sighted in Belgium in 1988 or 1989. We saw it on TV. The one I saw was flying low....I had heard a whooshing noise first."

Another impressive sighting occurred on August 30, in the same area of the previous sighting. Sam said that this one was a large diamond or triangular shape with blinking lights on the front and rear. "It looked to be really high," he said, "but I could still see it good. I could see solid matter inside the light pattern" as the UFO arced across the sky.

Alien contacts continued to occur, usually recalled the morning after the event as both dream-like and yet real. "Sam told me of an abduction dream which he found frightening," Polly wrote in December 1992, "and this is unusual for him, as he is the only one of my children who seems to seek them and even to miss them. It included some interesting disclaimers to usual UFO accounts, such as 'there was gravity, I was not floating.' He said the interior was about ten feet by ten feet, rounded on the outside, but he felt inside there were some corners. He said it was 'spinning and wobbling' and throwing him around. He was frightened and recollected not wanting to enter the craft. He also recollected being able to see out a window of the craft part of the time and could see stars. He said he felt it was 'a blessing' that he was able, briefly, to see out."

Sam also said he sensed having had contact at some point with "bad aliens who are red, not gray," tacitly identifying the ones he had otherwise remembered as Grays, the same sort of figure so many other abductees have reported. Even more disturbing for Sam, however, was a dream he reported to Polly on the night of March 3,1993.

"Sam just took me aside," Polly wrote, "to tell me about a dream he had last night. He said, 'Can I talk to you in private? It's personal.' He has a partial memory of this dream, or else the dream itself was a fragment. He was with some people approaching the entrance to a UFO. He went through an entry way which led to a place that was all white, but he commented, 'You know how scientists say dogs are colorblind to our colors? I felt like maybe I was colorblind to their (ETs) colors and it wasn't really all white.'

"He said he was in a line with other people and the person in front of him was older than he. This young man proceeded into the craft and approached a long, white tube. He put his penis into the tube. After a little while he apparently withdrew it and left by some way other than the entrance. Sam was next. He did the same thing with the tube as the man before him had done, but his memory ends at this point. He felt this had something to do with the aliens wanting sperm. He said there was no sound and he did not see any aliens. He kept asking me for reassurance, saying, 'That was just a dream, right, Mom?'

"He does not read adult level books and I had never mentioned the sexual intrusions to him. It seems that just in the past year his experiences have become less agreeable to him. Previously he was the one of my children who seemed to feel a need and desire for 'them.' That is not completely gone, but certainly some intrusive elements have been introduced. Damn it, Karla, something is sexually molesting my eleven-year-old boy!"

After pondering on the situation a while, Polly commented, "I think the motive is not sperm gathering, but control. What affects the depths of the human psyche more than issues related to our sexuality? It is a perhaps unadmirable fact that sexual identity is probably the deepest, most primitive, most powerful identity concept that a human being has. Violate sexual identity in a situation where the human is made to believe that he/she is totally powerless, and you have gained a measure of control probably unattainable by any other single act."

Like Polly, I was concerned about Sam's discomfort with this scenario, and its implications. I was also fascinated by his statement that he had not seen any aliens in the experience. Later, Sam expanded this thought on a taped conversation he and Polly sent me. "In UFO dreams," he said, "after I've done what they make me do, they don't let me see them. It's like they make me want to do it, even though I don't want to. I see maybe them disguised as humans, or humans hypnotizing me. I'm not sure if they're humans."

Polly also had a number of abduction or UFO dream-events which felt extremely real to her and sometimes included human-looking figures. Many of the details, some of which will be described below, are amazingly similar to cases I've investigated and which other researchers and abductees have consistently reported. She also occasionally found typical marks on her body, although without any memory of getting them, including "IV-type bruises" on the bend of her arm and "bruises in a triangular pattern" on her upper arm.

Polly's abduction dreams became so frequent and realistic in their details as well as in their effects upon her that in 1991 she began keeping a journal of the dreams and of actual UFO sightings, from which the following excerpts are taken.

"August 31, 1991. I was with a group of people in a light colored room, and aliens were testing us for AIDS. I was found to have some strain of it, but they seemed to be communicating to me that it would not kill me or even seriously harm me. I don't know if this was because of something they did. Others had it as well-many of us were in the same situation. I think communication was telepathic.

"One thing that has characterized my UFO dreams has been an intense feeling of Wow, this is really This is the real thingl This is really happening. Typically I am out of doors and I see a UFO or UFOs in the sky. They land or one hovers above me. When I felt the dizzying sense of spiraling upward [in a previous event she had described], that one was different because I was conscious of being in my bed and being spun and sucked upward into a UFO. I think my mind was sucked out of my body."

Questioning the 'reality' of this dream about AIDS, Polly noted that she had in fact been diagnosed with lupus erythematosis, an auto-immune disorder, during her teen years.

"October 19, 1991. I remember a dream of a week or so ago which involved aliens. I recollect exiting a craft with them. I remember flying before we landed. There were other humans on board. Some of us went up front, but on the lower level the underside was clear-not glass but something thick yet perfectly clear. We could see down to a spread-out village below. It was daylight. The landscape below was fairly flat, maybe some low hills off to our left beyond the village. We landed, and I remember that I and others exited the craft with the aliens, whose form was like a very simplified human form-no muscle development evident. I think they may have had on form-fitting suits. They had no hair. I recollect something about some covering which had a seam near where an ear would be, but this is a vague memory. They were quite tall, not the four-foot type."

"October 23,1991. I dreamed I was holding a baby for the purpose of healing it. He was in a room at the end of a building that was like a nursery. None of the babies' parents were there. I think I dreamed of a lot of stuff happening in this building. I can still mentally see the face of the baby very clearly. I held it on two occasions. It was blond and blue-eyed, a little boy, and could hold himself erect when you picked him up. His eyes were crossed, one worse than the other, and as I held him he started to get a little better. When I held him the second time, he was strong enough that I could prop him on my hip.

"Then when he was wanting to nurse, I had this really weird thought, sort of apart from the dream, like standing off a little watching the dream. I thought, What if he isn't really a baby? What if he is really some midget pervert? I emphasized this last part because it indicates an awareness that we might be interacting with something less human and less innocent than it seemed."

"October 26, 1991. I was in some sort of medical situation in which my head was the object of attention. There were doctors around me. Before my head was the object of attention, I remember sitting up-something about my stomach hurting. I was sitting on something flat, and they were somehow making me travel very fast. I was afraid I would slide off the end and expected them to care, but somehow they did not seem to care. I remember when I sat up I said I could breathe better that way. Then they were going to put long needle-like things in the sides of my head, and I remember thinking in my dream, When the aliens do this it doesn't hurt; it is just pressure. Then I started saying over and over again, I'm in outer space, I'm in outer space, and they put the long needle things in, and I could sort of hear them going in, like a scraping sound, and feel pressure but no pain.

"The next thing I remember, I was like flying from west to east. I approached a four-corners intersection in the country. I felt like it was just west of [the hill where she and her family often witnessed UFO activity]. It was like they somehow landed me there, at that intersection, and the next thing I remember my eyes opened abruptly and I was in my room. When I woke up I kind of felt different than from a regular dream, like there was something more real about that experience." [It became even more realistic when, in the summer of 1993 Polly came upon that very intersection while out driving. It was a remote, unpopulated area west of the hill.]

"November 17,1991. Actual sighting, not a dream. Returning at night from the mountains which lie to the east of us, I saw a distant UFO. It changed color from red to white to red, etc., but was not a plane because it hopped around so much in all directions-quick movements."

"December 21, 1991. Had dream of sighting and being abducted by UFO. I was with some young man on a roadway on a hillside. I think there were big evergreens around, and down the hill a bit was an open field.... We went down to about the middle of the field and looked back up the hill. Soon the UFO appeared, larger and larger as it approached us. It glided low over the field and landed very close to us. My left arm was linked through the young man's right arm. I remember feeling, This is it-like this time it's really coming close. When it landed right near us, I said to the young man, 'Well, here we go!' Three beings came out of the UFO. They were human-looking, dressed in black or very dark colors, male, and surprisingly, taller than we were. I believe they took hold of us and began taking us to the craft, but it didn't feel real unfriendly. The three were pretty much identical. I don't remember faces. It was like they had one mind."

"January 30, 1992. Had a clear and detailed UFO sighting dream. It was daylight and I was looking east. I saw a UFO which was white and pale blue against blue sky. It hovered in one place for a long time while I and others viewed it. I remember looking at the portholes or windows. Then there was a scene where the UFO beings were among us and were taking all those who loved war and aggressive military attitudes and actions. They were taking even children. I was not among those taken. We were made to leave and we knew that the military-minded would suffer, and we felt really bad for them. I think a lot of the aliens were tall and close to human-looking, but also others were sort of like the Grays but I think lighter. I know some had big eyes."

"February 28, 1992. MAJOR UFO DREAM-felt very real. I was standing with another person or people-may have been first in my car, me driving. I saw them [UFOs] above and got out, pulling over to the left. I think there was one we saw very clearly and two others more distant. There were also planes up there, military looking planes. I remember feeling, This was so realistic. We waved our arms to draw attention, and the clearest one began coming nearer. I was thinking, They are going to take us; how am I going to deal with this? And then it was like the atmosphere of my mind changed. I was suddenly in a state of mind where I could handle this, not go into some kind of fear-shock at the absolute strangeness of it.

'The UFO was sort of grayish, not all lit, and some aliens approached us, also grayish. They were not human looking. I think there were three, but I especially focused on one who was either sort of leaning forward so that his head was more noticeable than any other part of him, or else I just noticed his head the most. I said something to the effect that we were really going with them, and in my altered state of mind I felt I could do it, but I knew I would be subjected to them in the craft. It was like I knew, but in my altered state, well, I can't turn back now, might as well accept it. After that I don't remember anything. I think I felt a little responsible, like I had involved the people with me in this and maybe it was not good for them. I had a slight bloody nose when I woke up, but think it was related to a cold."

"June 23, 1992. [Recounting an actual event that preceded the dream] my son Sam and I felt compelled to go up on the hill at 10:30 p.m. as there was a glow i n the sky which we felt must be from the sun, as it is not much after the longest day in this north country. When we got up there we felt intensely peaceful. Everything was very, very still, although there is often a wind up there when there is none anywhere else. There were a few fireflies. Then I saw a larger, brighter flash of light in the grass across the road from where we sat. I said to Sam, 'Nothing is really happening, but I feel like if we stay any longer it will.' I felt that if we continued to sit there with our minds focused, we would interact with some energy there and something would happen. I felt it had already begun to happen, but that we still had the option of breaking it off and leaving."

They returned home, and that night Polly had a UFO dream. "I was walking or otherwise traveling along a road at night," she described. "I first saw lights, then saw UFOs-round, a little bigger than stars, and not as bright as stars. They were up to my right, quite near the tops of the trees. I said, 'Wow! I'm really seeing them!' Then I looked up. There was one overhead which descended closer and closer to me. I could clearly see the round bottom part, like an opening. I said, with a little fear, 'Okay, take me.'

"At this point I felt a feeling of being lifted which was like no feeling I can adequately describe. It was like being sucked by force, a dizzying, blinding, overwhelming force. While it was happening I felt intensely that the experience was absolutely real, and in most dreams it never occurs to me to pass judgment on the reality of anything. I was sort of afraid, totally caught up in it (literally and figuratively), very aware of the sense that it was real, and feeling, Well, I'm in it now, so wherever I am going it is not under my control.' I couldn't see much, but 1 felt such an incredible feeling of being lifted higher and higher, like it took my mind.

"After the lifting I was aware of being in a white place, but it was not the standard 'round' white room of many UFO reports. I think it was white like white paint, and I recollect a corner, which is also not typical, and some sort of black or dark object. It was like I was seeing only one little part of this place.

"Another thing I recollect was being in some sort of craft and being behind the pilot, who sat on the left side, and noticing his head. It was hairless, apparently with a skull similar to ours, and the skin was white like putty. He turned toward me and appeared to have on some sort of clown mask, although it did not really look like our typical clowns. It had the color orange on it and was otherwise white like plastic. The feeling I got from this pilot was of a detached sort of kindness, not any malevolence but also nothing that could really be called emotion.

"I have some recollection of coming into a base or land while in this craft. It was light, like daylight (whereas I had been abducted in the dark of night). I could see a building, I think with a flat roof, and an outdoor area to my right of the building. I also vaguely recollect at some point desiring to see more clearly and 'them' doing something so that I could, and things came into better focus. In the outdoor area beside the building there were flowers and shrubs and children playing, human children.

'The pilot was still with me when I found myself inside the building. He said they call us something like 'the short round ones' and showed me models of humans between three and four feet tall. These models looked to be made out of hard plastic or something similar and were orange and white. I pointed out to the pilot that I was exactly his height (5'7"). He was thinner built than a human man, maybe a little lighter weight than I, though I am small-boned. A few other aliens were present, also.

"In this building were some human children. Now that I think about it in my waking state, maybe they call us 'the short round ones' because they have so many of our children. Our children, when healthy, are rounder than they. They appeared thin and lightweight, but it was hard to judge because they were clothed. I don't have a clear recollection of their clothing, I think light-colored jumpsuits.

"I felt I was not the only adult human there but that there were more human children present than human adults. Near me was a little blond-headed boy about three years old. I picked him up and held him, and he really seemed to like that. Then I said, 'Where is your mommy?' and he looked sad and didn't say anything. I got the strong feeling that the pilot who stood to my left and others of his kind very much disapproved of my asking that question. Then I noticed a little girl, also blonde. I feel she was eleven years old for some reason, though I think she was more the size of an average nine-year-old. I asked her if she was the boy's sister, and she said no. I had the feeling they had no kin people with them. The little girl also seemed sad, and I remember feeling grateful that 'they' hadn't taken my children from me, but I was sad about these children and the many others.

'There was a big window arched at the end to my right. Outside the window was a little play yard. A dark-haired human woman was tending a group of human children. I felt she was no kin to them, except that they were all human. I did not see the other adults whom I felt were there somewhere.

"I recollect that there was a process of returning me, but I don't remember it in any detail now. I felt that the experience within the piloted craft seemed 'staged' somehow for the benefit of my belief system, but the intense lifting feeling felt somehow necessary and real."

"January 24,1993. Three nights in a row I have had dreams including UFOs, a craft, and beings. The next night in actual awake reality, I watched UFO activity in the sky, two luminous fiery balls a little bigger than basketballs."

One of Polly's most vivid and recent dream-events she reported to me at length in a letter, complete with drawings of the creatures she remembered seeing.

"On the night of June 27 (1993)," she wrote, "I had dreams which included vivid visual impressions of aliens and appearances of very bright, very real-feeling lights. The aliens did not look like what I would have depicted if you had said, 'Draw a typical alien.' The characteristics were a pronounced browridge, convolutions or folds on the forehead and beside the eyes, eyes back under shelter of the brow-ridge, and gray or gray-green skin. They were proportionately tall and thin. There were at least three and I am pretty sure more, standing closer together than I have drawn them. I am not sure about my depictions of nose and mouth, but nose and mouth were somehow represented. I'm also not sure about details of the lower body.

"I remember being utterly fascinated with their brow folds and the folds beside their black eyes, but not looking directly into those eyes. Also with the texture of their fairly tough skin, which was sort of like an artist's kneaded eraser. I have a recollection of having been very close to the one on your left [in drawing], so close that my face was right up by the right-hand side of the face, looking closely at those folds. Then I recollect being back a little further from them seeing the group standing together, but I don't know what happened first.

"I felt as I awakened that what I retained were two fragments of a much more detailed experience, as if I had sort of mentally photographed those two segments to 'bring back' as souvenirs-yes, it was almost as if they posed for these memories! That is why I could get so close to that one without having to become engulfed by his eyes, and it is why they stood so obligingly in that little group!"

Polly and Sam reported these and a number of other experiences for almost a year, many of which seemed to be reflections or memories of fairly current experiences. And once she felt more comfortable with our relationship, she was able to address the sexual issue and share the painful memories from her childhood.

'The area of my psychology which I feel has been most damaged by 'them' or by some very early influence," she confided, "is the area of my sexual concepts. At approximately age four, I became obsessed with sadomasochistic sexual imagery. The images involved a little girl on a flat table similar to a doctor's exam table, but I think it may have been metallic looking, silver metallic, a little grayer than actual silver. I remember being obsessed with these images day in and day out, and I would try to detach from them by saying that the little girl was not me, but yet at the same time I knew it was.

"Sometimes there would be one 'person' doing things to the little girl and sometimes several. There were generally those who observed. I had the sense of both males and females present. Occasionally a female would do a procedure, but more often a male."

There were machines involved, as well as probes and needles. 'The intrusions involved what I now understand to be the genital area, but I did not understand at the time, as well as the rectum. Also, I do recollect needles to the navel, and this now makes sense when I read adult women's accounts of intrusions through the navel. My sense of the 'people,' if it ever was clear, is now indistinct. My early medical history does not include anything like this.

"One thing I did which could have been a cry for help and an attempt to resolve this situation was that I drew pictures of these events. I remember especially at five and six drawing the little girl on the table and the 'people' around her with the intrusive machines. I showed these pictures to my mother, but I have no recollection of her reaction except that I don't think she shamed me.

"If I had been molested by adult family members I don't think I would have had images of an exam table and needles associated with machinery, especially at ages three and four. I think these images had to have come from some source outside my own imagination. This early influence imprinted my sexuality with the dynamics of sadomasochism. I feel this imprinting set me up to be victimized and set me up to expect all sexual encounters to involve humiliation by a dominator."

In fact, she said, whenever she found herself in 'power-sex' situations, 'There was a voice that would talk to me and say, Everything is right on schedule. Everything is going as planned. But the plan did not prove benevolent toward me!"

The overall discernible effects of all their experiences on Polly and Sam, to this point, are several. Sam has an overly mature outlook for his age, evincing an interest in questions of cosmic importance including reincarnation and the history of the human race. And, after the sperm-taking scenario, he is also, according to Polly, very uncomfortable with the idea of alien intrusions upon his developing sexuality. For Polly, too, the sexual aspects of her life have been altered by these events. She avoids sexual involvements now, in an attempt to regain control over the compulsions that have caused many problems for her in the past.

She has no explanation for the alien intrusions into her family's life, only a strong sense that this involvement has been with her for a very long time.

Most of it has been unseen. In addition, or as part of the UFO events, Polly has experienced internal communications from "spirits," although she cannot identify them more specifically.

"They so often enter or I enter them in a sense," she explained, "in a sense in which we each or all allow each other to be there simultaneously. I don't know if this is a UFO thing, but they are multidimensionals."

Her experiences comprise many elements: UFO sightings, entity encounters, dream-events, physical effects, spiritual teachings, and a sense of an unknown mission she must perform. In their experiences, Polly and Sam have both felt positive and negative presences, fellowship and fright, which makes it hard to place all of the events into a single framework, the acts of a single group. There is also the question of human involvement, since both of them report encounters with humanoid figures that have not yet been clearly discerned or identified.

The amassed data from reports like Polly's show that the abduction agenda is much too complex for any of the current explanations, both in the events and in their effects on the individuals involved. Certainly on the individual level, the phenomenon is profoundly disturbing and transforming, but it is even more so when the massive numbers of people having abductions is considered. The agenda, given this level of pervasiveness, must involve much more than the transformation of the individual. The entire society is beginning to feel its effects, and there would seem, from the testimony of witnesses like Polly and the other women in this project, to be much more yet to come.

4. Lisa

Whereas the accounts from Polly and Pat contain several elements that may not be familiar to most students of the abduction phenomenon, Lisa's experiences are much more "typical," in one sense, comprising many recurrent details-although, as these accounts are meant to show, the accepted definition of the "typical" abduction is woefully inadequate.

A thirty-five-year-old wife and mother of two children, Lisa and her husband Neal have lived in southern Alabama for the past fifteen years. Her medium build and thick brown hair reflect her ancestry of Italian and Scotch-Irish. To all outward appearances, Lisa's life seems quite normal. While her husband works at a good job in heavy industry, Lisa takes care of her home and children, involved in the usual activities of a family with teenagers, and she enjoys gardening as well as more strenuous outdoor activity.

I met Lisa and Neal while I was in Florida to give a presentation on abduction research. Several of the local UFO group's members invited me to one of their homes for a more informal and intimate discussion, and when I described a few of the less well-known events some abductees have reported, Lisa suddenly became very interested. We spoke privately, and she told me that some of the things I had just discussed were familiar to her, from her own experiences. Lisa had some conscious memories of encounters with the typical Grays, as well as missing-time episodes, multiple-witnessed UFO sightings, unexplained body marks, telepathic communications from unseen sources, and many dream-memories of ambiguous reality-except in those instances where other evidence pointed to an actual event.

While the details of Lisa's life-long involvement are certainly very typical, the alien intrusions are clearly more intense and frequent than in many such cases. Equally intense are her emotional reactions to these encounters and her need for help in coping with them.

"Meeting other abductees has helped me feel not so isolated," she wrote me shortly after that first meeting, "but my depression is still severe. I can't believe I have them [alien interactions] so frequently. If they're trying to wear me down, they've about succeeded. The flashbacks just don't yet make sense, or maybe they have no intentions to. I'm starting to have military flashbacks, and my phone clicks and goes crazy. The 'Morse code' and humming in my ear has literally driven me up the wall.... I don't want to be used for experiments or reproductions, but how do I stop them? I pray until sometimes I'm prayed out. Why won't God help? By the way, I don't feel special or chosen like they said."

I began my investigation with Lisa by asking about any unusual childhood events. Her responses showed a pattern of activity going back as far as she can remember. "The sounds of things walking through the house," she said, "have been going on since I was small. The shadows [dimly discernible figures] happened more in my later life, from twenty years old on. Like I said, they do it [appear] right in front of me." She also recalled episodes of missing time in childhood. "I would go to the woods-we owned twenty-five acres when I was a child-and come back, and it would be dark."

And the missing-time experiences still occur. "Now, I'll look at the clock and roll over and look at it again, and sometimes it will be an hour later and other times four hours," she explained, "and I could swear it hadn't been but a few minutes. It makes me disoriented after I realize there's been some missing time. It's hard to go on when something robs you of your life, and you have no memory of it.

"The Grays appeared about three or four years ago," she continued. "Before that, I didn't know what was causing these things, but the shadows I've seen forever, seems like."

In 1980, however, Lisa did see something very different from the shadows, in a terrifying event. "A being appeared to me," she recalled, "when I was a couple of weeks pregnant. We had just got into bed and Neal already seemed 'out of it,' and the being appeared on the end of the bed, squatting, telling me mentally the child I was carrying was special and it would be a boy. I almost had a fainting spell. I threw the covers over my head as the being was leaping toward me, I believe, and said, 'In Jesus' name, take it away!' It disappeared, and I fell quickly asleep. It was about three feet tall, dark-skinned, leathery looking. I don't remember anything else." The child, incidentally, did turn out to be a boy. Now in his teens, he has proven to be extraordinarily intelligent, with an IQ that tested above 140 when he was seven.

After going through Lisa's early memories, I asked her to fill out a preliminary questionnaire which focused on a number of events most often reported by abductees. A comprehensive comparative chart of the responses to this questionnaire by all eight women is presented on p. 231. Because Lisa's experiences are so very typical, however, many of her responses will be discussed here in some detail, as representative of reports from numerous abductees.

She had already mentioned a couple of these things-the odd phone disturbances, the beeping and humming sounds in her ear-and there were other details, internal and external, which are often part of the alien abduction phenomenon.

For instance, there were sightings of unexplained lights, within the house as well as in the sky. Lisa described "large whitish-yellow lights in the sky that blink out like a light switch and fast-moving streaks of light." She has also witnessed "large and small balls of red or white light bouncing in the house" and blue, orange, and white lights flooding in through the windows from craft outside. A couple of passages from her journal show some of these typical events:

"August 10,1993. When I got ready to go to sleep at 11:30 or so, my cat noticed it, then I did-a small ball of light bouncing through the room. It was just zipping around. I probably saw it for fifteen seconds, then it went out of the room. In the morning my eyes were burning and irritated."

"August 24, 1993. Woke at 1 a.m., felt something was happening, looked around the room, fell back asleep. Woke up at 4:25 a.m. with white lights turning, like strobe lights, outside of my bedroom window. Before I could race to the window, it was gone. My eyelids were very swollen in the morning, and also my back hurts."

"March 27, 1993. Felt uneasy, like having a nightmare, struggling and thrashing about, and then feeling sort of paralyzed. I felt the need to scream and resist, and I yelled, 'No!' two or three times. Trying to wake Neal up, I grabbed onto him. I was being lifted off the bed by a force, but I struggled and somehow broke out of it. When I looked around the room, a reddish-orange light flashed in the house and then went to the side and it seemed white. This was about 1:00 to 1:20 a.m."

Another common report involves bizarre, unexplained behavior of electrical equipment in the abductee's environment, and, as an excerpt from Lisa's journal shows, this has also frequently occurred with her and Neal.

"At about 3 a.m. my husband and I were waked up by the radio going crazy, the front porch light blinking, and the touch-light lamp in the living room on bright." Even the phone began to act oddly, ringing and crackling incessantly with no one on the other end of the line. "Finally we just had to unplug the phone," her journal noted. "I was scared."

This was not an isolated event, as other entries in her journal show: "May 10, 1993. About midnight or so, the kids' radio came on and the lamp in the living room came on twice. Neal and I had disturbed sleep."

Unexplained activity of helicopters over the home, following, as it does so often after UFO activity, shows up in Lisa's case. For her, it began in early 1993, as her journal notes.

"March 15, 1993. About 12:20 or 12:30 a.m. I saw some beautiful blue lights coming down the hallway [through a window from a craft near the house], then somewhere around that time I heard a helicopter over our house by my bedroom window. It stayed for a while, then left. It appeared on the scene moments after the craft was leaving. Couldn't sleep rest of the night."

"May 29, 1993. At 3:30 p.m. my son and I saw a dark helicopter pass over our house."

"September 22, 1993. Helicopters were still flying at 11 p.m. The humming and 'Morse code' were almost deafening again."

"September 23, 1993. Went to bed about 11:30. I 'dreamed' about the Grays telling me how easy it was to get me. Then it changed to a room where there were autopsies going on. Somebody human-sounding was talking, and a woman was lying on a table who had been 'done.' They said some people had a Y-incision and some a straight incision. She was a white woman, probably in her forties. Also, sometime during the night a helicopter was flying close to our house, but I couldn't get up and fell back asleep. So tired in the morning."

Lisa has many of the symptoms typically reported by other abductees, including stress, sleep disruption, depression, a sense of having a job or task to perform, disturbing dreams of massive UFO landings and of widespread disasters.

"I feel they have said they love me and that I was special (yeah, sure), and they say that I will be used for some purpose," Lisa commented. "Probably to tell others about them. I've had dreams telling me to go to isolated places and store food. Can't remember more. I have had small glimpses of catastrophes, just a flash of severe starvation, not enough to remember."

A journal entry from December 1992 records one of the dreams of massive UFO presence which is very commonly reported. "In this dream ," Lisa notes, "I was in the dark with someone, looking at the night sky, and the spaceships were coming in landing. I told someone, 'They're finally coming'."

Among the events of actual abduction scenarios-whether recalled consciously, in flashbacks, or in memories surfacing in dreams-Lisa's experiences include almost every type of reported event. Most women, for instance, have undergone physical, specifically gynecological, examinations while in the hands of the aliens. Lisa's account echoes the usual scenario, beginning with the memory of being "on their spaceship on a small examination table all scrunched up.

"My legs were put as close to my bottom as possible. They had something holding me open while they inserted [something] or did their exam. The table seemed to be at their height. Seems like there were two of them. I remember looking up between my legs and the alien looking back at me. It seemed to be very uncomfortable. I can't remember more after looking at the Gray."

On another occasion, Lisa remembers being less cooperative during an exam, "giving them a hard time about being examined. I remember asking them, 'How would you like me to do this to you?' I don't know what they said...I'm sure they sedated me." The following morning, she suffered from a sore chin and a bruise on the top of her right wrist.

A journal entry from July 1993 shows how disturbed she has felt during some of these examinations. "Had a 'dream' of being on their spaceship in a huge room on a table with the Old One examining me," she noted. ″I was fine until he showed me an instrument (I can't remember it now) he was going to use on me. Then I got upset. He placed his hands on my head, and I don't remember anything else."

Lisa also recalls, more than once, being shown alien or "hybrid" babies. An entry from October 1993 states, "I gave birth to a fair-looking baby and called it a star baby. It had real light blue eyes with unusual pupils."

One of the most commonly reported events is that of an alien's face up very close to the abductee's face. Some researchers, taking their cue from abductees' descriptions of this event, call it a "mind-scan," and whatever else this activity does, it certainly seems to control the abductee mentally. Lisa remembers this occurring on several occasions. 'The ETs like to put their noses almost on my nose," she explained, "and when they do this I just stare into their eyes. Sometimes that's all I ever see, their eyes, and nothing else that's happening."

Besides being told by the aliens that she is "special" and "chosen," as often happens with others, Lisa has also recalled scenarios of training or instruction. In a November 1993 dream, for example, she was in a brightly lit room talking with some people whose identity she can't recall. They were telling Lisa how she should go about discussing the aliens with other people. "I was being told I needed to learn better how to speak about them," she said.

And she has been given information about the aliens' interest in human genetics, another common communication. Two entries from her journal typify this event.

"August 16, 1993. In one 'dream' Neal and I were raising weird creatures, and another [part] was where they [aliens] were telling me how they have been genetically altering us gradually. I felt like we were their pet project or something."

"August 20, 1993. Woke at 2 a.m. and at 4:53 a.m., got up and went to kitchen for something to eat. Had a 'dream' of an ape or gorilla, whatever you want to call them, sitting on my bed holding my hands, and someone was saying, They are you and you are them. Very nauseated in the morning and had sweated very badly last night."

Other, more specific, physical effects have also been reported in Lisa's experiences. In addition to the nausea and eye irritations that she suffered after certain abductions or abduction 'dreams,' Lisa has also found patterns of bruises, and puncture marks that couldn't be accounted for in any mundane way.

She has the well-known scoop marks, for example, one on her lower right leg and another on the upper part of her right arm, which are permanent. Temporary marks, however, are much more commonly reported. In Lisa's case, these have included a triangle of circular bruises on her hip-the triangle pattern shows up more frequently than any other design-scattered bruises on other body parts, such as the bridge of the nose; the bottom, top, and heel of the foot; the wrist; inside the arm very close to the armpit; all around the knee; and on top of the hand.

But bruises aren't the only marks that show up. Like Polly and others, Lisa has found damaged areas in the bend of her elbow and scratches, which she is certain were not accidentally inflicted, in unusual places. After one particular abduction in October 1993, in which she recalled being in a pool of water with the aliens around her before they took her to an examination room, Lisa found a scratch across her lower left jaw, as well as two bruises on the outside of her left knee. And she has had patterns of bruises which are so commonly reported that we have come to refer to them as "clamp marks" because they appear to have been left by either three- or four-fingered hands grasping the upper arms or the thighs very forcefully.

All of these physical effects are very familiar in abduction reports, as are instances of blood found on the abductee's body or bedclothes after an encounter. Lisa, too, has had this occur, in situations where the blood could not be explained as coming from a bloody nose or some other injury.

It is clear, then, that Lisa's abduction situation has involved most of the "typical" scenarios and events, even including episodes where she has been shown how to operate a craft and has been warned about the physical dangers of touching a craft during certain phases of operation.

But she has also experienced several of the less familiar events-less familiar, that is, in terms of abduction research findings which have been made public. Regrettably, much of what abductees have reported has not been publicized, for a number of reasons. In some cases, as with alien-human sexual activity, this may be because so many abductees are unwilling to talk about such intimate things.

In other cases it is the researchers themselves who are reluctant to expose some aspects of the events, fearing they will push the credibility of their audience, especially their desired audience of professionals and academics, too far. Some parts of this phenomenon, they fear, are simply not "politically" acceptable, no matter what the abductees themselves insist they have experienced. Lisa and several other of the women whose experiences are reported in this book, therefore, are to be commended for their courage in discussing these aspects.

The first highly controversial area is that of sexual activity. It is important to remember, when reading the following journal entries, that the aliens have superb "virtual reality" capabilities and that without external verification it is impossible to know if the memory or dream of an encounter reflects an actual event. This is especially important when assessing reports of sexual activity with the aliens, for in some situations people tell of seeing celebrities, religious figures, and even dead acquaintances.

One of the first sexual situations Lisa remembers happened in late 1989, beginning with her conscious awareness of the aliens' presence. Lying in bed, she woke up and saw a group of aliens, one of which held a wand-like instrument, around the bed. The tallest of the beings was touching Neal's chest. "I looked at them," Lisa explained, "and told them not to touch him and to leave him alone. That's the night I got to see them for a few seconds in an unaltered state. Then they pointed the wand at my forehead, made me feel dizzy, and I was out. I believe that's the night they made me have sex while they watched."

The sexual interaction involved another abductee. Lisa said the man gave her his name, T. M. Reiss, which he spelled for her. "He told me they had been abducting him since he was a child," she said. "He was very sorry."

In a couple of the sexual scenarios, Lisa recalled interacting with creatures of some sort. These types of bizarre reports turn up less frequently in the research, but they are not unheard of. She recalled the first episode as a dream-event, in which she and a gorilla-type creature were sexually engaged. Lisa woke up after having this 'dream' when the sound of a "breathing device" brought her to consciousness. She saw a dim figure in the doorway step out of sight and then, as unlikely as such a response always seems in these situations, she went back to sleep. The action, however, was not yet over. At 3:25 she woke up again, flinging her arms about and trying to rouse Neal, who was completely unresponsive. She saw a lighted object outside the bedroom window, and she could feel an energy controlling her body.

'They had some force on me," she said, "stopping me from getting up. When the craft [outside] started to lift up, it broke the force. I ran outside, but I really can't say for sure if I saw something."

On another occasion, while lying down during the day, Lisa dreamed about a number of sexual situations. Something like a small horse was involved, as well as a "dolphin," some Grays, and "a dark, leathery, scaly creature" whose features she couldn't clearly recall. After waking from this dream, Lisa experienced the "humming and Morse code" noise that occasionally plagued her internal hearing.

After a similar 'dream' in which Lisa was placed with several animals in sexual situations while being observed, she awoke the next morning with a bruise on her lower ankle and a tender area on the back of her head, in spite of no consciously recalled injuries to these areas. And immediately following another dream-like sexual episode with what appeared to be a well-known public figure, Lisa awoke in her bed and saw a nebulous form move quickly across the room and disappear. Startled and frightened, it took her a long time to fall back asleep, and in the morning she felt nauseated.

Such things made it hard for her to dismiss all these dream memories as mere figments, yet they were such scant evidence as to give no certainty of the events' reality. Whether they were real or dreams, there is the question of motivation. "I believe sometimes I'm made to dream odd things," Lisa said, "to see my reaction to them." A poignant journal entry reveals how confusing this activity can be, how vulnerable it leaves the abductee. "Dreamed Neal and I made love," she noted. "I hope it was him."

The second controversial area reported by Lisa involves, as with the case of Pat in the previous chapter, the viewing of "new bodies." She told me that her memory of seeing a new body occurred sometime in late 1992. Although she was keeping a journal by that time, which recorded UFO sightings, conscious events, and dreams, both alien-instigated and the normal, self-generated variety, she refused for some reason to include this event in the record.

Lisa recalled lying on a table aboard a craft, with her "new body" beside her. "I got out of my old body," she said, "and stood next to it. I was looking it over, and I even looked at my teeth. The body was perfect, but it had my long hair that I used to have. Somebody said they could make people believe that was me," she continued, "even though it was perfect and with long hair. I wanted so badly to get in it, but I did not. I don't remember who the beings were in the room with me, just being overwhelmed seeing the body. I don't remember how I got back in my old body."

Later, in 1993, Lisa had experienced another dream-event about this situation. "Dreamed of showing my new body to some friends," her journal records, "and reading to them from a special book about humankind. I was reading with some clear instrument like a triangle. Don't remember what I was reading." This scenario of reading a book during an encounter, by the way, is a little-known detail reported in a number of separate cases.

Similar dreams recurred in which she found herself displaying the new body. In one briefly recalled episode she was showing it to her doctor, and in a much more involved dream, Lisa felt as if she had actually died in order to get into the new body, which she then showed to her husband and some other people. There were other details of this dream that suggest it may at the very least have been a screen memory of an actual event. She insisted on keeping her son with her, for example, explaining to her husband that the son "is one of us, like me." Lisa had been told in a past encounter that the aliens were interested only in her and her son, not the entire family.

The encounter in the new body was followed by a more familiar situation, in the exam room. "A doctor and a nurse were giving me an examination," she recalled, "and telling me I had hepatitis. But they were giving me some sort of vaginal exam. I told them to leave me alone, that they weren't my doctors, [but I] don't remember more."

In addition to the sexual encounters and the alleged cloning capabilities of the aliens, a third controversial topic avoided by many researchers focuses on military involvement with aliens and abductees. For Lisa, as is so often the case with abductees, the first memory of a possible encounter with the military surfaced in a dream.

"I was being interrogated by the military," she said, "pushed and made to lie crouched on the ground. In the back were some trucks, and beside them were guys in black uniforms standing watching me. The men asking questions were in regular military clothes. They held me down with the butts of their guns. They told me to give them the knowledge, and they said 'at any cost.' I told them I didn't know what they were talking about, and they just repeated themselves."

Since that dream in August 1993, however, Lisa has had other memories of this particular 'event' come to the surface. The most detailed recollection came as part of a situation which closely fits the definition of the VRS dream discussed earlier. On the night of December 19, 1993, Lisa had several dreams of a very ordinary sort. But in the midst of these regular dreams, she suddenly found herself in a situation and environment that had quite a different 'feel' to it.

"All of a sudden I'm surrounded by military men, some in black clothes and some in green," she noted. "I was being made to walk hurriedly on the grounds of some installation. I don't know how I got there or left. The soldiers were rude to me. I told them to stop pushing on me.

"Then we went into an office of some type that seemed plainly decorated. It looked like white walls and no pictures, and the desk and chair were plain. A man was sitting behind the desk. He was a little heavy and looked slightly balding, but his hair was short. He had on green clothes and no medals or name as I could tell. He started asking me questions, about what I felt on the aliens. It seemed like he was wondering about how to get the public prepared.

"I told him that a lot of the public was already aware, and some would never accept it. I asked him how he could expect that, since we don't all agree on other things. We talked, I believe, a little about religion and politics. I believe there were other people in the room. I probably wasn't allowed to look.

'Then I think they brought me something to drink. I don't remember more. I just know this man looked bewildered and concerned. I believe the alien issue has gotten out of control in his opinion. I expressed to him that I was tired of the game-playing."

For Lisa, then, the abduction phenomenon's parameters include witnessed UFO sightings; conscious perceptions of lights, probes, and aliens in the house; conscious telepathic communications; bizarre external physical reactions from inanimate objects in her environment; conscious perception of missing-time episodes; unexplained physical marks on her body; and a number of virtual-reality/dream scenarios involving both human and alien beings.

In a nutshell, this is an accurate general definition of the phenomenon as reported by numerous abductees. But as the eight representative accounts here demonstrate, the details of that scenario are highly bizarre, variable to an absurd degree from case to case, invariably intrusive, sometimes physically painful, spiritually ambiguous, ingeniously deceptive, and, at every level, deeply disturbing.

Three experiences Lisa has recently reported will make this point very clearly.

The first, which she recalled in a dream state, began inside an unknown facility. "I was on a table," Lisa said, "and it looked like I was being pushed down a hall with bright lights. They [her attendants] were quickly strapping my feet down with straps that looked like velcro. I don't know what these beings that abducted me looked like. Then something was inserted in my left ear, I think. I told them they were killing or hurting my brain, then I blacked out."

In the next remembered scene, something very different was going on, this time involving other humans. "I believe the FBI came to arrest me," Lisa said, "and they called me by my maiden name. One man was really mean to me." Lisa remembered nothing more, but she wondered the next morning if the soreness in her left ear and her throat had anything to do with the memory of the ear probe.

The second experience, which she recorded as a dream, also involved some physical procedure aboard a craft, but it began on a rather exalted level. "I dreamed I was given a heavenly audience," Lisa reported. "I believe it meant that they [aliens] invited me to speak with them, but I don't remember about what." A physical exam followed. "I saw myself on a table in a spaceship and alien beings standing at the end of my feet, telling me or each other that I was an excellent breeder," she recalled. "A reptile-looking creature was getting on top of me, I guess to rape me." After this, she remembered nothing more.

The final experience had a much more conscious element to it than the 'dreams/ in spite of its more 'fantastic' nature. Lisa had gone to bed early on this night and awoke at 1:10 a.m. Preparing to fall asleep again, but still awake, she began to feel a growing sense of some "pressure" which became very intense.

"I looked up at the ceiling over me," Lisa said, "and saw images that looked like vultures or the phoenix bird. There seemed to be two of them...trying to chase each other off. Their eyes glowed green, I believe. Then there appeared a spirit form. It seemed to have white hair and a beard. I started yelling frantically, 'Oh, God, oh, Heavenly Father!' over and over and trying to get myself free from the force. I felt my eyes roll back in my head.

"Then I felt a great pulling, and I'm not sure if I was in spirit form or my body, but very quickly I was in the clouds and sky. I looked down and saw the lights of a town and vapors of the clouds. The spirit took me to a wall or some sort of tunnel, and I was going to be taken in. I don't remember more of what I saw. The next thing I know, I was back in bed and looking at the same birds disappearing. I came out of the odd state I was in and went to the kitchen, I was trembling so bad. The clock said 3:40."

"God help me," Lisa concluded, "whatever I was seeing." The vulture and the phoenix, after all, are very different creatures who embody quite different concepts.

A time loss of two and a half hours occurred that night. And so did a serious injury to Lisa's back. The "great pulling" that took her upwards jerked her with such force that the next day she could hardly walk. The pain continued getting worse, and when she consulted her doctor, she was told that the spinal damage could prove permanent. In this one instance, at least, the event was more than virtual reality.

5. Anita

Anita's experiences, while not so intense or frequent as Lisa's, are probably more akin to what most abductees witness and recall. They include a number of details commonly reported in other cases. But in her situation, typical of these others, conscious memories of events have been less frequent and more moderate in scope. Her attitude similarly reflects this moderate quality, possibly because she's been able to reflect upon her experiences with quiet equanimity.

Born in 1947, Anita has spent most of her life in Texas. Her ancestry is French, Scotch, and Native American. A wife, mother, and grandmother, she is attractive and intelligent. For a while, she was a trained volunteer emergency medic, and later she owned and operated her own business. From her home in a large central Texas city, Anita now takes care of her family and also pursues several intellectual interests. In the past several years, for instance, she has been drawn to a study of psychic and alternative methods of healing. Anita has been consciously aware of UFO activity since childhood, and her brothers and sisters have also had recurrent UFO events throughout their lives. So, perhaps, may have some of Anita's children and grandchildren.

Her first conscious encounter with the unknown was at the age of five. "I recall sitting in my front yard one afternoon," she said, "and sensing someone watching me. I turned around, and back behind me stood a man in a red flight suit. I have no memory of what happened after that."

Like many abductees, what she recalled from childhood was frequently unexplained, but not necessarily related to UFOs. The nature of the events remained ambiguous.

Episodes of missing time which have recurred throughout her life began at an early age. She recalled one such episode that happened at the family home, which was in a very rural setting. "I suddenly came out of what I call 'mind blank'," Anita explained. "I found myself close to a creek near our house. I did not know how I got there. The strangest thing was that 1 was coatless and shoeless, and it was miserably cold outside."

While these two events in isolation don't necessitate a UFO-based explanation, in the context of Anita's life-long experiences, they prove to be very typical of abduction patterns. And the third consciously remembered event from her childhood did bring UFOs into the picture.

"When I was twelve," Anita reported, "my brother shouted one night for me to come look out the window. I did, and just above tree level, about a quarter of a mile from our house, was a large band of beautiful lights moving from west to east. They appeared to be all on one craft. My brother was around ten at the time. He said it was a UFO. There was no sound, and we had our windows open."

Anita and others in her family have continued to have UFO sightings from time to time. Her older brother, for instance, who is a long-distance truck driver, has reported a number of sightings especially in the southwest part of the country, although elsewhere as well.

"He tells of a time he and his wife had stopped on the highway, somewhere up around Nebraska, to get some sleep," Anita related. 'They were awakened by a very bright light shining down on them. They got out to see what it was but couldn't because the light blinded them. They said it didn't make any noise, and that is what frightened them. They jumped back in the truck and headed for Scott's Bluff. Whatever it was followed them all the way."

For Anita, the strange experiences continued into her adulthood. In the 1970s, she lived in Houston for a while, and it was there that a number of events occurred. The most traumatic and terrifying was in 1972, when at age twenty-five, Anita had her second encounter with the man in the red suit. As in the initial meeting, this occurred in the daytime while Anita was conscious, but as in most abductions her state of mind was soon altered as the strangers intruding into her home took control of the situation. She was lying on the living room couch when she became aware of presences there with her, and instantly her mind was clouded. She saw a man who appeared "human looking in every way" bending over her.

"I have never experienced such terror in my life," Anita said. "It was like a dream in that I knew the human was raping my body, but I did not feel anything at all."

The rapist had not come alone. "I could see maybe three others," Anita reported, "standing by the table, but it was like seeing them through frosted glass. I could make out their bodies and the red suits but could not really see any details." She has no idea, therefore, if the other figures were human-looking, like the rapist, or alien. She does remember that after the forced intercourse, the red-suited man spoke to her about something, but the only communication that stayed with her consciously was his statement, I'll be there to help you.

Anita doesn't remember what may have happened after that, but as soon as she was aware that the men were gone, she reacted in a very conscious state of mind. "I was so terrified," she said, "that I grabbed my children and got out of the house immediately."

The trauma of the event had disturbing effects on Anita for a very long time. "It is very embarrassing to say this," she confided, "but after that experience I started wearing a tampon twenty-four hours a day so they couldn't do it again. As if that would stop them."

Not long after the assault, Anita experienced a relocation event, presumably with the congruent missing time. At one moment, she was conscious of being in a certain location, and then at the next moment, without any sense of having lost consciousness, Anita found herself returning to awareness and being in a different place.

"I was on my way to the grocery store," she recalled, "and came to a stop sign. There were no other cars in sight in any direction. I started to turn the corner. The next thing I remember is snapping out of 'mind blank' and being [in a different location] on West Road. I looked in my rearview mirror, and there was a car parked on the road that wasn't there when I had stopped at the sign moments before." Although the location was different, she did not notice a time loss.

In 1977, while still living north of the Houston area, Anita had a UFO sighting that was witnessed by one of her friends. "I was outside late one night talking with a friend," she said, "when I glanced up and saw a large orange globe to the north." Her friend, who was in his car, took off in pursuit of the object and reported on his return that he had eventually lost sight of it near a state highway.

It was also during this period that Anita had two other experiences that are frequently reported by abductees. One of these is the presence of small lighted objects in the home, usually near a wall or the ceiling, that seem to function as some sort of remote probe or monitor.

This first event occurred during the middle of the night, when something woke Anita. "Looking around," she recalled, "I saw a multicolored triangle moving against my bedroom wall." She could see that the object had a device or design in its center, where pink, orange, and other colors were moving around.

Her reaction to this strange sight reflects a maddening yet typical response that abductees report in such situations. Instead of reacting with surprise, curiosity, and even consternation, as would a person whose mind was not being controlled, her response was quite passive.

"I thought, A mandala, how pretty," she said, "then I just went back to sleep." This is apparently a programmed response that other abductees report, and it has proven usually to precede an encounter. If anything else occurred that night with Anita, however, she had no memory, conscious or dreamlike, of further activity.

The other experience was much more physical and less directly tied to alien intrusion. It has been reported, however, to occur following abduction events in a number of other people's situations. Anita developed a rash which seemed to have no mundane cause. It rapidly covered almost her entire body, and the doctor she consulted could not give her an explanation. "It looked like I had snake skin," she described. "It took six weeks to go away."

The pattern of activity in Anita's life thus far had shown occasional intrusions and sightings, but in the late 1980s the activity noticeably began to increase. The timing may not be accidental, as many abductees "woke up" to the fact of their encounters in 1986-88.

Although at the time Anita wasn't aware of the implications, this new phase of her involvement may have been marked by a possible missing-fetus episode in 1985. When she began experiencing some suspicious physical symptoms, she consulted her doctor and was very surprised to discover she was pregnant. Having already raised a family of three children, and considering her age, she decided to terminate it. But the results of the operation proved to be as surprising as the unexpected pregnancy itself.

"I went to have an abortion," she said, "after my Ob-Gyn assured me that I was pregnant. He performed the procedure and said that he could not find any fetal tissue at all. He was as puzzled as I was."

Whether this was one of the by-now familiar procedures of aliens implanting a fetus and then returning to retrieve it from the host mother, Anita has not been able to determine. But since that episode and up until the present, there have been a number of experiences in which the aliens are clearly involved. She has seen them in conscious glimpses and flashbacks, and remembered events in dreams. She has engaged in telepathic communications with some group of entities, at times generated by them and at times by her. And, as usual, there have been peripheral and confirming external evidence in some instances.

Among the types of non-human entities Anita has encountered are the ubiquitous Grays, another group she calls the 'Tans," a blue creature, and an off-white creature whose skin she described as "dry and leathery," in addition to the humanoids in the red suits.

Although she is conscious of a single event involving the Grays, Anita came away from the experience with a definite idea about the creature's attitude toward her. "As far as the Grays go," she said, "I have only one memory of an encounter, and it was not pleasant."

In the sketchy recollection, Anita was inside what appeared to be a typical craft. She was being escorted through a corridor, without any sense of the destination or of any preceding scenario. "There was the feeling of dislike on the part of the one [a Gray] who was leading me down the corridor," she recalled. "I mean, he didn't like me or just didn't like humans. It was as if he had a somewhat distasteful function to perform. By the way," she added, "this dude had a short, squatty-looking blue creature with him. I nicknamed him Grimace."

Like so many others in these situations, with no accurate, authoritative explanations or sources to help them understand the aliens and their activities, Anita has had to invent her own terms and phrases. The nickname above is one such example, as is the name "Tan" which she uses for a particular group of entities. Describing these same entities, other abductees have used any number of different names because no one name has yet been established as the proper one.

Anita has recalled several encounters with the Tan group in the past few years. She said that they are very similar in appearance to the creature in the drawing on Whitley Strieber's COMMUNION, which, according to other abductees, is more like what they would call a Gray. But Anita clearly distinguishes between the gray creature that was leading her down the corridor in one encounter, and the Tans, with whom she is more familiar. "When I first saw their picture on the book cover/' she said, "I immediately thought, Hello, little friend. I know that for some reason I feel protective of them."

Her relationship with the Tans, unlike her one impersonal encounter with the Gray, involves a different degree of intimacy, apparently as part of their deliberate programming of the abductee. "I have never sensed the dislike that I did with the Gray," Anita reported. "[The Tans] seem to be very concerned with making us feel love for them."

But Anita has proven to be quite aware of this psychological manipulation on the aliens' part and has thus been able to see through some of their intentions or motivations.

"I recall one [Tan] looking into my eyes," she described from an encounter, "and making me feel extreme love from him. I put my hands on his face and said, Too bad it isn't real, meaning the feeling of love that he was projecting into my soul."

Indeed, in spite of the aliens' intentions to convey such a caring relationship, Anita has continued to suffer much of the same anxiety that other abductees report. "When I said I felt protective towards the little critters," she cautioned, "please believe that it is [a feeling] induced by them. The rest of the time, all I feel is apprehension during the day and dread of going to bed at night."

This anxiety very often causes disruptions of the abductee's sleep patterns, usually occurring nightly at approximately the same time, as happens with Anita. "I do still get scared sometimes," she confessed, "and I still wake up at 3:00 to 3:34 a.m. and huddle under the covers frightened and lie there with my eyes glued to the bedroom door."

This stress response, according to mental health professionals who have studies such situations, shows up in cases where an actual traumatic event has occurred. It may be that abductees continue to wake up at a certain time each night because a traumatic event had occurred previously at that time, as if a preventative warning, a wake-up-and-protect-yourself alarm, is sounding subconsciously.

The ongoing feelings of fear and intrusion are fostered not only by the consciously recalled encounters but also by situations in which external evidence points to unremembered events. For instance, without any conscious memories of a disturbance or problem associated with the area, Anita has a phobia about driving alone along a certain stretch of US Highway 287. There is, however, a possible connection with her alien involvement.

"This [stretch of highway] is where my older brother called us to look out the window one night," she said, "to see a UFO going over at treetop level." And although she remembered nothing further about that night, her phobia about the area is suspicious.

So are the various marks and injuries she has discovered on her body. "Lots of mornings," Anita said, "I have gotten up feeling like someone beat me up in my sleep." This is another common abductee report, waking up with sore, damaged-feeling muscles and joints. "I have waked up with bruises on my arms, shoulders, and legs," she continued, "with no idea where they came from. I have found scratches that I could not remember having gotten the day before."

The evidence for vigorous physical activity during the night, although unremembered, comes from more than just Anita's sore or scarred body, however. In one incident, she woke up in the morning and felt an unfamiliar pain in her right hand. ″\ sat up in bed," she explained, "and found that sometime during the night my ring had been squashed on my finger." She managed with effort to remove the ring, but neither her husband nor a jeweler could completely restore its original shape.

On another occasion, Anita got out of bed one morning and found the crucifix from her necklace lying on the floor. "It had been on my neck the night before," she said, "and the chain was still on [me]. But the only way to remove the crucifix is to remove the necklace and take it off the chain."

She has also awakened several mornings to discover that something had happened to her clothing, a report frequently echoed by other abductees. In one instance, she woke up with her nightie on backward, although she was certain she had not taken it off, turned it around, and put it back on. And on a different occasion she found that the nightie was not only backward but had also been turned inside-out. In the night during one of these events, she had an altered-state experience in which she recalled a group of Tan aliens observing her as she was "free-falling," an event which did not feel unduly upsetting for some reason.

Anita had quite a severe reaction to another similar event, however, venting much more emotion than the situation seemed to call for. It was in the winter, during the Christmas holidays one night, and she had worn socks to bed for extra warmth. When she woke up the next day and found that one of her socks was missing, Anita became extremely upset and angry at her family. She said she was "very belligerent" toward them, even accused them of playing a practical joke on her, one which didn't strike her as humorous.

Anita was also physically upset that morning, suffering from a violent headache and nausea which caused her to vomit, yet there was no illness to account for the symptoms. Still, she might not have been overly concerned about the vanished sock and her physical problems, if her young granddaughter hadn't made a disturbing comment.

The seven-year-old child told her grandmother that some "mean men" had come in and taken her away during the night. When Anita asked her to describe the "mean men," the little girl called them "the mushroom men."

"What are the mushroom men?" Anita asked, and her granddaughter then found the book MISSING TIME by Budd Hopkins and pointed to the drawing on the cover.

Anita asked the girl to make a drawing of her own. It showed a long-necked humanoid being with a head shaped like an inverted light bulb. The eyes were black, large, and slanted, the nose had two nostril holes, the mouth was a straight thin line, and the chin was more rounded than in the drawing on the cover of MISSING TIME. The girl said the creatures were about a foot tall, gray-skinned and had four fingers rather than five-a detail not apparent in the cover picture. There were quite a few of these entities present, she said.

Anita remembered nothing strange that night herself, but the physical symptoms, the missing sock, and her granddaughter's story were indicative enough of an intrusive incident to be of great concern. She not only wanted to know what had gone on during the night, but she wanted to know more in general about these beings who had been a part of her life for so long, so she decided to try meditating and sending out messages to the aliens.

"I would ask a question telepathically," Anita explained, "and then lie down on the sofa to drift into twilight sleep, which is really just a deep state of relaxation. I was not asleep or awake. Then the answers to my questions would come."

She remembers, for instance, asking, "Why are you taking human women?"

To insure quality breeding, the answer came back.

"What about when a woman is menstruating?" she inquired, thinking about how she had used a tampon to try to fend off any further rapes in the past.

We know the difference, she was told.

"When are you going to show yourselves?" she questioned further, but the reply was less than specific.

The time is almost right, was all she received.

Anita has used this meditative method for communication several other times. "When I decide to telepath to them," she commented, "I spend a good part of the time berating them for not being honest with the human race. They've always been here. If they had shown themselves all along, no one would fear them. It's the unknown that causes fear. Now they've made it impossible just to be accepted. I know who I'm yelling at," she added, "but I have no idea who, which group, is sending back answers."

And some of those answers have been impossible to understand. In addition to the communications which made some sort of sense-it only works when the year arrives and transmogrify, for example-Anita has also gotten messages containing unknown words and meaningless phrases, including one puzzling reference to star -planet fill.

Some of these messages look like nonsense, but one of the other odd communications, IRU URI, is very similar to a message given to Lisa, in which she was told by the aliens, referring to some ape-type creatures, They are you and you are them. If the capital letters in Anita's communication are written out as words, it would read, "I are you, you are I." And the import of the phrases is clearly similar. Even the grammar is incorrect in both cases.

As with most abductees, Anita cannot explain even to herself just what the aliens are doing with her. And she certainly doesn't accept all the communications and encounters as objectively real.

"I suspect that a lot of these encounters are alien-induced dreams," she commented, "for the purpose of making you feel comfortable with them. As for the controlled free-falling, I think they were creating an enjoyable flying experience for me because I have a horror of flying and it may be necessary in the future to 'fly' with them when the planet tilts in order to save my life."

Her reference to the planet tilting comes from a scenario she has been shown involving future global catastrophe. Such scenarios are so common among abductees that this type of information may well be part of the widespread programming included in the alien agenda, designed to serve some purpose which is not yet clear. And most of the abductees who are told about a coming destruction also report, as does Anita, feeling that they will have a job or task to perform in conjunction with this catastrophe.

"It is like I have always known that these things fUFOs, aliens, and the predicted destruction] are coming," Anita told me, "and that I must try to convince people, and also learn things that would help not only with my own survival afterwards but I must also be able to help other survivors. For instance, I was told as a child, The children must be protected."

Anita, then, admits that at least part of the alien programming has had an effect on her, but she doesn't let herself accept everything they tell her or show her.

"I'm always amazed when I get any information from them at all," she said. "I really don't know if someone who would abduct a person could be trusted to give a truthful answer to any question."

She is aware of their possible deceptions, just as she realizes that the aliens are capable of creating unreal scenarios for humans during encounters. This awareness has served Anita well, for it has allowed her to push the alien activity away from her a little, as it were, in order to analyze and assess the events to which she has been subjected. And it also has kept her from jumping to conclusions about some of the things she has remembered.

One recent possible event, for instance, Anita describes as a regular dream, in spite of the presence of UFOs in the scenario.

"I dreamed last night that I was standing in my back yard and looking up into the night sky," she told me. "1 saw a rectangular UFO sitting poised about five hundred feet above the house. It had rockets on the side and started firing at a line of trees fairly close to the house. I ran inside, and my doorbell rang."

She said the next segment of the dream involved a scene in which she and I were together, discussing the book project, but after that a very different episode occurred.

"Next," she said, "I was visited by some military sorts who were trying to get me to tell them about the UFOs, and I refused. I kept saying, 'I know nothing, I know nothing'."

Anita dismissed this scenario as a mundane dream, which it may well have been, probably in part because of my presence in one of the segments. What she didn't know, however, was that I in fact had seen a rectangular UFO at very close range in the winter of 1992, so my own curiosity was aroused by her description. Even more interesting was the fact that several other people in this book project-Lisa, Angie, and a member of my family-have reported very similar situations to the military interrogation. And in these other cases, there was reason to believe they were not normal dreams at all.

For Anita, however, the evidence of the dream's reality was not very strong, which is indicative of her tendency not to overreact to possible or actual alien encounters. As a result, she has managed to keep a good sense of mental balance, neither overly exalting the creatures in her mind, making gods of them, nor being overwhelmed by terror as if they were demons. "Not all of the aliens are bad," she believes, which is a reasonable point of view given the cumulative experiences she has had.

Still, when they physically intrude into her normal reality, Anita is not happy about it, as her description of two typical episodes show.

"When I went to bed," she said, "I started feeling apprehensive. I couldn't go to sleep. It got worse as the hours passed. Finally, I turned on the bedside lamp to read. I had not been reading long when I saw a flash of light in the den. I started thinking, Oh, geez, no. I told myself that maybe it was the light in one of my aquariums and tried to read some more.

"I started hearing a clicking noise," she continued, "and tried to figure out what it was. Then I saw, in my peripheral vision, a flash of brown go past my door toward the bathroom." The "flash of brown" was recognizable to Anita, and she realized that at least one of the aliens was in the house. She fought to stay alert, hoping to fend off another abduction, but she couldn't do it.

"Finally," she concluded, "in sheer fatigue I gave up and fell asleep. They really are patient little critters." If anything occurred after that, Anita couldn't recall it. But she awoke with a possible sign that she had indeed been paid a visit. "On Saturday morning," she said, "my knees and legs were in terrible pain. I have been checked for arthritis and don't have it."

Four months later, in December 1993, a similar incident occurred, as fleeting and consciously elusive as the first one. "I woke up around 3:30 a.m.," she told me, "and turned on the television set in the bedroom. This is usually the time I wake up and scan the bedroom for whatever. I turned on Channel Four because they are on all night. I wanted to catch a weather report because we were expecting sleet. Everything was normal until an insurance commercial came on. I was lying on my side and just happened to glance up at the TV.

"At that moment, a black object moved in front of the screen, left to right, and then moved back off, right to left. It had a face, after a fashion, but appeared to be one-dimensional. It was almost as though you could stick your hand through it, but you could not see the TV screen through the blackness. It must have had intelligence, because as soon as I thought, What the hell is that? it moved back off the screen. I was fighting to stay awake, as if it wouldn't bother me if I were awake. Shortly thereafter, I felt the old familiar 'zap' through my body, and I was out of it.

"Since that time I have had a sore spot on my spine eight to twelve inches up from my coccyx. I've had everyone check my spine, and they tell me there isn't even a red spot there. However, it [remained] very sore for the past three weeks."

A conscious sight of a strange creature, an unexplained physical effect, and nothing in her memory to connect the two: such events have punctuated her life as they have countless others with alien contact. The alien abductions are something she lives with very quietly, rarely discussing them with others, coping with her fears and uncertainties as best she can on her own. The experiences have changed her views, her habits, and her desires and fears. The whole texture of her life is interwoven with the pattern of an unknown agenda.

6. Beth

"When I was seven or eight years old," Beth related, "my father gave us permission, my sister and me, to go outside and play with the other children, who were playing hide-and-seek. It was close to six in the evening. I remember that I went to hide between some bushes, and then I heard a sound, somebody else. And as I turned, I saw what I thought at that moment was one of the other kids.

"The next thing I know," she continued, "it was dark, and I was very surprised. When I got home, my father was very mad at me and my mother was very upset. My father told me that they had been calling me and looking for me for hours. But I couldn't understand it," she said. "The place where I was hiding was less than a hundred feet from the front of the house. I was hiding there, and it was daylight, and then the next thing I know it was dark-and I was scared.

"Recently I had another memory about that," she added. "That kid I thought was there, he was an alien, one of the Grays. He took me to a ship, but I don't remember what happened after that."

As I listened to Beth's account of her childhood missing-time episode, I was reminded of a similar event in my husband's past. At age twelve, not much older than Beth had been, Casey and his best friend were playing in a field one day, when several strange children approached them and asked if they wanted to "come see the UFO" that had landed on the other side of the hill. Casey's next conscious memory was of coming back home and complaining to his mother that his nose was very sore and he had a headache.

As did Beth, Casey had a daytime missing-time episode initiated after contact with unknown "children." Beth has never explored this memory hypnotically, but when Casey used regressive hypnosis to delve into the missing time, he retrieved memories of an onboard abduction involving a nasal implant.

This was not the only similarity between Beth's experiences and Casey's. A divorced mother with grown children, Beth had first contacted us, in fact, because another of her encounter memories, involving apparently military personnel, contained very striking and disturbing parallels to an incident described in INTO THE FRINGE.

A mutual acquaintance helped arrange a phone conversation for us, and we got acquainted. Beth was born in 1942 in Puerto Rico and has lived there most of her life, although her heritage also includes ancestors from Spain and Vermont. Beth was a teacher before starting her family, but in recent years she had vision problems which have kept her from working. Currently, she divides her time between Puerto Rico and Florida.

Beth and I discussed her memories of the military encounter at length. But I was also interested to hear about other her other experiences, especially since she lived in Puerto Rico. A great deal of UFO and alien activity has been reported in the past several years, much of it in the area where Beth lived but all over the island as well. In fact, of all the U. S. territory, there may well have been more recent UFO activity in Puerto Rico than anywhere else.

To judge from Beth's account, it has probably been going on for quite a while. In addition to the early missing-time event, she has conscious memories of many other strange experiences from childhood, well back into the 1950s. Her first UFO sighting, for example, occurred only a year or two after the hide-and-seek episode. Beth was walking to the store in the late afternoon, when she looked up and saw a "huge ball of fire" tearing downward through the sky. It disappeared behind a nearby mountain, and Beth assumed that she'd just witnessed a plane crash, although she heard no sound.

She screamed and ran back across the road into the house where excitedly she told her father what she had seen. Since he worked for the U. S. Navy at that time, her father told her he would inquire around the military base and find out what exactly had happened. But a few days later, when Beth brought up the subject again, her father told her that she must never tell anyone about what she had seen or even mention it again. No explanation was given, only a warning, and that made Beth believe some sort of mystery must have been involved.

She was used to mysterious things, even at that young age. "Even before that," she said, "as far back as I can remember, I was aware-and so was my family-that strange things were happening to me, most of them at night. It made me afraid to go to sleep, afraid that someone was going to come for me."

Unexplained noises often broke the silence of the night. Once, for example, Beth was startled awake by a "buzz or whooshing sound" in the room where she was sleeping alone. Frightened, she ran into her sister's room. "They're looking for me," was all she remembered saying, because at that moment her sister suddenly fell into a deep sleep and Beth's body became paralyzed. Then she, too, lost consciousness.

Another anomalous event took place when she ten years old. Beth had been outside for a while and had stopped to eat a piece of fruit. She consciously remembered standing still, taking a bite, and then looking down at a large, bleeding gash in her leg. "I didn't know what to think," Beth said. "How could my leg be cut and bleeding? I had not even moved from that spot." Heedless of the time as children often are, she had no idea if any was missing.

She also didn't know what to think of the shadowy figures that sometimes appeared in the house, although she tended to believe they might be ghosts. On one occasion, though, the figure seemed very real. Beth woke up during the night and found a humanoid figure sitting on her bed. He was wearing a tight white outfit, and he proceeded to talk to her. She couldn't remember, however, any of the things he said, and she couldn't remember his face. Beth told her mother about some of these strange occurrences, and her mother replied that she had sometimes heard Beth in her room at night, apparently talking to someone. But when she tried to get up and check on the girl, her mother said, she was paralyzed.

A little later, at age fourteen, Beth had a second UFO sighting. As she sat studying on the stairs by a window, she glanced out and saw an object through the trees. It stopped for a moment and hovered before shooting off vertically out of sight. Beth learned later that one of their neighbors had also spotted the object.

Even when she moved away from that house, staying for a while after her father's death in a boardinghouse, the unexplained occurrences followed her. One of her roommates there woke her up once, screaming, saying that she'd just seen a weird creature standing beside Beth's bed. The being apparently noticed the roommate looking at it, because it started moving toward her, and that was when she screamed. Her description of the creature matches today's well-known Gray entity.

The odd events seemed to subside as Beth grew to adulthood. She went to college and then began working as a teacher. Nothing notable happened until she was married and pregnant with her second child.

"I remember that I was so afraid that I wasn't pregnant," Beth said, "that it was a tumor, because it [the fetus] was not moving. I told my doctor frequently that it couldn't be a child, that he was mistaken, but it was a big joke to him.

"When I was almost six months into the pregnancy, I was very worried because the baby wasn't moving. One night I remember that I suddenly felt so sleepy that I got in bed, and I had a dream. I saw myself on a doctor's table. A strange doctor put a needle into my navel. When he did this, I felt something like an electric shock, and the baby started moving. I also felt that something was put up my nose. And then I woke up," she concluded. "And when I awoke, I was having a very heavy nosebleed and the baby was moving."

Beth carried the baby to term and it was born healthy. But a subsequent pregnancy a few years later didn't survive. Beth apparently miscarried one night and isn't sure if she saw any fetal tissue. This occurred, it should be noted, on a night when one of the neighbors reported seeing an unexplained light over Beth's home.

Whatever she may have thought about these numerous, often nebulous events through the years, whoever she might have thought was behind them, in the summer of 1978 an event occurred that left no doubt of its source. On the night of July 17, Beth went to bed around 9 p.m., where she read for an hour and then turned off the bedside lamp planning to go to sleep. In the dark, a light caught her attention through the window, where she saw a glowing object. Concerned, Beth woke up her husband and had him check the area. He came back to bed having found nothing unusual, and they turned out the lamp again to sleep. But the light returned to the yard and shone in through the window. Beth looked up at the light, and the next moment she was aware of being somewhere very different. She was in an unfamiliar round room, and she wasn't alone.

Her husband lay near her, apparently asleep, as was her youngest child nestled in her lap. In a panic, she suddenly thought, Where are my other children? A voice from an unseen source then replied, Don't be afraid, they are here.

Three other people whom Beth didn't know were also unconscious in the room. She saw a young man and woman, probably in their twenties, and an older man who looked to Beth like an "ex-military" sort.

The whole situation was so unexpected that Beth was too bewildered to react logically, perhaps. Or perhaps, as in other reports, her responses were "directed" for some purpose. At any rate, when she noticed the older man coming to consciousness just as she was regaining her own awareness, Beth inexplicably asked, "What time is it?"

Given the total strangeness of their situation, such a question appears ludicrous, but instead of reacting with surprise or panic, the man simply checked his watch and replied, 'Ten after twelve."

Almost two hours had passed since she saw the light for the second time, although to her it seemed as if it had only been a few moments. Looking around, she saw strange, computer-like equipment in the room. And then she noticed some other beings, clearly not human, there with her. The two entities were gray and very skinny, dressed in metallic silver suits.

Beth saw that her husband was starting to come around then. But her attention was caught by a startling change in the metal wall in front of her, as it seemed to transform into glass, like a window. Looking out, she recognized the location as a rural area near some property she owned.

A door opened just then, and a very tall man walked in. He was pale, with dark, short hair that formed a widow's peak in the center of his forehead. His eyes were larger than usual, and his jaw was very square. The man wore the same tight silver outfit as the Grays, but he also had on gloves and a wide belt. In his hands was a small orb that looked to be made of glass, within which many lights were brightly blinking. As the tall man stared at Beth and her family, she got the impression that he was perhaps a scientist, and she felt he was the one "in command."

His gaze made her feel like a specimen or a "guinea Pig-"

"My husband was starting to wake up," Beth said,

"and this man put him back to sleep, by holding the glass ball over his head. He did it to me, too, and then I was paralyzed."

Beth was next aware of being back in her bed, with a terrible headache, and then she fell quickly to sleep. Upon waking, she discovered that the night's events had left her in a bad physical state. Besides the pounding headache, she also suffered aches throughout her body, especially in her back, and she was dizzy. Beth was also very nauseated, vomiting repeatedly, as well as plagued with diarrhea. She had difficulty seeing because her eyes were badly swollen and irritated, a condition that bothered her for a long time after this, so much so that she had to wear sunglasses.

A terrible rash persisted for two months, and her hair began to fall out in excessive quantities. Most disturbing of all, however, were the cataracts that began forming in her eyes. Nine months after the abduction, Beth had to undergo cataract-removal surgery, and it was during preparatory exams that the doctor found physical scarring from what he insisted was previous eye surgery. But Beth had never had an operation, at least not by human hands.

Clearly there had been some thing or some activity in that strange environment that caused her numerous afflictions, but Beth could only recall the brief scenario in the round room. She wasn't sure about the tall, dark-haired man, but she was certain that the gray beings were not human.

Not long after this, Beth once again saw one of the strange creatures. She had been asleep, but the sound of someone calling her name woke her up. She got up and looked out the window, where one of the little beings was looking back at her. Beth remembered that he was holding a metal stick of some sort, but the next instant she found herself back in bed, and the little creature was nowhere to be seen.

UFOs also continued to appear. On Father's Day in 1980, the entire family witnessed one of these events. Out in the yard, two of the children saw it first and called to the others to come look. They arrived in time to see a cloudy-looking object hovering silently about ten feet from the ground with what seemed to be "bubbles" inside, before it disappeared.

Less than a year later, Beth once again had a bedroom visitation by unknown beings. As she prepared to go to bed, she began to feel as if someone were watching her. Turning around, she saw a tall, slender man standing by her bed, and she became very frightened. Beth tried to scream, but no sound came out, so she began to pray silently for help. And then she found that she was moving, going forward toward the man's outstretched hand. Unable to stop, she floated after him toward the window and knew she was about to be taken through it. This panicked her even more, and she feared she would be "ground up like hamburger" by the process.

The actual moment of passing through the window, however, left no impression on her when it happened, and she was next aware of being in a dark place, lying down, surrounded by "a feeling of great speed." Blackness overtook her, and the next apparent moment she was back in bed in the guest room, still unable to move. She could scream, however, which she did, bringing her husband running. But the strange man, of course, had disappeared.

Beth wasn't the only one in her family to witness the alien beings. In 1986, she and her son saw a small white entity. Beth was in bed when she was surprised to hear the sound of water running somewhere. As she got up to check for the source, her son called for her to come outside with him.

"Mommy, look there!" he shouted, and Beth looked, but without her glasses all she could see was an indistinct white object out in the yard. Her son, however, had better vision, and he described seeing a small being by the garage, holding a garden hose through which water was running. As the son watched, he told her, the little being stopped and "floated away."

Later, in 1987, Beth's daughter said that three of the Grays had come during the night and taken her out to an area near the house, into a UFO. She said they talked together in a friendly manner and that one of the aliens even laughed. She also reported the presence of a strange man, who told her he was going to "fix" her heart as he inserted a large needle into her chest. Beth said this occurred at a time when her daughter was awaiting heart surgery.

It was also at this time that Beth recalled having a brief but vivid dream that greatly disturbed her. In this dream, she was on a table, location unknown, with three men standing around her. The terrifying part of the scenario was the single sentence she heard spoken by one of the men: "She is expendable, and we can always use a terminator."

The experience was so unlike the previous encounters she had remembered that Beth insisted it was just a dream, but the idea and the threat of a "terminator," whatever it might be, haunted her. So did the identity of the men.

Another situation arose during this time that caused her a great deal of concern, even though it seemed to have nothing to do with UFOs or aliens. Several different mornings, when Beth woke up and went into the kitchen for coffee, she found the water jug, normally kept in the refrigerator, and four glasses containing water sitting out on the counter.

The first time this occurred, Beth was annoyed by the inconsiderate act, and she questioned her son and daughter about it. Both of them denied leaving out the water jug or even being in the kitchen after bedtime. The next time she found the dirty glasses and the jug, Beth became angry and found it hard to believe her children's protestations of innocence in the matter.

What were they doing, she wondered, getting up in the middle of the night and inviting in people, visiting with them in secret? Why was it done in secret? Why were they denying doing it? The questions bothered her greatly, yet the children were adamant that they had nothing to do with the intermittent discoveries of the jug and glasses left on the counter by undiscovered persons during the night.

Finally Beth came to believe them, but that made her even more afraid, for it pointed to a scenario of four strangers with free access to her home and family. Yet no one in the family saw any strangers there, and none of the household goods had been stolen. But the scenario of strangers breaking in merely for a sip of water just didn't make any sense. And Beth couldn't believe the visitors were aliens, not if all they seemed to do was pour themselves a drink, leave a mess on the kitchen counter, and then disappear.

Beth worried about this mysterious situation for a long time, even after the visits stopped. And she never caught anyone in the act of entertaining guests or getting out the water jug, which would have explained the whole affair. Much later, however, Beth did have a flashback memory concerning this situation. In a very upsetting scenario, she saw herself opening the door and letting a group of people into the house. She even saw herself pouring the water. Beth didn't recognize any of the people, and the flashback memory didn't show her why she let them in or what they did there after she poured their drinks. She didn't know if the flashback reflected a real event or if it came from her imagination. It certainly felt real, but it seemed so unlikely that Beth just couldn't accept it.

In September 1987, however, an indisputably real event occurred. Another UFO appeared and was witnessed by three members of the family.

"Mommy, there's a UFO up there!" Beth heard her daughter shout on night around 11 p.m. She got up and looked out to see a "huge, beautiful UFO" about half a mile from the house. Her son also saw it briefly.

This sighting seemed no different than previous ones, but it was followed the next day by the onset of activity that would continue for years: overflights of unidentified helicopters. On that first day, an AW AC also flew over, in addition to the black copters, and the craft operated at such low altitudes that sometimes the windows and the entire house were shaken by their force. They returned a week later, and this time Beth even witnessed a craft that looked like a helicopter but flew noiselessly.

She continued to have frightening nocturnal experiences, usually involving fragmented scenarios and time loss. Once after midnight, for example, Beth went through an event of which she only consciously retained three "snapshot-type" memories. The first part began when she was still quite conscious, as she looked out the window at some red and white lights she'd just noticed in the yard. The second scene is of her out in the yard, watching a craft fly away and crying, "Don't leave me." This was followed instantly by her being conscious again and aware that she was back in her bed.

During these years of fairly active alien involvement in her life, Beth had a number of dreams relating to UFOs, the Grays, and other sorts of entities. Some people may think that it is foolish to look for information in dreams, but a close familiarity with the multi-phenomenal context of the abduction situation shows that this is not so.

In abduction research it is generally acknowledged that many times the memories of an alien encounter, suppressed at the time of the event, will surface in any number of ways. It may happen as a sudden flashback during regular consciousness, or it may emerge during the dream state. It also may be that what the person recalled as a dream was not a memory of some past event but instead reflected an event of that particular night, so lightly suppressed that it remained in the consciousness as an altered-state awareness.

At any rate, it is wise to pay attention to the dreams of a person with current alien activity. Certain details, often identical, turn up from case to case that differ from the typical archetypal entities and situations found in normal dreams.

This was certainly true for Beth's dreams. In one, for example, she was with an unfamiliar alien being in an environment where the sky was pink, and she recalled seeing an animal similar to a cow. All of these details have been reported by other abductees, sometimes in dreams and sometimes in actual experiences. So has the scenario she recalled from another dream: being given a liquid to drink by the Grays. In a different dream, Beth was made to immerse in "a heavy liquid" and was surprised to find that she could breathe in it. This scenario is so familiar now that it is often included in the list of most frequently reported abduction events.

Beth was concerned and curious about these dreams, as she was about the experiences she recalled consciously. So when the opportunity arose for her to work with a well-known UFO investigator and to undergo regressive hypnosis, Beth decided to do it.

In early 1988 she underwent four separate sessions of hypnosis, all focusing on a single event: the encounter in 1978 when she remembered being in a circular room with her husband, one child, and three strangers. The following account is a composite of the information from those sessions, comprising all the bits and pieces that emerged during the regressions.

Beth recalled that when the light shone in through the window that night, she saw that several aliens were in the room. She was terrified, but one of them calmed her and seemed to be in charge as they led her outside to a craft. The next part of her memory is patchy, for she was in a small room in which the atmosphere seemed "foggy," and she couldn't see much more than several strange instruments on a table. One of them looked somewhat like a hair dryer.

Next, two of the aliens took her down a curved hall through a door, into a different area. It looked to Beth like "a surgery room," and she became afraid they were going to kill her there. She cried out in fear when they placed her on a "floating" table. Overhead she saw a screen upon which her insides were displayed. A third alien in this room engaged in some communication with the two escorts. Beth sensed that he seemed more compassionate than the others. This third entity, holding a black box, then moved to a position behind Beth. She could not see what he did, but she felt as if her head was being "opened" and her brain removed, all without any sensation of pain.

After she felt as if she were "all put back together again," a cold liquid was poured over her head. When this procedure was finished, the aliens stood in front of her, and Beth realized that mentally she was different. Her thoughts and reactions to everything were changed, it seemed, and she was filled with new ideas about God and the unity of all life within that supreme source.

This very spiritual moment was followed by a quite physical exam, as the aliens took samples from her skin and hair. A man with a widow's-peak hairline, similar to the one she'd seen before, entered and made a full examination of her body, including a gynecological procedure.

This was the most upsetting part of the experience for Beth, and she was especially frightened when he produced two long, thin needles and explained that he had to make some "corrections" involving her kidney and ovary. He inserted the needles in the areas of those organs, and Beth felt a warm vibration. The man said this "alignment" was necessary to put her glands in better condition for what they wanted her to do, "in service to humanity." He talked at length about changing the human "vibration."

Next, a young woman, similar in looks to the man, came into the room and proceeded to clean Beth's body with a sponge and liquid. She escorted Beth back to the first room, where the man continued to explain about certain things. For one, he told her that she and other humans were "chosen" to carry out "jobs" in the future. He also described a coming disaster in the world, and he explained to her about working "as a spiritual being" for the good of humanity. The alien said that his group was here to study, collect genetic material, and avert a destructive process which humans had started.

She then recalled nothing more than being back in the round room with her husband. Beth was very shaken by the recovered memories, and she said she had no idea why she was "chosen," as they had told her.

After the regressions, Beth's subconscious became more accessible, because she started having conscious flashbacks of previously unremembered events. In the summer of 1988, while chatting with a friend, Beth suddenly experienced one of these flashbacks. It began with her in a small flying disc, entering a well-lit underground city. The craft flew on through a tunnel passage into an enormous cavern that contained several buildings. Beth also saw some UFOs parked in various locations and aliens working side by side with human military personnel.

The next scenario is of Beth flying somehow through a body of water, into a tunnel, and then emerging from a lake. She also remembered trying to run away, but a big man grabbed her and said, "We brought you here because we want you to see this" as a huge craft rose out of the water. Beth then got back into the little craft and flew up to the huge one. The entire memory was strange and disturbing, and Beth had no idea when such an event might have occurred.

Shortly after the regressions, in August 1988, Beth received a mysterious phone call from a voice that sounded as if it were coming from a vacuum. An unknown man said, "Elizabeth."

"Yes," Beth replied. "Who are you?"

"We know about your experience," the voice said, "and we know about all the problems and doubts you have, but we can give you proof."

"Who are you?" Beth persisted. "Why are you telling me this?"

"Don't be afraid," the strange voice continued. "We can give you proof. We want to talk to you, so next Thursday go to the botanical garden. Be there at ten. We know you. Don't worry about looking for us. Don't tell anybody, and go there alone."

Everything about the call was suspicious-the use of a disguised voice, the disturbing references to Beth's "experiences," the insistence that she come by herself to the meeting-and she felt the call implied a threat. She told the investigator with whom she was working, but she didn't want to go to the garden. Later, however, Beth changed her mind, so she picked up the investigator and went on to the appointed place. Although neither of them saw any suspicious humans or any alien presences, Beth said a communication about love, faith, friendship, and service was put into her mind there in the garden.

On the drive back home, Beth felt dizzy and ill. Her body didn't seem to "work right," and her sense of time was very disoriented. According to the clock, she even gained time on the return trip, and for a while thereafter, day and night seemed to come and go very quickly. Even more disconcerting was the clear sensation of her hand passing through solid objects as she reached for them. But the bizarre perceptions eventually passed, and there were no further phone calls.

In 1990, two years after the flashback of the underground facility with humans and aliens working together, more of Beth's memories of this event surface in a dream. She saw herself stepping out of an aircraft with two "military men." They were in a desert-like area, reminiscent of the American southwest, with buildings that "matched" the desert environment. A dark, grassy pool of water was near a large metal building that looked like a warehouse inside. An old-fashioned wooden door opened to reveal a very high-tech metal door, through which Beth was taken into a large room. There she saw four big tables and a number of people. Some of them looked to be military, some were clad like scientists, and others appeared to be "regular" people. A uniformed, red-headed man, one of the two who had brought her to the facility, seemed to be "in charge" of her.

Two more men entered the room, wearing outfits Beth described as similar to astronaut's gear. They talked with Beth and the other people, although she didn't remember what was said, and then someone shouted and the group started running toward the back of the large room. The red-haired man grabbed her, and then the flashback ended, but the next morning Beth found bruises in the exact spot where the man had gripped her arm.

The memory felt real, but she had no idea when such a fantastic event might have occurred. Of course, mysterious things had been happening all along and continued to occur-sightings of UFOs and strange lights, episodes of unexplained time gaps, occasional appearances of patterned bruises and punctures on her body-and for most of these events Beth had no explanation or memory, either. It was clear that her conscious recollections about these things were merely the tip of the iceberg, and whatever lay beneath the surface had been deeply suppressed.

Beth might have been able to tell herself that all these events weren't real, that she had imagined them, until an event occurred which proved that the weirdness wasn't only in her mind. In 1992 during a visit to Miami, she and a friend were driving from his house to her daughter's home one night, a trip of thirty to forty-five minutes on the turnpike. They started out at 9:50 p.m. and things proceeded normally at first. But then they both noticed that the others cars, in both directions, had disappeared from view. Beth saw a large, dark, shadowy form looming up ahead of them, which she thought might be a bridge. She reasoned that the bridge's great shadow had somehow blocked their view of the other traffic.

At the very next instant, it seemed, she and her friend felt the car "set back down" on the turnpike.

The driver lost control of the wheel, fighting to steer the car out of danger, and Beth found herself inexplicably unlocking the seat belt, staring out the window, and shouting, "Where are they? Where are they?"

"How do you feel?" her friend asked.

"Confused," she told him. "My hair is standing up, like static electricity, and there's a bad pressure on my neck and my forehead."

Her friend said he was having the same symptoms, too, and that he didn't know what had just happened. Beth noticed the shadowy shape was gone and the traffic was thick all around them. "The bridge must have blocked our view," she told her friend, explaining about the shadowy form.

But her friend, who drove that turnpike regularly, told her there was no bridge at that location. They continued on the drive, bewildered. When they reached her daughter's home, all the lights were out and the place was silent. Beth looked at her watch and was shocked to see that it read 11:55. She knew they should have arrived no later than 10:45, which meant that over an hour was missing. And this time, she hadn't been alone. The mystery was just as great as ever, though, for neither of them remembered anything other than being in the car.

The pattern was always the same: evidence of an odd event, a fragment of a puzzling scenario, and a blank in the place where the details should have been. Every missing hour was a grievous loss to Beth, a dark emptiness in her life. She had seen aliens, and she had seen humans, some of them military, but she had no clue as to what any of them were really doing. The agenda behind these events has remained unknown, and Beth has continued to struggle with her questions and her fears, because the events continue to occur.

In January 1993, for instance, when she was staying in a Miami apartment with her son and daughter, Beth experienced another missing-time episode, and this time she discovered artifactual evidence afterward. The event was preceded by a number of odd but minor occurrences involving each member of the family.

On Wednesday, January 27, they had all gone to bed by midnight. Beth awoke at 4:39 a.m. and went to the bathroom. On her way back to bed, she suddenly felt a compulsion or instruction to go into the kitchen and pull up the window. She became afraid and fought against the urge, but still she walked to the window and opened it without looking out, before returning to her bed.

As she lay down, Beth glanced at the window and thought, I don't want to see. She began to turn over to face the other direction, and at that moment she heard something that sounded like a train, followed by the sound of an electronic door closing. Rolling on over, she glanced at the window again-and saw that it was daylight outside. The bedside clock read 6:45. Two hours had disappeared in the time it took her, consciously, to turn over in the bed.

The realization startled her, and Beth got up in great agitation. She went to the kitchen to make coffee and tried to figure out what had happened, but without success. Then she went to take a shower, and that was when she noticed that both of her knees were coated with a chalky white substance, as if she'd been kneeling in the unknown powder. But she couldn't imagine where she might have been, for the substance was unlike anything in her house.

In spite of her agitation, the morning's activities had to go on, so Beth woke up her children to get ready for work. Before he left, her son remarked that something might have happened to him during the night because he'd discovered a puncture on his forearm that he couldn't explain. When they returned in the evening, Beth told them about the events of the previous night: the strange sounds, the missing time, the white substance, and the apparent fact that she must have been out of the house temporarily. But her son, who'd slept at the foot of Beth's bed in a sleeping bag, said he didn't think that was possible.

"She was sitting in bed last night," he told his sister. "She acted afraid, talking to someone. I saw a figure in the doorway," he added, but at the time, he said, he couldn't get up and apparently fell back asleep. Everything about the event remained a mystery.

In this final account from Beth's ongoing experiences, an event occurred which had identical details to a bizarre report 1 had learned about from a close relative. Beth's parallel story confirmed that it wasn't the imaginings of a single mind. Either the aliens were actually doing these things, activities that were not familiar from other abduction accounts, or they were creating the same virtual-reality scenario for at least two unrelated abductees.

Beth was in Miami when the experience occurred, staying with a friend and sleeping on his couch. One night, she awoke and watched in amazement as "a rectangle of light, like a very thin page of paper" came in through the window. She could see an area in the center where white, pink, and purple lights were moving about.

The rectangle of light stopped in mid-air, and out of its center emerged a full-grown man, very tall, wearing a tight-fitting suit and a small helmet. The man stood up and leaned over her, bringing his face very close to hers. He was above her, but as she stared into his eyes, she said she felt as if she were falling. That's where the memory ended, and Beth was aware of nothing more until she awoke in the morning, in a dazed, groggy condition that persisted throughout the day.

Enduring repeated episodes of such activity, she has no clearer understanding of these events now than at first. She does, however, have feelings about it all, and certain beliefs to which she clings.

Although she is never certain of who has abducted her or what they have done, Beth feels that at least one of her experiences, the 1978 event, involved a benevolent group of aliens. "They brought me an enormous sense of affinity with God," she said, "with the universe, and with love."

But she also recognizes that other forces seem to be a part of the overall phenomenon. 'There's a battle of good and evil," she said, explaining her feelings about the situation. "Sometimes they interact in our lives, bring pain and confusion, but I hold onto faith that my good ETs will help us."

She feels very strongly that the future catastrophic events the aliens described will indeed come about, and that she and other abductees will play a vital role at that time. But that doesn't keep her from feeling fear and depression. Most certainly she fears the possible military or human intrusions, unable to forget the threat that she is "expendable."

To face these fears, she relies on her religious beliefs for strength. "My faith has nurtured me," Beth said. "I'm a part of God. Faith, love, and truth will pull us through the enormity of things that are going to happen. That is the spiritual part."

The physical part, unfortunately, continues to include anxiety, sleep disorder, sudden and total energy losses, a number of health problems, and marks on her body that indicate the aliens are interested in more than just her spirit.

Most abductees have always been aware of strange events in their lives: odd lights, unaccountable time gaps, unknown figures in the night, extending back into childhood. They may not have been aware of UFOs and aliens, at least by those terms, but they knew mysterious things had occurred.

In Jane's case, however, her consciously recalled experiences with the unknown didn't begin until 1992. Since that time, she has witnessed almost every typical detail of the abduction situation-a life's worth of experiences in less than two years. And with all the events so recent, her situation offered an excellent opportunity for research. She was eager to share information after our initial contact, and she genuinely wanted to understand this mysterious new puzzle in her life.

Born in 1943, Jane has Irish, English, German, French, Creek, Cherokee, and Apache ancestry. She is a sixth-generation Texan residing in the central hill country. Jane was a nurse for many years, until arthritis prevented her from working, and she has also been a journalist, photographer, and avocational archaeologist. She is divorced, with no children, and lives with several dogs, including her favorite buddy, "XZ," in a rural setting near a large city. Compact, independent, and perky, Jane enjoys sky-watching and music, including voice recitals.

In addition to her professional talents, Jane has also demonstrated psychic abilities. "I was tested for over two years on a regular basis," she reported, "by two research foundations in San Antonio...for psychic abilities." Among them were telepathy, precognition, psychokinesis, remote viewing, and clairvoyance, with the tests showing positive results. And since the UFO activity had started, her psychic senses seemed to have increased.

"Lately my psychic abilities have intensified to the point that it's hard for me to be around groups any length of time," she said, "without feeling mentally 'assaulted and battered'." These abilities may be part of the reason why Jane's flashes of memories have come so often while she has been conscious, rather than only through dreams.

Her UFO involvement began in the summer of 1992 with a multiple-witness sighting, and a number of strange events soon followed. "Something deep and profound has been occurring to me since July '92," she said in our first correspondence. "If you ask me if I've been abducted I have to honestly say I have no absolute memory per se. I can only point to my scars and say I think something has happened but I cannot remember, only flashes of things, and I'm not sure I can trust the flashes."

Like Polly and several others, Jane was not eager to claim abductee status, nor that her experiences would be confirmed as 'absolutely' real by an outside observer. In fact, she made no claims at all about what these events and the alien agenda might be, but she did hope to find answers. And when she realized the possible implications of several events, Jane approached the phenomenon from an investigative point of view. This involved keeping scrupulous journal entries, not only of sightings, flashbacks, dreams, and odd events, but also of her physical and emotional responses to these things. She filed sightings reports with the local MUFON group and hosted several parties of sky watchers on the property. Further, Jane attempted on many occasions to photograph the UFOs, as well as the helicopters and odd planes-sometimes invisible ones, however-which overflew her home.

From these research records and my investigation, the following account emerged, showing the presence of an abduction history. In Jane's case, several things are noteworthy. For one, the frequency of her UFO sightings is well above that of the typical abductee, and several of them were multiply witnessed or photographed. Also, while Jane has not recalled a conscious full-blown encounter, most of her memories have come from conscious flashbacks rather than dreams. Her dreams, by the way, are vivid and frequently recalled, but they seem only occasionally to contain alien-related information, and this is usually in a screened form. Finally, Jane's experiences have involved a number of telepathic communications and sudden "knowings" of messages or information.

She marks the date of her involvement from the August sighting, but for a couple of months before this, Jane sensed something different in her environment. She said she felt as if she were being watched, and thinking in normal terms that the watchers were human, she became very cautious and alert. For a while she resorted to carrying a gun, so certain was she of an unseen presence.

And then she saw the UFO on August 12, 1992, with a witness, and her reality began to shatter.

"Since it was during the Perseid meteor shower and my mom had never seen one," Jane said, "we decided to get up at 4 a.m. at the height of the shower to get a good show. We didn't really see many meteors, but we stayed out even though it was disappointing.

"At about 5:30 I saw a white bright light doing odd maneuvers in the sky overhead. I called Mom's attention to it, and then we watched a spectacular UFO show by first one, then two lights, for about fifteen minutes, until daylight. Mom and I were amazed by what we'd seen and talked about it all day."

The lights were round and white, one brighter than the other, and there was no sound. The first light cavorted constantly, making rapid figure-eight, circular, and L-shaped patterns. When the second, larger light showed up, the two objects raced toward each other. The first one blinked to a stop and the second one circled around it. Then they made a series of fast movements, "like two flies flying in circles around each other." They separated for a while, each engaged in its own aerial maneuvers, until the second object departed to the west. The first object remained in sight, flying in various patterns, until the rising sun obscured its light.

Jane was excited by the event and thought about it frequently for a few days, but then, as she told me, "After a while life took over and it was pushed to the back burner until October 1." Her sister came to visit that evening, and when Jane mentioned that bats had been coming to catch bugs around the outdoor light, they went out to watch them. "It was barely dark, and the bats were active," Jane said, "when we saw a very bright white light coming fast and low toward us from the west. It went directly over without a sound, turned slightly southeast, went a short way, and blinked out. We never saw a shape of any sort attached to the light. And we saw three more lights doing impossible maneuvers that night."

This second sighting of anomalous aerial activity seriously puzzled Jane, and through a magazine article she obtained the phone number for MUFON, Mutual UFO Network. She was put in touch with a local MUFON group and received a form to report her sightings. Shortly afterward, Jane joined the organization and began to read about the subject.

Through the books and articles, she learned not only about UFO sightings but also about the abduction phenomenon. "It was the reading," she said, "that helped me realize that maybe something was happening to me. I had had many of the same odd things happen to me that I was reading about. It wasn't until November 3 that I made a list of the odd things that had happened since July. The list frightened me because it had too many classic signs. And I kept having a gut feeling that something had happened."

One particular item on the list was especially suspicious, as it involved a time gap. Planning to drive into town with her friend Brenda to see some friends perform in a band, Jane left her house just before 7 p.m. on October 30 to make the fifteen-minute drive.

"I was just a short way down the road from my house," Jane described, "when an owl came flying directly at my windshield. I thought it was going to crash into the glass, but at the last minute it just curved smoothly over the top of the car without contact. I had never had that happen and was glad it didn't hit me. I continued on my way and got to Brenda's. She met me at the door, worried and asked if anything was wrong. I said, 'No, why?'

"She said that I was late, and she had called the house and left a message on my phone machine. She was worried because I was usually early, and it was late enough that she thought maybe I'd had a wreck or something. I was really surprised to find out that it was 7:50 p.m. I couldn't account for the time loss because I should have been there by 7:10 or 7:15 at the latest."

The whole thing made no sense, for Jane went back through the trip mentally several times and could not find any reason for the thirty-to-forty-five minute delay, not even a moment out of sequence. "But something didn't feel right," she said. "I think it worked on my subconscious, because it was three days later that I made the list of all the curious things that had been happening since July."

Ten days later, Jane began keeping a daily journal of events. She woke up that morning with a bloody nose, sore throat, and large bruises on her arm for which she couldn't account. She had not been aware of anything unusual, other than a vague sense of some activity. Many of the oddities she'd noted were too ambiguous to give her proof of any abductions or alien involvement in her life. But the UFO sightings were real, that much felt certain, and they continued to recur.

The very next one, in fact, was even preceded by an announcement of sorts. At 3 p.m. on December 1, Jane suddenly received a communication, a very clear message that the UFOs would show up that night for her to photograph. She was given explicit instructions to clean her lens and put new batteries in the camera. "I'll get my camera and they'll show as a sign for me," she noted in her journal, "I feel it strongly."

At 5:30 she prepared, with a pallet, binoculars, the camera, and warm clothing. At 6:40, the UFO appeared. Jane quickly snapped five photos. One of them turned out well, showing a large single light of which the back portion appears wider than the front. It wasn't as good as she hoped, but good enough to make her determined to shoot more photos, since the UFOs seemed to be showing up rather frequently. And after the fulfillment of the telepathic communication's promise, Jane couldn't help but feel that the mysterious phenomenon of lights in the sky wasn't a random occurrence. This seemed to have a connection to her.

The next day, December 2, when she returned home from voice lessons, Jane entered the house and discovered an unrecognizable odor permeating the air. She described it as "acrid, strong, heavy, sharp, pungent, and tangy," unrelated to food or smoke odors, and unlike anything she'd ever smelled. Its source was never located.

That night, Jane witnessed another anomalous light. This one was not in the sky, but rather low to the ground and very close to her house. It was shortly after midnight, and she had turned off the light for the night. "I was lying quietly on my back, thinking,"

Jane said, "and my blinds were open. Shortly, just beyond the trees, I saw a flashing blue light. I saw it at the top of my cedar tree, and then it dropped down to the level of the window cross panes. Dogs all around began barking-mine didn't, they lay asleep-and I thought, They're herel My whole body tingled, and my mid-section welled up with something. I watched and didn't see anything else for a few minutes. Then I saw a 'light bulb flash' to the right and then left of the window." Her drawing shows an intermittent light spiraling downward, moving from one side to the other in the window.

Inexplicably-or perhaps not-Jane didn't get up to check on the situation. Instead, she instantly fell asleep. "I was awake one minute-the next, asleep," her journal notes. "I guess I was scared."

Two and a half hours later, at 3:40 a.m. on December 3, Jane woke up. She felt instantly awake and alert, as if she hadn't been asleep at all, and stayed up the rest of the night. Around 6 a.m., Jane happened to look at her back and was surprised to see two fresh scratches on her left shoulder and a scratch and a welt on the left one. She also noticed as the day went on that she was having difficulty discerning right and left directions, something that had never happened to her before. This lasted two weeks, as did an almost total loss of short-term memory.

At 7:15 a.m. the house was shaken and vibrated by the loud noise of a helicopter. It flew toward the south, lingered momentarily by the side of the house, and then continued on. Jane was surprised by the helicopter, because even though there had been an unusual number of them flying over her house since the first UFO sighting, she hadn't seen one in several days. The last one's arrival had coincided with a UFO, she realized, just as this one showed up only hours after the blue light's appearance. She wondered if she were imagining connections that didn't exist, if her increasingly agitated, disoriented, and frightened state of mind was clouding her logic. But the nervous feelings continued, even though she tried to explain them away. 'The strobe light scares me because there was no sound," she noted in the journal, "and the light was too close not to hear if it was a plane or 'copter. It was a silent light."

A silent light, preceded by an unknown acrid odor, followed immediately by a sudden loss of consciousness, and in conjunction with unexplained scratches, body marks, and disorientation. All that were missing were the memories.

On the evening of December 4, Jane found another unexplained injury, a quarter-sized bruise on her right hand. Examining the rest of her body, she also noticed a new addition to a pattern of marks which had been showing up on her forearm. They included two circles and two lines in a V-shape, and now there was also a "cut-line" connected to the larger circle as well as a small red dot near the other circle.

The closing lines of her journal entry for that day include a very intriguing final line: "Felt better after I talked to S . L and I laughed and laughed

tonight. I needed it. I feel good, up. I'm not so afraid to see them now. I feel a lot has been connected in my mind."

Two nights later, Jane recorded a curious dream which occurred between 11 p.m. when she went to bed and 1:30 a.m. when she awoke. On the surface, nothing about it seemed related to any of these previous events, but an examination of several details shows a possible screen memory or screened new event.

"A group of women arrived at my house for a 'birthday' party," she noted in the journal. "They seemed familiar but didn't know any of them from 'real life.' They were purposeful and quietly determined. We did some [unremembered] things in a small house. I stayed mostly in the 'bedroom.' I was disagreeable after a while and they were put out with me. One of them I knew better, and she was the leader. They were about as tall as I. I don't remember spoken words. At one point I was real disagreeable and tussled with them. They left me in the bedroom and conferred together in the kitchen.

"Finally they came out and said they had to go. They began to leave as a group, and I felt bad about what I'd done and asked them to reconsider. They said no and looked put-out. They began to leave, and I watched them go sadly and relieved, too. The leader did all the communicating."

Jane enclosed a number of words in quotation marks, as if to suggest that they weren't what they seemed to be, including "birthday," "real life," and "bedroom." Do they suggest that the purpose of the group's visit was not her birthday, that they might be familiar from experiences that weren't part of Jane's normal life, and that the room was not a bedroom?

The group's demeanor is not festive, but rather "purposeful" and quiet. No one speaks but the leader-a curious term for a social visitor. She didn't remember her activities with the group in the bedroom, nor why she was "disagreeable" and resistant. Whatever occurred was clearly not a party game. And finally, her feelings about them when they prepare to depart are strangely ambiguous.

If these visitors, events, and emotions are put into abduction terms, the parallel is obvious: A group of vaguely familiar visitors arrive and interact with a person in a small enclosure. The interactions are disagreeable to the person, who feels resistant. Only one of the group, the leader, communicates with the person. When the visitors leave, the person has confused emotions and cannot recall all the details of the interaction.

Given these parallels, it may well be that Jane's dream images screened an actual alien encounter. Five days later, however, on December 9, she had a conscious perception of unknown visitors. She awoke from a dream around 5:30 a.m. and realized she was hearing "voices and faint music" downstairs in the living room. She listened in surprise, but abruptly the noises ceased.

"Then I could hear someone walking away from the bed toward the stairs and down them," she wrote. 'The sound was a loud 'blue jeans rub' between the thighs of a man. I listened for several moments when suddenly I caught the black outline of a man slipping past my window. He had a faint light outlining him. He was tallish and in a hurry. He was just a quick flicker and then gone. I was paralyzed with fear. I tried to reach for my gun, but I couldn't move! I tried so hard, but I was so scared I couldn't move. When I looked at the window, I could move then, and everything was okay."

This intrusion marked the end of a series of events that had begun with the silent blue light near Jane's house. Other possible UFO sightings continued to occur, not always with concomitant odd activity. She watched two nocturnal lights fly in an arched path on January 9,1993, for instance, and three lights going in opposite directions on April 10.

"The lights would fade in, travel slowly, and then fade out or disappear," she wrote in her journal. "I saw two bright, golden streaking meteors, plus a huge bright flash through the trees southwest of my house. Seemed to be in the woods."

And then on May 16, Jane had a spectacular UFO sighting that was witnessed not only by her mother, who was visiting, but also by several people all around the area of a large lake. That evening, Jane received a phone call from one of the local MUFON members who told her that she'd gotten a report of a triangular UFO near Jane's location. She asked if Jane would go outside and have a look.

Immediately Jane ran out and spotted a light in the sky toward the lake, alternating or rotating with red, green, amber, and white lights. Her mother stepped out and also saw the object, which hovered for about ten minutes before drifting off to the north.

Jane was distracted by her mother for a few minutes, and when she looked back to the west, the light was gone. Disappointed, she stood there a while wishing it would come back so she could make a better observation. Within minutes, unbelievably, the triangular craft reappeared, floating low overhead with a soft humming sound and a whoosh of air as it passed. The lights showed different colors this time, with four white lights down its sides, a big white light on the front, and a blinking red light.

As it turned out, there were quite a few witnesses.

A local weekly newspaper reported the sighting in its May 20 edition with a front-page story. The UFO was described as "rainbow-colored" and was seen between 9 and 10 p.m. A couple of hours later, the UFO had returned, or perhaps a different craft, because the police started getting reports around midnight of an object with orange, blue, and white lights which appeared to descend or land in a field. Whatever Jane had been seeing, others had seen things, too, and she had no doubt of the UFO's reality.

Nor could she ignore the weird external events and oddities that had been occurring since her first sighting in the summer of 1992. The list of these events reads like a litany of peripheral abduction activity. To begin with, not only did she see the anomalous flying lights, Jane also occasionally witnessed smaller, closer, more personal displays. Sometimes they were nearby in the woods, and sometimes even closer, as in the instance where two bright lights "zipped" between Jane and a friend with her on a sky watch.

Bizarre electrical disturbances recurred, such as a radio suddenly turning itself on, a television turning off, and a broken ceiling light turning on by itself, after five months of not working. Jane also had strange phone activity over these months. She received silent calls and numerous wrong-number calls of a suspicious nature, and her answering machine behaved oddly. Additionally, she noted a number of time discrepancies.

There were many unexplained noises in the house that had not been present before, loud pops, pings, and creaks out of the ordinary, as well as humming and buzzing noises and strange clicking sounds on occasion. Outside of the house, loud helicopters started flying overhead at odd times of the day and night. When Jane reported this activity to the local UFO study group, the pattern changed for a while, and instead of helicopters she witnessed a variety of planes now buzzing the property, including invisible ones.

Several times Jane awoke with her panties inside out, even though she is certain she didn't remove them. Also, she woke up once with her sleeping shirt inside out. And she has found blood on her pillow in addition to in her ear and nose, without any injury to account for these instances.

But there have been injuries at other times, mostly insignificant yet inexplicable in everyday terms. "I've had numerous unexplained odd bruises on my legs and arms," she told me, "and odd scratch whelps on my back. Right this moment, I have a bruise under my right eye that wasn't there yesterday and small round bruises on my right thigh on the inside."

Jane has also had a number of "puncture" marks in various places, including at one point several punctures inside her mouth and on her breast. Sometimes the marks appeared after a suspected encounter or strange dream, but not always, and there were usually only a very few of them at a time. But on one occasion, after a vivid daytime dream of seeing a Gray, Jane found a number of body marks.

"Saw a Gray coming through a door with light behind him," she wrote in her journal. "I wasn't afraid. I was waiting in a dark room. Light behind him obscured his front features. He didn't seem to have elbows. He lifted his left arm and instead of [it bending at the elbow], his arm "S-ed" to lift. No elbow used. His hands were oversized with a covering. Seems like he had a willowy neck. His entire body was willowy, slender, slight, and fragile-looking, grayish color as best as I could see."

Jane remembered no activity in the dream, only seeing the Gray. But that same day she discovered an extraordinary number of new marks all over her body. From her calves to her shoulders, Jane and a friend counted and photographed ten scratches, thirteen bruises, five scraped or scooped areas, two punctures, and an equilateral triangle of three dots. These appear to have been very recent, because eight parallel, claw-like welts on her shoulders faded away during the morning hours.

For Jane, the UFO sightings and the physical marks were hard, believable evidence, things that could be photographed to show that something unusual was going on in her life. She had no photos, however, of the UFOs' occupants nor of whoever or whatever had caused the body marks. What she did have were flashback memories, sudden conscious images of scenes in which she was with aliens. They were brief and incomplete, but tantalizingly evocative of many more unrecalled events.

Once, she suddenly "saw" herself lying on her back, in a dark, dense atmosphere. "Little hands are beneath me," she said, "and I'm moving softly through the air." She felt panicked, unable to respond, and then the memory clicked off. In another, Jane recalled being with four aliens, fighting them as they carried her away, and being told of some impending event.

One sudden memory showed her on a table with four Grays around her, one of them tinkering with a square box to which hoses were attached that ran up to the ceiling. Another scenario involved the aliens taking sample scrapings from her fingernails, which they telepathically explained as a test "to check for pollution."

Two of the flashbacks concerned events in a round room. In the first one, she saw a white, curved desk and a group of seven beings with long hair and white robes seated behind it. The being in the center held a brilliantly lit globe in front of its face, and the features of the other six were indistinct.

The second event, a telepathic communication, came in a flash just after Jane had heard a weird humming noise on her porch. A scene came into her mind, of the inside of a craft which was sparsely furnished and illuminated by a lemony colored light. Three Grays were present, one of whom was dressed in a long robe and another who was busy with control-like equipment on the wall.

Jane began to pick up telepathic communication then, hearing Activate, activate, activate repeatedly. This was followed by the names of certain towns and areas in Texas, including the Panhandle, Big Bend, Gonzales, Llano, and the Louisiana-Texas border. While the images continued in her mind, the humming noise on the porch grew louder and followed her inside, where the implanted vision continued. One of the Grays turned as if to look at Jane with an expression of "parental amusement."

Some of her dreams, as noted earlier, seemed to contain scenes and information that could be related to possible alien experiences, although they were usually in screened form. A few of the dreams, about impending disasters and UFOs landing either to invade, monitor, or rescue humans, are common among abductees. Also common are dreams about sickly babies, acts of telekinesis and levitation, and strange people's faces very close to one's own. Jane has had all of these dreams.

Her most impressive UFO dream occurred in the wee hours of December 31, 1992, and, like so many abductees' "dreams," this one proved to be the memory of a very real event. Jane's journal entry for that day began with her noticing a new mark on her body around 8:30 am. It was a straight, "grooved" line over 1-1/2 inches long on top of her shinbone near the ankle. Then she described the dream.

"Had vivid! dream," she noted, "with extraordinary! auditory and clear images, during the night...between 3:00 and 5:15 a.m. I dreamed I was walking outside when an extraordinary buzz-hum began. The sound was loud, riveting, and pervaded through my body, throwing me into a 'void or mental isolation.' The sound seeped into my 'ordinary' consciousness...a powerful sound.

"I looked up, and a huge, gray, metal [saucer-like] spaceship dropped straight down from the clouds on my right," Jane continued. "I sat down on a 'mesa' cross-legged as it sank to earth. As I looked at it, it changed to a sphere on four legs with strange marks on it.

"Shortly thereafter, it lifted straight up and then began a curved flight in front of me and circled to my left. I yelled, 'Hello, hello' and it swooped in to look at me. Its force field was a tremendous, pushing, pressure against my body and was pushing me over, and I started to fall off the mesa.

"I asked it to 'move away, I can't keep my balance,' and it came right up to my face in front of my eyes. I began to fall. 'Don't let me fall, don't let me fall,' I pleaded. I sensed it caught me, and I lost consciousness and blacked out in my dream!

"I woke up at 5:15 a.m. panting hard. I could still hear that powerful sound. I'll never forget it or the extraordinary sensation. Somehow, I know that that is what they really sound like. The dream seemed real, more real than I want to admit. I've never had a dream like that! Never. So clear and lucid."

Seven months later, Jane decided to undergo regressive hypnosis to explore some of her strange memories and experiences. In the first session she recalled a hitherto-unremembered event from childhood, and in the second session she examined the UFO dream.

Once she was in a trance state, Jane didn't describe the onset of the "dream" as she'd recalled it. Instead, she said she was on the bed but got up and walked away because the powerful sound was hurting her ears. "And then I go back and sit on the bed," she said, "I'm sitting cross-legged, and it drops in the room. The sound, it's a real thing. It's got hold of me. Vibrating."

When asked about how the globe came into the room, Jane began crying and described an entirely different scene. "They're standing in front of me," she said, describing a group of human-looking men. "They're in white clothes, and very tall. They're watching my reactions. I'm standing barefoot on a cold, shiny floor. The sound's coming in my chest, a vibrating sound they're all making. They're all looking at me intently. They're tall and pale."

When the hypnotist asked if she knew them as friends, Jane said, "They're not enemies. They're talking, telling me their energy's going in it [the vibrating sound]. That I'm anointed. That whatever hard times may come, to have courage. That there would be times when I most need the shell to protect me. But I have to learn to help build it. And that not even the most solid shell could help protect from some of the stuff, but it would do me well to at least attempt it.... And that I will be frightened at times, but that fear is transitory and that it doesn't really hurt me.... Oh," she said suddenly, "but now I have to go in the other room! The doors open up funny and disappear. The room's so bright!"

Jane then described a brilliant "room made of light" that felt like a "cocoon." She sat and was "studied" by one of the tall, pale men. This one had light hair, although the others had hair of various jewel-like colors. They mentally discussed the things she "knows" but cannot access consciously. He told her that the knowledge would "come" to Jane when she was "ready," explaining that "each energy has to be built up, strengthened, before it can withstand the whole thing. It has to be adjusted to move in different ways of coping and seeing, and that's not easy because there are clumps of resistance in all of us."

When asked if this unexpected scenario was related to the dream of the UFO and the desert-like mesa incident with which the regression had begun, Jane said that it was, although she didn't make that connection clear. 'The tan world is a representation of reality," she said, "and the different subtle shadings show how they could each fade into one another to make a whole, but yet are different. It is an actual place, yet it's a representation and symbolic. It is within our grasp. We can reach it. I went there with help."

Jane described the UFO as a device making "an observation" of her. "My ability to break out of the somnambulism and to speak shows my strength, and they were pleased," she said. 'They [the tall beings] came in then to escort me out of it because I had shown that I could be strong enough."

"Were you aware of being in the tan dream in your physical body?" the hypnotist asked, and Jane said she was.

"If someone had come to your house and looked in," the hypnotist persisted, "you would not have been there in your physical form?"

"I don't know," she replied. "I was really there, it was real. My body was there."

Not much more was elicited about the UFO dream in the regression. But in Jane's first hypnosis session she remembered a series of events in rather detailed clarity. This abduction occurred when she was a young child staying with her grandmother, and her first awareness of something strange was seeing her "Nannie" collapse on the ground outside while hanging up the laundry. Suddenly, Jane felt that she was being watched and turned to see a group of four or five entities coming toward her.

When she asked why they were there, she was told, Don't worry, you'll be all right. And the beings escorted her toward the barn.

"What does your friend look like?" the hypnotist asked. "Is he as tall as you? Taller?"

"Just a little," she replied. "He's yellow."

Jane's memory of the following events was patchy and confused. She thought the main entity led her into the barn where she was placed in something like a "bucket" and swung around. After this, she recalled being physically examined, helped down naked from a table, and taken into a different room by the "friend" with "dark, slanted eyes."

"It's round and bright, bare," Jane described. "I see colors, just colors. The top is blue, dark royal blue. It's a pretty, blue ceiling. The floor tickles my feet, tingly. We walk through the room and come to where all the animals are."

When asked more about the animals, including a deer which she pets, she suddenly skipped to a scene of her crying beside Nannie again, still immobile slumped over the clothes basket. Once Jane was calmed down from this, the hypnotist took her back through the entire scenario. This time, Jane could see more about the examination and other details.

"When the bucket stops moving, where are you?" she was asked.

'They help me out and sit me on the table," Jane said. "It's the table. I've always been good before. Why are you crying so much? I don't know. He says I'll get over that. I won't feel so bad, when I get older."

"What won't feel so bad?"

"Their coming, their visits. It's so kind. They look at the right side and the left side. They lay me down, pick up my legs one at a time. It tickles. They pull my toes. And rub their hands up my sides and say, Turn, so I turn."

The exam continued, in which Jane was "poked" with an instrument that reminded her of "chapstick." Then she was taken into the colorful room and from there to a third location.

"We go into the room with all the green, it's so pretty," she described. "I see big plants and animals and colors, too, of flowers and beautiful trees. I see rabbits, and I see a deer, and a bird, and...uh, oh, oh, down there in the water!"

"What water?"

"There's water, a lot of water. It's like a huge swimming pool. Something's swimming in the water, but I want to see the deer. I walk over, I see its eyes. It's white."

"What about the water?" the hypnotist asked, because Jane had turned away from that image very nervously.

"I know what's in there, and I don't want to look!" Jane resisted. "I don't want to look!

"You don't have to look," the hypnotist reassured her, but the image was already clear.

"I don't know what it is. Its head is real big, it's green," Jane said apprehensively, and then in a panic she shouted, "Oh! Oh! Ow, it's got me! Ooohhh! It has me by the neck! Ow! Let me go! Oh, oh! My ear! My ear hurts now!"

Jane was so upset by the recollection that after she had regained a calmer state of mind the session was brought to a close. Afterward, she described the water creature as having a long neck and some sort of "knobs" on its head. Something painful happened to her ear, and then the creature disappeared back into the water. She remembered nothing more, until the entities took her back to her grandmother, who then recovered consciousness. To date, whenever she has tried to read the transcripts of both regressions, she becomes so physically and emotionally upset that she cannot do it. But these are fairly mundane events within the abduction scenario, and her overreaction may come from events which are still suppressed in her memory.

Far more pleasant, or at least acceptable, have been the telepathic communications and "knowings" that have come to Jane without the aliens being present. The very first message came on November 25, 1992, from which she recorded, "I have suddenly understood that I must give myself to the Awakening. I understood this as if it were being told to me. There is a strong sense of urgency. I must respect my mother and all other things. To not hurt things, to live and let live. The time will come when they will present themselves to me in my reality. Won't be long. As angels they are in the mists of our mind. Give myself to the awakening. Do things in a good and calm matter, and everything will be okay."

The second message, on December 1, gave instructions and warned her to prepare to photograph the UFOs, which showed up as promised.

On April 22, 1993, she had another revelation. "I 'understand' I'm to get all my notes together for Karla and her work," she wrote. "What I have will be very helpful to her and is to be given freely as she asks. I'm to make special efforts to share all with her. She is very important as a voice that will introduce increased realization throughout the world. She is one of many who introduce the awareness to awakening."

The next message, on June 8, concerned something for which Jane felt she was being prepared or taught. "I understand if I meditate on my prayer list for healing at least once a day, then I will be shown results," she recorded. "That is the next step in my progression of activation. How far it will go will be determined by my level of discipline, passion, desire, and will."

On June 27, Jane woke from a dream about UFOs, but she couldn't recall any details. She did recall, however, coming to partial consciousness in the midst of the dream and trying to retain its details for later when she would be awake. But all she could remember was the briefest scene. "At one point I was standing looking at myself, and another time myself was behind me," she wrote that morning. But the notes were interrupted just then as a sudden realization came into her mind. It wasn't exactly the same as when the previous "communications" occurred, but it felt akin to that.

"All of a sudden I can remember the dream lesson given to me last night," Jane said. "It was illustrated and demonstrated to me the truth that I am truly a spiritual being animating a body. I am something separate from the body. The body is a tool, and I am entrapped in it. But I can separate from the body before death, and have done it many times, without conscious knowledge. I am a pure spiritual being when without the body, and I will be again. Patience is required. I am a spiritual being only animating a shell. The body is nothing, the soul is all."

On September 30, a telepathic communication told Jane that she was now "ready for the next level" and "the beginning of other things." She was told that some suppressed memories and information would be allowed to emerge "so I may retrieve that which will carry me forward." She saw herself as "a single mirror of mankind, aware of choosing either to "uplift" or "tear down" by her actions and intentions.

The following month, Jane experienced two more communications. "I understand I'm to attempt to rid myself of all violent and negative tendencies, to let go of controlling impulses," she was told during the first one. And the second one was simply, "I understand truth is a lonely territory. Truth is lonely. Each to his own. To disdain is incorrect."

Jane had a recent flashback that seemed to fulfill the promise made in one of the communications, about the release of suppressed memories. It concerned the UFO "dream" of December 31, 1992, and the saucer that transformed into a globe, came up close to her face, and forced her to fall. The new memories filled in the details much differently, however. After first watching a black saucer-shaped craft drop "from the clouds like a cookie cutter," Jane sensed "several intelligences" in the ship. Next, she saw it descend and transform into the sphere with four legs and designs inscribed on its surface, from which she now sensed a single intelligence. In its third permutation, the object "rose up and turned into a gray-black sphere with antennae" but no legs.

"I remember the dark, gun-metal-gray globe with antennae," she described, "having an intelligent awareness of me. When its attention came full on me, it took me over and there was nothing but me and it. Its physical force was like a huge wind without noise pushing against me. When I said hello, it was pleased and responded to me. When its attention came on me, I was its sole interest. It...was focusing entirely and completely on me.

"The antennae 'disappeared' when it came up close. There was an eye, large, and a round, silver metal thing in the area of a 'nose.' I hear metal clinks and the silver thing comes up to my ear. It feels 'clinical.' He's telling me everything is okay and he knows I'm not afraid, but I'm reassured telepathically. I know they hear me, and also he's 'reading' me. There is the absolute feeling of immense power and a rather impersonal caring and kindness. I also feel concern, but again, personal yet impersonal to a great degree. As I dwell on it, the 'eye' was truly alien, or rather not human. God, it was intense, probing, objective, impersonal, all-powerful.

"The silver metal thing is looking. It connects to my ear by clamping on the outside. In fact, it clamps on and covers my entire ear, and something is inserted. Something that implants and affects my brain chemicals and certain subtle functions. It is adding. The implant looks like a very tiny oblong cylinder about a quarter-inch long or smaller, made of non-metal stuff.

"I'm reassured during the entire procedure. And it doesn't hurt too much. I ask why they need that, and he looks deep into my eyes for a long time. Then he says that it was my choice, that I agreed to all this a long time ago.

"I said I didn't remember the agreement and when did I do that. And he answered, Before you were born, and we've had this conversation before.

"I asked him, 'Why me?'

"He said, Because you became open and now the awakening has begun. He told me that neither I nor the many others awakened could stop the arousal of ourselves or of humankind. The trigger had been pulled, and everything was to schedule.

'They pulled the thing away from my ear, and it hurt and stung for a little bit. I felt like something had been drawn out, an energy of some sort. They inserted sound in my head, and for a little bit afterward I was blind and could only see brilliant, revolving, iridescent colors so intense I had a momentary light explosion accompanied by a brief, unbelievable wave of head pain. But I saw his eye come close, his head touching my head, our left eyes almost touching, and the pain stopped. His eye was all I could see. His eye took the colors and pain away, and I was so grateful. His eye made me sleepy. I was comforted by the closeness of the energy and by his eye.

"I can't say yet what he looked like because the 'globe' screen is strong. The globe had seams of some sort. The eye is partially outlined in some fashion...a black void, liquid somehow and observing me on all levels of my being.

"At one point during all this, but I can't remember when, I was also told that the power-hungry governments of the earth were going to be very surprised because their worst nightmare was about to come true, that even they hadn't fully estimated the effect the Voyagers' arrival would have on the worldwide human population, or the rapid growth of their influence; that they (govt.) still hadn't fully accepted that it was a losing battle and eventually they will acquiesce."

The implications of such statements, if true, are enormous. Jane didn't know what to think about the communication, although the exam scenario seemed real. Moreover, the memory differed from the spiritual encounter that emerged in the hypnotic recall. Were they two episodes of the same event, or was one memory a contrived screen for the other?

Throughout everything she has experienced, Jane's thoughts and emotions have run the gamut.

"At first I was terrified," she wrote in our initial contact, "but now I'm not. I feel whatever has happened has been not to hurt me. I feel like a piece of myself that was missing has been reconnected. I've had deep spiritual experiences and feelings since October 1992, all of a personal nature. I am uneasy sometimes, but I don't think I'm afraid any more."

In fact, she reported a very sudden change in her emotions that occurred in the winter of that year. "I went to bed afraid," she said, "and woke up the next day very detached," as if she'd been tranquilized and reassured. Her initial thoughts about the alien agenda, however, still made a "knot" in her stomach. "It's really all for their purpose," she said, "something that was prepared and developed long ago." And she felt she had been somehow given a choice to accept them, although it doesn't matter to them. "Either way, they win."

Jane didn't know why she was taken for alien involvement, nor what exactly she had been trained or prepared to do. Her only clue is a sense that she is "supposed" to introduce people close to her to the reality of alien existence. "You know, sometimes I feel used," she commented. "Is all this of my free will for good, or am I a puppet?"

She did feel that the aliens have put information into a deeper level of her mind, as if she were "stuffed full" with suppressed knowledge. Further, she said she didn't feel ready to know until now. She saw herself as "one of millions in a grassroots movement who are being stimulated" into a "gradual realization." Jane also sensed that the aliens had fostered within her mind a mistrustful attitude toward the government. But she was not at all sure of the source of any of the events and communications because she felt that both positive and negative entities or groups may have interacted with her.

As for the aliens themselves, she has only their actions and words to guide her assessment. Once when she telepathically asked them for a better term to call them than "alien," she was given the epithet "Voyagers," and they said that the awakening humans were being made into "harbingers of discord, discontent, revolution." Judging by their actions, Jane is not always reassured.

"We're not seeing the true intelligence behind all these scenes,' she said. The fact that they put us through episodes of "set-up scenes" and "absurd stuff" frightens her.

"I'm afraid we might find that intelligence so cold and impersonal," she said, "that it would be unbearable."

8. Angie

The youngest of the eight women in this project, Angie is a delightful, extremely intelligent woman whose conscious memories of abductions and encounters could fill a book on their own. She first contacted me after reading INTO THE FRINGE and briefly described a number of incidents in her experiences that closely paralleled many things my family and I had witnessed. As in the case of Beth, Pat, and Lisa, Angie remembered abductions involving apparently military personnel before our contact, and since that time there have been several others of a most disturbing nature.

When we first began to correspond, however, Angie was not at all concerned about the possibility of detrimental military activity. After all, the aliens who had been abducting her assured her that the humans in their company were "controlled" by them, and since Angie did not fear the aliens she likewise wasn't worried about the humans with them.

Since that time, her attitude has radically changed, for very good reason. But before examining the military encounters, it is best to begin with some background about Angie and the alien contacts.

Born in 1966, Angie has German and Scotch ancestry from her mother, and, since her father was adopted, she knows nothing about that side of her family. She is married and operates a small cattle ranch with her husband, Paul, outside of a large city in Tennessee. Angie is artistically talented, working in abstracts, lithography, cartooning, and clay.

Before her first alien abduction in 1988, she knew very little about such things and had never thought they could be part of her life. She did recall a few odd incidents from her childhood when I questioned her, including a strange event when she was four. She and her father were riding in his van when a blinding flash of light filled the vehicle. Immediately after the flash, Angie remembered feeling as if she were in a long, gray tunnel, but nothing more. Since that time, except for seeing a huge fireball in the sky, she could not recall anything unusual in her life.

Until the night of July 24, 1988, that is. Angie had gone to bed as usual, and then she suddenly awoke to find herself outside in the dark, paralyzed, facing a group of beings unlike anything she'd ever seen. "They were frail, hairless white beings who had the most mesmerizing eyes," she told me, and then she was amazed to watch their "catlike" eyes "wiggle" and change shape. They stared at her, and she felt as if they were reading her mind.

'This must be a dream," she said over and over.

"You are not having a dream," one of the beings told her telepathically. "We will show you. You have to go away with us for a little while."

He pointed with one of his three fingers toward the woods, and the other beings carried Angie in that direction. Terrified as she saw her house and husband receding, she begged the creatures not to take her any further, but her pleas were ignored. Angie's panic, combined with her phobia of the dark, made her very agitated, until the leader of the group injected something in her left forearm. She began to pass out, and the last words she heard were, Just relax a little. The next morning, Angie found two red dots in that place on her forearm.

"That's when I accepted the possibility that I'd encountered something physically genuine," she said. "I did not understand its meaning, and I spent the rest of the day wondering about the uncanny event, about how I reacted with fear because the woods seemed so dark and scary, and mostly about those dinky three-foot-tall beings. Who were they? Angels? Elves? Fairies? Ghosts? Aliens? When I went to bed that night, their image was still fresh on my mind, but I did not have any thoughts about them ever returning for me."

But the beings did return, and they have continued to come back periodically ever since. For the next two nights, Angie had clouded memories of being with the creatures, which could have been dismissed as dreams except for the fact that she discovered more red dots on her body after both nights.

Then in August she had a conscious encounter, waking in bed to see two Grays in her room. Instantly paralyzed and calmed by their "hypnotic eyes," she floated through the house with them and outside, to an unbelievable sight. "It was a big, silvery disk with revolving red, green, and yellow lights," Angie said, "suspended about two feet above the ground and it was noiseless. When I first saw it, there was no doubt in my mind that it was a UFO. That's when I accepted the possibility that the beings were aliens."

This time, Angie was not afraid. In fact, her curiosity was aroused, so she stepped forward to touch the craft. But one of the Grays leaped in front of her and warned her not to get close while the craft was in the "discharge phase" because it could harm her.

An opening appeared in the craft, and Angie saw a handsome young man, with blond hair and a tan jumpsuit, standing inside. Teleported aboard the craft, as if "sucked into a long tunnel of electric orange light," she felt separated from her body at that time, because she could see it "tumbling and twirling along beside me and all the bones, veins, and internal organs were visible."

Inside the craft, Angie was placed in a black chair where the blond man "scanned" her visually, inducing a sensation of orgasm. She asked if he, too, were an alien, and the man smiled and nodded.

The craft began to move, forcing her body back in the chair to her consternation, as she has a great fear of flying. "Where are we?" she asked, and then a small oval window appeared on the wall. She looked out and saw "thousands of brilliant stars in the midst of deep black space, but no Earth and Moon."

Four Grays entered the room, where one of them handed a case to the blond man. He removed a glowing green ball while two of the Grays floated Angie to an odd table. The man put the ball on her abdomen and moved it in a circular pattern, growing warm. Angie felt a "tugging sensation" in that area and asked what was being done to her.

The man said she was "ripe enough" and would be able to conceive. Angie told him that she and her husband had been trying unsuccessfully to have children, and the man told her she had not done so because her "blood, immune, and genetic systems" operated differently than other humans.

"Am I part alien?" she asked, confused.

One of the Grays told her that she had been "altered a little" to fulfill a special purpose. The blond man said they had produced a "novel breed" from ova they'd taken from her. He told her she was a "Chosen One" and that her children and others so chosen would conquer the world through mastering the power of insinuations message she would be given in other encounters. Angie then became very sleepy and passed out until 9 a.m. the following morning, back in bed.

After these incredible incidents, Angie seemed to undergo an interior change. "My husband and other people started noticing I seemed calmer and less talkative and daydreamed a lot," she told me. "My husband wondered what it was that I had been inscribing into the new diary I purchased. I told him that I was only recording dreams. I desperately wanted to share my story with someone, but did not because there was no one in my personal social circle who wasn't skeptical of such issues. I feared that if I told any of them, they would question my sanity. So I kept my secret for a long time to come."

During the next few months, she had only vague memories or dreams of other encounters, and after one of these she found four red dots on her abdomen in a diamond pattern. But UFOs were not the only craft to land on her property, for on November 23 she heard the sound of helicopters and looked out to see two black choppers with Air Force insignia overhead. When one of them landed on her property, Angie grabbed a coat and raced outside. But they zoomed away before she could reach them. This was the first time helicopters had been in the area, but it wouldn't be the last.

In February 1989, she had another abduction in which she was called a "Chosen One" and was also shown a scene familiar from other abductee reports. One of the aliens touched her forehead, she said, and "a series of graphic images exploded" in her mind. She saw "a reddish-gold desert planet with two setting suns," a "galaxy," a "blood-red moon and a fiery orange sun exploding," and an "underground city" before she blacked out. When she regained consciousness, an alien told her their home was "Cassiopeia in the heavens" but that they had made a home for themselves on Earth before humans were created. After this, Angie passed out again and was returned home.

Two days later, another helicopter circled the property, and a man who claimed to work for the utility company arrived, asking to examine the two transformers on the farm. He said there had been many power failures in the area, but Angie was suspicious since she hadn't recalled any such failures nor had she contacted the utility company.

Eight nights after the last abduction, Angie recalled waking up in the back yard with four aliens. Naked-although feeling neither cold nor embarrassed-she watched two aliens working with a "car-sized" device while a third one appeared to be digging soil samples. The fourth alien showed her a small black box, which he gave her and asked her to look inside. She did, and again her mind "exploded" and was filled with images, this time abstract patterns of bright colors. He then told her that she would soon "have the power to make mental contact" with other Chosen Ones and would be able to "influence their minds," and then he touched her chest and she blacked out.

The next day when Angie went outside, she found a large circle in the grass which looked "parched" and several chunks of bubbly black metal slag. Excited by this proof, Angie photographed the metal and the circle, which didn't disappear for over a year and a half. Analysis of the metal in 1993 showed it to be ordinary iron slag.

In March she had two "cloudy" memories of abductions, both involving abdominal procedures, and in one of them she saw a group of "dazed" humans in the same room. On March 23, Angie counted nineteen helicopters flying over the farm and thought she could make out Air Force designations on them.

Ten days later, Angie recalled another abduction, but this one differed dramatically from the previous encounters. She found herself outside in the dark with a thin blue alien who "mind scanned" her. Then five men came out of the shadows, four of whom were "ordinary men wearing olive-green uniforms" with "crewcuts" and the fifth was "a dark-haired humanoid" in a long khaki coat with many pockets. This man, Angie said, "touched the blue alien and it suddenly shrank into a marble-sized orb of white light" which the humanoid then pocketed. He told her that these beings, "a nonphysical form of energy," were created and controlled by his group.

"Did you create humans, too?" Angie asked, and he confirmed this.

"What do you want from me?" she continued.

"We want to talk to you about your life," he told her.

'That's all?" she asked.

'There's more," he said, and one of the uniformed men took Angie to a black van parked behind her garage.

"Is that a real van, or is that your spaceship?" she wondered.

"You can't judge a book by its cover," another man replied cryptically.

Inside the van, Angie saw bench seats, carpet, and a large control panel. The other men entered, and Angie wondered if they belonged to some military group.

"Are you all with the Army, Air Force, Navy, or Marines," she inquired.

The oldest man replied, but she was beginning to have a hard time understanding everything he said. She thought he said the group belonged to an organization called "High Shelf" which worked mainly in "special underground stations." He also told her that she and other "Chosen Ones" were part of a mind-control project, to "carry instructions and temperance, via thought transference" to other people.

Once he answered her questions, he began an interrogation about her life. Angie could recall only a few of the questions, however, in her altered condition. He asked, for instance, if she remembered the aliens coming to her when she was young, which she did not. And he asked about her views on life and death. After the interview, which seemed quite lengthy, the man activated something on the contropanel, and Angie found herself back in bed, fully alert and "tingling all over," at 5:10 a.m. She quickly dressed and ran outside to see if they were still there, but the yard was empty.

Thinking about all her encounters, Angie came ,to several conclusions. First, she now believed that there was something much bigger than "man's views and theories and religions" to the universe. And she believed that the aliens were carrying out a "psychic transformation" with her and others for a good purpose.

Through the following months, Angie had several more encounters and UFO sightings. The most traumatic series of events began with an abduction in which she was "impregnated." Two weeks later, she took two home-pregnancy tests which proved positive, and she and her husband were elated. Angie did not tell Paul about the alien impregnation, since he had not believed her previous accounts of sightings and intrusions. She thought the baby inside her was a special gift from her alien friends, and, being unfamiliar with the typical alien process of impregnation and subsequent retrieval of the fetus, she looked forward to carrying the child to term and beginning the family which she and Paul desired. They had even selected names for the baby.

But a month after the impregnation encounter, Angie started having unusual physical symptoms: "sweating" and "tingling" during the day, and a pulsating sensation in the womb area at night. This continued for over two weeks, until on the morning of July 4, Angie suffered a bloody, painful miscarriage.

"It happened in my bathroom," she said. "After hours of heavy bleeding and terrible cramping, the fetus came out, in my hands." It wasn't like a normal fetus; larger, three inches long, devoid of sex organs, and had "black, slanted" eyes reminiscent of the white aliens she had encountered. Under a strange compulsion, Angie put the fetus in a jar of water and hid it in the barn loft. Later she went back and found that the jar was missing.

Paul took Angie to the doctor right away, as she'd lost a lot of blood and subsequently she had a "D&C" procedure. She couldn't understand why she'd lost the baby, having taken excellent care of herself, and the loss was devastating.

At a much later date, Angie underwent two hypnotic regressions, in which three of her experiences were examined. One of these was the loss of the fetus, and in that regression Angie described a hitherto unremembered bedroom visitation in the hours before her miscarriage. Several beings and a large, floating blue light entered the bedroom. While some of the aliens busied themselves with Paul, two others carried out an abdominal procedure on Angie, involving a small cylindrical device that "clicked."

Nothing further intruded until September, when Angie awoke with a vague recollection of being on a craft with her sister, Julia. That morning, Julia phoned and told her, "I had the weirdest dream last night." She described being with human-looking aliens in blue jumpsuits in a curved, domed room, and she saw Angie there, too, in a silver jumpsuit like the aliens wore. She recalled Angie telling her, "They want to give us eternal life."

The same details had been part of Angie's memories, and the two sisters got together to discuss the shared "dreams." Angie told her sister then, for the first time, about her other encounters, relieved to end the "emotional isolation and fear of ridicule" that had kept her quiet before this.

Her circle of confidants expanded in November, when her father told of seeing a domed, orange UFO while out in the Smoky Mountains with some friends. Angie and Julia shared their experiences with him, and that prompted their father to open up even more. The three of us learned a lot that day," Angie said. "I told Dad about all of my alien encounters; Dad told us about his past encounters and about our mother's experiences, too; I cried. That was the day we learned that our parents have been involved with the aliens since before we were born."

Intermittent abductions continued to occur. From December 1989 to April 1992, Angie recalled fifteen events. In one, she was shown a nursery of "clones" similar to other abductee reports, and she was told that the aliens had "programmed" her to hide the fetus after her miscarriage. When Angie asked if the aliens had restored the fetus to life, she found it hard to understand the reply that its physical body had been stored and its soul recycled.

In another, Angie was shown a "clone" infant as well as nine "hybrid tots" and was told they would be used "to prepare [humans] for the changes." When she asked, "What changes?" she was told it involved "humans' spiritual transformation."

One abduction during this time was very singular, as Angie recalled going to an underground facility that her uniformed human escort said was in northern Arizona. He told her there were other stations around the world, including bases in New Mexico, the North Pole, and Africa. When Angie asked who was in charge of the "High Shelf" operation, another of the men, a "blond humanoid" replied that his kind "control everything."

"What about the Grays and the other aliens?" she asked, thinking of the several different types she had encountered. "Are they involved, too?"

"By degrees," he answered.

"What about all these humans?" she persisted, "these military people?"

"We control them," the blond smiled.

She was taken to a group of other abductees or "Chosen Ones" and was handed a small black box and told to open it. When she pulled open the lid, Angie said, "a mist of brilliant violet light" came out, covering the group of abductees and causing "a powerful electric sensation" after which she blacked out.

Throughout these encounters, Angie had felt positive about her involvement with the aliens, including, finally, the loss of her unborn child, which she believed was for a higher purpose. And in the abduction she and Julia remembered sharing, Julia had accepted Angie's statement about getting "immortal life" from the beings, so she, too, had a positive attitude. It was surprising, therefore, that Julia was extremely frightened a month later when the sisters spotted a UFO.

Returning from Georgia on December 29, they were driving along a state highway in Tennessee. At 7:30 p.m. they saw two unusual vehicles. The first one, Angie described as "an old spray-painted bus" traveling very slowly, "full of hippie folk," with the words "Magic Bus" painted across the rear.

The sisters laughed about it, but then the bus slowed to about ten miles per hour, and Angie could not pass it as they moved up a hill. She and Julia saw some of the bus's occupants open their windows and shout, and then one of them pointed upward. The girls looked in that direction and saw a bright blue object above the treetops ahead. It had a dome, wide rim, and black, round portholes.

"Angie, look!" Julia shouted. 'That's a UFO!"

The hippie bus accelerated and was soon out of sight, as Angie's Corvette came to a complete stop on its own. A blue glow engulfed the car.

"Oh, God! It's behind us!" Julia screamed in fear.

In Julia's account of the incident to me, she wrote, "When it came towards us, I got scared. And Angie told me there was nothing to be afraid of, but I still felt afraid and got down in the floorboard of the car."

There was a brief "intermittent beeping sound/' Angie said, and "then all was silence and darkness. The UFO was gone." The car's headlights popped on, Angie turned the ignition, which worked perfectly, and started to drive away, telling Julia it was safe for her to get out of the floorboard.

"Goddammit, Angie," Julia replied, "let's go!"

They took off, and a few minutes later Julia said, "Do you know what time it is? Ten-twenty." Angie didn't believe her, but when she checked her own watch, it had the same time. Almost three hours had passed since they spotted the blue UFO, and the sisters didn't have a single memory of what transpired.

In April 1992, Paul and Angie moved onto the cattle ranch, and an entirely new series of mysterious events began. Their specialty-beef business was doing very well until something started killing off the cattle, and within a year the losses amounted to thousands of dollars.

"A small number of them had been mutilated," Angie reported. "One cow was missing a head, another had been disemboweled, and a bull calf appeared as if he'd been ripped apart by a tyrannosaur. The bodies of some of the mutilated ones had peculiar stigmata such as shaved places, clean and bloodless holes and gashes. There wasn't a single scratch anywhere on the rest of the dead cattle."

Many of the cattle died in February and March 1993, when other farmers in the general area also reported dead and mutilated animals. Reading about one of these reports, Angie contacted the paper and got in touch with a veterinarian who'd examined someone else's dead cattle. In the first case, he reported that the cattle had died of toxins of an unknown source, and with Angie's cattle, all he could report was death from unknown causes.

The alien activity after this was rather different than what had transpired before, and for the most part Angie was left with very cloudy and incomplete memories of the events. One abduction, however, is worth noting at some length.

Waking on board a craft, naked on a table, Angie saw humanoids and two different kinds of Grays.

Momentarily, two more humanoids, in red suits, entered, and Angie recognized the blond one as the man she'd seen before. She asked if he had a name, and he told her "Carl De Zan."

He told her that it was time for her group of Chosen Ones to carry out their "assigned tasks." This involved making contact with "certain people throughout the world" to "collect data" from their minds. And that data, in turn, would then be collected from the minds of the Chosen Ones by the aliens. All of this would be done, he said, through tiny implants in the head, devices that served many purposes. They could help the implanted people use their "special senses," for instance, and stay in contact with one another through dreams. Besides collecting data, the implants could also send instructions.

When Angie asked about the overall purpose-the agenda-she was told that through "tempering" human minds, the aliens wanted to remove "filth and evil" and "negativity" from humans.

Having been given repeated lectures about her special abilities as a "Chosen One," at one point Angie initiated an experiment with herself. "I decided to test my mental powers by giving thought transference a try," she reported. "I went to bed around 11 p.m. and concentrated long and hard to project my image into my sister's dream. During the process, I drifted off to sleep and soon found myself in a dream in which Julia was present!

"I phoned my sister [the next morning] to let her know about my attempt at reaching her in her dream, but before I had a chance to say anything, she recounted the dream in full detail."

Angie also decided to try hypnotic regression in order to uncover anything she could about the events she'd been unable to remember consciously. Undergoing two hypnosis sessions, Angie was surprised to retrieve details of a childhood encounter in one session. Going back to age four, when she and her father had been blinded by a flash of light while riding in a van, Angie recalled being taken into a gray, cigar-shaped craft where she saw several men and women in white coats. One man with "long, dark blond hair" took charge of her, carrying the crying child to a strange table.

"It's metal and has an edge around it," she described, "like for blood to drain off. And there is something down at the foot, under the table, but I can't see it clearly."

Acting in what she perceived as a "hurried" manner, the man strapped her wrists down as she lay on the table and placed on her head a "headband thing" with moving red and yellow lights. The hypnotist instructed Angie to view the scene from a distance, rather than reliving it, and she obliged.

"I can see my hands twitching," she said. "The wristbands are making my fingers twitch and jerk. I'm lying there with the headband on, and my eyes are open. The pupils are dilated like I'm dead."

She then described a procedure in which a clear tube was inserted vaginally and filled with "a pinkish liquid" as one of the women pressed on Angie's abdomen. When she was revived, the blond man tried to "jolly" her out of her terrified state, and she was returned to the van, which exited the cigar-shaped craft by flying out of the opening "on its own," as Angie reported.

"We're coming down to the road," she said, "I can see it clearly because it's daytime, and the van lands smoothly on the road. It's moving by itself for a minute, and that's when I notice it's going in the wrong direction. We were going the other way before they took us."

"What is your father doing now?" the hypnotist asked.

"He sort of shakes his head," she said, "like he's perplexed, and he keeps driving."

In August and September 1993, Angie recalled three other encounters, including one in which she saw her father aboard the same craft. When she questioned him, he described an abduction memory from that same night, although he didn't recall seeing Angie. In another, she was given information about alien life in other parts of the galaxy, about their travel technology, and about their having created life forms on Earth, including humans.

But the next month, the abduction and encounter scenarios changed abruptly, beginning on October 2, when

Angie woke up and found herself downstairs in a guest room with "a youthful male humanoid" wearing "an oversized red plaid shirt, faded jeans, and black leathery boots." Angie felt in control of her senses, unlike some previous situations, and asked the young man several questions, including his origins. In spite of his very human appearance, he told her he and his kind were "extraterrestrials" and wanted to know if the term made her feel uneasy.

"No," she replied, "I'm not afraid of you any more." She could see a silvery disk outside the house and assumed she would be taken there, but instead the man embraced her and she became partially paralyzed from the chest up. Then he lay her on the floor and had intercourse with her, after which she felt faint and passed out.

She remembered this occurring again, on the nights of October 3 and 4, and on the morning after the October 3 encounter Angie awoke with blood dripping from her nostril and increasing congestion and pain in her shoulder. In spite of this, she had not been upset by the three encounters, and since the intercourse had not been frightening, she wondered why the man had induced the partial paralysis and subsequent loss of consciousness.

Four nights later, she went through an encounter that was far less pleasant. Angie went to bed very late that night, around 1:30 a.m., and folded her clothes neatly on a bedside table before turning out the light. In what seemed like only a few minutes later, she awoke fully alert, listening to the sound like a jet engine that was loud and getting louder. Her next perception was that she was not in the bedroom, but rather standing completely dressed in an unfamiliar grassy clearing in the woods near an old dirt road. And she wasn't alone. "With me were three apparently frightened young women," Angie described. "One was lying face-down in the grass weeping."

Angie became frightened herself, for the first time since her initial abduction. "My instincts said that we were about to be abducted by a force so great that we would not be able to control our situation no matter how hard we might pray to God."

One of the other women, tall and plump and brown-haired, started yelling, "Here they come! Here they come!"

The sound grew unbearable as a strange-looking airplane flew toward them and landed like a helicopter. Two of the women panicked and ran into the woods, while Angie and the brunette stood frozen in place by fear. A group of men in black uniforms emerged and began rounding up all the women. As they were hurried toward the craft, Angie said she remembered "telling them that I'm not an animal and do not appreciate them treating me like one."

Ignoring her, the men pushed the women into narrow compartments at the rear of the craft, which then took off and frightened Angie even more with its erratic flight. She began to pray and then blacked out.

"After coming to my senses," Angie reported, "I found myself sitting in a chair and at some place that looked like a military base. I saw several men in military uniforms leading some humans toward these long, gray buildings. "

Two men took Angie into one of the buildings, where she saw a group of people seated around a conference table, some in uniform and others in ordinary clothing. One of the men, who had on a uniform with many decoration ribbons, stared at Angie wordlessly from the table and engaged her in a brief telepathic conversation. Then a woman came up behind Angie, and when she turned to look at her, the woman's gaze paralyzed her. The woman gave Angie a dark red liquid to drink, which made her dizzy and sleepy to the point of passing out. After that, she remembered only a brief view of the buildings from a distance and then the sound of the strange aircraft once again.

When Angie underwent hypnosis, she chose to examine this experience, recovering a few more details. After passing out from the bitter liquid, Angie recalled waking up in one of five chairs that seemed to be on a stage or platform. "A man and three women were sitting in chairs at both sides of me," she said. "I experienced physical paralysis and couldn't think straight when the general gazed into my eyes. He wasn't any more than two inches from my face.

He lifted my hand, then dropped it, like checking to see if I was in a deep trance, then checked my pupils. He did the same with the others. The woman presented a small reddish-brown box to him," she continued, "and he pulled out a tube from underneath it and attached the tube to something between my chair and the next person's. I blacked out again and have absolutely no memories of what transpired during the remaining time I was there."

When she got out of bed the next morning, her neatly folded clothes were scattered on the floor. She had a hissing sound in one ear and problems hearing the rest of the day. And she discovered the door to the basement standing open that morning. When Angie called the next day to tell me about this incident, I could hear helicopters flying over her home. She had been very unnerved by the incident and said it was all "scary and confusing."

That fear turned to sheer terror the following month, when once again Angie was forcefully taken by men in military uniforms from her bedroom. Earlier that day, November 9, another dead cow was found in the barn. The body was unmarked, but blood had seeped from its nose and mouth. There was no sign of a struggle, however.

That night after going to sleep, Angie awoke to go to the bathroom, and immediately she heard helicopters approaching. From the bathroom window she looked out, but she saw nothing and could no longer hear the choppers. Angie went back to bed and to sleep, but woke up again hearing not only the helicopters but also the sound of a vehicle coming up the drive.

She tried to rouse Paul, but he wouldn't wake up.

The back door opened, and Angie went "limp" when a group of men in olive-drab jumpsuits came in to the bedroom. Paul started to stir, but one of the men touched him with a wand-like device and Paul stopped moving.

The men took Angie outside where two green helicopters were hovering. She was put inside one of them, given an injection, and told she was being taken in "for evaluation." She was also fitted with a chest and shoulder device from which a breathing tube was placed in her mouth for the duration of the flight, perhaps twenty minutes. The chopper landed in a rural area with buildings and many helicopters in view. Military personnel were busy on the grounds, some leading civilians, perhaps other abductees, through the base.

"A gray van approached our helicopter," Angie told me, "and stopped about twenty yards ahead of us. Two men in olive-drab suits exited the rear of the vehicle, and then a third one came out with a tall, slim man in a pinstripe shirt. The fellow with the striped shirt had metal cuffs on his wrists and white tape over his mouth, and appeared to be in a state of panic. Two men carrying black rifles came into the scene," she continued. 'That grieving man was pushed to the ground, and one of the armed men pumped one bullet into his back."

In complete terror, Angie was then carried over to where the man's body lay. She asked why "they had to kill that poor man."

"You talked," one of the men said.

"But what's this got to do with him?" she asked.

"We take one like him each time a recruit talks," he told her.

"You could have wasted me instead," Angie replied, but the man said she was too valuable as part of an alien "project" involving implants.

She said she knew they were trying to brainwash her and make her fear them, but the man said they only wanted to keep her in line. He told her that she would be forced to watch more such killings if she continued to "talk to Karla Turner" about her experiences, and that more of her cattle would also be killed.

She was then taken into a building and underwent a series of physical procedures, including blood-taking, a shower of some sort, and a gynecological exam, before being returned home.

Angie was extremely angry and frightened by the experience, and I was concerned for her safety when she told me about it. By that time, I had begun this book project, and I asked Angie if she wanted to withdraw from it.

But she refused to be intimidated by the threats and continued to cooperate with me.

Four nights later, the men in military uniforms returned, and Angie was flown to an area near a hillside where she was taken into an underground facility. She was given an injection, followed by a shower to remove some brown dust that had gotten on her earlier, and then by another gynecological procedure. She was told that she and some other women there were part of "a genetic experiment which involves cloning and DNA replication."

After this she was escorted to another area where several tables were covered by plastic sheeting, which one of the medical women removed. "I recall seeing two large control panels and two large metal crates near the table," Angie said. 'The medical woman told me that they call it the 'table of screams' because a lot of women who have been put there freak out when they get a look at some of the 'probes' that are used."

Placed on the table, Angie was fitted with a headphone-type device that emitted a loud beeping, and she temporarily lost consciousness. When she came to, she was face-down on the table but able to move. "A small silver box with the open end towards me sat just a few inches from my face," she said. "Inside the box was a gray and white mechanical device of some sort which made clicking sounds. The lady came around in front of me and poked a thin, black rod into the side of the mechanical device. She said, 'It's been deprogrammed. We've never had this sort of thing happen before'."

Angie asked if they were doing something with the implant in her head and was told "that there was more than one implant device in there, that two were the aliens' products and one came from them."

Angie asked, "Why in hell have you gone and stuck implants in my body? What are they for?"

The medical woman told her that the aliens do different things with them that her group couldn't discern. 'They won't give us all their knowledge, I'm sure you understand that by now," Angie reported the woman as saying.

Having encountered a number of physically different aliens, Angie asked which ones the woman meant. She was told that the military group was involved with some groups of aliens but not with two of the groups who had contacted Angie. She said the military group's implants "monitor how many times [implanted abductees] come into contact with alien beings" as well as recording "the approximate location of a pick-up."

In the course of further procedures, Angie was held down while the women inserted a probe into her left nostril. When they performed a second test, Angie was told that the alien implants had "deprogrammed" those from the military group.

Her next recollection is of being taken to a room with other women where they were all interrogated by an older man in an officer's uniform whom she remembered as a major. According to Angie, the major said, "You people are going to tell me everything. I don't want to be an asshole and force it out of you, but if that's what it takes...."

Three women were questioned before Angie, and when her turn came she was asked about the information she'd been given by the Whites and Grays about their implants. She told him that she'd seen four kinds of Grays and didn't know which ones had used the implants on her.

"You're lying," the major replied. "I'm going to ask you one more time."

"Which aliens do you want to know about?" she asked. "I told you I've been with a lot of them."

"Start with the slender gray aliens," he told her. "Did any of those talk about implants?"

"I can't think," she said, "you're confusing me." It was her way of evading his questions because she felt it was "none of his business."

He ordered that she be taken to another area called the "probing room," where she lost consciousness after receiving another injection.

After each abduction by the military group, Angie grew more and more apprehensive and fearful. When I asked her about any positive help she might have received from the aliens she thought of as her friends, Angie's reply, in a January 2, 1994, letter, showed how much more she now questioned her experiences than she had done in the beginning.

"Since that military group stepped into the scene," she wrote, "there haven't been any aliens to come to my rescue. I constantly pray for help and guidance from the good sources in the universe, but there just hasn't been any help on my part. I don't know which aliens are trying to help me, and which aliens are out to deceive me. The spiritual growth and all the good things I've experienced may not be linked to my [alien] experiences. Maybe it's just something I brought about all by myself."

Apparently there was someone else aware of her feelings, because six days after she wrote that letter Angie had an alien abduction for the first time in months, which seemed designed, in part, to placate her. After going to bed on the night of January 8, she woke up to find herself on board a craft in the company of a Gray. Angie said she was neither paralyzed nor in a trance state and clearly recalls the alien using some device to "locate and reactivate an implant" by insertion of something into her ear. She was then told they were finished with her and she would be returned home.

"Before I go," Angie said, "you are going to tell me what this is all about."

The alien replied that information had just been placed in the implant and that Angie would "know everything in due time." But she insisted on asking more questions. When she asked why the military personnel had given her so many injections, the alien said that they used "tranquilizer drugs on all recruits to prevent them from running away." She said the alien also apologized for the military group's "indiscretions" and told her she would not be made to watch any more "killing events."

Angie had her doubts about this and told the alien that the warning had been for her not to "talk," but that she had continued to "talk" since then. The alien replied that she should do what she felt was important. "He said the military people have been untruthful about most of what they've told me," she reported, "and that some of their demonstrations were mere illusions. It's part of their cover-up."

She also questioned him about the space craft and was told that it operated on "the power of the mind." But she was unable to ask anything more because four Grays entered and led her through a corridor to an exit from the craft just then.

"I saw that we were in a big hangar at some base," she said, "and there must have been more than fifty military people there."

She was told that those people would return her to her home, but before she could go over to them, one of the aliens used some device to render her unconscious. Her next memory was of being back in her bedroom, and that day she had recurrent bouts of pain on the side of her head where the probe had gone into her ear.

As with most abductees, there is no ending yet to Angie's story, nor a clear understanding of the agenda behind her repeated abductions. But there are certainly a number of important questions raised by her account, which has only been partially presented here.

Compared to other abduction scenarios, Angie's contains many of the typical elements: various physical exams, fetus-retrieval and baby presentation; visions of the desert world; sexual activities; training and instruction sessions; teleportation methods; the "black box"; punctures and bruises; and implants, to name a few. Similarly, her reports of activities and details in the encounters involving apparently military personnel contain much that is familiar from other accounts.

What is very untypical, however, is the richness of her recollections. In most abductions, the person can only remember small parts of the total event, and this is true for Angie, too, in many of the encounters. But in some of them she seems to have been allowed to retain more than the usual level of awareness. Either that, or she just naturally is not as susceptible at times to the mind-control procedures which are used to suppress abductees' memories.

The abundance of information she received is also untypical. Certainly there are many abductees who have been instructed on various topics in the same way Angie had been. But she has managed to retain an enormous amount of this information which can be correlated with the numerous but more incomplete reports from other cases, on such topics as mind-control methods, alien-human collusion, and implant capabilities.

Still, she doesn't recall everything, as she has noted and as hypnosis has shown. So why is she allowed to recall these particular things? Is this programmed or accidental? If programmed, by whom, and for what purpose?

Further questions are raised by a contradiction in the details of two related recent events. It concerns the controversial subject of covert cooperation between human agencies and alien groups. When Angie and the other women were questioned by the major, he focused at one point on what Angie knew about the implants of the Whites and Grays. This implied that his organization was not familiar with those kinds and thus not allied in any way. Angie had also been told that the military group worked with some aliens but not with all of them.

But in the January 8 abduction, Angie was aboard a craft with one of the Grays, who proceeded to discuss the military group in a negative manner. This implied that he was not allied with them. Yet, when that craft landed, Angie saw they were inside a military facility.

Some further explanation is clearly called for to resolve the confusion. From what she has observed of relations between our military organization, whatever its aegis, and their alleged alien allies, Angie thinks they are at odds in some ways. Her impression is that the human organization is responsible for the extreme cover-up activities rather than the aliens. But this is based in part upon one of the aliens' statement that they had no concern about their presence being known-a dubious statement, however, given their employment of memory suppression and virtual reality illusions.

Given the aliens' VRS capabilities, there is always a question of the reality of these events. Just recently, however, Angie's husband told her he'd had a strange dream that some men broke into the house and took her away. Unhappily, she had had the same dream that night.

Angie is keenly aware of the unanswered questions. "Although some of my experiences with them have led to a positive transformation," she once said, "the aliens certainly are not any more open with me now than they were five years ago....

"Until I undergo hypnosis and some truth is recovered, there's no way of my really knowing right now which aliens are trying to help me and which aliens are trying to deceive me. All of them seem to handle things clandestinely, even the good ones, and they're all alien in actions and appearance as far as I can tell.

"It could very well be that some types are experimenting on me for their own benefit and are lying to me just like they are lying to other people. I just don't think this is the case with all alien types I've encountered. I would want to think that at least one group is trying to help instead of harm and deceive me.

"I've learned to wash my hands of blind faith and am now beginning to use my God-given reasoning faculties and extreme caution, reasoning, and prayer in deciding how I should respond to the aliens," Angie said. "I am a human being, and we humans do have feelings and rights!"

9. Amy

Of all the contacts I received after INTO THE FRINGE was released, Amy's first letter was the most compelling. She wrote, as she explained, because it was the only way to get free of a compulsion that had begun in November 1992, after an extraordinary dream. The following week, she bought and read my book, and then began the compulsion to write me and share the dream.

Amy, however, as I would find out, has a strong sense of independence, self-control, logic, skepticism, and an admirable stubbornness. She resisted the "ridiculous" compulsion for several months, but by April she was ready to get it out of her system and reasoned that writing the letter would end it.

In the first part, Amy described some unusual events that corresponded with things I related in INTO THE FRINGE. These included odd phone behavior, which she humorously attributed to "The Phantom of the Operator," and unexplained electrical problems and noises in the house. None of the unusual experiences were attributed to alien activity, a glaring absence in comparison to the other contacts I'd gotten. But then she began to describe the dream. In the first scene, Amy and her daughters were in a campground where "huge tarantulas" chased them. They got in the car and drove away, but the car started flying upward, over the trees, where she saw a huge moon.

"In front of the moon," she wrote, "I saw the silhouettes of some small, thin beings. They had big heads like the aliens I've heard about, and they were moving about in front of the moon or light that glowed behind them. One turned and looked at me, and I saw large, black eyes. I wasn't afraid of him. I thought, Well, I've never actually seen one of them-now I know what they look like."

She heard a loud noise approaching, and then she flew onto a metal-roofed house. "I knew the metal might be hot," she noted, "so I knew not to touch it." Amy was on the second story, where she looked through "large windows" into one of the rooms. There she saw a group of men talking excitedly and heard a softer, female, voice telling them to "calm down because there was work to do." The men looked human, but the female was part of "a group of non-Earth representatives."

When she was brought into the room, she said, "The humans introduced me to a female alien wearing a white plastic mask so that her appearance would not frighten the others and so they wouldn't focus on her eyes. Even though she wore a mask, I could see her eyes through the holes in the mask. They were big, black eyes. From that point on, I remember being right next to her, and her face stayed very close to my face...very intense!"

The first part in the campground was either a natural dream or a screened sequence, but the illusory force rapidly disappeared as she moved from the campground to the room in the alien's company.

Amy said the alien explained that her race had been doing things to humans that they should not be doing. "She and several groups of her race wanted to stop the 'abuse' of the humans by her race. They were working with certain people on Earth to stop the process. The other humans in the room were ex-pilots, military officials, and other professionals."

I was riveted, now, because Amy's account echoed that of information I'd recently received, from two widely separated sources, about a covert program or effort by certain parties in the intelligence and military organizations to resist alien abductions and to assist abductees in certain ways.

There was no doubt in my mind that some in the military had an active hand in monitoring and questioning abductees, as my husband Casey had gone through such an experience. Other abductees-including Leah Haley and Debbie Jordan-had also reported contacts, intrusions, and kidnappings by human, seemingly military, agents, and there was objective evidence in some cases to back up the reports. But this was a far cry from accounts of human agents actively helping abductees, much less a coalition of human and alien parties working against the abduction agenda, as the information alleged to come from the intelligence community has claimed. So far as I knew, this claim was not generally known from public ufological material. Yet here it was in Amy's dream.

Her account went on to say that the masked alien dominated Amy's attention, "putting" information directly into her mind. "She explained all kinds of things, but I don't remember it all," Amy wrote. "I think I remember my role in the plan, but I don't like knowing so I forget. I don't want to remember!

"After she told me about those things, she told me about implants. She put a thin, pencil-like metal instrument in my right ear and I thought, Ohl This is gonna hurtl but I couldn't move or stop her. To my surprise, it didn't hurt! She pulled out the instrument, and on one end was a flat, circular, small, flesh-colored...thing. It was...reddish colored but sort of transparent. If I looked closely I could see something inside the thing.

'This part," Amy stressed, "when she pulled that thing out of my ear, was the most real seeming, the most clear and most intense part of my dream. It was very important that I remember! I think she said that to me."

Amy said the alien explained certain things about the implant, and then she bent over while the alien removed a second implant from Amy's neck. It was a "dark, cylindrical" object about "three centimeters long" with "something sticking on the end of it like very fine wires." The alien then explained how the implant operated.

"She showed me the thing she had pulled out of my neck," Amy reported, "and said, This is embedded deep into the spinal cord. I can't remember exactly what she explained about it, but I think the thing controlled the muscles of the body when activated. It blocked the brain and became the 'central command' of the body. She also said that sometimes these things were implanted into a person's lower back somewhere between the fourth lumbar and the sacrococcygeal, but it was more commonly 'planted' in the neck. I don't want to remember how or why this thing functioned." The alien told Amy more about the implants, about her group's efforts to remove them from abductees, and other things Amy couldn't recall.

"I remember that she was sorry for what some of 'her people' had done," Amy wrote, "but she-and others-were trying to help. The last thing I remember was that she was showing me something on a very large TV or computer screen or window."

Amy then concluded her letter, saying that when she read my book she thought she should share the dream with me, although it felt "ridiculous" to write to someone about a "dream." She made no claims for the dream, nor for having any actual alien experiences, and she did not ask for any advice, help, or response. Clearly, Amy had written the letter only to make the compulsion "stop bugging" her.

I didn't need an invitation to respond, however, as her information was too compelling to ignore. Amy had commented that "certain elements of my dream resembled parts of your book," but when I read back through the dream I could see very little actual similarity other than the facts that my husband had seen military people in an abduction and that I had recalled an ear implant. I suspected there were other details she hadn't shared, however, because people very often hold back from the entire truth when first "testing the waters" with someone they don't know. And not only was I intrigued by the content of the dream, I was also curious to know more about Amy's potential situation because she lived in the very same city where my family and I lived during the experiences I wrote about in FRINGE. Finally there was the fact of her compulsion to contact me rather than some other researcher, and the possibility that our contact was being directed.

I got her number from information and phoned as soon as possible. I learned that she was a divorced mother of two young daughters who had just finished her master's degree in counseling. She was born in Dallas in 1953, of Scotch, Irish, English, and French ("Cajun") ancestry and had lived most of her life in the Metroplex area. Amy was truly surprised by my interest. In fact, as she later confessed humorously, she wondered if I were "one taco short of a full combo plate" for being "interested in a dream."

Amy did agree, however, to share more information about many of her experiences, which she confessed were rather "fringe-like" even though they didn't in conscious reality involve aliens or UFOs. I asked her to describe any past unusual events, of any sort, and a few weeks later she complied, with a list of psychic, dream, telepathic, and miscellaneous experiences.

"It was a lot harder [to make the list] than I expected," she said. "It was like trying to see through a dense fog. I've always kept these things at a distance from my awareness."

That distance was rapidly diminishing, and in the course of the next several months, we explored together her memories and the accounts found in the journals she had kept for many years. Amy's progressive self-rediscovery is a story of its own. layer after layer of repression and denial were stripped away as she read back through the journals and realized that some powerful phenomenon had been part of her life from the beginning.

Even as young as four, Amy had a feeling of "influence" from an unseen source. By seven, she had recognized this source more directly, calling it the "Many in One" because she could hear many people speaking in unison. In adolescence Amy called this force the "Council."

"At first I only heard them talking to one another, not to me," she explained. "I have only heard them audibly a few times, like when they told me my mother was going to die (she did) and other events that would happen in the future (the events did happen)," she explained. "I usually sense a dialogue of symbols, images, and concepts.

When I 'listen,' I forget how to speak, words cease to exist, and I forget what using vocal cords feels like. I call it the 'language without words.' No trance states."

She also had a brief yet vivid memory of seeing a small, dark figure move rapidly into her bedroom doorway and crouch down one night. And when she was ten, Amy recalled walking alone into a field near her house very early one morning. She had no idea why she was going there, and she couldn't remember what happened when she arrived nor much about her return home.

In 1965, Amy dreamed of being in the back yard and waving goodbye to a UFO hovering above her, and the next moment she woke up surprised to be in her bed. The dream felt so real that she got up to see if the UFO was still nearby. It should be recalled, incidentally, that 1965 was a major "flap" year for UFO sightings and encounters throughout the country.

A few months later, Amy went through a sudden internal change of attitudes and interests, began to study the sciences, and blossomed intellectually in school. The psychic element also grew increasingly stronger, and in her later teenage years Amy started having many dreams of an unknown "lady" teaching her intensely about a number of things, beginning with levitation. Although she called them dreams, the teaching sessions had a real effect on Amy, and she once accidentally levitated a bottle of shampoo and almost frightened herself to death. When the sessions began to include instructions on affecting electrical systems, Amy sometimes witnessed the physical, external effects of her ability on appliances in her environment.

This is also the time when she accepted the fact that her existence was somehow being guided by the Council. She was led to study certain subjects and was implanted with many concepts and ideas about time, space, physics and other complex thoughts. Altogether, in fact, Amy became aware of a sense of destiny and purpose she couldn't understand but could only feel as a certainty.

"I'm scared," she noted in her journal for January 1971, "because something so unknown and powerful is pulling at me, every moment I'm caught off guard and pulled. I'm being pulled to a state or level of mind I cannot fight...eventually I'll go, but in order that I won't be pulled under I've got to prepare. Every time, I shout, 'I'm not ready, leave me be!' and if I think of something else I'm okay." Other entries during this period include the comments, "I know certain things must be done, like a robot I obey," and "I feel like a messenger. I have always felt my purpose, but I never knew it."

Much of what she received came not in words but in images and concepts. There was one statement, however, in which the words were clear: I am I. I am many. We are many. I am not. Amy said this statement was a sort of "riddle" about the Council. "It referred to my existence as an individual (I am I), my union with all minds (I am many), my absorption into the Oneness (We are many), and my identity as One (I am not). It is repeated often in my diaries. It's sort of like an 'oath,' 'pledge/ or understanding."

It is also quite reminiscent of messages given to Lisa and Anita, the They are you-you are them told to Lisa and the IRU-URI communication Anita received during a "question and answer" meditation.

Amy continued to have the training-session dreams, recorded in volumes of journals, in which she was shown how to perform levitation, affect electrical systems, and move through solid objects.

Looking back through the journals, she turned up a wealth of evidence showing the long-term involvement of unknown forces in Amy's life. Some of these details, in spite of her insistence that she had no recollection of being abducted, did indicate probable alien activity in the midst of it all.

Indicators of alien involvement such as time gaps and UFO sightings were in her journal and in her memory, although she had downplayed most of these events. Besides the missing-time episode and the small crouching figure she'd seen at age seven-which was accompanied by her eye being matted shut the next morning-there was also an incident at age fifteen of an unexplained physical presence intruding upon her.

Staying with her niece one night, Amy felt there was "something" in the bedroom before she went to sleep. She turned the light back on to look, but no one was visible. After going to sleep, she had a strange, frightening dream about a family trying to reach the spirit of a dead relative, and when the people in the dream started screaming at one point, Amy started screaming, too, and woke up.

"I felt someone kicking or jabbing me in the back, the whole bed was shaking, the canopy was flapping, and I felt someone/ something in my room again. I ran...to my mother's room and told her, and she kissed me and said it was just a bad dream." It was so upsetting, in fact, that she refused to sleep in that room for two weeks.

Other suspicious dreams were recorded through the years, including two in 1977 that hinted strongly of an alien encounter beneath a screen memory. Amy said she dreamed "of being called out of my house by a small boy standing in the wooded park" nearby. "He took my hand," she said, "and we walked into the park at night."

The description of the second dream was more detailed. "I just dreamt a 'lady-doctor' gave me a shot, a tranquilizer," she noted in an April 1977 entry. 'Then she disappeared and in the next dream I was being hypnotized. A man whom I seemed to trust and several other people I could barely see were standing around me. The man was so gentle; he told me to relax and somehow telepathically he explained [that] the dream I had earlier of receiving a tranquilizer was sort of a pre-hypnotic suggestion to relax me for the next dream. He then hypnotized me. I don't remember the rest, but my feelings in the dream were that of reaching out to those energy forces I call the Council."

This one was the most intriguing dream to date. In some ways it seemed to fit the screening phenomenon behind which abductions are often hidden, but it also seemed to have a very actual and "human" element to it.

That was not the case, however, with a dream Amy recorded on May 27, 1981, and it was here that the indication of alien activity became palpable. "I had the most unusual dream the other night," she noted. "I don't ever remember dreaming such a dream before. My body was floating horizontally through the house. I've dreamt of flying before and such, but always vertical and always mixed with unreal elements. But in this dream I knew I was asleep and I floated through my bedroom door, through the kitchen, turned the corner and floated into the back porch. I saw the walls go by, and each detail was as it really is. I began to note the lack of unconscious symbols as in a dream and felt alarm. I became frightened at the moment I felt it was not a dream. I felt suddenly sucked back into my bed -through the wall?!"

Amy drew a picture of the scenario as she'd remembered it in 1981. "Of all the dreams I've ever had," she wrote, "I'd say that was not a dream! It seemed real, it looked real, and it felt real. I don't know how, but I know I woke up exactly at the point I drew in the picture. I remember going through the window in the back door... I remember going up through the tree limbs. That's all I remember until I felt 'sucked' back into my bed."

The details of her "dream" were exactly like those reported in many abduction onsets, and this, coupled with the earlier possible missing-time episode and other indicators, pointed to alien involvement with Amy. She had a conscious UFO sighting the following year, in July 1982, when she was living in the north Texas city where my family and I had also lived-at the same time, in fact, though unacquainted with one another. When she first mentioned this sighting to me in an early letter, she skimmed over the incident, saying merely, "I think I've only seen a UFO (actually five UFOs) once when they flew over my apartment years ago." I asked her for more details when we met, but her account was not much more specific. She said she was outside in the daytime when she saw the five craft approaching, and that she had called out to a neighbor to look at them, too, and then had walked around her apartment still watching them.

But later, Amy told me that "something weird" occurred during that discussion. "I didn't tell you, but it has bothered me since," she said. "I remember seeing the UFOs coming toward me as I sat in front of the apartments. Then they flew, slowly and without any sound, directly overhead. That part is still vividly clear. I realized what they were, and I got excited. I yelled at the guy in the apartment nearest to come see them. Then I walked along under them, directly under them...and I never took my eyes off them.

"But when I reached the back of the apartments, my memory is all messed up. Up to that point, everything is crystal clear...but after I went to the back of the apartments, I have two sets of memories. I remember watching them fly off slowly, but I also remember getting binoculars or my small telescope and looking at them. I didn't have binoculars at all. My telescope was still packed away."

Unfamiliar with the screening practices employed during abductions, Amy couldn't understand how there could be differing memories of the same time span. One 'memory track' contains the conscious parameters of the event: initial sighting of the UFOs, calling to her neighbor, walking toward the back of the apartments, and seeing the craft fly away. What is missing from this track is the continuity from the point where she sees the UFOs directly over her, to the point where she is watching them depart-a missing-time episode.

The second 'memory track' apparently provided a filler for that time gap. This memory tells her that she watched the UFOs through either a telescope or binoculars in that interim, which would have necessitated her going into the apartment at some point and unpacking a box to get the telescope, or getting binoculars, and going back outside, where her conscious memory picked up again. But this clearly didn't happen in reality, no matter what the second memory track told her, for the box was still packed and she did not even own binoculars. Something else happened in the time gap which she was not allowed to recall correctly, which is standard operating procedure in an abduction.

The event was confusing to Amy, as were the dreams she occasionally had of waving farewell to a UFO. In one such dream from the winter of 1988, she was with her daughters in a field behind their apartment, waving goodbye to the UFO. "When I woke up in bed," she said, "I was still cold from being outside. I got up and went to make sure the kids were back in bed, that's how real it seemed to me.

In all of these previous events and dreams and memories, Amy had recalled nothing about actual aliens or being inside a UFO. The dream of November 1992, however, where she clearly saw the gray, masked female "non-Earth representative," took her, reluctantly, to a much more intense level of recognition that the alien phenomenon was a part of her life.

And when Amy realized how numerous and complex the unusual events had been since her childhood, she decided to explore some of those memories through regressive hypnosis. As a counselor, she was familiar with the theory of regression work, but she had never experienced it.

Amy arranged to meet with Barbara Bartholic in the summer of 1992 and went through two regression sessions, hoping to learn more about the part of her life that had been kept from her. In the first regression, they explored some early childhood and adolescent memories, but it was extremely difficult for Amy verbally to relate much of what she recalled in the trance state. It became apparent that Amy's response was inhibited by a severe block against talking about her experiences, especially when she was able to remember a threat made to her by a Gray when she was very young. In that fragmented memory, the Gray told her that if she told anyone about the visit, her cat would be killed. Amy did try to tell her mother, however, and the kitten subsequently died, although today Amy is reluctant to believe the death was a deliberate act by the aliens.

She also briefly remembered an experience a few years later, of a huge craft of some sort hovering just above her father's garden. She told Barbara that she was looking at it very closely, wanting to push it away, but somehow she received a clear impression that said, "Don't touch." Amy said she did not want to go into the craft, but she was taken inside, where she saw the same Gray who had threatened to kill the cat.

"I saw myself talking to someone inside it," she said. T wasn't supposed to tell. This 'guy' telling me they would kill my cat was inside it. We were near the doorway, and he was taller than I and his face was right up in my face."

Next, she and Barbara explored the memory she had at age fifteen of something jabbing or kicking her and the bed shaking. "During the session," she said later, "I saw myself going to the back door. I couldn't understand because I looked sort of ghost-like and I was floating, not walking." As she tried to look at this event, however, that same scene kept repeating, of her going to the door and reaching for the knob, and she could not get past that point. "I guess it was too hard to look at," she said. "I remember the actual feelings of something in my room and being kicked or jabbed in my back-it felt so real. It was terrifying!"

The third episode they explored involved a childhood "lesson" about religion. "'Churches are not God'," she reported being told, "'statues and pictures are not God. Priests and nuns are not God. Nobody sins.' That doesn't make sense."

"What else did they tell you?" Barbara asked.

'To look beyond the pictures," Amy replied. "It's all lies. That made me mad, that all nuns and the priest were lying. Why did they tell me that when it's not true? They said Jesus was something like a soldier or something, supposed to lead people in some kind of direction."

"What did they want you to know?" Barbara persisted.

'That I'm not supposed to [believe]," she said. "I can pretend to be confirmed. I have to pretend that I believe it, say the prayers."

In the second session, Amy retrieved a brief recollection of another "dream" encounter with a Gray she had in April 1993. "I had dreamt that some UFOs were picking people up here and there," she told me later. "Certain people, not at random. I stood and waited for them to come, I was supposed to wait. They shined a bright light on me, and then I was in the ship. First, I was facing a very shiny surface, like mirrors, then I turned around. I saw a lot of Grays at some instruments or controls, very busy.

"One Gray turned to face me, and I knew him. In fact, he was the same Gray I saw [in November 1992] in front of the moon or light. We talked with our eyes. I felt that he and I were very close once, we had been together once somewhere, and we had been the 'same.' It was like we were twins. I actually missed him! I wanted to go back to 'before' because I was remembering something. He told me I was to 'stay here.' I guess he meant in the present."

She also described the identity she felt with the "twin" alien. "I felt that I was one of them," she said, "and I was thinking of Barbara as 'a human with a mouth.' It was like looking through the eyes of a Gray! If I think of it as I am-human-they seem cold and uncaring. If I remember the way it felt to be one of them, in the dream, it is not cold, not uncaring, just the way it is."

In the hypnosis session, Amy could see the two of them in the bedroom, engaged in telepathic conversation, and feeling an old kinship with the entity. When Barbara asked why the Gray was there, Amy said, "I'm not supposed to know."

"Ask what you are supposed to know," Barbara suggested.

"He said in the next decade people will be expected to think the same," she reported, "being taught to think the same, like them. Make them easier."

Expanding later on what she was told, Amy said that in the coming decade the aliens doing the abductions would also promote a program in which people will be "taught to think the same. The sad part was that everyone will think it's normal and it is their idea. Even being an 'individual' will seem real but not in actuality. He and other aliens are trying to stop the process. It's been going on for a long time already."

Under hypnosis, as Amy tried to explain this information, she suddenly said, "He tells me to remember the rules. I'm trying. He was trying to help me remember. Departure from the program will result in synapse damage. It's so hard, without words, with words."

"What was that about?" Barbara asked.

"Do what you know to do," Amy parroted the statement of rules from the Gray, "be human, be what you are. Rule number two: No memories, rule number two."

These "rules" were given to Amy very early in her experiences with unidentified entities, and they always included a program to inhibit her talking about these events. An entry in her journal at age seventeen records one of the "rules": "I must not repeat previous mistakes." Amy said the mistake she was not supposed to repeat was the "mistake" of telling her mother about the things she had experienced.

The first time as an adult when she tried to tell someone else, external interference stopped her, as the journal entry for December 16,1979 shows. "I was writing a letter to my boyfriend tonight," she recorded. "I was listening to the radio. When I began writing of the difference between what the heart feels and what the brain knows [a lesson imparted to her by the Council], the radio began emitting every tone tolerable and intolerable to the ear. I was about to say something in a letter. I cannot remember what I wanted to say." The interrupting noise contained "voices, in unison, in some (foreign?) language."

Under hypnosis, Amy constantly had difficulty talking about the events, and she often repeated the rule against "telling." When Barbara tried to discuss the implanted blocks later, Amy was doubtful and couldn't accept the idea of the Council programming such an inhibition. It wasn't until she searched back through the old journals and saw entry after entry about not "talking" that she finally acknowledged the evidence of possible programmed control.

Her memories of the November 1992 dream-event were much more detailed, and easily discussed, as if the programming were ineffective, at least to a point. She penetrated several screens, recognizing that the large spider was actually a floating probe device in the room with her and the human figures she'd recalled. She also realized that she was with them and the spidery probe, for part of the encounter, in her own apartment.

But the most important information to emerge concerned the implants. When she described the flesh-colored object removed from her ear, she told Barbara that it was used as a transmitter and monitor. Amy said that the masked alien also explained the purpose of the implant she removed from the spine.

"She said that it short-circuits and it can kill!" Amy said. 'They can kill as many as they want. It's in the neck. It's old, but some people have them. When they want to kill them, they...I don't like that thing. It does many things."

"What other things?" Barbara inquired.

"They make people like puppets!" Amy exclaimed. "She says they can control anyone that way. Bunch of damn robots walking around. But they're taking them out. They're old. Sometimes in the base of the spine, real low, but that's only half of the control. The other half controls up and down. Up to the brain or down the body. Old. They use something else now."

"Where does the new one go?" Barbara asked.

"Cerebellum," Amy answered.

"How do they put it in?"

"Not in the back like the old ones," Amy replied, pointing instead to a spot behind her ear. "You couldn't take it out, only they can. They can make...the people with the new ones and old ones in them...do what they tell them to do. If they don't, they do other things, switch them like puppets, switch them off. They can kill them, or turn it, many different degrees....they can use it as punishment, take away control but leave consciousness, or control the consciousness. Or they can kill. I'm mad!

"On one end it can kill, the other end, control, and in-between levels. Punishment is in the middle where there's consciousness but no control. Repetition, over and over, the fear takes over, and they don't have to punish any more. Fear is paired with punishment, so they don't have to move the switch so far. Fear and control. And if that doesn't work, they switch it to kill. When the body stops, it disintegrates all implants. Electrical activity ceases. Huh! That's gross but funny. They use our own brains as the batteries...feedback loop like a generator, through the implant and circuits back. When the circuit is broken, the implant dissolves. Little, like a Tic-Tac."

"How many people do you think have implants?" Barbara asked. "Is there a selection?"

"Whoever responds to fear, in any degree," Amy replied. "They test you. She says they tested me for the fear, nuclear holocaust fear [referring to numerous nightmares]. I did good, became afraid. I was wondering how they found me. Oh, follow the signal. The old ones they can follow easily. They changed to new ones, changed the signals, those buggers. They [the abducting and implanting aliens] know they're [the 'apologetic' alien-human group] out there taking them out, and they don't like it. That's why they change them sometimes, put in a different signal."

"Who does this changing?" Barbara asked.

'The others...other tribes?" Amy tried to explain.

Barbara asked her to describe these others, but Amy was focused on something else. "She says it's here in a year," she said, pointing to her forehead.

"What is there in a year?" Barbara asked.

"What I'll need, tools," Amy answered. "Focus, very important. She say's I'm not ready yet, to know. In a year. She said I'll remember the three guys standing over there. They're watching. They're not regular. They can talk with their eyes. Don't know if they learned it or what. The silver-haired one, [and] one with glasses."

"Are they alien?"

"Some. Their eyes, they wear contact covers. Without them," Amy explained, "they're slit, but they look like people. Not cat's eyes, too big. A line. He says he's a lot like me anyway. Gray-silver hair, he's the main one. He's telling me to forget them. Six feet tall, average build, regular shirt."

"How about his face?"

"Kind of not thin, not fat, right size for the body," she said. "The eyes don't fit." She indicated that the man had a widow's peak hairline. "Coarse hair," she said, "average length, like an average businessman. He could be one, with those contact lenses. He's nice."

"What about the other two men?" Barbara asked.

"He said, Don't look. He let me look at him but not at them. One has on contacts, though, I saw that. Brown, dark eyes but no pupil or iris or center spot, if people look closely. That's why they sometimes wear tinted glasses."

"How do you feel about these guys?" Barbara wanted to know.

"Sad," Amy told her. 'They used to be where I was, manipulated by them. They don't want to tell me too much because it was more than I can take. That's why he says to look away."

"Are all humans manipulated?"

"Not all."

As difficult as it was for Amy to speak freely in a trance state, out of hypnosis later she described the things she'd been unable to articulate. She gave detailed descriptions of the scene in the dining room, where she saw the probe accompanying the three men. After being introduced to the masked alien, she was next aware of being taken into a large, underground room. She was led by two beings into the room, noticing the rough rock walls that proved she was below ground level. At that time she lived directly across the street from a FEMA underground facility, and that facility had undergone a massive expansion, both above ground with numerous antenna arrays and new buildings, and below the ground as well. But there was no way of knowing if she were in that facility or somewhere else.

Amy sketched the room in the facility where she and the men were with the masked aliens. She had smelled a certain odor during the hypnotic recollection, resembling "polish remover," which came from "a black ribbed tube on the side of the room." The masked alien told her it helped the aliens present to breathe better. And when questioned about evidence of a military atmosphere in the facility, Amy said she didn't observe any.

She had more to say about the humans, too, especially the silver-haired leader she nicknamed "Ol' Slit Eyes." "Ever since the hypnosis session," she remarked, "the image of Ol' Slit Eyes has stayed with me, vividly. Once you 'talk' that way, you always feel the link. I get the feeling Ol' Slit Eyes is either in our government or some high position in the military," she added. "People see him every day but don't know who he really is."

As for the other two men, she said, 'The feelings I got from those three guys was deep sadness. They were designed like we are. They were watching me 'talk' with Ol' Gray and assessing how I handled the information and my 'loyalty.' It was just a feeling I caught from them."

Concerned about what she remembered being told of the implant's placement and functions, Amy went to medical texts for information about the cerebellum and medulla oblongata, the locations identified for the implants. She learned that the medulla is a switching center for nerve impulses of the higher brain centers controlling vital functions such as temperature, pulse, swallowing, and breathing.

The cerebellum was identified as the control source for muscle tone and equilibrium, as well as voluntary movements, coordination, and even the vocal cords-which, Amy noted, might explain the physical difficulty some abductees experience when trying to discuss their encounters. The information corresponded with the controls the masked alien said were functions of the implants.

After the November 1992 dream-event, Amy continued to recall several other dream-memories. She had sudden flashback memories and also witnessed more overt evidence of alien intrusions. She had more dreams of moving through solid objects, one involving her daughters, and Amy said she was not "happy" about seeing entities with them, although she felt the tall beings standing there with them were "quiet," "wise," and "rather nice." She dreamed of being aboard a craft, again with masked aliens, who said that humans were going to be told "who and what they really are" as well as "the truth about everyone." In another dream, she was made to feel that the "government" was "going to kill" her for talking about what the government was doing to people.

During one "teaching dream" Amy woke up and could actually hear the voice of the "lady" talking in her head. "It is not a dream!" she noted in her journal. 'Tried to write what the 'lady' was saying, heard her say, 'NO!' and suddenly began forgetting. Tried to write fast but hand went numb. Very tired all day, took a nap-more teaching dreams."

One of the most disturbing dreams occurred in June 1993, where Amy said she "had the vivid sensation of being held still by wires or tubes going into my head." Everything about the dream felt real. "I was pissed!" Amy said. "I could actually feel something going into my head. I wanted to pull them out, but I couldn't get my hands up to my head, my hands wouldn't move.

'Then I heard someone say, in my mind, You don't want to pull them out. You will hurt yourself. With that warning I saw a clear image of what would happen if I pulled the things out of my head. I saw the wires/tubes coming out and pieces of my brain were stuck to them and dropped off onto the floor. I just had to be still until it was finished. It didn't hurt," she added. "I was just so mad at not being able to move my head. I've never had a dream like that before. I'm still made as hell!"

On the night of September 20, 1993, Amy experienced a time gap, and her record of the event in her journal is very typical of such reports. After first noting that the phone made a strange "beep" at 11:17 p.m., she wrote, "I was sitting here at my desk in my study, and I noticed that I felt funny all of a sudden. I've felt that sudden, brief anxiety feeling before."

Her daughter walked in at that moment, and Amy reacted angrily because the child should have been in bed by that time, 12:07 a.m. "Then I went back to my work," she wrote, "and I felt bad that I had yelled at Grace. A few minutes later, I heard a noise that sounded like the door knob of the front door being turned. I thought Grace was opening the door to look for me (when I take the dog out). I jumped up and looked out the little window on the front door, but Grace was not outside.

"I turned on the light, but no one was on the porch. I opened the door and looked out, but no one was outside. I thought it was strange that I'd heard that sound. I went back to my work in my study. Then I looked at the time, and it was 1:27 a.m.!! I couldn't believe it! I'd lost an hour and twenty minutes."

Seamlessly, the time gap had occurred, and she had no memory of any disruption. But other times she had flashback memories pop up suddenly, including one scene in which she woke up one night hearing the words, Did you think it was all by accident? The statement's meaning was clear, she said, "that the Earth is a giant zoo or experiment."

Other such "downloadings" of ideas and scenes included one of a "future world" our children will "inherit," a world that is "dying." On one occasion, the thought, We were without form played through her head repeatedly. Two other such thoughts were more disturbing: Survival of the fittest. That's why wars are promoted, one said, and the other repeated, Death is the journey Home.

She also recalled a lesson which showed how the aliens use "frightening images" through 'mental projections" to control humans. "Fear is the real enemy," she said.

In April 1993, Amy had her first taste of a phenomenon all too familiar to abductees: the black helicopters. After the first one flew over her home she noted, "They really do exist-now I know what one looks like." Other such flights have occurred since then, frequently late at night with repeated circular passes above her home.

And like so many other abductees, Amy has reason to believe her children have been touched by the phenomenon. One daughter recently said her leg was tingling "the way it feels when you put it through the wall," indicating to Amy that the child might well have been receiving the same sort of instruction she herself had. Her other daughter described two types of "balls of light" she has seen repeatedly in the house. On is larger than a basketball and multicolored, and the other type is smaller, displaying a trail or tail of some sort.

Amy was very concerned about further evidence of her children's involvement after what she thought was a dream turned out to be highly questionable. In the first part, she was aboard a ship with several smaller Grays and two or three six-foot-tall entities. The Grays told her that human concepts of "Armageddon" were not correct. "I remember thinking that what they told me was nothing like anything I, or anyone, had ever imagined," she said. And while this occurred, Amy said she could feel the taller beings "directing" the lecture and that their mind was in her mind, an intensely felt presence that made her "want to cry."

It was similar to the intensity of the "lady" who taught her things, she said. "No matter how tough I consider myself to be, I wouldn't stand a chance against the Tall Ones," she emphasized. "I think they reminded me that they have me, body and soul, and always have had me."

In the next part of the dream, she and her daughter Grace were involved in a series of scenes and events culminating with a police car approaching them. Amy said it had very bright lights that were "not right for a police car." The policeman inside, whom she didn't like, spoke to her, but then she awoke from the dream when her other daughter began coughing. She later went back to bed, hearing a "loud static-buzz sound" before falling asleep.

The next morning while cooking, Amy said her ear began to itch. "I rubbed my finger in my ear and felt something inside and outside of my ear. I looked at my finger, and there was some dried blood on it. I went to the bathroom and looked in the mirror. I could see dried blood in my ear and down my cheek."

Frightened that this had something to do with the strange dream, she carefully questioned her daughters to see if their night had been disturbed. Grace said she'd had a weird dream, and Amy began to tell her about the dream she had. When she reached the part about the colored lights on the police car, Grace finished the sentence for her, describing them as "like a rainbow." Amy asked her how she remembered seeing them, but Grace couldn't explain.

Amy's memories and the children's various remarks indicate alien contact with the entire family, although Amy is more convinced by the "hard evidence" and conscious experiences she has witnessed. Grace's recent spate of nosebleeds, for example, are a worrisome indication of possible implant activity, and Amy has further been mystified by certain unexplained scars on her body, including the circular scar on her shoulder and a one-inch linear scar down the middle of her nose that appeared in late 1993. This sort of evidence-as well as her conscious daytime UFO sighting in January 1994, of four objects merging into one-are all unwelcome because they make it difficult for Amy to reject the phenomenon's reality.

She knows that it is more than a question of random abductions, from the information she has been shown, and she is concerned about the direction and nature of events indicated by the information.

In November 1993 she recorded a vivid dream in which she was with other people in a large room. "We were told that we were selected to experience the end of the world," she wrote. "God was this ball of light that looked like a little sun. God was telling us that what we experienced was for all...that we should feel honored and lucky to experience the end of the world."

It was explained that Amy and the other humans were really "spirit beings" seeking challenging experiences. "Our true nature is to seek every opportunity to grow and to learn. Even sadness, sorrow, pain, and misery represent opportunities to experience and learn. I understood that the meaning of life was just to experience, that's all-experience."

This message resonates with another communication Amy has had from her unseen guides, telling her that humans are "a species within a species" and that our bodies are mere "containers" for the spiritual entities we truly are.

Another piece of information came in a conscious flash or vision, in which it was explained that a particular person would be coming to public notice claiming to be Christ. Amy said she was shown how all the religious people around the world would perceive this person as the incarnation of whatever deity they worshiped, and that he would be accepted as god on earth. This would cause many people to turn against those who didn't accept the new figure, leading to the persecution and suppression of what is actually true. In effect, she explained, the false leader and his false religious teaching would win out over spiritual truth.

A startling encounter in January 1994 had caused Amy to wonder even more about her lifelong involvement with the "Council." She heard about a very strange group of people, who called themselves the "Total Overcomers" or the "Omega" group, holding meetings in the Dallas area. Two of her acquaintances attended the meetings, and from the details they reported, Amy decided to invite the "Overcomers" to hold a meeting in her city, which they did. At that meeting, they told Amy and others attending that they had just emerged from their "classroom" after eighteen years of preparation under the total guidance of their twenty-four elders. Now they were traveling through the country to "harvest" the people who had been "implanted" with the proper knowledge and who were ready to make the transition to the next stage of "more than human."

This required breaking all human ties of love, family and friendship-bonds that keep us tied to the material world-as well as living in celibacy and surrendering all decisions to the "elders." They also said that everyone but their group had been warped and programmed negatively, either by society's false values or, in cases of alien contact, by "Luciferian" aliens-which included all groups except the one that had originally instructed the "elders."

Amy described the four "Overcomers" whom she met as tall, thin, pale, asexual in dress (black clothing) and hair style, "clone-like" in appearance, and rigidly controlled emotionally. In fact, she said that she could not feel any "souls" in these four people. Their message was equally rigid: followers must go with the "Overcomers" immediately, without a word to their families, with no belongings, and without any clue as to where they will go next.

These cultish demands were weird enough to Amy, but the truly disturbing aspect of the "Overcomers," she said, was the details and phrasing of their tenets given by the "elders," for they echoed exactly the things that Amy has been taught by her "Council." And the products of those teachings-in this cult, at least-felt extremely wrong.

"After all I've been learning about implants and mind-control," she told me, "I must ask who the Council really is. I am so afraid of them now. What if they have been programming me all this time to do things someday that may not be good for my planet? They have never told me to do anything contrary to my beliefs before, but what if they are just gaining my trust? What if they really are good and teaching me to help my planet and I stop listening to them? What if they are just some defense mechanism and all just my imagination? Somehow I'd rather be crazy than for it all to be real. So, since I don't know who or what the Council really is, I am listening to them more cautiously. I just keep asking God to help me find the Truth. God I am sure of."

10. Casey and Karla

After asking these eight courageous women to share their experiences with the public, it is only proper that I also give an account of the things my husband, Casey, and I have witnessed since the first year of activity recounted in INTO THE FRINGE. We have repeatedly been asked about further experiences, and the following summary will serve to fulfill that request, in addition to increasing the body of knowledge upon which research depends.

The first intense period of dealing with alien activity lasted from late 1987 through most of 1990, but after that the encounters dramatically waned in our daily life. We breathed a figurative sigh of relief, hoping that the aliens had moved on to another task. Besides, having become active in abduction research, this relatively peaceful period allowed us to focus on learning from other people's experiences, expanding our base of knowledge from the personal level to that of general society.

I still kept a calendar notation of any questionable or unusual events, but the frequency was so low that a journal wasn't needed any longer. In all of 1990, for instance, I recorded signs of only eight possible events, only three of which were evinced in a conscious or objective manner. In addition to some unexplained body marks, I witnessed another UFO sighting on February.

Leaving a friend's at 8:15 p.m. I saw a huge, white object flying rapidly at a very low altitude above three tall towers in the city. Driving on, however, I lost track of it, but when I reached my own neighborhood I saw it again.

I decided to go to the hill near our house and have one more look. When I parked and walked to a prominence to get a wide view, I immediately saw the same light coming from the west toward the south. It was moving much more slowly now, and bobbing along rhythmically instead of in a smooth, straight path. It passed between the downtown skyline and me, so I knew it couldn't be more than a mile away.

It began to grow larger, as if moving closer, and I felt ready to confront it, at last, in full consciousness. But after a bit, the light receded, still bobbing, and continued on into the south. I ran down the hill to the car, thinking I'd drive home for Casey and bring him back to see the object. Then I thought I should have one last look to determine where I would likely find it visible when we returned. So I raced back up the hill and looked around. The light was not where I had previously seen it.

I turned back in disappointment, and then caught sight of it again, in the very position it had started from the first time. The bobbing light silently repeated its path, once again coming close for a time and then backing away. I returned quickly to the car then and drove the half-block distance to my home. The streets were deserted as I pulled into the garage.

When I ran inside and yelled for Casey to come with me, he looked up puzzled from the couch and asked if I had pulled into the garage twice.

"No, of course not," I replied. "Why'd you ask that?"

'Then I guess it must have been a truck out on the street," he said. "But it sure was loud, for just a truck."

"What are you talking about?" I asked.

'This huge noise," he said, "about thirty seconds before you came in the garage. It was so loud that the whole front of the house shook, like some huge tanks or trucks were barreling down the street."

"I was just on the street," I objected, "and there was nothing out there. But I did see a UFO, up on the hill." We drove together back to the prominence and were disappointed to see nothing but the usual air traffic in the sky.

At no time during 1990 did either of us have a conscious encounter, just signs that something might have been going on. Emotionally and intellectually, we had nothing concrete with which to deal.

In 1991, however, at least in the beginning, that was not the case. Both Casey and I felt a great, undirected stress, as we'd done back in 1988, and that experience told us that activity might be recurring which was kept repressed from our consciousness.

In January, our son's friend James reported encounters with unusual entities, one of which once masked itself with the illusion of a beautiful blonde woman before revealing a very different physiology. Casey also recalled a possible encounter with the blond group that month, which had seemed like a VRS dream event (as recounted in INTO THE FRINGE). For Casey, the event was disturbing and puzzling, and we both wondered if anything further would occur. But nothing similar happened, nothing but a few unexplained marks, until April.

Shortly before leaving for the Ozark UFO Conference early that month, we had a "phantom sedan" incident, reminiscent of "Men in Black" reports. In this event, a very real-looking black car rolled down the street, came to a near stop as it reached our yard boundary, and a human-looking man in a white shirt and dark suit, wearing sunglasses, peered through the car's deeply tinted windows into the front of our house-where I was standing staring back out. I turned around to shout for Casey to come see it, and when I looked back the car had vanished.

In June, the mysterious helicopters returned, appearing on three different days. By the end of the month we made a permanent move to Arkansas, and thereafter, in an area with heavy, normal helicopter traffic, it was impossible to tell if any of it was unusual. We found a few questionable marks on our bodies in August, but it wasn't until October that a memory of anything specific turned up.

During the night of the fourteenth, I physically got out of bed at some point, and I also had a dream that aliens were about to come into a long, narrow room where I was waiting. My only thought was, Don't scare me! But nothing more remained in my consciousness, in spite of the bruise on my arm and scratch on my abdomen in the morning.

One other incident, in January 1992, involved another almost-conscious realization that an intrusion was occurring. I woke at 1:34 a.m., opened my eyes, and wondered why the room was so foggy. My immediate rationalization was that my eyes just hadn't yet focused, and I got out of bed to go to the bathroom. When I started walking, a sudden rush of thick, clear liquid with tiny black specks suspended in it flooded from me, much more than can be produced naturally by the body, but I had no idea where it had come from. Neither could I account for the new scratch and bruise I found the next day.

These things were physically real, yet something within me didn't really "come to grips" with what might be happening to us. I wouldn't let these events obsess me or throw me off track from researching other people's situations. If the aliens wanted to get my attention again, they were going to have to do a lot better than this, I decided. A strange snippet of a dream now and then, a few marks, even the liquid-the significance of which I certainly knew from other women's accounts-weren't enough to frighten me or move me in any serious way. I refused to feel under attack, even granting that some activity was occurring. But I was only able to keep this frame of mind because I wasn't perceiving them consciously.

For months thereafter, neither Casey nor I noticed anything inexplicable or suspicious. Throughout most of 1992 I was busy with radio and newspaper interviews, the result of INTO THE FRINGE being released, and I also worked on a research project involving Ted Rice, the well-known psychic in Shreveport, Louisiana, whose lifelong experiences with alien forces shed extraordinary light on some of the abduction activities which have been so hard to penetrate.

The period of no unusual activity, however, came to an end with a bang on the morning of October 13. I was sitting at the coffee table working on Ted's material, when a large ball of white light appeared and exploded right in front of me, less than four feet away. There was no noise, so I realized I hadn't merely seen a reflective flash from an explosion.

Five minutes later, a noise did occur, a very loud, pounding noise that slammed against the kitchen wall with a house-shaking thump. My dogs started up, barking, and we ran to the kitchen door to see what had happened. The garage doors were closed and locked, however, with nothing out of the ordinary in sight. My immediate response was a feeling that this was an announcement of some sort, a declaration of a renewed presence. And from past experience I could recognize the "feel" of this intrusion. There was no fear or anger in my mind, just a complete determination to face whatever would come next.

That proved to be a UFO sighting. On October 27, at 7 p.m., our neighbors phoned to say they'd been watching a UFO for the past ten minutes and wanted us to come out for a look. I had dinner cooking just then, but Casey and a visiting friend raced up the road, in time to watch an odd orange-red orb of light disappearing behind the tree line. The neighbors said they saw the orb change colors from white to orange, and that at one point a solid-looking beam of light emerged and moved around before retracting back into the UFO as it moved away.

Since this event was multiply witnessed, we didn't feel it was "aimed" at us. UFO sightings are surprisingly frequent in central Arkansas, and they are often seen by multiple witnesses. This sighting, although momentarily exciting, was oddly unaffecting. If this sighting report had come from someone else, I would have recognized the pacified response, but it's much harder to analyze oneself than someone else.

The next month, as I started a dusk stroll up the drive, I had my most bizarre UFO sighting to date. And again I experienced a sedated reaction. In absolute silence, a large, rectangular craft soared over my mother-in-law's cottage, which is thirty feet from our house, just above treetop level. My first response was exhilaration, and I started to run up the drive to follow it. But its speed, while not startling, was fast enough that the craft was soon out of sight, blocked by the tall, thick trees on our property.

I observed it long enough to get a clear picture, though. It reminded me of a train boxcar in length and width, although not quite as tall, and it looked metallic-brown. The bottom of the craft had an indentation or bar across the middle, with a large amber light at each end. Four more amber lights marked each corner of the rectangular object, for a total of six lights.

Within a matter of seconds, my exhilaration disappeared along with the craft, and instead of racing inside to get Casey, I just began to stroll again. When I did go back in, I told him of the sighting and that I hadn't had time to notify him before the craft flew off. My natural excitement and curiosity felt artificially suppressed, so much so that I didn't even make a notation of the sighting on my calendar. In fact, it simply faded from my memory for almost two weeks before I suddenly remembered it again. After experiencing this response several times, I am now convinced that it is externally imposed and thus denotes outside contact of a very real nature.

At the time, however, I was unconcerned. My friend Brenda was in the midst of much more overt alien intrusions in her home, and they seemed more important than the few things we'd experienced ourselves. Besides, as I'd decided earlier, it would take something highly significant to pique my interest and get me to interact on a personal level with the aliens again.

On January 8, 1993, it got rather personal when I woke up to find my clothing had been removed, and I hadn't been the one who removed them. This was always upsetting to me when it occurred in the past, for it made me feel intimately and helplessly violated. I had the same response this time, and when I phoned Brenda to discuss it the next morning, she told me of the dream she'd had the same night. I was in it. She dreamed she was aboard a craft, immobile on a table, and she could see me on a table beside her, also unable to move. She said she tried desperately to reach out to me, but couldn't, and that's all she recalled. I had no memory to match the event, but the missing clothing was indicative of some nocturnal activity I hadn't generated.

It was Casey's turn next, in February. On the morning of the seventeenth he told me that in the middle of the night, at 12:38 a.m., a loud "bang" noise awakened him from a dream. (Normally I am the one who awakens at any sound, while he sleeps through everything.) In the dream, he had been standing in the living room looking out the picture window at the ridge behind our property. A large, white orb appeared in the sky and then descended to the ridge. He told me that he instantly remembered the dream when he was awakened by the bang and that he then got out of bed and walked into the living room. Just as in the dream, he stood peering out the window, watching in full consciousness as a large, white orb appeared and descended to the ridge.

"What happened then?" I asked, and he shrugged.

"I guess I went back to bed," he said, "but I honestly don't remember doing it." And his response was curiously passive, as mine had been. This time I noticed and determined to be more alert if anything else were to occur, to fight the passive effect in order to react the way I thought best, rather than the way some outside force directed me.

In April I also had a nighttime event, much less dramatic than Casey's sighting of the orb, but nonetheless inexplicable. At 1:14 a.m. I awoke hearing the sound of a C-130 airplane, with which I'm very familiar as training flights from the nearby military base have regular paths over this area. The plane sounded as if it was just coming directly overhead, at an extremely low altitude. My first reaction was irritation at the thoughtlessness of training flights at such an intrusive hour. I'll phone the base in the morning and complain, I thought as I lay there with Casey soundly asleep beside me. But seconds, and then minutes, elapsed, and the noise of the C-130 didn't waver, increase, or diminish.

It can't be hovering! I thought, but that's exactly how it sounded-as if a C-130 was motionless low over the house. In a normal state of consciousness-which I really thought I had -I would have awakened Casey to hear it, too, but I didn't. Instead, six or seven minutes after first hearing it, I just fell asleep. It didn't occur to me to resist.

For over a year I had kept the attitude that I wouldn't acknowledge alien contact back in my life, in our lives, without strong, overt experiences. I had also been praying, in my fashion, to whatever good and loving and true higher forces may be out there, asking for two things: that they guide me to know and follow the power of goodness; and that they communicate with me in an overt manner, without any subtlety or ambiguity. I prayed for help, for information that would be clear enough for a child to understand, as I realized my level of understanding and perception were about that rudimentary in dealing with the aliens. I wanted a communication that couldn't be dismissed, variously interpreted, or ambiguous as to its nature.

On May 10, 1993, I may have gotten a partial answer to that prayer, although great caution is called for in assessing any contacts before accepting them at face value. This particular contact conformed exactly to other abductees' descriptions of the VRS dream and was the first of its kind I had experienced to such a degree.

I was in the middle of a normal dream when suddenly I was somehow removed from that dream and found myself sitting in a chair, in a darkened area, accompanied by entities I wasn't allowed to see. They spoke to me, clearly and frequently, throughout the event. I was facing a small stage area, which I now feel was more holographic than solidly three-dimensional even though at the time it looked quite realistic. My "hosts" told me I was to watch a scenario played out on the stage.

It began with a scene from Genesis, in which Esau returned home feeling so hungry he feared he would die. His younger brother Jacob was sitting there eating a bowl of pottage, and Esau begged him to share it. Jacob said he would give Esau the food, but only in exchange for Esau's birthright as the oldest son of Isaac. I heard Esau say, It won't do me any good to have the birthright if I die of starvation, so I'll agree to trade it for the food.

Then the scenario on stage changed to another part of the brothers' story. In this second scene, Isaac was very old and blind and knew that he was close to death. He called for Esau to be brought to him to receive the laying-on of hands that would confer the inheritance. Jacob wrapped an animal skin around his arm and presented it for his father's touch. Isaac felt the fur and believed it was the arm of his very hairy eldest son. So in his ignorance of this deception he conferred the blessing and gave Jacob that which rightfully belonged to Esau.

The play ended, and then it started right up again, playing out several more times as my hosts discussed its meaning with me. At various points they would stop the action, much as we pause a video tape, and would point out some specific detail and tell me what it meant, what it symbolized, and what the message was trying to convey.

They told me not to focus on the biblical aspect of the play, that their message had nothing to do with any actual Jacob and Esau, but that the story was designed to illustrate important information about what the aliens are doing to humans, both in the past and in the present. The hosts went through the play with me several times, pointing out details and saying things like, Okay? Let's try it again. Now watch closely. And the play would proceed.

After several repetitions, I suddenly "woke up" in my bed, amazed by what I'd just seen. I got out of bed for a while, trying to discern the nature of the event, whether dream-like or externally generated, and I also pondered on the meaning of the scenario. When I lay back down, as soon as I touched the pillow I was suddenly back in the chair, facing the stage, and my hosts said we would now resume. Once again the play began running, as did the explication offered by my abductors. And when they apparently were satisfied, the action ceased and the abductors gave me a clearly delineated summary of the things I was meant to perceive.

Esau, the older and hairier brother, they explained, represents the original human species on this planet. Jacob represents the altered product of alien genetic manipulations of that older species. The aliens produced this new variant and then used it to replace the original form.

In our current situation, the aliens are once again doing genetic alterations of our species and are once again trying to produce a variant which will be more useful for their purposes and which will supplant us. And again it will be attempted through deception, as Jacob deceived Isaac. This deception, I was told, is being carried out by the aliens through exploitation and manipulation of global events, including weather phenomenon, to make us believe that the planet is in imminent danger of cataclysm and destruction.

This is why they impress the idea of coming destruction upon so many abductees, telling then they will have tasks to perform at that time. They want us, as a race, to be so afraid of this upcoming destruction that when they show themselves openly and offer to save us in some way, we will be willing to take their help, even if it means giving up our birthright, so to speak, which is preeminence on this planet. Like Esau in his hunger, we will say, "What good does it do us to keep our birthright if we're all going to be destroyed along with the planet? What have we got to lose if we accept alien help, even though that means accepting alien control? Better to survive under subjugation than not at all."

But my hosts stressed that this is all a deception, that our planet, without their intervention, is not in imminent danger. These terrible disasters we see-the flooding, hurricanes, and earthquakes-are sometimes being intensified by the very aliens who will then come in and offer to save us from "inevitable" destruction. We should not believe them, I was told emphatically. And we must not surrender our sovereignty to them, as that would mean we were truly lost forever.

After this, I knew nothing more until waking in the morning, very disturbed by what I'd been shown. I had no way of identifying the source of this event and never caught even a glimpse of my abductors, who stayed behind me in the dark. I couldn't deduce anything about the event from my past encounters, because this one was completely different. I knew I hadn't been taken anywhere, because I woke up consciously in the midst of the experience and was able to check my physical surroundings. And there was no doubt in my mind that during the encounter I was not asleep; in fact, I remember being so awake when I was removed to the chair that I thought, How can they snatch me right out of a dream like that?

The experience seemed designed in some ways to fulfill the request I'd made for a straightforward, clearly comprehensible communication that would be helpful. They must have taken me at my literal word, for the message was reinforced in every conceivable way: visually, repetitiously, and verbally. So did that mean I could accept it as coming from a benevolent source? Could I test or trust its accuracy?

All I could do, finally, was hold the message in reserve and compare it to the events that occur as time passes. At least parts of what they told me I already knew to be true. The aliens do make a practice of giving abductees information about a coming time of destruction or change. With the many natural disasters of recent time, it is an easy message to believe. And they have engaged in what appears to be genetic processes for years, according to abduction accounts, as well as taking credit time and time again for the creation of the human species. But even these two "facts" I still had to question, because in neither case could we objectively verify the activities.

Things around our home went back to normal after that, until the middle of July, when a series of odd noises started to plague us. We heard everything from large plastic ware (nonexistent, of course) shattering on our wood floors, to gigantic invisible woodpeckers hammering away in the living room. Things got even stranger one evening in August, when Casey and I had a parallel and infuriating experience. I heard him ask me a question, and when I turned around to answer him, instead he answered it himself. Both of us heard the other one ask the question, it turned out, although neither of us had even been thinking about the subject.

Throughout August and September, there was an undercurrent of tension in our lives that felt just as it had back in 1988, after alien contact had renewed with Casey but before he was consciously aware of it. His usual coping mechanism for work and personal concerns seemed impaired, so that almost every interaction was stressful.

The stress was affecting me, too, leading to recurrent insomnia and sleep disruptions. I started doing something I've never done in the past-leaving my bed, and Casey, to try to rest elsewhere. Sometimes I'd lie on the couch, with the dogs nearby on another couch, and sometimes I wrapped up in a blanket and slept fitfully on the guest bed. There were no conscious events to show that anything suspicious was occurring, but the insomnia was not normal, and neither was my willingness to be separated from Casey.

We weren't in step with each other or comfortable with ourselves in those weeks. I became worried as the situation seemed to go on and on, but I couldn't pick up any clue from Casey about his thoughts. Given all that had happened in the past months, I should have asked him if he thought the stress indicated suppressed memories of new contacts. But I was honestly afraid to ask and risk a confrontation with something that felt so heavy or ominous.

It was Casey who broke the silence, one night as we drove home from visiting friends. In the quiet of the evening drive, he began to talk after a long period of silence, seriously and very tentatively. I could feel he was searching for a way to be both confiding with me and reassuring of my feelings at the same time.

What he told me were the details of two dreams. The first one had occurred in early September, but he hadn't told me at the time. When the second one occurred later in the month, however, he had described it to me the next morning. I recalled he said we were a team of detectives in the dream, and then he sketched out the details of our pursuit of two suspects. We had chosen to follow one of them, a woman, but when we caught up with her we realized she was innocent, that the other suspect was the guilty party.

"I think it was a symbolic message," he told me that morning. "I think it was telling me that you and I are on the right path in this work with the abduction situation. We're following the truth, that's what the beautiful woman we caught represented."

In our talk in the car, Casey began by telling me about the first dream, from early September, and I could see why he'd been reluctant to discuss it.

"Something's been going on," he said, "and I want to tell you about it. I had a dream earlier this month. It woke me up, and I looked at the clock. It was around 4 a.m. I thought there would be plenty of sleep time left so I wouldn't be tired when I got up for work. Satisfied, I rolled over and started to drift off, when I remembered what the dream was about. And I noticed then, and only then, that my heart was still pounding faster than usual.

"I thought there must have been something to that dream, so I tried to remember more. There was a strong odor of spicy sweat and a stronger scent of fear in the dream. I think I was nude, and so was this woman who was sending out fear and pain signals. She seemed to be very confused and upset by the situation. I felt dazed and angry, dazed by whatever control was being exerted on my mind to get me into this situation, and angry at being in the situation in the first place.

"I felt pity and sorrow for her, so I held her gently and tried to calm her down. I tried to talk normally, and that seemed to reassure her and give her back some sense of control. When she calmed down, I awoke. And immediately, I remember now, I smelled the air to see if there was any scent from the dream left on me. But there wasn't."

"Did you recognize the woman?" I asked. "Do you know her?"

"Yeah," Casey said, naming a casual acquaintance with whom we've never had any social involvement. "I really tried to think it was just a dream," he said, "and that maybe I was going through some sort of mid-life mental quake, but I don't think that's it. Anyway, I didn't tell you about it because I didn't want to worry you. But after the second dream, I can't keep this quiet any more."

"Why?" I asked. "Was it something awful?"

"No," he said, "it wasn't a bad dream. Do you remember me telling you the dream where we were detectives?"

"Yes," I replied, recalling the conversation quite clearly.

"Well, that was the dream," Casey continued. "I told you about it at breakfast, and we talked about whether it was symbolic. And I really thought it was. Until two days ago."

"What happened?" I asked.

"I was at the mall with a friend for lunch," he said. "We had eaten and were heading around to the escalator, and then this woman came around the corner, dressed all in black. She was blonde, genuine blonde, and her skin matched the color, eyes, too. She looked at me, started to lift up her arms, and said, 'H-h-hello!' And then she seemed to get real confused and walked on past me."

"What did you do then?" I asked. "Did you go after her or talk to her?"

"No," he said, "we went up the escalator , and when I got to the top I turned and looked back down there. She was still there, looking very disoriented, and then she walked off slowly."

"So what did that have to do with the dreams?" I wondered.

"That woman in the mall," Casey said, "was the same woman I saw in the detective dream. That was her! In the flesh! I recognized her immediately, and I swear she acted like she recognized me, too. You know how you'll reach out to hug a friend you haven't seen in a long time? That's how it was, and when she reached for me I was starting to reach for her, too."

"What do you think is going on?" I asked. "What does this mean?"

"I don't know," he replied. "I thought that was just a dream, but there was the real woman. So now I don't know if the first one was a dream, either. And that was a bad situation."

"Do you remember anything specifically sexual happening in the first one?" I asked, thinking of the encounters in other abductee reports.

"I didn't see anything like that happen," Casey told me. "I only saw us kneeling in front of each other, nude and scared and angry. We were in a circle of bright light that came from somewhere above us, and everything outside of that was too dark to see. But I sensed it was a very large room. Something could have gone on, either before that or after, and I just don't remember."

"How did you feel, while it was happening?"

"I didn't feel sexual. It was more a very deep sorrow because that woman was in such terrible panic and fear and pain. It was so thick I could almost grab it in the air, all that emotion. All I wanted to do was make her feel better, give her some comfort, and that's what I remember doing. Just holding her and talking."

"Have you seen her, I mean in person, since the dream?" I asked.

"Yeah," he said.

"So how did she seem? Did she say anything?"

"No, she didn't say a word. I passed her on a stairway, and she looked at me very intently. I think her face even turned red, and then she looked down at the stairs and went on by."

"Does she usually say hello when you see each other?"

"Yes, she's always been friendly in the past," Casey said. "I don't know why she acted like that, unless that whole thing wasn't really a dream. But there's no way I can ask her about it, we don't know each other that well at all."

"And we don't have a clue as to finding the woman in the mall," I remarked, wishing we could ask her if she really remembered the incident in Casey's dream.

"No, I never saw her before," he said. "But we had a connection, when we were looking at each other, a very strong connection. I looked at her, and then it was like I was inside her head, her eyes, looking back out at myself. And I could feel her, in a way, that she really is good, a good person. She's not responsible for whatever might have happened. If anything really did."

That was the question we were always left to face, the nature of an event's reality. In some reports, two people have separately recalled being in an identical dream or situation, and in those cases the people involved can feel more certain of the dream or event's objective reality. But it doesn't always happen that way. Sometimes one person will have a traumatic experience involving another person, and the reality of the event is so convincing that the experiencer believes the other person was truly involved, no matter how impossible time and location considerations may seem.

Granted, there is plenty of evidence for the aliens' ability to manipulate time and space, so the objective reality of such events cannot automatically be dismissed. But there is also hard evidence that the aliens are masters of illusion, total-sensory, gut-and-heart-wrenching illusion, generated by an external mechanism. And when an abductee is in an altered state, the illusion is very convincing to his controlled perceptions.

This lesson had been brought home by the extraordinary VRS involving Amelia that Ted and Marie witnessed in 1991, and now I was seeing, possibly, with my husband's bewildered emotions, just how masterful the aliens' deceptive mechanisms can be. For Amelia, the event had been a virtual-reality solo flight, the external product or result of the blue sphere technology and its creators. Knowing this, I wondered if Casey's dreams were objective or virtual experiences, the product of some similar technology, and so did he. The only thing he knew to be "real" was the nameless woman he came face to face with in the mall.

This experience, all of our experiences and those of the eight women recounted here, define the abduction phenomenon. It is complex, ambiguous, deceptive, inconsistent, traumatic, physical, and metaphysical, with no single or clear purpose. There are patterns and possibilities, but none so plainly verifiable that everyone can agree on the facts, much less the larger truth, of the agenda.

If all that Casey and I knew about alien abductions was limited to our own experiences, we would have a very different picture of the situation. And we would be much more vulnerable to alien manipulations or programming in our ignorance. It is only when we consider our experiences within the larger context of Amy's experiences, and Beth's and Lisa's and the experiences of the thousands of other abductees, that we gain enough knowledge to get past the personal illusions. And it is only by giving up our wishful ideas and facing the data squarely that any of us can hope to penetrate to the actuality of these events, to come to terms with "what is" rather than what we wish it to be.

11. Expanding the View

A comparison of the data from these separate reports emphatically proves one point. Our current concept of the abduction experience is too small, too limited, and far too simplified. The Comparative Chart lists 114 elements from the reports, including details which were omitted in previous chapters because of space considerations. When the data is categorized and correlated, some surprising consistencies emerge that force the current view to expand, in both quantity and quality.

Before beginning the comparison, however, it should be noted again that four of the women underwent some regressive hypnosis: Beth, Jane, Angie, and Amy, with three different hypnotists. Out of the 114 listed details on the Chart, Beth reported 87, Jane reported 77, Amy 73, and Angie had 96. The other four women showed consistently fewer reported details, although not significantly so. Polly had 67 of the 114 details in her account, Pat had 71, Lisa had 94, and Anita reported 53. Almost all of the details, from each of the eight women, came from pre-hypnotic recollections.

In the "Contacts" category there are eight different situations reported, and seven of these eight have been reported by all of the women. These include UFO sightings; missing time as a child; missing time as an adult; consciousness of an encounter; virtual-reality events; telepathic communications; and the extension of alien involvement into lives of other family members. Three of them experienced missing time or abductions with other people.

The data indicates, then, that the phenomenon is not imaginary or self-generated, that it is linked to the UFO sightings, that it involves a generational interest on the part of the aliens, and that contact can be made by remote means.

The "Aliens" category contains a surprising variety of physical types reported, including some that are rarely mentioned elsewhere. While all eight women encountered the Gray aliens, the Whites (insectoid) and the hooded figures are almost as common, turning up in seven accounts. Blond humanoid figures have been seen by six of the women, as have the cat-eyed or reptoid type. Half of the women reported a wrinkle-faced entity similar to a tall Gray or White, as well as a shorter, often hairy creature variously referred to as a "troll" or "dwarf." And both a blue entity and a "Jesus" figure have been witnessed by three of the women.

In addition to noting the variety of physical types, it is important to realize that every combination of these different entities have been reported working together in abduction scenarios. It is hard to conclude, then, that the various types are really separate groups carrying out separate functions or missions.

Abductees typically report undergoing some sort of physical examination at one time or another, as researchers have long acknowledged. A comparison of the details reported in the "Exam" category show that two areas of the human body are most commonly involved: the reproductive system and the brain. Only five of the women remember gynecological procedures, however, and only three of them report possible implanted or missing fetuses, so the aliens' interest in reproduction or genetics may not be their sole purpose. While this group comprises all women, they are not the only sex reporting fetal implantations or extractions, as bizarre as this seems. In one man's account, he recalled an abdominal incision into which a malleable sac of tiny fetuses was placed and later surgically retrieved. Another man said that a similar fetal container was inserted rectally.

More of the women report implant procedures and "head operations" than gynecological activity. Anita is the only one who does not recall receiving an implant, and five women report some surgical activity on their skulls or brains. This activity has no apparent connection to a crossbreeding agenda and points to a program of greater complexity than the limited "genetics" theory.

A variety of alien instruments are reported in these procedures, but the most common here are the wand-type device, found in four accounts, and the small metal box, usually black, which is reported by three women.

There are four accounts of a "lady doctor" present during examinations, and three of the women saw operations performed on other abductees during their experiences. Three also were made to eat or drink something while in alien custody.

The most common detail of the examination scenario, however, is the report of an alien's face very close to the abductee's face, which has been experienced by all of the women but Pat. Whether this is a type of examination or an exertion of mental control over the abductee isn't clear, and of course it could be both. There is evidence that the large, black, glassy eyes so familiar from Gray reports may not be biological eyes but instead may be coverings that perform technologically, able to calm the abductee, do a scan of some sort, and even, as Pat felt, "film" or record data from our minds.

Other activities besides the exams occur in abduction encounters. All of the women report that the aliens communicated with them at some point, although not during every encounter. And seven of them recall teaching or testing sessions. During abductions, six report experiencing levitation, five recall passing through solid objects, and four witnessed or performed telekinesis. On the 'hardware' side of things, four women were shown how to operate some of the equipment aboard a craft, and on the 'software' side three of them were induced to relive or envision a past time or event in their lives. Again, these activities point to an agenda more complex than crossbreeding.

Six of the women do, however, report scenes generally known as "baby presentations" in which apparently hybrid infants are shown to abductees and are said to be created from some human-alien crossbreeding process. But half of the women also report being forced or induced to engage in (mostly traumatic) sexual activities with aliens, humanoids, or other abductees. And all these activities have little to do with crossbreeding or gathering of reproductive material.

Some researchers have theorized that all such sexual scenarios are the product of mind control-erotic images without substance-used merely to facilitate an actual event which involves nothing more than the taking of sperm or ova. But there are problems with this theory. For one thing, although sperm-gathering can be accomplished via erotically induced orgasm on the part of a male, it certainly isn't necessary for ova-gathering. In fact, it is totally unnecessary. Nor does it serve a reproductive purpose for her to be compelled to masturbate, as in some abductions, as well as in cases where the person feels "switched on" for this purpose when no abduction is underway. Another problem is that sexual intrusions involving reproductively immature children are reported. And finally, there is clearly no sperm/ova gathering going on in those situations where abductees are forced into sexual situations together.

Abductees report a wide yet consistent pattern of communications from the aliens, both in their presence and through remote contact. The most common communications focus on the origin of the human species, the "special" nature of the alien-abductee relationship and of the abductee personally who has an important function to perform, the distinction of body and spirit, and warnings of future global destruction, which were all reported by a majority of the women. These are not trivial subjects. It would be as dangerous to ignore this information as it would be to believe everything the aliens say.

In the "Settings" category there is a similar consistency of reports, including the highly controversial scenario of the underground base, present in half of the cases. Even more surprising, perhaps, is that seven of the women saw other apparently human people in their encounters, working with the aliens aboard craft as well as in the terrestrial facilities. And in six cases, the humans were perceived as military personnel.

Many researchers have, unfortunately, been unwilling to take reports of human-alien collusion seriously. One researcher told me that he believed every case of human collusion could be explained as illusions perpetrated by an exclusively alien group. But all it takes to dispel this view is one confirmed case of military or human involvement, and from information that has been shared with me in confidence, I am satisfied that at least one such case exists, that of Leah Haley, whose ordeal of military intrusions and threats is told in LOST WAS THE KEY.

Another researcher has claimed repeatedly that none of his many investigations has produced reports or evidence of human military involvement. His claim, however, has been disputed by some of the abductees with whom he has worked, who say they have indeed reported these events only to have them discounted by the investigator.

Yet the reports overwhelmingly point to actual human involvement with alien abductions. Details of reports are consistent throughout the country, and the only thing that differs, finally, is the interpretation of those details by the researchers. Reports of human military involvement must be addressed with more than an unexamined dismissal, for they are as common as the baby presentation scenarios that are accepted at face value by the traditional view. Whether "real" or contrived, these events serve a purpose that the researchers need to discover.

Six other accounts described the abductees either viewing or being in a desert setting or on a desert-type planet, although the explanation of this scene varies from one report to another. Within the alien facilities, five women saw television-type screens, four saw instrument panels, and four were shown graphs or charts. And although it isn't noted on the Chart, three women described unusual black, flexible tubing in the facilities, both aboard the craft and in underground locations.

Other reported details in alien settings included bodies of water or liquid, in three cases, as well as three reports of animals present. Of more concern are the three accounts of abductees seeing, or being told of, cloned human bodies. Both Lisa and Pat were shown clones of their bodies, although they were given different explanations. Similar reports come from other abductees, and in one case a man said he saw a room full of inert male and female human bodies, who were beautiful and identical. The implications of such reports are enormous, considering the possible uses the aliens could make of these carbon-copy human bodies.

The eight women reported a number of physical effects, consistent with general abduction data, but the only two effects which were universal were patterns of unexplained bruises and particular noises in the ear or head. While the noises could be rationalized, perhaps, the bruises clearly indicate some physical interaction. The repetition of triangular marks in abductee reports may well indicate a single source for all of the marks.

Other signs of physical, rather than psychic or spiritual, contact include six reports of unexplained blood on the women's bodies or bedclothes, six reports of scoop marks, five women with scratches, and seven with puncture wounds. The case for actual physical contact is also bolstered by the six women who reported waking up with their clothing on backward, inside out, or completely missing.

The women experienced a variety of other physical reactions in addition to the internally heard beeps and electronic-type tones. All but Pat, for instance, experienced nausea during or after an encounter, and five reported sudden, total exhaustion in which all their energy drained away in an instant. Five women described awaking at times and feeling as if they'd been "beaten," to use Anita's term. And five said they had episodes in which a blinding light seemed to explode in their minds.

Unexplained rashes turned up in five of the cases, and instances of badly irritated eyes and waking with an unidentified bitter taste were both reported four times. Additionally, two of the women suffered unusual hair loss and unaccountable "sunburns."

The physical nature of the abduction scenario extends to other things in the abductee's environment. The external effects related to the phenomenon are very consistent, as the Chart demonstrates. Every one of the women have experienced bizarre electronic disturbances, for instance, and phone disturbances, both with the equipment and the callers. And seven out of eight reported lights in the yard, lights in the house, voices, clicking sounds, as well as miscellaneous thumps, pops, whistles, bangs, and hums in the environment, all without explanation. Outside the house, five of the women have witnessed the overflight of unaccountable, unmarked, or unidentifiable helicopters, all appearing after the abductees became aware of their situations.

The most consistent correlations between the women show up in the "Personal Response/Event" category. All of them suffer from chronic or frequent sleep disruption, all have undergone drastic attitude shifts, and they all feel a strong desire to live in rural locations, no matter what their previous backgrounds. Seven of the eight women report unexplained compulsions associated with their experiences, such as Polly's compulsion at times to take children, including other people's children, to a certain spot where UFOs are often sighted, something she would not do of her own choice. And Anita is the only one who has not reported feeling they are being prepared to carry out some unidentified task, job, or mission related to the alien agenda.

Three types of dreams show up in seven of the reports, as well. The first involves the arrival or landing or invasion of numerous UFOs on earth, a dream reported so frequently with the same details that I refer to it as 'The Night of Lights," from the typical description. The second dream shows scenes of coming disaster and chaos on the planet, and in some cases the abductees are led to believe that their upcoming "jobs" will be carried out at the time of destruction. The third dream type is prophetic, showing events which come to pass after the dream.

The final category, "Personal Background," shows, in fact, that all of the women have demonstrated above-average psychic abilities. The data on ethnic background included here has only relative importance, focusing as it does on the Celtic and Native American heritages which are more prevalent in American abduction reports than any other specific ethnic groups. The abduction phenomenon is global, and in any given region the ethnicity would surely be different. What is significant, however, is the high percentage of the women who have had unusual or serious gynecological problems, an indication that abduction experiences may be hazardous to their health.

The two remaining aspects of personal background, childhood abuse and a family member in the intelligence community, deserve special notice. Some researchers and mental health professionals, unable to accept the reality of this phenomenon, have offered screened memories of child abuse as an explanation for abduction memories. But as in the case of objections to military involvement, all it takes is one abductee who suffered no abuse to explode the theory. Among these eight women, only three reported childhood abuse of any kind, and their memories of these events were not repressed.

Other theorists believe that abduction activity is perpetrated by humans rather than aliens, carrying out massive mind-control experiments for some unknown purpose. They argue that the agents of this activity would have access to "subjects" through the families of those in the military and intelligence organizations. While it is true that most abductees have a family member in the military, that is also true of just about everyone in the country, so that cannot be a significant factor. More telling would be an inordinately high number of abductees with family connections to the intelligence community, and such cases are reported. Among the eight women, however, there are only two confirmed, and one possible, with connections to intelligence work.

These individual, very unique, abduction reports show such a commonality that they all could quite easily be from a single source, or alliance of sources, with a single, specific agenda. Some of the reported details, in fact, which appear so unique in a given single case, are too striking to dismiss. One good example not listed on the Chart involves Pat and Angie, whose conscious memories and responses are very different. During Pat's childhood abduction, she asked for and was given a "green healer rock" as a keepsake, but when the military interrogated the family, they persuaded Pat's sister to give them the rock.

In Angie's case, a green rock was also confiscated. She didn't consciously connect the beautiful green rock with alien experiences, nor could she remember precisely when and where she first got it. But Angie does remember, as a child, being approached on the playground one day by an unknown woman. The woman knew Angie's name and a few things about her, claiming to be a friend of the girl's teacher. After a brief initial chat, the woman told Angie that she knew about the green rock and asked if she could have it. Angie recalls giving her the rock during a second encounter, although the details are cloudy.

There are other such minute similarities in just these eight accounts, and the details on the Chart generally are true not only for the eight women but also for thousands of others.

There is one more set of parallels, however, which was not on the Chart because it pertained exclusively to the women in this project rather than to the typical abduction situation. I was in contact with all of them separately for months before deciding to compile a book-length report about the cases, and during that time, although strange things still occurred, they did not seem any different from past activities. Things changed, however, after Jane and Amy were given messages telling them to work with me specifically.

I began the book project, and in the course of taking care of necessary business through the mail, it soon became clear that many of my letters to the women were being diverted. It was an annoyance, but a minor one. But then the women began having serious problems, physical afflictions of a suspiciously similar nature.

Beth was first. On the night she decided to participate in the project, she phoned a friend to discuss the decision, but in the midst of the conversation the line went dead. That night, she had disturbing but cloudy dreams, and the next morning both her legs from knees to ankles were in excruciating pain for no apparent reason. And then she had a sudden, frightening flashback that linked the mysterious pain with military personnel warning her not to be a part of the book.

That was in early October 1993. Three weeks later, after discussing my determination to do the project with one of the women, I went to bed in fine shape and woke up at 6 a.m. with wracking, spasmodic pains in both legs, from my knees to my ankles. It was unbelievably bad, unlike any pain I've had before, and after swallowing ibuprofin I hobbled back to bed and tried to sleep. I must have, for I dreamed after that, seeing myself surrounded by military personnel who were injecting something into my knees. They taunted me, saying, "Don't think you can do anything you want. This is just a little demonstration that we can bring you, literally, to your knees any time we choose."

For Beth and me, these may have been mere dreams, reflecting our fears about the project. But Anita's report of experiencing this same pain after an abduction, years before, makes it harder to discount a connection. And on the same weekend I had the leg pains, both Anita and Jane suffered unexpected gall bladder attacks, so severe that they both underwent emergency surgery at almost the same hour.

Angie was the next to suffer. After an abduction in early November, she woke up with several physical symptoms, the worst of which was heavy congestion. It quickly grew worse, and in the space of less than two months she had to be hospitalized. Before that time, however, her health had been remarkably pristine. It was in November, too, that Angie recalls military personnel threatening punishment if she "talked to Karla Turner."

Was it a real event, a VRS, or just a dream? Anita had a similar dream shortly thereafter, in which I first discussed abandoning the project and then military personnel arrived and interrogated her about UFOs. Lisa, too, felt a very human threat against her involvement with the book and almost decided to remove herself from it. But in the end, all of the women felt that the information was too important to let intimidation, if that's what it really was, prevent its release.

To conclude, then, the Comparative Chart shows how consistently the same details turn up in unrelated abduction scenarios, and indeed how many consistent details actually comprise the phenomenon. Such reports demand that serious attention be given to uncovering the nature and extent of human activity within the abduction phenomenon.

The evidence further makes a strong case for a very physical, technological basis to alien-human interactions. Unless angels perform rectal probes, however, and make crank phone calls, and arrange sexual liaisons in addition to their other heavenly duties, the case is very weak for this being a primarily spiritual agenda.

12. The Round Table

When these personal accounts are brought together for an overview, the women have three major concerns, in common with many others who have had forced alien encounters. What are the aliens saying, and can we believe them? What are they doing with us, technologically and psychologically? And what is the real nature of human or military involvement in the abduction activities?

On this last issue, every one of the women have reported seeing other humans present in abduction situations. Amy, Angie, Lisa, Pat and Beth recall experiences that involved military personnel, and in most instances there were aliens working with the humans. Although some of these scenes may have been alien VRS productions, other peripheral activities do indicate actual human involvement. Angie, for instance, was confronted and intimidated by uniformed men in the pickups that pinned her between them on the highway, just hours before she had a military abduction and was threatened about "talking."

When Amy traveled out of state for regressive hypnosis, another suspicious event occurred. A high-ranking naval officer, a long-time acquaintance of the hypnotist's family, showed up at their home late on the night of Amy's arrival, in spite of being told that it would not be convenient to visit at that time. He proceeded to deliver the standard "line" that the military has no interest, much less involvement, with UFOs, aliens, or abductees. He said that in twenty-five years of service he had never even heard another military person mention UFOs, on or off the record. And he insisted that abductees had no business presenting their experiences to the public unless they could also offer "concrete, scientific evidence" that anything had happened.

I was present that night, and when I asked him if he actually could tell us of any military involvement with UFOs, assuming it did exist, he admitted that "national security" restrictions would force him to deny such involvement.

When Amy left to drive home, she was followed by a state patrol car who stayed inches from her bumper or right beside her car for many miles. The effect, of course, was extremely unnerving, and Amy felt it was meant to be an intimidation, as do those who have had military helicopter harassment, phone disturbances, and other events that seem much more human than alien in origin.

If, as was mentioned earlier, there is proof in even one case that military personnel have been involved in abductions, then the other reports should not be easily dismissed. Each person must decide what evidence is convincing on this issue, but I am satisfied that one case, Leah Haley's, is beyond question. If human agencies are indeed covertly active, their involvement demands more vigorous investigation than has been done up to now. Mainstream researchers, however, show no enthusiasm for confronting possible human-rights violations by human forces, perhaps because they fear personal reprisal-which, as many abductees can attest, does occur.

On the issue of alien communications, there is plenty of data from all of the women. Most of them have had personal messages in addition to hearing their names called. "The communication that has happened when I'm awake," Lisa reported, as an example, "is usually simple. They say in my head, Turn off the lights and don't come in here'." After Anita was sexually assaulted by the humanoid in the red suit, he told her, "I'll be there to help you," which was frightening rather than reassuring given the immediate situation. And Amy had a curious message in late 1993, saying, "All will know of UFOs on the day of the big game," although which big game was not identified.

Some of the personal messages, described previously, made direct references to me, once the women began working to investigate their experiences. Jane was told to give all her "information to Karla Turner" and to assist me in awakening others to the abduction phenomenon. Amy was compelled to contact me by her influencing forces, and then when she consciously asked them if they had any message for me, they told her to tell me, "Do take care. Lock your doors-it may help more than you know." The message was so absurd that Amy challenged it and was told, "She will know what it means." When Amy wrote me, she did not pass along that message, although she typed it and put it away.

Months later, when she was listening to a tape of a public presentation I had made, however, she heard me say that at one point I was so disheartened by the alien activity that I didn't even bother to lock my doors. Shocked by the correlation, she finally told me about the message she'd gotten earlier. And when Polly asked her "spirits," as she called the unseen communicators, about this book project, she was given a lengthy reply. In part, they said that the book "is a journey into another level of mind" and that my books "are a part of a much larger work from which she cannot be separated...an expansive work of love, resting on a solid base."

It is impossible not to wonder what these specific personal references mean. They certainly show that some force or group is aware of the connections between the women and my research, which may account for the helicopter flights and telephone interference so many of us have had. During a phone conversation with Angie, in fact, as we discussed one alien group's claim to originate in Cassiopeia, a man's voice interrupted to say, 'There's a lot of them out there, and we know where they come from"-and then the voice was gone.

These references also demonstrate foreknowledge of certain events or the ability to direct events, for whoever gave Amy the message about my locking the door seems to have known she would later, much later, hear a tape of my remarks. These specific references connect our separate experiences within a larger organized agenda, that much is clear, although the coordinators of this activity are not, and it seems to be quite a long-term project.

Many of the women had alien communications very early in their lives. Anita reported being told as a child that "The children must be protected." Amy had messages and ideas impressed into her mind from as young as four, and like Polly she felt the impact of these influences in her early teen years. She also felt that the aliens implanted or stored information within the subconscious, in "packets" of knowledge, reminiscent of the "pockets" of knowledge the aliens told me I possessed in 1980.

Throughout their lives, several women recalled teaching or training communications. For Amy, these included information about various aspects of physics, as with Polly, as well as lessons in telekinesis and penetrating solid objects. Angie's training has focused on using her mental powers, and Anita's propelled her to study useful survival skills. This training or programming of abductees is meant to serve some purpose, but we have only the aliens' claims for what that purpose may be.

Much of what the aliens have communicated has affected the women's attitudes on a variety of subjects. In childhood, Amy witnessed an apparent VRS designed to destroy her faith in traditional religion, and Polly reported lessons on "changes in allegiance." Anita, Jane, and Amy also have come to feel suspicious of temporal governments, a suspicion that Jane says was "fostered" by the aliens. Such an attitude adjustment is clearly an intrinsic part of the abduction agenda, pointing to a much more involved and disturbing program than the mere taking of genetic material to revivify a degenerative alien race. Their actions concern changing our belief system as much as working, for whatever reason, with our bodies, and we do not know the motivation for this targeting of religion and government.

On the subject of human genesis, the aliens often say they are our creators, as in Angie's case, and statements about altering our species were also made to Lisa. The most provocative message, given to Amy, indicated a surprise on the part of the aliens that Amy hadn't clearly seen the situation already. "Did you think this was all by accident?" she was asked, as the aliens presented the concept of the earth as a cosmic zoo.

Such indoctrination serves to reduce our concepts of human sovereignty, as well as to bind us to them in a subservient position, as a possession. While some people accept this relationship as fact and thus allow that the aliens can legitimately do with us what they please, there are others of us who feel we possess an inherent sovereignty and right to exist without interference, no matter what our genesis. Their claims to be our creators have never been more than mere claims, anyway, unless there is proof somewhere, as a few researchers report from intelligence and military insiders.

As for information on the aliens themselves, they are less forthcoming. Lisa was told that there are "many divisions" of the beings, and Jane has observed that while some of them are interdimensional, as Polly also believes, others are actually "interplanetary travelers." An origin in Cassiopeia was stated to Angie, although the alien said their group had long ago made a "home" for themselves on our planet. Beth was told only that the aliens are here for study and to "avert a destructive process" that humanity is bringing upon the world. The most extreme communication of origin, however, was given to Pat. She was told that the aliens are angels, although not as we'd been taught to think of them, and that they will be responsible for the changing of human bodies at the time of resurrection. Jane, conversely, has been made to see, from her experiences, that the God of the Bible "is not the supreme being we have been taught to envision."

A common communication has been that the abductees are to come together or "find" others like themselves. In fact, Angie reported being brought to a group of "Chosen Ones" in an underground facility. "There were others trained like me," Amy said she was told in 1989, "and we would come together soon. Now it is time that we find each other." Beth was told that she and others must work as "spiritual" beings "for the good of humanity," and the aliens told Jane that "All good people of earth must come together to resist what is coming." It isn't certain, of course, that all the communications have come from a single source, and in fact there are frequently contradictions and inconsistencies from case to case.

The future planetary events are also a major topic for the aliens, and it is interesting to note the phrases and images they use here. For Jane, the aliens have used terms like "the awakening" to indicate coming changes in "world cultures and consciousness." This sounds positive and peaceful enough, but both Amy and Polly have been told of a coming "Armageddon," although Amy was told that Armageddon "will not be as people think it will be." Angle's abductors said that the "filth and evil" in this world will be cleansed as we are subtly changed. But for Anita and Lisa, the future changes are shown as disasters for which they must prepare to survive here on earth.

And Pat has been shown scenes of the return of Jesus, accompanied by space ships and aliens, preceding the "bad time on earth" which will destroy many of those who are not rescued. Indeed, to Amy, Beth, Jane, and Polly, the communications have indicated a war of good and evil underway, in which we have a part to play. And as for the aliens' promised assistance, Lisa has said simply, "Why should we believe they can fix our problems when they can't even control the abusive aliens among them?"

How do the women feel about their alien communications? Jane is inspired by much of what she's told, but she has not been able to initiate the communications herself. In fact, she feels that the aliens have hidden, in a way, behind their contacts. "We're not seeing the true intelligence behind all these scenes," she once said. Polly says that when she considers all she has been told, she concludes that in reality, 'They have told us nothing." And Amy has complained that in spite of all she's been told and taught, the aliens "don't give [practical] information."

Angie has come to be suspicious of much of what she has been told. 'There's no reason I should trust those aliens," she wrote, "any more than I would trust my own kind." And Anita has echoed that feeling. "I'm always amazed when I get any information from them at all," she said. "I really don't know if someone who would abduct a person could be trusted to give a truthful answer to any question."

The second issue focuses on alien technology as observed by the abductees. Besides the various instruments used in examinations, most of which are completely foreign, it is curious to note how often the aliens employ quite familiar equipment, especially needles and injections. Indeed, some researchers have said that this use of mundane technology argues against an alien force and toward covert human activity. Angie, Beth, and Polly all report getting shots, and the other women have sometimes found injection punctures without remembering how they got them. But the most common technological devices are not at all human-like: the probes. Their descriptions are often very similar-small balls of light floating or bouncing through the house-but in Amy's case the probe was rather more "spidery" in appearance.

As mentioned earlier, there is a strong interest in human brains evinced by the aliens' activities. Amy, Angie, Beth, Lisa, Pat and Polly all reported having some operation performed on their brains, and they often used the exact same descriptions, of feeling as if their skulls were opened and their brains temporarily removed.

But by far the most alarming evidence of alien technology concerns the "new" bodies and "clones" they manufacture. Whether these are really bodies for a future human "resurrection," as Pat was told, remains to be seen, for other explanations have been given. In a case privately reported, for instance, a man was told that a duplicate of his body could be used to "replace" him if he didn't "cooperate" with the aliens. Lisa, too, was told that other people wouldn't be able to distinguish her cloned body from the original, if they chose to replace her. And Angie was shown the cloned infants as part of a "novel breed" the aliens are producing.

Polly has a different take on what may be going on with the baby presentations. "What's the point?" she asked. "Not to nurture this crossbred infant, not to teach the ETs about emotional love and physical bonding, but to blow our goddamn minds. They use our bodies to get to our minds and emotions." She doesn't believe they care anything about our bodies, "except that WE care very much, so that is why our bodies are important to them: to get at our caring."

This view is echoed by Angie. When she was shown one of her "hybrid" offspring, she felt that the presentation was a test of her rather than anything to do with the baby itself. "From that particular experience, I learned that the hybrid presentation liturgy is not a bonding exercise," she concluded. "In reality it is an act of scrutiny against the mother's measure of courage and understanding. It has a lot to do with mental pain and how the mother deals with it."

Concerning the clones or hybrids themselves, she was further told that their souls are "recycled" and that they are regenerated many times. This fits in with other reports in which abductees saw the aliens destroy fetuses and were told they are not "really alive" and that their physical material will be used, not wasted. In fact, these and other reports point to the use of human genetic material to produce the Gray workers, quite possibly biological "robots" rather than living, soul-inhabited, entities.

The other major technological question concerns the implants, for which the aliens have given various explanations. When Jane received an ear implant, she was told that it affects "brain chemicals and certain subtle functions." The aliens told Angie that the implants "act as a magnet and pull information from people's brains" as well as enhancing the use of "special senses" and sending "instructions."

But Amy was given very different information about the implants by the masked alien who removed hers. Besides being shown where the implants are placed and the fact that they operate on the abductee's own electrical brain activity, she was also told how the implants are used to control abductees, punish them, and even kill them.

And although no one was told that the implants are used to create the virtual-reality scenarios, that possibility must be considered. The technology behind the VRS is a subject upon which the aliens have been silent, but the effects of the VRS are apparent. Only Amy has been given any information about the images created by aliens, when she was told that they use frightening images for control. One of the aliens told Angie that the military also uses "illusions," but this was not explained.

Several of the women have their own ideas about what is behind the virtual-reality scenarios. Besides the control factor mentioned by Amy, Anita believes there may be a positive purpose for some of the VRS activity. "I suspect a lot of these encounters," she said, "are alien-induced dreams, for the purpose of making sure you feel comfortable with them." Lisa said, "I believe sometimes I'm made to dream odd things to see my reaction to them." And Jane, too, believes the aliens sometimes create frightening "set-up scenes, absurd stuff," which has made her uneasy. "I'm afraid," she confided, "we might find that intelligence [behind the illusions] so cold and impersonal that it would be unbearable."

Given all their experiences, what do the women themselves think about the aliens, their encounters, and the agenda to come? Pat is the only one who had unequivocally positive feelings and trust in the aliens-before her encounter with the "oriental girl" in the underground facility, that is-for her perception of them has been shaped since her childhood to see them as angelic beings. Jane, Angie, and Beth all recognize positive and negative forces among the aliens, and while Amy has been threatened and silenced through the years by the aliens, she still says, "I don't think all aliens are bad. I don't even consider the Grays that are abusing humans and other life forms as 'bad'-they have their reasons and think differently from us, so they probably do not understand our feelings."

Angie goes further, saying, "Perfectly real aliens exist out there, and it seems one kind wants to help us and another kind wants to deceive us." Anita has recognized differing agendas among the groups who have interacted with her. She thinks the Grays care very little about humans personally, the humanoids are involved with sexual aspects of the phenomenon (from her conscious recollections, at least), and the Tans are concerned to bind us to them through our emotions.

Polly has expressed many ideas about the alien agenda. "I know many feel they [aliens] need reproductive material from us," she wrote, "but the way it feels to me is, although there may be the aspect that we are a resource, it feels like a highly sophisticated mind game." And she recognizes, as has Anita, that the mind game can be very effective. "Intellectually I can say, 'They are out for control; don't trust them'," Polly has confided. "But, Karla, emotionally and deep in my mind I trust certain ones of them more than anything else in the universe. And I have been confronting bit by bit the evidence that they made me feel this way for their purposes, to fulfill their agenda, not for my good. The depth of my trust, I think, is more frightening than the depth of my fear." Like Anita, she recognizes the directed nature of her response.

'Their consistent theme is control," she continued. "It is maddening to realize that although we strive to empower ourselves and know that we can claim and enforce our own mental sovereignty, still so often they slip by our defenses...and own parts of us which by rights we should have in our conscious possession."

In spite of what some prominent abduction theorists tell us about avoiding thinking in terms of "good and evil" or "positive and negative" when it comes to the aliens, this simply cannot be done, nor should it be. For these women, for my husband and myself, for all abductees, knowing that we have been made a part of this agenda and that we have been implanted, trained, and programmed to participate in some future scenario, how can we not ask to what purpose our minds, bodies, and souls will be used? How can we put aside our rationality, our learned wisdom, and our ethics to trust the words and actions of beings whose nature is kept hidden from us and whose agenda involves the entire world?

More immediately, what can be done to alter the abduction situation? Is there any sign that things are changing? The answer is a cautious yes, there is evidence of a change in the 'standard operating procedure' of abduction events over the last forty or fifty years.

On the part of the aliens, there seems to have been a quantitative and qualitative increase in abduction activity since the mid-1980s in this country. Whereas most events in the past were deeply suppressed in the abductees' memories, by 1986 hundreds, if not thousands, of abductees began to remember past experiences and to be more currently aware of new ones. Either the aliens were not doing a good job of suppressing the memories, or something was triggering a wake-up call in the abductees. Further, more abductees were reporting a variety of alien physical types, not just the small Gray workers typically encountered in the past.

An argument can be made that this awareness was initiated deliberately by the aliens, as part of the preparation for the predicted coming global event in which abductees will be activated to perform their "tasks."

But a different argument can also be made, that abductees were waking up on their own, many times "seeing through" the illusions and virtual-reality scenarios as Anita did when she told the Tan entity who was projecting love toward her, 'Too bad it isn't real." In several recent reports, in fact, abductees have penetrated the aliens' illusions and refused to cooperate as the aliens would have had them do. The growth and changes resulting from alien contact may yet prove to be a double-edged sword, giving abductees a heightened awareness and psychic perception that allows them to evaluate and react to their situations in ways they could not have done before.

It has been said that any species, in an environment of extreme stress and questionable survival, may develop new coping mechanisms to ensure that the species continue to exist. Could this be part of what is happening now? Certainly an intrusion of an advanced, controlling force on a widespread scale could generate enough "species stress" to trigger new response mechanisms.

Studies of human consciousness development theorize that the emergence of bicameralism-the division of the psyche into conscious and subconscious components-occurred relatively recently in human evolution, perhaps no more than five thousand years ago, in a fairly sudden way and with no known precipitating cause. Could it be that we are once again experiencing a psychic change, a movement toward "tricameralism" that will give us a new form of conscious perception? Are we developing new abilities to recognize energies and entities which have hitherto been beyond our ken, and thus new ways to respond?

Many people who see alien interaction as a positive event for humanity point to the growth and changes abductees often evince as proof that the aliens are working to elevate the psychic abilities of our race. Angie has said, echoing the reports of numerous other abductees, "I have grown in many ways. My IQ and receptiveness to learning has improved a lot, and I am more in tune to nature as well as myself and other human beings." Defenders of alien interaction claim that these sorts of changes are a deliberate product of the contact experience, evidence of the aliens' benevolent interest in humanity.

It is odd, however, that such growth seems to come to abductees only after they are aware of their experiences. If indeed this growth is produced by the aliens, then it should have been there long before the abductees were conscious of their encounters, since in almost every reported case there are signs of alien involvement since early childhood. The psychic increase and growth of perceptive abilities, however, occurring after the abductee is aware of the intrusions, may indicate a different genesis-an internal evolution of consciousness-stemming from our need to know what is and has been done to us and what we can do to meet the situation in a more empowered position.

Survivors of great catastrophes such as hurricanes, earthquakes, or war, may be crushed by the impact of these events, losing their usual ethical considerations and sense of self that is the basis of psychic stability. Or they may find a new resilience, rising to the occasion and reacting with abilities they didn't know they possessed.

Given the vast intrusive activities of the abduction phenomenon, we as a species may well feel such a threat or stress that a "mutational" or evolutionary leap is occurring today, developing a tricameralism of the mind, allowing us to confront the intruders and see them more clearly than they have allowed in the past. On the basis of many recent abduction reports, there is hope that our species is awakening.

About the author:

Hi, my name is Svali. Both I and my entire family were involved in a cult group until several years ago, when we broke free. I used to be a programmer in the cult, and now I want to share the knowledge that I have to help others.

It is possible to break free of cult abuse if a person is involved. It is a long, heart-breaking process, but well worth it. In the articles that I will be providing, I hope to help the survivor of cult abuse find tools to help in their journey towards freedom.

I have been a consultant to an on-line survivors group that helps people dealing with issues related to cult programming and becoming free, for the past year and a half. I myself have been in therapy for ritual abuse and DID for nine years, with the last five being aware of the recent cult abuse.

I am also a writer, and a registered nurse. I currently work as a diabetic educator in Texas 20 hours a week.

I have also self-published a book on breaking free of cult programming, which several experts in the field have said has "invaluable information" for the survivor of ritual abuse.

Both my ex-husband and my two children broke free of cult abuse last year. My children are living with me while my husband is working on healing. They all have DID (dissociative identity disorder, formerly known as multiple personality disorder) as well, which makes life at home interesting! I am currently married to my second husband, who is also a recovered DID and who got out of the cult five years ago.

Equipment Frequently Used by Trainers:

It may help therapists to realize the equipment that trainers use. If their client describes these items, which may appear quite sophisticated, believe them. The cult has become quite technologically advanced.

Training room: the average training room is a neutral colored room, with walls painted either a dull gray, white, or beige. Some may be painted in various colors, as part of color coding. They are often located in secret underground rooms, or basements of large private residences, and will be entered from the main building through a covered doorway. Impromptu training rooms may be set up during military exercises outdoors, in covered canvas tents.

Trainers: the Illuminati have a rule: there must always be a minimum of two trainers working with a person. This prevents a trainer from being either too severe, or permissive, or developing too close a bond with the subject; the watchful eye of the other trainer prevents this. Younger trainers are paired with older, more experienced trainers. The older trainer will teach the younger, who does most of the actual work. If the younger is unable to finish a task, or loses heart, the older one will step in.

Head trainers: will teach, they will also work with the council leaders and hierarchy. All members are required to come in for a "tune up" (reinforcing programming), even top leaders, from time to time.

EEG machine: will often have abbreviated hookups for quick use. Used extensively with brain wave programming; also to verify that a certain alter is out when called up. May be used to verify deep trance state before initiating deep programming. Trainers are taught to read these readouts.

Trainer's table: a large table, frequently steel covered with plastic, or easily cleaned material. On the sides at intervals are restraints for arms, legs, neck to prevent movement.

Shock equipment: models and types are quite varied, depending on age and company. Most have a set of rubber covered wires, with electrodes that may be connected with Velcro, rubber (steel tips imbedded under finger and toe nail beds), or gel pads (larger body areas such as chest, arms, legs). Some are tiny electrodes, which can be taped next to eyes, or placed within genitalia. These are connected to the "shock box", which has controls that can determine amount of electricity , and frequency, if interval shocks are desired.

Drugs: any number of opiates, barbiturates, hypnotics, sedatives, anesthetic agents. Resuscitative drugs, antidotes are also kept, clearly labeled and indexed. Many drugs, especially experimental ones, are only known by code names, such as "alphin 1".

CPR equipment: in case person has adverse reaction to drugs or programming. At times, a child alter will come out inadvertently during a programming sequence, and will be overdosed with the drugs meant for adult alters. The trainers must give it the antidote, and resuscitate it, just as if a real child is out. They are well aware of this fact, and will severely punish child alters, to teach them to come out only when called out.

Virtually reality headsets: the keystone in recent years. Many programming sequences utilize holographic images, and virtual reality set ups, including assassination programs, where the person realistically "kills" another human being. These virtual disks are far more advanced than those in video arcades.

Body building equipment: used in military training to increase fitness, lean body mass.

Steel instruments: used to insert into orifices, cause pain

Stretch machine: used as punishment, "stretches " person without breaking bones. Extremely painful.

Trainer's grids and projectors: used to project grids on wall or ceiling.

Movie projector: to show movies, although new VR disks are replacing these computer: collect and analyze data; keep computer grid on person's system. Current military computer access codes will be used to download into governmental computers.

Trainer's Journals: contain indexed copies of subject's systems, including key alters, command codes, etc.

Comfort objects: used to comfort subject afterwards. May be toy or candy for child alters, or oils for massage. Warm towels, or beverages may be given, as the trainer "bonds with" and comforts person they worked with. This is probably the most important part of the training process, as the trainer explains calmly, kindly how well the person did, how proud they are of them.

Chapter One
An overview of the Illuminati

In order to understand Illuminati cult programming, it is first necessary to understand a bit about the structure and philosophy of the organization. The Illuminati are a group of people who follow a philosophy known as "Illuminism" or "enlightenment". The Illuminati were named several hundred years ago, but trace their roots and history to the ancient mystery religions of Egypt, ancient Babylon, and even Mesopotamia. Out of these ancient religions, which were practiced secretly over hundreds and hundreds of years, there arose esoteric groups which continued to practice the rites, traditions, and enculturation brought in from the original groups.

Over the centuries, these groups practiced openly in some countries, and covertly in countries where Christianity or other religions opposed their practices. Some of the groups which came out of these ancient roots included the order of the Knights Templar, Rosicrucian's, Baphetomism, and Druidic cults. These groups were the forerunners, or roots, of modern day Illuminism. The original Illuministic leaders chose to take what they felt were the best practices of each root religion, combine them into principles, then organized these principles according to specific guidelines.

Modern day Illuminism is a philosophy funded by the wealthy, but practiced in all social strata. It is a philosophy whose tenets have spread across the world. It started with the German branch of Rosicrucian's, spread to England, then came to the United states with the first settlers.

The Illuminati have 3 main branches: the Germanic branch, which oversees the others, the British branch, which handles finances, and the French/Russian branch. All 3 branches are represented in both the United States and Canada, as well as every country in the world.

How the Illuminati are organized in the United States:

The Illuminati have groups in every major city of the United States. They originally entered the U.S. through Pittsburgh, Pa., and from there, spread across the US. There are 18 cities across the US, which are considered major "power centers" for Illuminati power and/or influence. These include: Washington, DC and the surrounding areas; Albany, New York; Pittsburgh, Pa. the "golden triangle" of the Winston Salem, Raleigh, NC area, Minneapolis, Minn, Ann Arbor, Mich, Wichita, Kan., Phoenix, Az., Portland, Or., Flagstaff, Az., Seattle, Wash., Houston, TX., Los Angeles, CA. and surrounding areas, Atlanta, Ga., New Orleans, La., Springfield, Miss. Other cities are important to the Illuminati, as all, but these cities funnel money for them, conduct research, and often regional councils sit within them.

Hierarchy of the Illuminati

The Illuminati have organized their society along extremely hierarchical, or stratified, levels. In fact, the top levels are known as:

Hierarchical level

The Illuminati have divided the United States into 7 geographical regions; each region has its own regional council, composed of 13 members, with an advisory board of 3 elders to each one. These regions interact for purposes of finances; personnel; teaching, etc. Beneath each regional council, is a local council. This is a council of 13 members, the head of whom sits on the regional council, and gives it information about the local groups underneath his leadership. The local council will also have an advisory council of 3.

A local leadership council in a large metropolitan area might look like this:

- Head of local council (reports to regional council)
- Two intermediaries (report all activities under leader to him)
- Four administrators (oversee finances, administer, set up group activities)
- Six head trainers (over trainers in local groups, teach other trainers)

Underneath the above leadership council, will be six people designated as informers or intermediaries, who go to the local group meetings, interact with local group leaders, and report to the leadership council.

Anarchical level: the levels below the leadership council are known as the anarchical levels.

Underneath the intermediate level, is the local group level. It will look like this:

Local "Sister groups" (will vary in number, according to the size of the city, or cities, in the area). A large metropolitan area may have anywhere from ten to twenty seven groups.

Each sister group will be headed up by:

A high priest and priestess: this job is rotated every 3 years, to allow different people within the group to take on leadership roles. Each group will also have different members, with specific roles/jobs within the group. These roles will be addressed in Chapter 2.

One thing that I would like to emphasize is the fact that the Illuminati today are generational. There members are born into the group, which is highly organized, as described above. The set up discussed above is representative, with minor variations, of most major metropolitan regions of the United States. Smaller population centers will be organized under similar guidelines, but will be umbrellaed together with several cities within the region to create the local leadership council.

HOW THE ILLUMINATI MAKE MONEY

The Illuminati are involved in many areas of making money, as they need continued financing to survive. There are several illegal enterprises that they are involved in, as well as legal ones.

- Drug running: The Illuminati linked up with the Mafia and the Columbians, years ago, to help each other out with bringing drugs into the United States. They also provide couriers for taking drugs and money out of the States. The Illuminists are generally wealthy businessmen, who have 4 layers of people underneath them. The fourth layer down actually has contact with the people in the drug industry. They never identify themselves as Illuminists; only as people interested in investing, with a guaranteed profit, and are highly secretive. In return, the local groups supply people willing to be couriers of money or drugs, or people willing to help cover for the local operations.

- Pornography: The Illuminati are linked in many cities with pornography/prostitution/child prostitution/ and white slavery sales. Again, several layers are present, as a buffer, between the true "management" and those either engaged in the activities, or in paying for/funding and eventually being paid for the activities.

- Children: are often supplied from the local cult groups, and taught to be child prostitutes (and later, adult prostitutes); are photographed and filmed in every type of pornography available, including "snuff films" and violent films.

- Gun running: The Illuminati and other groups are also involved in international gun sales and shipments. The Illuminists have well trained couriers who will cross international and state lines. These couriers are highly secretive, and will not reveal their sources, on pain of suicide or assassination. These people are accountable to others above them, with two more "buffer layers" of people above these, before the person in the Illuminati with money, who helps fund this, is found.

- Buying access codes for military computers: The Illuminati will have people from all strata of civilian life trained to go and make pickups near or on military bases. A typical person used might be the innocent looking wife of a military person, a local businessman, or even a college student. There is a contact inside the base, also a dissociative Illuminist, who brings the information to the outside contact. Occasionally, the contact person is paid with money, information, or goods. The military computer codes are changed on random schedules; the Illuminati have at least 5 or 6 contacts on each major base, who alert them when the codes are getting ready to change, on pain of death. The Illuminists like having access to military computers, because that will gain them entrance to closed files the world over.

- Hiring and selling assassinations: this is done worldwide, more in Europe than in the States. These people are paid big money to do either a private or political assassination. The money is paid either to the assassin, or to the trainer; usually they both divide the fee The assassin is offered protection in another country for awhile, until the trail runs cold. If the kill is done in Europe they may be sent to the far east or the U.S., and vice versa if the kill is done in the U.S. The Illuminati have a wide arena of places and false identities to hide these people, unless for some reason they want the assassin disposed of as well. Then, he/she is caught and immediately executed.

- Mercenaries/military trainers: guess who gets paid money to come in and train paramilitary groups? Who has training camps all over the states of Montana, Nevada, and North Dakota? Who occasionally will offer their expertise in return for a large financial reward? They never advertise themselves as Illuminati, unless the group is known to be sympathetic to their cause. Instead, these are tough, cold, brutal military trainers, who offer to teach these groups in return for money, or even better, a promise to affiliate with their group in return (loyalty in return for knowledge). More and more paramilitary groups have been brought into the Illuminati this way, without their full knowledge of who and what the group really is. This gives the Illuminists a way to monitor these groups (their trainers report on them, and their activities), and it can be useful to have trained military groups that they can call on someday.

- Banking: The original Illuminists were bankers, and they have highly trained financiers to organize their money, and funnel the above illicit funds into more "respectable" front groups/ organizations. They will also start benevolent charities, community organizations, etc., as fronts, and funnel the money from a broad base into these groups. The Illuminati particularly pride themselves on their money making and manipulation skills, and their ability to cover their paper trails expertly, through layer after layer.

  All banking trails eventually will lead to Belgium, the Illuminati financial center for the world. These are some of the major money making enterprises that the Illuminati are engaged in. They have a lot of financial resources, backing their enterprises, which means that in reality they can engage the best lawyers, accountants, etc. to help cover their trail as well.

Chapter Two:

Jobs in the Illuminati (or Why They Spend All That Time Training People)

To understand generational programming, it helps to understand WHY the cult goes to the amount of trouble that it does to place programming into people. Training represents time and effort, and no one- especially a cult member- will spend that amount of energy unless there will be a return on the investment. This will be a simple overview of some of the more common jobs in the cult. It is not meant to be exhaustive, or in any way considered to be complete.

The cult has a very organized hierarchy of jobs. Like any large organization, in order to run smoothly, it needs people who are well trained in their jobs- so well trained, that they can do their tasks without even thinking about them. To maintain secrecy, this group must also have people completely dedicated to not revealing their roles in the cult- even under threat of death or punishment. The cult wants members who are completely loyal to the group and its tenets, who never question the orders they are given. These qualities in group members ensure the continuance of the cult, and that its secrets are never revealed to the outside world.

Here is a sampling of some jobs in the cult (not listed in order of priority)

- Informers: These people are trained to observe details and conversations with photographic recall. They are trained to report to their local cult leader or hierarchy, or trainer, and will download large amounts of information under hypnotic trance. Detailed knowledge of conversations or even documents can often be retrieved in this manner. They are often used as "plants" to gather information in both governmental settings, and within the cult meetings.

- Breeders: These people are often chosen from childhood to have and breed children. They may be chosen according to bloodlines, or given in arranged marriages or cult alliances, to "elevate" the children. A parent will often sell the services of a child as a breeder to the local cult leader in return for favors or status. These children are rarely used as a sacrifice; usually they are given to others in the cult to adopt or raise, but the breeder is told that any child born to her was "sacrificed" to prevent her looking for the child. Occasionally, in anarchical cults, a local leader or parent will have a child as the result of an incestuous liaison. Such a child is given away or killed, but the mother will be told the child was given away to a distant branch, and must be given up.

- Prostitutes: Prostitutes can be a male or female of any age. They are trained from earliest childhood to give sexual favors to one or more adults in return for payment to the child's parents or their local cult group. Occasionally, the prostitute may be given to a member of the cult, on a temporary basis, as a "reward" for a job well done. Child prostitution is a big business for the cult, and training very young children in this role is taken very seriously. Child prostitutes are also used to blackmail political figures or leadership outside the cult.

- PornographyA child used in pornography (which may include bestiality) can also be of any age or sex. Child pornography is also big business in the cult, and includes snuff films. Children are trained in this role from preschool on, often with the help or approval of the child's parents. The parents are paid or given favors by the cult in return for selling their child or allowing their child to be trained in this area.

- Media personnelThese are very bright, verbal people. They will be sent to journalism school and will work for local or regional media upon graduation. These individuals have many contacts within the organization as well as the outside world. They write books and articles sympathetic to the Illuministic viewpoint without ever revealing their true affiliation. They will tend to do biased research in their articles, favoring only one viewpoint, such as denying the existence of DID or ritual abuse. For instance, they will interview only psychiatrists/psychologists sympathetic to this viewpoint and will skew data to present a convincing picture to the general public. If necessary, they will outright lie or make up data to support their viewpoint. There are members of groups whose people have been purposely trained to try and help formulate public opinion on the nonexistence of the cult (i.e., cults don't exist, no rational person would believe this "mass hysteria"). The Illuminists believe that to control the media is to control the thinking of the masses. For this reason, they take training media personnel quite seriously. Helpers at rituals Cleaners clean up meticulously after rituals. They will scour the site after a ceremony, rake the area, etc. They are taught this job from preschool years on.

- Preparers: set up tables, cloths, candles, and paraphernalia quickly and efficiently. This job is learned from infancy on.

- Readers: read from the book of Illumination or local group archives; they also keep copies of sacred literature in a safe vault and are trained in ancient languages. Readers are valued for their clear speaking voices and ability to dramatize important passages and bring them to life.

- Cutters: are taught to dissect animal or human sacrifices (they are also known as the "slicers and dicers" of the cult). They can do a kill quickly, emotionlessly, and efficiently. They are trained from early childhood on.

- Chanters: sing, sway, or lead choruses of sacred songs on high holy occasions.

- High Priest/Priestess: The person who holds this job is changed every few years in most groups, although it may be held longer in smaller, more rural groups. These people administrate and lead their local cult group as well as coordinate jobs within the cult, give assignments, and pass on meeting dates given from the local hierarchy or leadership council. They also will activate the local group's telephone tree, evaluate their local group members for job performance, and lead in all spiritual activities. They report to the local or regional leadership council over their group.

- Trainers: These people teach local group members their assigned jobs and monitor the performance of these jobs at local group meetings or after an assigned task. These people report to the high priest/priestess over their group, as ell as to the local head trainer on leadership

- PunishersThese are the people who brutally punish/discipline members caught breaking rules or acting outside of or above their authority. They are universally despised by other cult members, although they will be praised for a job well done by the local high priest or priestess. Usually physically strong, they will employ any method deemed necessary to prevent a recurrence of the undesired behavior. Punishment may be public or private, depending upon the severity of the infraction. Each local group has several punishers.

- Trackers:These people will track down and keep an eye on members who attempt to leave their local group. They are taught to use dogs, guns, taser, and all necessary tracking techniques. They are also adept at using the internet to monitor a person's activities. They will track credit card use, checks written, and employ other methods to find a missing person.

- Teachers: These people teach group classes to children to indoctrinate cult philosophy, languages, and specialized areas of endeavor.

- Child care: These people care for very young children when the adults are at local group meeting. Usually care is for young infants only. After age two, children are routinely engaged in some form of group activity led by trainers of the youngest children. Infant child care workers are usually quiet and coldly efficient.

- Couriers: These members run guns, money, drugs, or illegal artifacts across state or national lines. Usually they are people who are young and single without outside accountability. They are trained in the use of firearms to get out of difficult situations. They must be reliable and able to get past any anticipated barriers.

- Commanding officers:These people oversee military training in the local groups and help ensure the smooth running of these exercises. They will delegate jobs to those ranking under them and are responsible to the local leadership council. The council will have at least one member on it representing the military branch of the Illuminati. In addition, there are many military- related jobs beneath the commanding officers.

- Behavioral scientists:These individuals often oversee the training in local and regional groups. These students of human behavior are intensely involved in data collection and human experimentation in the name of the pursuit of knowledge of human behavior in the scientific realm. They are almost universally cold, methodical, impersonal people and will employ any methods to study trauma and its effects on the human personality. Their main interest centers around implementing programming and cult control in the most efficient and lasting manner.

There are many other jobs inside the cult. The cult spends quite a bit of its time getting people to do these jobs for them for FREE, which is why they PROGRAM people to believe they are doing their "family" and the world a service. The reality, of course, is that the individual is being abused and taken advantage of by the cult.

CHAPTER THREE:
CONSPIRACY THEORY TWO, OR THE ILLUMINATI PLAN TO RULE THE WORLD
(ALSO KNOWN AS "NOVUS ORDEM SECLORUM")

Prior to discussing actual programming techniques, it is important to understand the philosophy underlying why the Illuminists are programming people. All groups have goals, and the Illuminists are no exception. Money making is not their final goal - it is a means to an end. This end point, or goal, is no less than to rule the world. The Illuminati has a set plan similar to the Soviet Union's previous "5- year" and "10- year " plans. This is what the Illuminists themselves believe and teach their followers as gospel truth.

Whether they will actually succeed is another matter altogether. The following is the Illuminist agenda at ALL levels of the Illuminati. As with any goal, the Illuminati has specific steps which it plans to implement to reach its objectives. Briefly, each region of the United States has "nerve centers" or power bases for regional activity. The United States has been divided up into seven major geographical regions. Each region has localities within it that contain military compounds and bases that are hidden in remote, isolated areas or on large private estates.

These bases are used intermittently to teach and train generational Illuminati in military techniques, hand- to- hand combat, crowd control, use of arms, and all aspects of military warfare. Why? Because the Illuminists believe that our government, as we know it, as well as the governments of most nations around the world, are destined to collapse. These will be planned collapses, and they will occur in the following ways:

The Illuminati has planned first for a financial collapse that will make the great depression look like a picnic. This will occur through the maneuvering of the great banks and financial institutions of the world, through stock manipulation, and interest rate changes. Most people will be indebted to the federal government through bank and credit card debt, etc. The governments will recall all debts immediately, but most people will be unable to pay and will be bankrupted. This will cause generalized financial panic which will occur simultaneously worldwide, as the Illuminists firmly believe in controlling people through finances.

Next there will be a military takeover, region by region, as the government declares a state of emergency and martial law. People will have panicked, there will be an anarchical state in most localities, and the government will justify its move as being necessary to control panicked citizens. The cult trained military leaders and people under their direction will use arms as well as crowd control techniques to implement this new state of affairs. This is why so many survivors under 36 years of age report having military programming. People who are not Illuminists or who are not sympathetic to their cause, will resist. The Illuminists expect this and will be (and are BEING) trained in how to deal with this eventuality. They are training their people in hand-to- hand combat, crowd control, and, if necessary, will kill to control crowds. The Illuminati is training their people to be prepared for every possible reaction to the takeover. Many mind control victims will also be called into duty with preset command codes. These codes are meant to call out a new, completely cult loyal presenting system. Shatter codes programmed under trauma will be used to destroy or bury non-cult loyal alters.

Military bases will be set up, in each locality (actually, they are already here, but are covert). In the next few years, they will go above ground and be revealed. Each locality will have regional bases and leaders to which they are accountable. The hierarchy will closely reflect the current covert hierarchy.

About five years ago, when I left the Illuminati, approximately 1% of the US population was either part of the Illuminati, sympathetic to it, or a victim of Mind Control (and therefore considered useable). While this may not sound like many, imagine 1% of the population highly trained in the use of armaments, crowd control, psychological and behavioral techniques, armed with weapons and linked to paramilitary groups.

These people will also be completely dedicated to their cause. The Illuminati firmly believes that it can easily overcome the other 99% of the population, most of whom are untrained, or poorly trained, such as "weekend hunters." Even the local military will be overcome as the Illuminati will have regional cell groups with highly trained leaders. They also count on the element of surprise helping them during their takeover. Many of the highest leaders in the militia branch of the Illuminati are or have been officers in the military, and so already have a good knowledge of which techniques will work best to overcome a region's or locality's defenses.

After the military takeover, the general population will be given a chance to either espouse the Illuminati's cause, or reject it (with imprisonment, pain, even death being possible punishments). These people very much believe that the intelligent, or "enlightened" or Illuminated, were born to rule. They are arrogant, and consider the general population as "dumb sheep" who will be easily led if offered strong leadership, financial help in an unstable world economy, and dire consequences if the person rebels. Their utter ruthlessness, and ability to implement this agenda, should not be minimized.

The Illuminati banking leaders, such as the Rothschilds, the Van derBilts, the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, and the Mellons, as examples, will reveal themselves, and offer to "save" the floundering world economy. A new system of monetary exchange, based on an international monetary system, and based between Cairo, Egypt, and Brussels, Belgium, will be set up. A true "one world economy", creating the longed for "one world order", will become reality.

There is more to the Illuminist agenda, but these are the basics of it. This agenda is what the Illuminati really, truly, believe, teach, and train for. They are willing to give their lives up in this cause, in order to teach the next generation, as they believe that their children are their legacy. I was told that my children's generation would see this takeover, sometime in the 21st century. At present, the Illuminati have quietly and covertly fostered their takeover plan by their goals of the infiltration of:

1.The media
2.The banking system
3.The educational system
4.The government, both local and federal
5.The sciences
6.The churches

They are currently, and have been working the last several hundred years, on taking over these 6 areas. They do NOT go to an institution, and say "hi, I'm a local Illuminist, and I'd like to take over your bank). Instead, they begin by having several people quietly invest funds over several years, gradually buying more and more shares in the bank (or other institution that they wish to control), until they have a financial controlling interest in it. They never openly disclose their agenda, or their cult activities, as often they are amnesic to them. These are well respected, "Christian" appearing business leaders in the community. The image in the community is all important to an Illuminist; they will do anything to maintain a normal, respected facade, and DESPISE exposure. On one leadership in a major metropolitan city, where I was a member, there sat: one head of the local small business administration; one CEO of a government defense firm; one principal of a Christian school; one vice mayor of the city; one journalist; one nurse; one doctor; one behavioral psychologist, one army Colonel, and one navy Commander. All except one attended church weekly; all were well respected within the community. NONE of them appeared "evil", or "marked".

If you met them in person, you would probably instantly like any of these intelligent, verbal, likeable, even charismatic people. This is their greatest cover, since we often expect great evil to "appear" evil, led by media portrayals of evil as causing changes in the face and demeanor of people, or marking them like the biblical Cain. None of the Illuminists that I have known, had unkind, or evil appearing, persona in their daytime lives, although some were dysfunctional, such as being alcoholics. The dissociation that drives the Illuminists is their greatest cover for being undetected at this time. Many, if not most, of these people are completely unaware of the great evil that they are involved in, during the night.

There are other groups which are not actually part of the Illuminati, but the Illuminati are aware of them. The Illuminati are not the only group that follows esoteric practices, or worships ancient deities or demons. They encourage divisiveness between different groups (divide and conquer is one of their ruling principles), and are not concerned about other groups. Instead, they will often welcome them into their umbrella, if possible. This has been happening more and more in recent years, as the Illuminati trade teaching their training principles, which are considered the best by most secretive groups, in exchange for loyalty to the Illuminati. They will send their trainers to these groups, and the trainers will report to the local regional council.

In the political arena , the Illuminists will fund both sides of a race, because their greatest maxim is that "out of chaos comes order", or the discipline of anarchy. That is why they sent arms to, and funded, both sides of both the great World Wars in this century. They believe that history is a game, like chess; that only out of strategy, fighting, conflict, and testing can the strong emerge. I no longer agree with this philosophy, but at one time, I did, with all my heart. Hopefully, as these people and their agenda are exposed the common man will rise up against this intended rule to be foisted upon an unsuspecting mankind.

Chapter Four
How the Illuminati Program People:
An Overview of Some Basic Types of Programming

In the first few chapters, I defined Illuminism, its reach, and some of the philosophy, money making enterprises, and agendas that help explain WHY they program people. I believe that these are important to understand, as a preface to the next few chapters. Why? The programming techniques that I will describe take an incredible amount of effort, time, dedication, and planning on the part of the cult to place in the individual. Only a very motivated group of people would spend the time it takes to do this. These chapters are very hard for me to write, as an individual, since my role in the cult was that of a programmer. So, the very techniques you will be reading about were often those that I used to place programming in individuals that I worked with. I no longer do these things, nor do I espouse doing them; the reason I am writing this book is that I believe that therapists who work with DID, as well as survivors, deserve to know WHAT is done to people, HOW it is done, as well as be given some ideas on how to undo the programming that the cult places in people.

First, I would like to address unintentional programming versus intentional programming. This is also known as the environmental milieu the child is raised in. The programming of a generational Illuminati infant often begins before its birth (this will be addressed later) but once it is born, the very environment the infant is raised in becomes a form of programming. Often, the infant is raised in a family environment that combines daytime abandonment with dysfunction in the parental figures. The infant soon learns that the nighttime, and cult activities, are the truly important ones. The infant may be deprived of attention, or even abused, in the daytime; and is only treated as special, or "seen" by the parent, in the cult setting. This can lead to very young alters around the core or core splits, who feel "invisible", abandoned, rejected, unworthy of love or attention, or that they don't even exist, unless they are doing a job for their "family".

Another milieu and conditioning process the infant must face is that the adults around him/her are

INCONSISTENT, since the adults in a generational cult family are almost always also multiple, or DID. This sets up a reality for the infant/toddler that the parents act one way at home; an entirely different way at cult gatherings; and yet a different way in normal society.

Since these are the infant's earliest experiences of adults and adult behaviors, it has no choice but to accept this reality that human beings act in shockingly different ways in different settings. While unintentional, this sets the infant up for later dissociation, in mimicry of the adults around it.

INTENTIONAL PROGRAMMING

Intentional programming of an infant in the Illuminati often begins before birth. Prenatal splitting is well known in the cult, as the fetus is very capable of fragmenting in the womb due to trauma. This is usually done between the seventh and ninth month of pregnancy. Techniques used include: placing headphones on the mother's abdomen, and playing loud, discordant music (such as some modern classical pieces, or even Wagner's operas). Loud, heavy rock has also been used. Other methods include having the mother ingest quantities of bitter substances, to make the amniotic fluid bitter, or yelling at the fetus inside the womb. The mother's abdomen may be hit as well. Mild shock to the abdomen may be applied, especially when term is near, and may be used to cause premature labor, or ensure that the infant is born on a ceremonial holiday. Certain labor inducing drugs may be also given if a certain birth date is desired.

Once the infant is born, testing is begun at a very early age, usually during the first few weeks of life. The trainers, who are taught to look for certain qualities in the infant, will place it on a velvet cloth on a table, and check its reflexes to different stimuli. The infant's strength, how it reacts to heat, cold, and pain are all tested. Different infants react differently, and the trainers are looking for dissociative ability, quick reflexes, and reaction times. They are also encouraging early dissociation in the infant with these tests.

The infant will also be abused, to create fragments. Methods of abuse can include: rectal probes; digital anal rape; electric shocks at low levels to the fingers, toes, and genitalia; cutting the genitalia in ritual circumstances (in older infants). The intent is to begin fragmentation before a true ego state develops, and customize the infant to pain and reflexive dissociation from pain (yes, even tiny infants dissociate; I have seen it time and time again; they will glow blank and limp, or glassy, in the face of continued trauma.)

Isolation and abandonment programming will sometimes be begun as well, in a rudimentary sense. The infant is abandoned, or uncared for by adults, intentionally during the daytime, then picked up, soothed, cleaned up and paid attention to in the context of preparing for a ritual or group gathering. This is done in order to help the infant associate night gatherings with "love" and attention, and to help the bonding process to the cult, or "family". The infant will be taught to associate maternal attention with going to rituals, and eventually will associate cult gatherings with feelings of security.

As the infant grows older, i.e. at 15 to 18 months, more fragmenting is intentionally done by having the parents as well as cult members abuse the infant more methodically. This is done by intermittently soothing, bonding with the infant, then shocking it on its digits; the infant may be dropped from heights to a mat or mattress and laughed at as it lays there startled and terrified, crying. It may be placed in cages for periods of time, or exposed to short periods of isolation. Deprivation of food, water, and basic needs may begin later in this stage. All of these methods are done in order to create intentional dissociation in the infant. The infant of this age may be taken to group meetings, but outside of special occasions, or dedications, will have no active role yet in the cult setting. The small infants are usually left with a cult member, or caretaker, who watches them during the group's activities; this caretaker role is usually rotated among lower level or teenage members.

Between the ages of 20 and 24 months, the toddler may begin the "steps of discipline" which the Illuminati use to teach their children. The age the child begins them will vary, depending upon the group, the parent, the trainer, and the child. These "steps of discipline" would be better called "steps of torment and abuse" as their purpose is to create a highly dissociative child, out of touch with their feelings, who is completely and unthinkingly loyal to the cult. The order of the steps may also be varied a little, depending on the whims of the trainer or parents.

I will first discuss the first five steps of discipline: (note: these steps may vary somewhat from region to region, but most follow this outline at least roughly, even if not in the same order)

First step: to not need

The small toddler/child is placed in a room without any sensory stimulus, usually a training room with gray, white, or beige walls. The adult leaves and the child is left alone, for periods of time: these may vary from hours, to an entire day as the child grows older. If the child begs the adult to stay, and not leave, or screams, the child is beaten, and told that the periods of isolation will increase until they learn to stop being weak. The ostensible purpose of this discipline is to teach the child to rely on its own internal resources, and not on outside people ("strengthen it"). What it actually does is create a huge terror of abandonment within the child. When the adult, or trainer, returns to the room, the child is often found rocking itself, or hugging itself in a corner, occasionally almost catatonic from fear. The trainer will then "rescue" the child, feed and give it something to drink and bond with the child as their "savior". The trainer will tell them the "family" told the trainer to rescue the child, because its family "loves" it. The trainer will instill cult teachings, at this point, into the helpless, fearful, and almost insanely grateful child who has just been "rescued" from isolation. The trainer will reinforce in the child over and over how much it "needs " its family, who just rescued it from death by starvation or abandonment. This will teach the very young toddler to associate comfort and security with bonding with its trainer, who may be one of its parents, and being with "family" members. The cult is very aware of child developmental principles, and has developed exercises like the above after hundreds of years of teaching very young children.

Second step: to not want

This step is very similar to the first step, and actually reinforces it. It will be done intermittently with the first step over the next few years of the child's life. Again, the child is left alone in a training room, or isolated room, without food or water for a long period of time. An adult will enter the room, with a large pitcher of ice water, or food. If the child asks for either, as the adult is eating or drinking in front of the child, he/she is severely punished for being weak and needy. This step is reinforced, until the child learns not to ask for food or water unless it is offered first. The ostensible reason the cult gives for this step is that it creates a child who is strong, and can go without food and water for longer and longer periods of time. The real reason this is done is that it creates a child who is completely dissociated from its own needs for food, water, or other comforts, who becomes afraid to ask outside adults for help. This creates in the child a hyper-vigilance as she/he learns to look for outside adults for cues on when it is okay to fulfill needs, and not to trust her/his own body signals. The child is already learning to look outside itself to others to learn how it should think or feel, instead of trusting its own feelings. The cult now becomes the locus of control for the child.

Third step: to not wish

The child is placed in a room with favorite toys, or objects. A kind adult comes into the room and engages the child in play. This adult my be a friend, aunt, parent, or trainer. The child and adult may engage in fantasy play about the child's secret wishes, dreams, or wants. This will occur on several occasions, and the child's trust is slowly gained. At some later point, the child is severely punished for any aspect of wishing or fantasy shared with the adult, including the destruction of favorite toys, going in and undoing or destroying secret safe places the child may have created, or even destroying non cult protectors. This step is repeated, with variations, many times over the ensuing years. Occasionally, the child's siblings, parents, or friends will be used to reveal inside fantasies the child has revealed to them during the daytime, or in unguarded moments. The ostensible reason the cult gives for this step is to create a child who doesn't fantasize, who is more outwardly directed, less inwardly directed. In other words, the child is to look to adults for permission in all aspects of its life, including internal. The reality is that this step destroys all safe places the child has created internally, to retreat from the horrors it is experiencing. This step creates in the child the feeling that there is no true safety, that the cult will find out everything it thinks. Exercises like this are also used to create young alters in the child who will self report to the cult trainers any secret safe places, or covert wishes against the cult, that other alters have. This will then begin to set up intersystem hostility and divisiveness, which the cult will manipulate throughout the person's life span in order to control them.

Fourth step: the survival of the fittest

This step is used in order to begin creating perpetrator alters in the young child. ALL CULT MEMBERS WILL BE EXPECTED TO BECOME PERPETRATORS; THIS BEGINS IN EARLY CHILDHOOD. The child is brought into a room where there is a trainer and another child of approximately the same age, or slightly younger, that the child being taught. The child is severely beaten, for a long period of time, by the trainer, then told to hit the other child in the room, or they will be beaten further. If the child refuses, it is punished severely, the other child is punished as well, then the child is told to punish the other child. If the child continues to refuse, or cries, or tries to hit the trainer instead, they will continue to be beaten severely, and told to hit the other child, to direct its anger at the other child. This step is repeated until the child finally complies. This step is begun around age 2 to 2 1/2, and is used to create aggressive perpetrator alters in the young child. As the child becomes older, the punishing tasks become more and more brutal. Children are expected to become perpetrators of others at very young ages, and will "practice" on children younger than themselves, with the encouragement and rewarding by the adults around them. They will also be mimicking these adults, who role model perpetration constantly as normal. The child will be taught that this is the acceptable outlet for the aggressive impulses and rage that are created by the brutality the child is constantly being exposed to.

Fifth step: the code of silence

Many, many different stratagems are used to put this in, starting at around the age of two years old, when a child starts becoming more verbal. Usually, after a ritual or group gathering, the child is asked about what they saw, or heard, during the meeting. Like most obedient young children, they will comply. They are immediately severely beaten, or tortured, and a new alter is created, who is told to keep or guard the memories of what was seen, on pain of their life. The new part always agrees. The child and this new part are put through a ceremony of swearing to never ever tell; and alters are created whose job it is to kill the body, if the other parts ever remember.

The child is also put through severe psychological torture to ensure that it will never be tempted to tell, including: being buried alive; near drowning; watching "traitor's deaths" involving slow painful torture, such as being burned, or skinned alive; being buried with a partially rotted corpse and being told that they will become a corpse like it if they ever tell, etc. The scenarios go on and on, invented by people with endlessly cruel imaginations, in order to ensure the secrecy of the young child. These methods have been perfected over hundreds of years of practice by the cult with its children. The reason these things are done is self evident: the cult is involved in criminal activities, as explained in the first few chapters of this book, and they want to ensure the continued silence of its children. This is one reason why the cult has survived so long, and with its continued shroud of secrecy; why more survivors are afraid/ unwilling to disclose their abuse. In order to reveal cult secrets, a child must go against some of the most tremendously horrendous psychological trauma and abuse imaginable; even as an adult, the survivor has difficulty putting these things aside, when discussing their abuse. Children and adults alike are told that if they ever tell, they will be hunted down and shot (the assassin training lets the child know that this is no idle threat); that they will be tortured slowly. The child will be exposed to setups and role plays throughout their growing up that reinforces this step.

SUGGESTIONS THAT MAY HELP

I believe in also offering some ideas on how to undo some of the above mentioned programming, as I do not believe in knowledge, only for knowledge's sake. The survivor often needs tools, in order to try and undo some of the horrendous abuse that the cult places him/her through, especially as memories of these things occur. THESE ARE JUST MEANT AS HELPFUL HINTS AND DO NOT REPLACE THE

ADVICE OF A GOOD THERAPIST.

1. Early milieu programming:
This is difficult to undo, since it hits on core abandonment issues, and rejection, for the survivor. This will often have been the survivor's very first, earliest experiences as an infant, involving its relationship with its parents and primary family members. Working on this requires the whole hearted effort of all alter systems inside, to join in nurturing the core splits who experienced severe parental rejection, and the cognitive recognition that the DAYTIME was important, too; that the adults around the infant were the unhealthy ones. The infant's often feel unlovable, overly needy, depressed; but nurturing alters inside can help comfort them, and share the reality that the infant really was loveable, no matter what the outside adults around it were like. Here, too, an outside supportive therapist, and a strong, nurturing faith system, can help tremendously in the healing process, as new messages are brought in to the abandoned, wounded parts. Sorting through what happened, grieving over the real issues of abandonment, and bringing reality to very young, deeply wounded parts will take time.

2. Early intentional fragmentation: (ages 0 to 24 months)
Usually there are cognitive parts of the survivor inside, who have never ever forgotten the abuse, and can help share the cognitive reality of the abuse with the amnesic alters. This should be done extremely slowly, since this first abuse was done quite early in life. Creating an internal nursery, with safe toys, objects, can help. Older nurturing adult alters inside can help hold and care for the wounded infants inside the nursery, while acknowledging and grieving over the abuse which occurred. It is important to believe an validate the young parts when they come forward to share. Allowing them nonverbal ways of expressing themselves can help, as these are quite young parts, who often cannot talk yet. Having older children inside who are close to the infants verbalize their wants, needs, and fears can also help, as often the youngest parts inside do not trust ANY adults, even internal ones. A strong ,caring outside therapist is also important to healing, by modeling healthy nurturing to a system that may have no concept of this, while balancing the need of the infant for outside nurture with the need for the internal system(s) to learn their own self nurture techniques. Internal helpers can reach the infants, ground them, share present reality (that the body is older, the infants are safe, etc. These helpers may be internal older children, as mentioned before). The survivor may also want to find support adults when possible, who can help with modeling healthy caring with good boundaries.

A THERAPIST OR FRIEND CANNOT RE-PARENT THE SURVIVOR. The survivor will long for this, but realistically, the survivor has one set of parents, good or bad, or sadly, even terrible. No outside person can come in and redo the complete re-parenting of another. What the therapist and support person can offer will be caring, empathy, listening, while the survivor grieves over the loss of adequate nurture. They can offer friendship or empathy with good boundaries. They cannot become the survivor's parents, or therapy will not progress. Instead, enmeshment will begin.

3.The First Five Steps of Discipline (there are twelve total; others will be addressed in later chapters)
Try to find the parts that experienced the abuse. This may mean doing system mapping (drawing pictures of what things look like inside), and going to the cognitives (intellectuals) or controllers (head honchos inside) for information. An internal helper, or recorder, may also be extremely helpful in doing this.

Remembering safely assumes that the person has a qualified therapist, and also has laid the groundwork for good intrasystem cooperation, as discussed above. Memory work should not be done until there is good communication and cooperation inside, or the person will be overwhelmed by the memories as they come out. They will be flooded and re-traumatized instead of helped, and may de-compensate. With good communication, memories can be brought out a little at a time, in manageable pieces, while cognitive alters continually help keep the survivor from going completely into the memory, and they can also help ground the more wounded parts.

The cult will put people through certain types of programming in order to achieve a specific goal: separating the intellect, or cognition, form the feelings in a person. Cognitive alters in these systems are always considered "higher" than the feeling alters; cognitive alters are taught to "pass down" their feelings to the "lower" feeling alters. While these labels are untrue, the cognitive alters will fear feeling the intense, overwhelming emotions that caused them to split further and further from the more limbic, or feeling alters internally. This will drive continued system divisiveness in the survivor. It is important that cognitive parts realize that the feeling alters are part of them; that they can practice sharing their feelings in SMALL steps without needing to be flooded, or overwhelmed.

A reminder: EXTERNAL SAFETY IS PARAMOUNT TO UNDOING INSIDE PROGRAMMING. You HAVE to be able to promise these parts external safety, and deliver on this promise, or they will understandably balk at working inside on undoing programming. Why should they try and change, only to go back and be punished again? No system will undo its own protective dissociation, if the abuse is ongoing, or it will continue to destabilize and re-dissociate over and over. This is because dismantling the dissociation would mean dismantling its own survival and protection. Stopping contact with perpetrators and having a safe therapist are the very first steps to take, before attempting to undo internal programming. A system can still work on stopping cult contact, and begin healing , while being accessed, but it will slow therapy down tremendously as the internal energy will be diverted to staying safe rather than undoing trauma. A person can heal, and most survivors are still in cult contact when they enter therapy. BUT the progress will go much more quickly once cult contact is broken. (see chapter on preventing accessing of the survivor)

Chapter Five
Colors, Metals and Jewel Programming

Color coding (To see more about color go here)
One form of programming that is quite common in the Illuminati is color programming. Why is it done? The answer is that trainers are human, and also quite lazy. Color programming is a simple way to organize systems, and allows the trainer to call up alters easily within a system. With the thousands of fragments that many multiples in the cult have, colors is a way of organizing them into an easily accessible group.

Also, young children recognize colors before they can read, so this training can occur quite early. It is begun at about age two in most children.

How it is done: The child is taken into a room with either white, beige, or colored walls. If the room is a neutral color, the lights in the room will be changed, so they color the room with the light's color. If "blue" is the color being imprinted, or put in, the trainer will call up a young child alter, either a controller or core split for a system. They will tell the child that they will learn how to become blue, and what blue means. The room will be bathed in blue light, as mentioned, or has been painted blue for use in this kind of programming. The trainer will be dressed in blue clothing, and may even have a blue mask on. Blue objects will be placed around the room. The alter inside the child is called up, drugged, hypnotized, and traumatized on the table. As they are awakening from the trauma, still in trance, they are told that blue is good, and that they are blue. That blue is important. That blue will protect them from harm. That blue people don't get hurt. This will go on for awhile.

They then ask the child if they want to be "blue", like the trainers. If the child says yes, they will continue on. If the child says no, it will be re-traumatized until it says yes. The child is often naked, and told it cannot wear clothing until it "earns" the right to wear beautiful blue clothing. Over and over the "safety of being blue" (ie freedom from harm) and danger of not having a color is emphasized. The children really wants to be blue after a while of going through this. They may be given blue candy as a reward for choosing to become the color. They may be given blue sunglasses or tinted lenses to wear. They are allowed to wear blue robes once they identify with the color chosen for them.

Once the child completely identifies with the color (or rather, the main alter or template for the system accepts this color), then they are taught in progressive stages, over many training sessions, what the color blue means. They are in set ups, or dramas with other blue children, where they act out the role of a "blue". They are drugged, hypnotized, traumatized, while the meaning of blue is ground in over and over. They are forced to act in "blue" ways. Different trainers and regions will assign different meanings to different colors. Many military systems are coded blue, or protective. The military alters all are called up periodically to reinforce blue training. If the trainer at a later date wants to access a blue system, they may call them up by color, or wear a piece of clothing or a scarf in the color they want to reach.

This becomes an unconscious trigger for this color to come forward. Color coding is one of the first methods that is inlayed over systems. An entire system may be color coded one color; or two or more colors may be coded in , with each system controller (most systems have three) being given a different color over its part of the system.

Metals programming:

Metals programming is a type of programming that many Illuminati children are given. Because it is so similar to jewels programming, I will discuss how it is done under jewels. Metals can be from bronze (lowest) to platinum (highest).

Jewels programming:

Many Illuminati children will go through either metals or jewels programming, and occasionally will go through both. Jewels is considered higher than metals, and more difficult to obtain. Which is put in and when, is dependent on the child's status, its parents status, the region it is born in, the group it is born into, and the trainers that work with it.

Basically, either metals or jewels is a form of reward based programming.

Here is how it works:
The child is shown a piece of jewelry such as a ring, or else a large example of the jewel (or metal) being put in. They are asked: "isn't this Amethyst, or Ruby, Emerald, Diamond) beautiful?" The child will be eager to look at it, touch it, and is encouraged to by a trainer with a soft kind voice. The trainer will ask the child, "wouldn't you like to be beautiful, like this jewel? (or metal jewelry)". The child is usually eager to be. Here is a sparkling gemstone, placed in their small hands (the training often begins between age two and three). Of course they want to be beautiful, sparkly, valued. The trainer will extol the beauty of the gem (or metal), will tell the child how special, valued, wanted gems are, and basically build up the idea of becoming like a jewel.

The child is then told that in order to become a jewel, they must "earn the right". This involves:
a.) passing through steps of discipline (see chapter three)
b.) passing "special tests"
c.) being rewarded for special achievement

Becoming a jewel (or precious metal) is dangled before the small child, like a carrot, as the reward for doing well in training sessions. The earning of one is linked to going through the rungs of the long, arduous training process expected of Illuminati children; having a jewel or metal involves stepping up in status and being praised. But the price is enduring hours of abuse called "training" but in reality is organized, systemic abuse to make the child do what the trainer wants them to become.

Over time, with the help of drugs, hypnosis, shock, and other trauma, as the child goes through it's training process, it will begin earning its jewels and/or metals, one by one. These will become full alters inside.

Amethyst is usually the first one earned, and is linked to keeping secrets, never telling, and passing the first step of discipline. Each step is linked to receiving either a jewel or precious metal.

Ruby will often be next, and is linked to sexual abuse and sexual alters inside. As the child is repeatedly sexually traumatized and survives, or creates sexual alters to please adults, they are "rewarded" by being allowed to become a ruby.

Emerald will often come later (ages 12 to 15). This is considered very precious, and is linked to family loyalty, witchcraft, and spiritual achievement. Emeralds will often have a black cat, or "familiar" linked to them.

Diamond is the highest gemstone, and not all children will earn it. It is considered a high achievement. and may not be earned until adulthood, after passing rigorous tasks. It will be the controlling alter in a gemstone system. A diamond has passed all twelve steps of discipline, plus passed unusual tests and will have highest family loyalty.

"Family jewels" are often passed down internally during training sessions with trainers and family members. All high Illuminati families will have jewels hidden in secret vaults (real, outside jewels) which have been passed down for generations.

The children will often be given jewelry to wear in the daytime, as a reminder or reward, once they pass their programming. A child may be given a ruby ring or garnet pin to wear; in fact, a grandparent or parent may insist the child wear it. On ritual occasions, the child will be allowed to wear jewelry from the family's vault, once they reach a certain status. They may be allowed to wear a ruby pendant or emerald bracelet during high rituals, and will be quite proud of the fact, since the cult is first, foremost and always an extremely status conscious group. The children pick up on this, and the adults will make a big fuss over the children who have earned the right to wear jewels. This gives them a huge incentive to earn them.

Color programming: it is important to have good internal communication with both internal alters and an outside therapist while working on color programming. If an individual finds that certain parts believe that they are a certain color, or if this comes up in therapy, they will want to find out if possible how they came to have this belief system. Slowly discovering how the colors were put in will help. Grieving for the vast amount of deception, the amount of abuse heaped on the child, and the very young alters who were the original templates may occur. These parts may be barely verbal, and may want to draw their experiences, or use colors in collages (with the help of older parts inside), to describe to a safe outside person what their reality has been. Validating to them that they are NOT just a color, that they are part of a whole person, may help. The survivor may see colored overlays for awhile, as they are undoing this programming, as parts inside share their memories. This is normal, although it may feel uncomfortable to see objects as yellow or green, for example. Grounding oneself, having cognitives do reality orientation, and patience will help the survivor work through this time.

Jewel programming and metals may be more complex, since the child's sense of special ness, pride and status may be bound up in these alters. Rubies, emeralds and diamonds are considered "high alters" inside and are used to leadership roles, both internally and externally. Acknowledging their importance to the system; listening to them grieve at leaving the cult, which meant giving up their status externally, and giving them new positions inside that are important can help. They can become system leaders in helping the person stay safe, once they make the decision to leave the cult, and become strong allies. But they will often be among the most resistant, and even hostile, to the idea of leaving the cult at first, since they have only known and remembered being rewarded for jobs well done, and have learned to "pass down" the traumas to "lower parts" inside. They will often honestly not believe they have been abused, and will only remember being petted or allowed to lead, or being told they were special, valued. Listening to how they feel; acknowledging that leaving means giving up things that were important to them, finding out what needs motivated them, and trying to find healthy outlets for them to get their needs met outside of cult meetings will help. Letting a jewel have leadership within, or chair internal meetings may make up for loss of external leadership when the survivor leaves the cult.

Acknowledging their importance to the survivor is also important. Recognize that these parts are EXTREMELY dissociated from their own abuse/trauma, and are in no hurry to remember. But both the survivor and a good therapist can bring reality gently to them, as they let them know that they were abused; that they are actually part of the "lower emotional parts" who were abused, and will eventually need to acknowledge this. This task takes time and good outside support to accomplish. Allow them to vent their feelings. They will often be highly cognitive at first, but feelings will come, especially grieving, then pain at having been deceived by the cult, then the anguish of realizing that the abuse they passed down to others inside was actually happening to them. They may become quite depressed at this stage, but will also lend tremendous stability and strength to the system, in staying safe and cult free, once they have reached this stage.

These are some thoughts on color, metals, and jewel programming. Other types of programming will be addressed in the next chapter.

Chapter Six
Brain Wave Programming

In this chapter I will address brain wave programming. Brain wave programming, like any other programming, will depend on several factors.

These include: the child's ability to dissociate; the region of the country or which country the child grows up in; the level of ability of the trainers the child has contact with; physical resources and equipment available. There is no one "recipe" that fits every person and it would be ridiculous to state that all people who go through brain wave programming have it done the same way. More and more, programmers are talking, sharing knowledge over the net, both nationally and internationally, and sharing both successes and failures. But there is no one standardized methodology for brain wave programming. It will often be influenced by the child herself, as well as the trainer's whims. Different groups may organize the systems differently, or try to achieve different effects.

All of this said, what is brain wave programming? Simply put, brain wave programming involves having a young child go into a deep trance state, where they then learn to dissociate into a certain brain wave pattern. This is a complex skill, and not all children can achieve this. The goal is for the child to reach, for example, a consistent delta state, where delta brain waves show up on the EEG, which is attached to the child's head by electrodes in the scalp. Usually, two or even three trainers will work on one child during the initial stages. One will "prep" the child, using a hypnotic drug to induce a trance state. They will have also placed the electrodes on the head, using an abbreviated version of the method used in traditional hospital setting. If delta state is being induced, only the electrodes needed to pick up delta waves will be placed, for example. This is to save time.

The prepped child will be on a "trainer's table", and will be quite relaxed. The average child is about eight years old when this is begun, since the cerebral cortex and neurological development are not advanced enough at earlier ages (It has been tried at earlier ages, quite unsuccessfully, in the past; this practice was dropped because of the neurological damage and "failure to take rate" that trainers were seeing). The non prepping trainer will then let the child know exactly what he/she expects: that they will achieve a special state, called "delta state". The trainer tells the child, while they are in trance state, that they will know when they reach it, by the readings from the electrodes.

The trainer will tell the child alter, who has been called up to be a "template", or building block for the new system, that delta is good. They will emphasize this over and over. The child will then be shocked to increase its receptivity to learning. This also arouses the child from its drugged state and it will be more alert. It will want to please the trainer. The trainer will tell the child that she/he wants it to perform certain mental exercises. It will then give it backwards counting exercises, used to help the child achieve deeper trance states. Other verbal cues to trance down may be given. When the prepping or technical trainer sees delta waveforms, he or she will signal the verbal trainer with a hand motion. The verbal, or teaching trainer will immediately reward the child, saying, "good, you are in delta now." The trainer will caress the child, tell it what a good job it is doing. If the child bounces out of delta state, the verbal trainer will immediately become harsh, and will shock the child as punishment. The child is told that it left delta (which is "good") and needs to go back in.

The induction, counting, will be repeated until delta state is seen again, when the child is repeatedly rewarded for entering, then staying in this state for longer and longer periods. The trainers are using biofeedback principles to teach the child to consistently cue into a brainwave pattern. When the template can stay in delta pattern consistently, the template will be rewarded. This will occur over several months.

The trainers will now have a template that stays always in delta state, that they can begin splitting and using as the basis of forming a new system inside. They will do this using the tools of drugs, hypnosis and trauma. The new system created will record delta waves on an EEG if done correctly. The new system will be taught what delta means. The trainers will often flash a cue, or delta (triangle) symbol on a projector overhead, and "grind in" the delta imprinting. They will wear robes with delta signs on them, and cloth the subject in clothing or robes imprinted with the delta sign. They will teach the alters under hypnosis what deltas do, how they act. They will reward them when they comply, and shock or otherwise traumatize them if they do not act like "deltas". They will be given delta jobs. They will watch high frequency films, that show delta functions. They may build in a computer like structure to hold the system, showing pictures of its organization while the subject is under deep trance, after creating a clean slate through trauma.

These are some examples of how delta programming may be induced.

Other brain wave states will be induced in similar manners. They will often be formed from templates which are extremely young internal child alters who may be splits from core splits, as the basis for the programming. Common brain wave states used are:

Alpha: this is the most easily reached brain wave state, and also includes both the youngest and most easily accessed alters in the entire system. Young children have long periods of alpha activity and must be trained to enter other brain wave states for long periods. System access programming; access codes and sexual alters will often be placed in alpha, which may also be coded red in some systems.

Beta: this is the next most easily reached state, and is often associated with aggressive impulses. Beta state will often hold cult protectors, internal warriors, and military systems. They may be color coded blue.

Gamma: this will often hold extremely cult loyal alters, and holds more emotion than the other states, except for alpha. Suicide programming will often be layered into this system, as these alters would rather die than leave their "family". Scholarship programming may be held by this system, since they easily memorize by rote. Several languages may be spoken by different alters in this system, as the Illuminati like to program in plural linguality, with up to eight languages, both modern and ancient being spoken.

Delta: this is one of the more cognitive brain wave states, and will often be highly dissociated. It may also be the "ruling" or controlling state over the other brain wave systems. Often, delta state may be configured inside as a computer, and the delta alters will have emotionless, flat alters with photographic memories. They may hold most of the cognitive memories for the other systems, especially if extensive amnesia programming has been done. Delta state may have up to three levels of training: delta 1, delta 2, and delta 3 which will also correlate to security access allowed within the cult; i.e. access to highly confidential information. Behavioral sciences programming may be held by this system. Internal programmers, self destruct, psychotic, and shatter programming as well as other punishment programming sequences to prevent outside access or internal access to the systems may be held within delta systems. It may be color coded both orange/blue/purple, and will also often be the entry way to higher systems such as jewels or internal councils, inside.

Epsilon: this is often a "hidden system" and may hold CIA programming and high level governmental programming . Assassin programming may be held in this system, or in the beta system, depending on the trainer. Covert operations, courier operations, learning to tail a subject, or "drop a tag", disguises, getting out of difficult situations, may be handled by this system, which sees itself as chameleon-like. It may be color coded brown.

Phi/Theta/Omega programming: this represents negative spiritual programming. These are the "dark" ritual alters, who participate in blood rituals, sacrifices, and ceremonies. Internal witches, warlocks, seers, psychics, readers, and occult practitioners will be placed in this system, which has highly developed right brain and deep trance abilities. They will often be color coded black.

This is an overview of some of the more common brain wave systems. It is often placed in over a matter of years, from ages 8 to 21 being the primary ones, with occasional reinforcement of the programming from time to time.

Suggestions:

Brain wave programming is a very complex form of programming which creates automatic amnesia and communication barriers between the different brain wave states. This will also be reinforced by shock and punishment to prevent its "degradation", or undoing. Internal system controllers and programmers will also work to reinforce the programming, especially at night, when the person is asleep (physically).

All brain wave systems will have system controllers, usually set up in a group of three (the Illuminati love triads, as being the "mystical" and most stable number. They believe that systems built upon triads are extremely strong, unbreakable, and will often program in threes: three back ups, three system controllers, etc.) With the help of a good therapist, the survivor needs to get to know the internal system controllers and communicators. They are there, they have to be, because the trainers placed them there to communicate with and be accountable to them externally, and will often have complete knowledge of their own system. They will also be quite flat, and dissociated from the knowledge of their own pain or the abuse that created them. This is a distancing mechanism, and the person's survival depended on the ability of their controller to do this at one time. They will often be quite hostile, and very unwilling to look at their own abuse; they will become indignant at the idea, and claim that they are cognitive, and "above" being abused (another lie they were told by their abusers).

Time, patience, and finding out what their needs are; listening to them vent their frustration; pointing out reality (ie, the controllers, and all parts are related to each other; are part of the same person; and ALL were abused even though they were able to dissociate from their pain), and trying to help them meet their needs for recognition, acceptance, and approval will begin to allow them to question their previous loyalty. These systems are often driven by fear: fear of punishment; fear of remembering (they were often the most tortured systems in the survivor, and were promised amnesia in return for continued cooperation). Their fears are real, and should be listened to and respected, as shatter programming and flood programming are real threats to the survivor, and can cause functionality to go down.

Flood programming is a sequence put in place to punish a system if its internal programming is allowed to degrade or access to an unauthorized person, either internally or externally, is allowed. It will involve the fragments who hold highly traumatic memories, both emotional and physical, being pushed to the front where the person is "flooded" with wave after wave of memories. If this is triggered, and it frequently is if the survivor is in therapy, the first priority should be slowing the memories down. This may mean trying to reason with internal controllers or deltas who are allowing the flooding; they need to know that if the front, or previously amnesic alters down, or are re-shattered due to traumatization, it will weaken all the systems.

Bargain with them. Prayer will help in this situation. Physical safety, including inpatient therapy, may be needed if flooding or shatter programming are activated. Suicide programming is often layered in with both types, and external physical safety will be paramount for the survivor, with lots of outside accountability as they undo these intense programming sequences. Frequent reality orientation; explaining new, better jobs can help. Undoing brain wave programming should ideally only be done with lots of safe external support, which may include extra therapy sessions; hospitalization if programming that could cause loss of functionality or suicide are triggered; and should be geared towards increasing internal communication and cooperation. Alters jobs can be changed, from internal programmers to internal Deprogrammers; internal shatterers or punishers to internal protectors; internal reporters who report back to the cult can instead be asked to report internally on what the body is doing, and to keep it safe.

These are examples of possible changes. Make friends with system controllers, as they can become strong helpers and will work with the therapist to keep things safe for the survivor.

Chapter Seven

Military Programming

I want to devote an entire chapter to military programming, and how it is done. Why? As noted in chapter three, the Illuminati are emphasizing the importance of military training more and more, as part of their plan for eventual takeover. All children in the current generation are undergoing some form of military training as part of this plan.

Military training is begun quite young. It is often started by three years of age with simple exercises. The children are taken by their parents to a training area, which may be a large inside auditorium, or a remote area outside where training maneuvers are done. Tents are set up, with command centers for the different commanding officers and military trainers.

The children are taught to march in time, keeping a straight line. They are punished by being kicked, shocked with a cattle prod, or beaten with a baton if they move out of place. They will be dressed in small uniforms in imitation of the adults.

The adults will have ranks, badges and insignia indicating their level of achievement in the cult hierarchy and military. Badges and medals are given out to indicate the person's level of training and tests passed. Commanding officers are often brutal and will teach even the youngest children with harsh measures.

The children will be forced to march long distances, which increase as they get older, in any weather. They are forced to learn to cross obstacles. They will be given "fake" guns, with blanks, when they are young. These guns are perfect replicas of real guns, but fire blanks. The children are taught to load and fire all manner of firearms, both real and fake, under close adult supervision. They will spend hours learning to aim, sight, and fire these guns at targets. At first the targets are bulls eyes, but as the children get older the targets will be similar to police cut outs of humans. The children are taught to aim for the head or the heart. Later, they will graduate to realistic manikins. This is conditioning them to kill a human being.

They will be shown violent films of warfare, much more explicit and graphic than normal movies in group classes. Killing techniques will be shown in slow motion. The motif "kill or be killed" will be ground in over and over. The trainer will ask the children what mistakes the people who were killed made. Being killed is considered weakness; being a killer is considered strength.

The children will be forced, by age seven or eight, to crawl on their bellies with simulated blanks firing overhead. They are not told these are blanks and they are extremely painful if the child is hit in the back or buttocks. They quickly learn to keep down under fire. Battle conditions will be simulated as the children go through years of "boot camp" training.

They will be rewarded with merit badges for doing well, such as completing an obstacle course, or staying cool under fire. In other words, the cult creates a microcosm of real military training for their children and youth. Nazi concentration camps will be simulated, with guards and prisoners. The "guards" are usually older children or youth who have done well. The "prisoners" are younger children or those being punished for not performing well in maneuvers. There is intense pressure to want the guard role and not be a prisoner, since prisoners are locked up, beaten, kicked, and laughed at.

Hunting and tracking games where the prisoners are given a half hour lead are frequent. These may also involve the use of specially trained dogs taught to knock the quarry down but not kill them. Older children are taught to handle the dogs, and use them. Youth are taught to help the adults train the dogs.

Teens may be rewarded by becoming "youth leaders" who are allowed to plan the weeks activities. The military training will closely follow the principles of Nazi military and S.S. training. The trainers often speak in German to the children, who must learn the language. All C.O.s and high ranking adults speak in German during these exercises. They may also speak in French, since linguistic ability is encouraged in the Illuminati.

Exercises for older youth will include games where groups compete against each other, and the older teen leads, with the help of an adult advisor. Groups that win are rewarded, groups that lose are punished. The youth are taught to leave behind the weak, or slow members. Unfit members are shot or killed, and the youth leader learns to do these tasks. They are taught to bring their unit through simulated battles with other units, and cool, cognitive logic under these conditions is rewarded. The goal is to creative cognitive leaders inside the military systems, who are dissociated from emotions under the stress of battle conditions.

The youth and their followers are taught and trained in all manner of crowd control. They will see special films, that address all possible responses to a military takeover, and the crowds' response. These situations are then acted out during exercises, and the older Youth leaders and their units are expected to deal with the different responses. The "crowd" is coached by their trainers to act in different ways.

The ultimate goal of all of this is to create an organized army of children, youth, and adults, who will know exactly what to do during the coming takeover of the world. The training that I described is going on not only in the U.S., but in every country in the world. Top training centers are located in Germany, Belgium, France, and Russia. Military trainers are often sent to these countries, to learn new techniques, then sent back to their home countries.

What to do:
It is important to realize that military alters inside are extremely hierarchical. They will often be ranked inside, with lower "foot soldiers" accountable to inside alters with increasing rank. Usually, the higher the military rank, the higher the alter will be inside the system. A soldier with no rank may not have much knowledge about, or pull, inside the system. Its only job is to blindly obey others, after years of conditioning to do this.

Ranking officers inside will often be modeled after outside perpetrators, officers, or trainers. An internal General will often have much more knowledge than lower ranks, and should be befriended, as they can help with therapy.

It will take time, effort, and patience for both the survivor and the therapist to get to know these military officers. They are often abrupt, arrogant, and extremely hostile to therapy. They are often strongly loyal to the cult and proud of their badges, awards, and achievements that were earned through years of traumatization and hard work. They will often be reluctant to give this up, for the perceived "loss" engendered by leaving the cult.

They will also have strong programming surrounding them, including "honor/dishonor" suicidal programming (the brave, honorable soldier will die rather than betray his group, etc.). It is important to deal with the suicidal programming and intense limbic conditioning that many of these alters have been subjected to, while at the same time reasoning with the higher ranking members.

They will have photographic memory and recall of all aspects of military history. Giving them safe, appropriate, physical outlets in the daytime can let them vent off steam. These are very physically conditioned alters, who enjoy running, walking, target practice with guns and knives. Letting them go hiking (with a safe support person), practice outdoor skills, can be helpful.

Acknowledging their importance to the survivor, and the trauma they underwent, respecting their loyalty, bravery, and appealing to their sense of honor to help the system stay safe (these alters often have a highly developed, although misguided, sense of honor) can help. Internal commendation for bravery, even an internal awards ceremony (they are used to this) for the parts that have decided to leave the cult, and protect the body, can be performed. They are used to praise and recognition for work well done, and need this motivation. They were used to getting this from the cult, but the survivor can turn the locus of control internally, instead of externally, to break bonds with the cult.

Military protectors can change their job to keeping the body safe, away from perpetrators. They can be a system's greatest asset, as they are great at "kicking butt", and are not easily frightened. They may be able to tell outside perpetrators to leave the survivor alone, and protect the survivor from outside accessing.

Allowing them to vent their feelings in therapy, in journaling, in pictures, and in collages can also help. Although higher ranking officers internally are often very dissociated from their feelings, they can begin to empathize with the others below them, who took their pain, and the brunt of the brutal, punitive experiences. They have to be willing to acknowledge that they were abused at some point, that they were deceived and used. Finding the youngest alters they were split from will help with this process. With time and good internal communication, as well as patience from both the therapist and survivor, military alters can become one of the strongest assets and allies in staying cult free.

Chapter Eight
CIA , Governmental, and Scholarship programming.

Some systems will have internal CIA programming. Some of the methods mentioned in earlier chapters, such as brain wave programming and color coding were developed in part through funding by the CIA in the 1950's and 1960's. Military intelligence officers working in Langley, Virginia, used these government funds to conduct research on human subjects. They reported what they were learning to trainers throughout the U.S. and Europe.

CIA programming can include having alters in a system trained in different techniques of both finding a target, and studying the target without being detected. The end result of tagging the victim can include having a sexual assignation with the target, or may involve having people inside trained to assassinate a target.

These are complex programming sequences, and are put in over years of training, with periodic reinforcement. Alters may be trained to become hyper aware of their environment, and able to overhear conversations that are whispered. Internal recorders are taught to download these conversations, as well as other info. Photographic recall is emphasized, as the person will be hypnotized or put into a delta state for "downloading" information to the trainer or CIA operative.

The survivor with CIA programming will have been taught extensively how to "drop a tag" (detect anyone following them, and ditch them). This training will be begun in early childhood and built upon as the child grows older. They will often be taken into a neutral colored training room. They may be drugged, or hypnotized, usually a combination of both.

They will be shown training films of how a CIA operative works. They will be told that they are "special", "chosen", "one in a thousand" who is the only one who can do this special work. They are told that they get to be a secret agent for the CIA. The young child, having no idea who the CIA is, focuses on the fact that they have been chosen because they are special, needed, and will be eager to please. The child will be taken to a dinner party, or a drama set up by the trainer. There will be a group, anywhere from ten to sixteen people at the "party". Afterwards, the child will be questioned by the trainer extensively. Who was sitting where? What were they wearing? What color were their eyes? Their hair? Who gave the speech? What did they say? The child will be praised for correct answers, but punished, shocked if unable to recall details. This is to reinforce natural photographic memory, and assist the child with recording details. The next few times, the child's abilities will improve, as it wants to avoid punishment.

In the next level of training the child will be asked to observe, and figure out: who is the most important person in the room? Why? They will be taught body movements, and mannerisms, that give nonverbal clues away. The child may be taught to approach important adults, or an assigned target, first in role play, later in real life, and engage them in innocuous conversation while looking for information they have been clued to get. They may be taught to be innocently seductive, and will be dressed for the part. They will frequently be taught to lure the target into having intercourse with them.

An older youth, or adult, will also be taught not only how to lure a target into bed, but later how to kill them, if they are an assassination target, while they are asleep or relaxing after sexual relations. They will be taught to go through the target's belongings for any information needed by the trainer or cult leader. Often, before an assignment for an assassination, the cult member will be indoctrinated with reasons why killing the victim is a service to humanity. They will be lied to and told that they are the head of a porno ring, a pedophile, or a brutal villain. This will engage the assassin's natural anger towards the person, and will motivate them, while helping to overcome their natural moral reluctance and guilt at killing a human being.

They will be taught how to disguise themselves, with change of clothing, sex (masquerading as the opposite sex), makeup, contact lenses, and get out of the situation safely. They will be taught how to overcome interrogation techniques with extensive training and hypnosis, in case they are ever caught. They will be taught to self suicide with a pill or dagger, if they are ever apprehended, in most cases.

Suggestions:

CIA programming will involve the use of sophisticated technology to reinforce its effectiveness, and can be difficult to break. It may involve the person being traumatized in isolation tanks (this will also be done with brain wave programming). It may involve sensory deprivation, sensory overload, isolation, sleep deprivation. It may involve hours of listening to repetitive tapes on headphones. The subject is shocked, or severely punished, if they try to remove the headphones. They will be hypnotized, tortured; subjected to different drug combinations; they will be exposed to harmonic tones, often in one ear or the other. They will be exposed to flashing strobe lights, which may induce a seizure, and alters will be programmed to cause seizures if the subject tries to break programming. They will be shown high speed films with different tracks, one for the left eye and one for the right eye, to increase brain splitting or dichotomous thinking.

The survivor and therapist need to work slowly to undo the effects of this trauma. The person will need to come to terms, slowly, and carefully, with how the programming was done. They may need to learn their own access codes (this will also be true of brain wave, and other sophisticated programming techniques). They will need to communicate with the traumatized alters and fragments inside, let them know they were used. They will need to help the young alters, who were split to create the system, and often underwent the worst traumas. Grieving for the abuse, the trauma, the methodical calculation used and scientific methods used to put in this programming, will take time. Venting feelings, including rage, safely will be important. The survivor may be afraid of strong feelings and will fear especially anger and rage, since they will associate those feelings with having to kill, hurt, or assassinate others. Allowing the feelings to be expressed slowly and carefully, being aware that homicidal and suicidal feelings will probably come up, is important.

If there is a concern about the ability to control acting out, the client may need to go inpatient in a safe facility that understands mind control and cult programming. They will fear being labeled "psychotic" since the programmers told them that they would be called this, and locked up forever. The WORST thing a therapist or hospital can do in a situation like this, is play into those fears, or label the person psychotic. Constant grounding in reality, using grounding exercises; slow, careful venting of rage and betrayal feelings; reinforcing over and over that the survivor can remember, and NOT go psychotic, or die, BELIEVING and VALIDATING the survivor, are all important. The survivor may have unstable behavior at points, but this is not psychosis, but rather, the natural reaction to extreme trauma. The survivor needs to realize this, and that they can overcome its effects, with time and good therapy. They will need hope, and a good support system.

Governmental Programming:

Governmental programming will involve the person being trained to take leadership positions or administrative positions in the government. They may be trained to network with others in governments, both local , national, and international. The Illuminati's stated goal is to infiltrate, and eventually cause the downfall of, all major governments in the world. Government operatives are taught to do this by: infiltrating local political parties running for leadership both locally and nationally working for top leaders, as administrators, financial advisors funding governmental races and backing the person sympathetic to the Illuminati, or putting their person in to win, creating political chaos and unrest with operatives trained in dissension. The people selected for governmental programming are usually highly intelligent with native charm, or charisma. They are also skilled people manipulators. These abilities may be enhanced through programming, encouraging the person to project a "persona" that will draw people to them.

They are also taught finances extensively. This programming is done by: hypnotizing the person, whether child, youth, or adult (it is usually initiated in late childhood in suitable candidates), and inducing deep trance with drugs. The person is shocked, then told the trainer's and cult agenda for the person. They are told that they are very special to the Illuminati, and will be one of the people who helps change world history. They are told they will be rewarded with wealth, popularity and power for achieving the cult's agenda. They are told, and shown, what the punishment for disobedience is. They are shown training films about government, how it works, national and international affairs. They will meet with special teachers, who coach them on the inner political workings of the group they want to infiltrate, including the power structure and strengths and weaknesses of key players.

They will learn any languages necessary for the position. They will go to University, or get any training and education needed for credibility. They will receive special scholarships to finance this, if needed. They are given opportunities to practice their skills at infiltration, information gathering, people manipulation, and politics in set ups, and later in real situations. If they need to learn to control the media, they will learn methods to do this. They will have extensive back up and coaching during their entire career.

Suggestions:

Governmental programming is quite complex, since it ties in with the person's natural abilities. They may not be able to separate themselves easily from the role that they perform and often will only feel that they are acceptable when they do their job. They may find it difficult to believe that their career, friendships, marriage and contacts have been secretly guided by the cult for most of their life. These parts may feel offended, betrayed, or furious when this realization hits. They will also find it difficult not to use the manipulation skills that come so naturally, both on their therapist, and themselves, to dull the pain that the truth may bring. The person and the alters that have undergone this type of programming have a lot to lose if they give up their roles and persona, and need to count the cost of getting out and acknowledge the difficulty of doing so. They will need to grieve over being used, and for the false interpretation of reality they have believed all their lives. Listening to other parts inside and acknowledging the reality of the cult abuse will be important steps in breaking free. Success in a new career in the person's daily life will also help restore a broken self image.

Scholarship training:

The Illuminati revere scholarship, especially oral tradition. Children with good memories and native intelligence may undergo specific training in the area of scholarship. This will include learning under trauma, with praise for accomplishment. It will also mean punishment or being shocked for poor performance. Some of the major areas of scholarship include, but are not limited to:

Oral tradition: history of the Illuminati, especially the child's particular branch, memorizing genealogies. Learning and becoming fluent in multiple languages, both modern and ancient, including but not limited to: English, French, German, Russian, Spanish, Arabic, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Egyptian hieroglyphics; ancient Babylonian, ancient Chaldean and cuneiform writings. Some revered ancient texts are written in very ancient languages, and certain ceremonies may include rituals which utilize them. Learning ancient and modern history and becoming adept at planning role plays and dramatizations. Learning to teach others the above skills. The child who becomes adept at scholarship will also be expected to become a skilled teacher, and in turn, pass their knowledge down to others. They will practice teaching in both classroom and individual sessions.

Suggestions:

Scholarship programming will involve alters who are intensely loyal to the cult, since they believe they are related to a long, unbroken line of people since earliest history. They will often be immersed in cult philosophy, having read and memorized numerous esoteric volumes related to it. Appealing to logic, intellect, having an open mind and discussing the pros and cons of leaving the cult with them will often be received the best. They despise open conflict, and prefer addressing issues intellectually. They will be skilled debaters, and quite verbal. Asking them to read books that address becoming free from the cult, and asking them to sit in and listen to accounts from traumatized alters both in their system and others inside, will often help them make the decision to switch loyalties. Although they will have been immersed in false ideologies and doctrines, they are frequently willing to attempt to be intellectually honest. They will read and debate both sides of an issue, and may become some of the first to make the decision to leave the cult once convinced that it is abusive.

Chapter Nine:
Programming Linked to Stories, Movies, Cartoons, or role Play Dramatization

In this chapter, I want to address a special type of programming that is universal with the Illuminati. It is programming that is linked to a story, movie, cartoon, or role play dramatization.

For countless centuries, Illuminati trainers and leaders have used role playing to reinforce as well as program children, and it is a favorite mode of teaching up to this day. A typical drama set up, or role play, will involve a "visit through time." The child is told, while drugged or hypnotized, that it and the other children with it (usually, a small group will go through this programming together) are going to " time travel". The trainer or teacher is seen as immensely powerful by the children, as he or she magically transports them through time. They enter another room, where people are dressed up in period costumes from whichever time period in history the teacher wants the children to see. Everything is historically accurate and well researched. An example: if the children are to visit ancient Rome, they will be taken to a room in the Senate, where the characters are dressed in togas. They will be speaking to each other in ancient Latin and debating issues. Caesar, or another king will enter the senate. Roman customs for a scenario such as this one will be adhered to throughout the role play.

One purpose of this role playing, is that the children are told they are getting a "behind the scenes " peek at history. Illuminati agenda will be put forward, and the children will "see" that famous figures in history were actually Illuminists. This will reinforce their "special ness" and the historicity of the group. It will also reinforce language training, since the scenes may occur in medieval England, or the French court of Louis XIV, etc. The scenes will also contain a moral that builds on programming the children have been undergoing. Maybe they will watch a "traitor" being "guillotined" in the French court. Or an unworthy senator, who tries to betray his king, will be stabbed. The child may be given a role in the play, such as taking a secret message to the king or queen, to reinforce courier programming. The child really believes that they have stepped back into history, and are part of the process of helping create history.

With modern times, programming has become more sophisticated with the advent of technology. Before television or movies, programming was often "scripted" around famous fairy tales, or stories, read aloud by one trainer while the second trainer worked with the child. A good see-song voice is necessary in a "reader". The child would be read the story, and under hypnosis and trauma, told that they are one of the characters in the story. They are told the "real" meaning of the story, its "hidden meaning" and told that whenever they hear the story, to remember what it really means.

Now days, movies and videos are frequently used in programming. Favorite scripts include: Walt Disney movies (Disney was an Illuminist), especially Fantasia, Sleeping Beauty, The Little Mermaid, Cinderella, Beauty and the Beast. The Wizard of Oz, both books and movie, has been used. Any movie that incorporates Illuministic themes can be used. E.T. and Star Wars have been used in more recent years.

How Script programming is done:
The trainer will play the movie for the child. The child is told that they will be "asked about " the movie, this cues the child to use photographic recall about what they are viewing. The trainer may show the child an edited shorter version of the movie, with only parts of the whole, or may show the child a short scene from the movie.

After watching the movie, or scene, the child is drugged to relax it, then asked what it remembers. The child will be shocked if it cannot recall items the trainer deems important, and will be forced to watch the scenes repetitively.

When the child has total recall of the segments, the trainer will tell the child that it is one of the characters. The child may be heavily traumatized first, and a blank slate personality created inside to be the desired character. The first thing the blank slate sees is a recording of the movie, or scene. This is its "first memory". The trainer will then link the scene with Illuminati ideology. They will teach the child the "hidden meaning" in the movie, and praise the child for being one of the few "enlightened ones" who can understand what it truly means. The script programming will often be linked to other programming the child is undergoing. Military programming may be linked to Star Wars. Total recall programming may be linked to Data in Star Trek. Computer programming may be linked to Hal in 2001 A Space Odyssey; internal labyrinth programming may be linked to the movie "Labyrinth". The possibilities are quite varied and will depend on both the child and the trainer as to which direction script programming will go. Music from the show, or scene, will be used as a trigger to access the programming inside or bring forward these personalities.

Suggestions:

Scripted programming will often involve a great deal of traumatization, to create the "blank slate" alters desired. The programming will be ground in with repetition, electroshock, torture, drugging and hypnosis. The alters inside who have gone through this programming will often be highly disconnected from external reality and may believe that they are part of a "script". They may be Dorothy seeking the Emerald City (or the achievement of Illuminati rule on earth). They may be a computer or the character Data. Reality orientation will be very important. Allow these parts to experience safe outside reality, and test for themselves if they are really part of a man or woman. Looking in a mirror may help, when they express readiness. Having cognitive helpers who can share daily life memories with them, may help to ground them. At first they will be very surprised, even indignant or hostile, at suggestions that they are not the character. They will think the therapist is a trainer, or part of the script, since this is the only reality that they have known. Re-grounding, patiently, over and over to present reality, increased communication with others inside, and eventually grieving over the intense amount of trickery and deception that they experienced, will be necessary. With time and patience these parts will be willing to give up their old "scripted" roles and become part of the person's present reality.

Chapter Ten
The Sixth step of Discipline: Betrayal; Twinning, Internal walls, Structures, Geometry

This chapter will address the sixth step of discipline in the Illuminati:

Betrayal programming.

Betrayal programming will begin in infancy, but will be formalized at around ages six to seven, and continue on into adulthood. The sixth step can be summarized as : "betrayal is the greatest good." The Illuminists teach this to their children as a very important spiritual principle. They idealize betrayal as being the true state of man. The quick witted, the adept, learns this quickly and learns to manipulate it.

The child will learn this principle through set up after set up. The child will be placed in situations where an adult who is kindly, and in set up after set up "rescues" the child, gains its trust. The child looks up to the adult as a "savior" after the adult intervenes and protects the child several times. After months or even a year of bonding, one day in a set up the child will turn to the adult for help. The adult will back away, mocking the child, and begin abusing it. This sets in place the programming: adults will always betray a child and other adults.

Another set up will involve twinning, which deserves special mention here. The Illuminati will often create twin bonds in their children. The ideal is to have a set of real twins, but of course this is not always possible. So, the child is allowed to play with, and become close to, another child in the cult from earliest childhood. At some point early on, the child will be told that the other child is actually their "twin", and that they were separated at birth. They are told that this is a great secret and not to tell anyone, on pain of punishment. The child, who is often lonely and isolated, is overjoyed. It has a twin, someone who has a special bond to them by birth.

But at some point, they will be forced to hurt each other. If one "twin" is considered expendable, the ultimate set up will be one in which one twin is forced to die while the other watches. One twin may gather secrets from the other twin, be forced to disclose them to a trainer or cult leader, then may be forced to kill the other. One twin may be forced to hit, or hurt the other. If they refuse, the other twin will be brutalized by the trainer, and the refusing twin told that the child was hurt because of their refusal to comply. Many setups will involve one twin being forced to betray the other, turning on the other child after intense programming. This betrayal set up will devastate both children, and they will learn the true lesson: trust no one. Betray, or be betrayed.

The children will also have adult role models on every hand, since the cult is a very political, hierarchical, back stabbing society. Adults are constantly betraying each other, stepping over each other to move up. The children will watch one adult being praised, advanced, because they betrayed others below them, or set them up to fail. The children will learn quickly to mimic the adults around them, and both adults and children can become quite cynical as to human nature. They will have seen it at its worst, whether in training sessions, the brutality of a C.O. in military, or the gossip and back stabbing that occurs before and after rituals. They also incorporate the message internally: play the game, or be run over. Even the youngest children learn to manipulate others adeptly, at a very young age, while the adults laugh at how quickly they are learning adult ways. People manipulation is considered a fine art in the cult, and those who do it best, as in any group, often win out.

Suggestions:
Betrayal programming may have totally shattered the survivor's trust in outside people. It will take a therapist a long, long time to gain the survivor's trust. These are people who were taught over and over again that talking, sharing one's secrets, would be punished harshly. Inside littles will be very cautious at first, not trusting that the therapist is not just another trainer who will one day shout "aha!" and betray them if they begin to trust. This trust building takes time and patience, and must be earned through session after session where the therapist shows trustworthiness and non abusiveness. Survivors will test therapists over and over again, to see if they really are what they say they are. This is a normal part of the therapy process. Survivors may even try to back away from therapy, or outside support, as true caring support will "wig them out", i.e. conflict incredibly with their world view and experiences prior to leaving the cult.

Both survivor and therapist need to realize that some amount of distrust is healthy, based on what the survivor has experienced, and may be life saving, helping to protect them from outside accessing. Honor this need and be patient while the survivor tests over and over. The survivor can try to reason with inside alters who may have been betrayed to the point of legitimate paranoia. They may ask them to watch, and see what the therapist, and/or support person is like. To take their time, check them out. To be aware that what they went through may magnify normal feelings of caution. Helping orient these parts to outside reality, and especially positive experiences of trusting a little, and not being harmed, will help make great strides in undoing this. The survivor may feel confusion and internal conflict, as they experience a world where trust is possible. They may pull away, or the reverse, become highly dependent on the therapist and share too quickly due to a longing for safe intimacy that has never been met. Setting healthy boundaries while acknowledging needs will help the survivor through this stage.

Another type of programming involves the deliberate creation of internal structures within the cult member.

Internal structures: temples, eyes, mirrors, carousels etc.

The Illuminati trainers will try to create internal structures within the person's personality systems. Why? They believe this creates better stability. It also gives the alters and fragments a place to "hang on to" inside, and creates a convenient way to call them up. If a fragment is indexed inside to an internal helix, for example, the trainer knows how to locate them more easily.

Internal structures will vary greatly depending on the trainer, the group, the region of the U.S. or Europe and the goals for the individual. Common internal structures will include, but are not limited to:

- Temples: these are often consecrated to principle Illuminati deities, and spiritual alters will congregate here. This may represent actual temples, Masonic or private, that the subject may have visited.

- Temple of Moloch will be created out of black stone with a fire burning internally.

- All seeing eye of Horus: one of the most common structures in an Illuminati system; universal. Horus is a deity revered by the Illuminati, and the all seeing eye internally represents the fact that the cult can always see what the individual is doing. It will also represent being given to Horus in a high ceremony. The eye may be closed, or open, depending on the system's status at the time. This eye will also be linked to demonic watching of the person's activities at all time.

- Pyramids: the Illuminati revere ancient Egyptian symbology, especially "mystery religion" and Temple of Set teachings. Pyramids will be placed internally both for stability (a triangle, and/or pyramid represents strength and stability), and as a calling place for the demonic. Pyramids and triangles, and the number three, represent calling up the demonic in Illuminist philosophy.

- Sun: represents Ra, the sun god

- Geometric figures: configurations of circles, triangles, pentagons, etc. Geometric patterns are considered sacred, and are based in ancient philosophy. There may be hundreds overlapping in a training grid for complex systems, which will house fragments in each one.

- Training grids: these may be simplistic, such as cubes with patterns on them, rows of boxes, or more complex such as helixes, double helixes, infinity loops. Each trainer will have favorites classified as simple, medium and complex, depending on the child and its ability to recall and memorize.

- Columns: Greek Doric, ionic columns. Often hold "time travel" programming, with a portal between two columns.

- Computers: complex, highly dissociated systems with alters and fragments held within a computer system.

- Robots: may be seen in older systems

- Crystals: gems, balls, multifaceted. Used in spiritual systems to enhance occult powers. Alters and fragments may congregate on facets of a large ball.

- Mirrors: used internally to reinforce other programming sequences, internal twinning, and distortion of reality programming. May create shadow systems of functional systems. May also lock in demonic programming.

- Carousels: used in some programming sequences to confuse alters inside. Often linked to spin, confusion programming internally. May be used to punish internal alters; they will be spun on the carousel if they tell.

- Deck of cards: this can include cards from a deck, or complex configurations made of hundreds of card inside. Dominoes programming is similar. All touch each other and if person tries to dismantle programming, the deck will "fall".

- Black boxes: represent self destruct and shatter programming sealed off into a black box to protect system. Should not be opened without careful preparation and good therapy.

- Mines, booby traps: see above

- Spider webs: represent linked programming, with a spider (internal programmer) who continuously reweaves the web and reinforces internal programming and punishments. The web also communicates with other systems. Can also represent demonic linkages internally, woven in.

- Internal training rooms: used as punishments for internal alters. Will represent external training rooms person has been in.

- Internal walls: these will often represent very large internal amnesia barriers. The walls may be very thick, impermeable or semi permeable. A typical use for a wall will be to maintain high levels of amnesia between "front" or daily living, amnesic alters, and "back" or cult active alters that contain more of the person's life history. The back may be able to selectively see over and cross past the wall, but the front will be completely unaware that there is a wall, or what lays behind it.

- Seals: usually in a group of six or seven, represent demonic sealing, and may cover end times, shatter programming, as well as role within cult in new hierarchy.

These are some common programming structures. Again, there are many, many other types of internal structures used and the number and type are only limited by the trainer's and survivor's creative abilities. The way that these structures are placed within the person are fairly similar. Under drugs, hypnosis and electroshock, the person is traumatized into a deep trance state. In the deep trance they will be told to open their eyes and look at: either a projected image of the structure, a 3D model of it, or a holographic image using a virtual reality headset. The image will be ground in, using shock and bringing the image closer and closer to the person's visual field. It may be rotated, if graphics are available, or a 3D is used. They may be told that they are entering inside it, if it is a temple or pyramid, under deep hypnosis, that they (the alter being programmed) will now "live inside" the structure/box/card, etc. This will also be used to reinforce amnesia and isolation programming internally, since the structure will be used to reinforce walls between the alter/ fragment and other alters and fragments internally.

Suggestions:
If the survivor finds structures inside, it will help for them first of all to try and realize WHY they are there. What purpose do they serve? To reinforce amnesia? Isolation? spiritual programming? punishment? To hold dangerous programming sequences? This is important, since some structures such as internal walls or barriers may have been created not only by the cult, but reinforced by the survivor as well, as a means of internal protection. The survivor may not want to dismantle internal structures too quickly without knowing their purpose and what they contain. Both the survivor and the therapist will need to go slowly. Learning how the structures were put in and which alters are linked to the structure, will be a first step. Long, slow and careful preparation, with lots of system cooperation, will be needed to look at some structures. This may only come after years of extensive therapy. Each survivor will progress at their own pace. If a wall is present, taking it down slowly, one brick at a time, or allowing part of it to become semi permeable, may be first steps in healing. Training rooms can have the equipment turned off and dismantled; it can be turned into a safe room, redecorated and refitted with toys and safe objects. Computers can slowly begin to realize that they are human, and gradually allowed to take on human characteristics.

Survivors can use their creativity to reclaim themselves, with the support of their therapists, and undo what was done.

Chapter Eleven
Suicidal Programming

I have decided to write an entire chapter about suicidal programming, since it is often the most dangerous programming that the survivor will face during their healing process. ALL ILLUMINATI SURVIVORS WILL HAVE SUICIDAL PROGRAMMING PROTECTING THEIR SYSTEMS. I emphasized this to also reiterate the need for good therapy and a strong support system for the survivor.

The Illuminati know and realize that with time, individuals in their group may start to question what they are doing. Or they may become disenchanted with their role. They may even desire to leave the group or try to dismantle their own programming.

The trainers are well aware of this possibility and to prevent this, will always program in suicidality. The suicidality, or suicidal programming, may surround one or more systems internally. It may be layered into more than one system.

From earliest childhood, survivors have been conditioned to believe that they would rather die than leave their "family" (the Illuminati group). This is the core, or basis of suicidal programming. It will be closely linked to loyalty to one's family as well as the group (remember, this is a generational group and leaving it may mean giving up contact with one's parents, spouse, siblings, aunts, uncles, cousins and children, as well as close friends). These people will all try to contact the survivor, and try to draw them back into the cult, asking "don't you love us anymore?", or even becoming accusatory and hostile if the survivor does not respond the way they wish. The survivor will be told that they are "crazy". Or delusional. That their family loves them and would never be part of a cult. The family members will all still be amnesic, unless something happens to trigger their own memories.

One of the most frequent suicidal programming sequences placed internally will be "come back or die " programming. A family member may activate it by telling the survivor that they are missed and their family wants to see them. If the survivor fails to return, the programming will start running. It can only be deactivated by a code word from the person's trainer or cult contact person. This ensures that they will recontact. If the survivor tries to break this programming, they will need assistance, both internal and external, for safety.

Hospitalization may be needed in a safe facility that understands DID and programming, as well as suicidality, as the alters inside will begin fighting if the person tries to break the programming. They have been programmed to commit suicide, or be shattered internally, or at the very least, severely punished, and are afraid of the repercussions of not obeying. The survivor will need to get to know these internal alters, and reassure them that they no longer need to do their jobs.

Chronometric suicidal programming is another type placed within. This does not need contact with family members to activate. In fact, it is activated automatically after a certain amount of time WITHOUT cult contact. Controller alters and/or punishing alters will have been programmed that if a certain period of time goes without contact with the trainer, they are to commit suicide. They will be told that the only way to prevent this is recontact with the trainer, who knows a command code to halt the program. The time interval may be anywhere from three months to nine months, each system is different. Call back programming may have this type of programming as a back up, to ensure that it is followed through on.

Systems layered programming is a particularly complex form of suicide programming where several systems (up to six at a time), are programmed to fire off suicide programming simultaneously. This always needs hospitalization for the survivor's safety.

Honor/dishonor programming is common in military systems. In this, the military parts are told that an "honorable and courageous" soldier will take his life, rather than reveal secrets or leave his unit.

"No tell" programming will often be reinforced by suicidal programming.

Access denied programming, which prevents unauthorized access both externally and internally, will often be reinforced by either or both suicidal/homicidal programming.

Almost all suicidal programming is put in place to either ensure continued obedience to the cult's agenda; to ensure regular recontact; or prevent the individual or an outside person from accessing the person's system without authorization (i.e. the correct access codes, which the trainers are careful to use at the beginning of each session). It will frequently block therapy, as the survivor will be terrified, and rightly so, of dying if they reveal their internal world, or disclose their history.

Suggestions:
First, both the survivor and the therapist need to find out what suicide programming is present (it's a safe bet it's there, no need to ask IF it is present). Internal communication, and finding out which alters or fragments hold suicide programming will be important. Physical safety, whether with a safe outside person, or inpatient hospitalization, while working on suicide programming is extremely important, as this programming may either drive the survivor to self destructive behavior, or back to the cult. Dealing with suicide programming assumes that the survivor and therapist have initiated good system communication internally. This is extremely important, since the survivor will need cooperation inside with dismantling suicidality.

Letting alters inside know that they no longer have to do their job, that they can change, may help. Reality orientation, letting them know that if they kill the body, that they will die, may also help (many times, these parts have been deceived into believing that they themselves will not die, if they do their jobs. This means they need to hear the truth). Having controller alters, high alters with pull inside the system, agree to help the therapist dismantle the programming will help. But be aware that SOME INTERNAL SUICIDE SEQUENCES WILL BE PUT IN THAT EVEN CONTROLLERS CANNOT DISMANTLE. Creating a safety committee inside whose main job is to keep the body safe and ask for help if suicidal programming begins to kick in, BEFORE ACTING OUT OCCURS, will also help tremendously.

As the survivor develops trust with their therapist and realizes the value of life, and that life can be much better than it has ever been before, they will become more willing to reach out and ask for help if they become suicidal. The survivor may also find that they encounter core despair. This despair may have been used by the cult to run suicidal programming, but it is not programming itself. A very young core split may have taken many of the feelings of despair, hopelessness, failure to thrive and desire to die, that the child felt growing up in a horribly abusive atmosphere. This is not programming but true feelings, and it will be important to differentiate this from programming. If core despair comes up, the alter containing this may also report having been trained to NOT SUICIDE, or give up. The trainers will do this, if despair begins overwhelming the subject at an early age, to prevent the child's suicide.

The survivor's cognitives, helpers, nurturers, will all need to be gathered together to help this part of the core heal. There will be intense, and rightful, grieving and anguish for the immense pain that the young child suffered. Hopelessness will come out. It can help if alters with happier memories can try and share their memories with this very young part. External support and caring can also make a big difference. Healing the immense pain held by this core split will take a long period of time and should not be hurried. Antidepressants can help, as the depression may be shared through all systems. Messages of hope, new and positive experiences can all help the survivor work through this type of programming, as well as journaling, poetry, artwork and collaging the feelings. Time, patience, support, the ability to vent feelings in a safe manner and physical safety when needed, will all help immensely as the survivor works through these issues.

Chapter Twelve
Preventing Reaccessing of the Survivor

This is by far one of the most important chapters I have written in this book. Why?

Deprogramming cannot be consistently successful if the person is still in contact with the abusers. Survivors will take one step forward, then will find themselves knocked down internally. All the hard work in therapy will be undone or set back. They and their therapist will find that they have trouble finding internal alters. Whole systems may shut down. A child presenting system may come out. Confusers and scramblers will take over therapy sessions and blockers will block therapy.

No one chapter can ever be totally comprehensive in how to prevent reaccessing. What I will share are some of the more common ways that the cult and trainers will try to reaccess individuals, and give some techniques on avoiding this.

The cult has a vested interest in keeping its members. After all, it has spent generations telling its members that if they leave they will die, be killed, or go psychotic. It makes them quite unhappy to see someone who is quite alive and very clearly not psychotic leave. It also makes their more restive members question the truth of what they have been told if they see someone get out. Having a member leave may break the hold of some programming in other members. Trainers especially hate to see anyone leave, and grind their teeth over this problem at night. People leaving the cult is considered a training failure and the trainers may be punished severely.

So, the cult has come up with certain ways to keep their members with them, willingly or unwillingly. These include, but are not limited to:

E.T. phone home (phone programming) : the individual will have personalities whose sole job is to call and report to the trainer or cult leader. These are often young child alters who are eager to please, starved for attention and nurture, and who are heavily rewarded for calling back in. Any survivor who attempts to leave the cult must deal with the urge to phone home. To phone their abusers. To phone their friends who are in the group. To phone their parents, siblings, cousins, or aunts. This urge may become overwhelming at times and worst of all, the survivor may be totally amnesic to the fact that the people they are calling are cult members who are urging them, in code, to come back. Common phrases used include: your 'family' loves you, misses you, needs you. So and so is ill and needs to see you. You are so special to us. You are so valuable. You need to come see us. Why are you so distant? Why haven't we heard from you lately?

The list goes on and on. Sweet, kind phrases with double meanings, placed in the person during training sessions. Trainers are not stupid and know that if cult members said "come to the ritual meeting at midnight next week", the survivor would run the other way, and be validated as well that they are not making things up. So, they ingrain code messages behind innocuous phrases such as described above. These, and other messages, are meant to trigger recontact programming.

In recontact programming, (ALL ILLUMINATI MEMBERS HAVE RECONTACT PROGRAMMING, IT IS NEVER LEFT TO CHANCE) the person has parts whose only job is to have contact with their trainer or cult leader, or accountability person (person one step above them in the cult). These parts are heavily programmed under drugs, hypnosis, shock, torture, to have recontact. The individual will feel restless, shaky, weepy, afraid if they try to break this programming. It will often be linked or joined in to suicidal programming (see previous chapter for more on suicidal programming). They may experience PTSD symptomology, or even flood programming, and internal self punishment sequences, as they fight this programming internally.

Siblings are often cross trained to access each other with special codes. Remember when.... may initiate this. I love you, or, your family loves you, can also be used. Phrases will be individual, depending on the person's family members and background.

Certain clothing or jewelry worn can be used to draw a cult loyal system, such as a color coded system, or jewel system , to the front. The person must physically resemble the person the individual was "keyed into" during the programming sequence, to prevent inadvertent popping out of alters by anyone wearing a ruby pin, for example. This kind of cueing will be based on sight recognition of a person, plus the clothing color or jewelry being worn a certain way.

Phone calls from concerned family members, friends, and cult members will flood the survivor's phone lines and answering machine, especially during the initial getting out phase.

Hang up calls, three or six in a row, or calls where a series of tones are heard, may be used as cues to recall the individual and fire off internal programming.

Birthday, holiday or we miss you cards, or letters, may be sent with trigger codes imbedded in them.

Flowers with a certain number of flowers, or color may be sent. Daisies may fire off daisy programming internally.

The possibilities are almost endless, depending on the trainers, the group the person was with, and the people they are most bonded to in the cult. Special training sessions will be given, with code words and cues built into the system's programming.

If all else fails, hostility will start. "You don't love us" will be heard, even when the survivor has stated repeatedly that they care. Boundaries drawn with cult members will be misinterpreted as lack of concern, or withdrawal. Accusations, guilt, and anger as well as manipulation will be used as hooks to make the survivor feel guilty for withdrawing from the cult.

Isolation programming may activate, as the cult support system is withdrawn in the survivor's life, and they try the difficult task of developing healthy, appropriate relationships outside of the cult. Often, the therapist will be the survivor's lifeline and sole support at first. The individual may fall into codependent relationships quickly, or relationships with other survivors to fill the void in their life. At worst, desperate for caring and feeling isolated, they will make friends with the first kind person they meet. This person could be a cult set up, sent to initiate a friendship quickly. Survivors should be wary of "instant friendships" or instant bonding with others. Most good relationships take time and effort.

Suggestions:
One of the most difficult tasks, but most important safety wise, will be for a totally amnesic presenting system to realize who their abusers really are. It will seem unbelievable, when back parts come up in therapy, and disclose that beloved, or even barely tolerated family members are in the cult. Believing these parts and listening to them will be crucial to safety. Protectors will be important to the survivor's safety, especially if they are willing to give up cult allegiance and help keep the person safe. Outside accountability with safe persons is extremely important. The problem is that generational Illuminati survivors have often been surrounded all their lives by a network of other cult members. Unknown to them, their closest friends and family members are part of the group. Amnesia poses the greatest danger to the survivor in the beginning stages, as they will trust people before they remember that they are unsafe.

A survivor may remember the father taking them to rituals, and believe that their mother or grandparent is safe. Only later in therapy will they remember that mother or granny was actually their trainer, since the most painful memories tend to come later. The survivor may only remember ritual abuse in early childhood, and think they were let go at a certain age. This is extremely rare, since the group has put in years of effort into training them. Almost never will they just "let someone go" in generational families. But they may be given false or screen memories, especially if they are in therapy, to confuse the survivor and the therapist.

The client will need to listen to and believe internal parts who have more information than they do, and take appropriate steps to be safe. This will probably mean cutting off contact with perpetrators at this point. Again, outside accountability is paramount. Safe houses, a women's shelter or a safe church family may be alternatives. One of the worst things the survivor can do is isolate, or go out walking late at night alone, or go camping in the woods by themselves. Abduction will often occur in these scenarios, when the survivor is alone and vulnerable. Safe roommates can help keep the survivor safe.

Locking up the phone in the trunk of the car may help if phone programming is intense. This gives the survivor the chance to wake up or stop phone calls, if an alter has to get up, find the car keys, turn on the light, go outside, and open a car trunk, bring the phone inside and hook it up again before making a phone call.

Building a support system through safe support groups, a good therapist, church, or work can also help. Whenever possible and practical, moving away from the town or state where the survivor was active in the cult can help. Why? Remember the survivor's whole support network was the cult in their old town. The trainers and/or family members have invested time and effort into the survivor and have a big stake in their coming back. If the survivor moves far enough away, a cult group in the new city or state will not know them as well, and will not have a lengthy history with them. This can help decrease the chance of reaccessing by the cult, in conjunction with good therapy and a safe support network.

The survivor will have to rebuild their support system anyway, so why not do it as far as possible away from people they have known who might hurt them? It can be intensely triggering to the survivor to see their old trainer walking down the street towards them, and inside alters may destabilize or feel unsafe. This is one case where distance is good.

One caution though: even if the survivor moves, they will need to work intensely on blocking internal recontact programming at the same time, or they may be quickly reaccessed. Trainers will often send the person's system codes and grids over the internet to cult groups in the new city, and will try to send someone who physically resembles the trainer or a family member to initiate contact with the survivor.

Internal communication and letting inside alters know that they can change their jobs will help. Reward internal reporters for changing allegiance and committing to keep the survivor safe. The cult used to reward them for doing their job; now the survivor can reward them for changing jobs. Develop new interests, work or hobbies that can help the survivor meet new, safe people. The survivor may want to practice friendship skills in support groups, as long as they are run by reputable, safe therapists.

Be aware that holiday dates are often important dates for reaccessing. Calendars are available that show important holidays for SRA groups. Birthdays are also dates when the individual is expected to return and there may be programming surrounding this.

Callback programming (where the person is given a specific date or holiday when they are to return to the cult, or be punished) may need to be broken as well. Allowing the alters who went through the programming to share their memories, acknowledging their needs, and trying to meet those needs in healthy ways will bring healing.

The survivor will need to go through a period of grieving for loss of contact with family members and friends in the cult. No matter how abusive, how disliked, it can be very difficult to cut off with perpetrators, especially if they were the only people close to the survivor. The survivor needs to acknowledge the difficulty of creating a new, healthy, cultless support group. The survivor needs to recognize that learning new skills and developing healthy friendships will take time.

One issue often brought up by survivors is: how much do I tell others about my past? This is an individual decision that the survivor and therapist need to look at together. In general though, caution in sharing is best, since sharing too much about the survivor's past may draw the wrong people to them. These people may be dysfunctional, or possible cult members. It is usually best to base new, non cult friendships on healthy aspects of the person at first and very gradually share small bits of information as the friendship progresses, and sharing seems appropriate. With time and opportunities, the survivor will learn the importance of appropriate boundaries and will want healthier relationships in their life.

Chapter Thirteen
Shell programming, Internal Councils, Human Experimentation, Function Codes

Parts of this chapter could be extremely triggering, please read with caution and only with a therapist if a survivor.

Shell programming is a form of programming used to create a “shell” on the outside, that other alters inside speak through. This is a designed to hide the person’s multiplicity from the outside world, and works extremely well with highly fragmented systems. It also takes a person with the ability to dissociate to a great degree.

How it is done: with shell programming, the trainer will often take a clear plastic or glass mask, and put it in front of the subject. They will be extremely traumatized, shocked, drugged, and told that they (the alter or alters in front) are the “mask” that they see. Their job will be to be a shell, or voice, to cover for the others behind. These parts will be so traumatized that they literally see themselves as only a shell, with no real substance or body.

Others inside will then be directed to come next to the “shell” alters, and use their voice to cover their own. This allows greater fragmentation of the person, while being able to hide it from outside view, since the internal alters will learn to present through the shell. Shell alters always see themselves as “clear”, and will have no color if color coding is present in other systems.

Suggestions

It is important to realize that what the system is actually doing is co-presenting, although not co-consciously. For a shell program to work, the shell alters have been taught to allow co-presentation with the other alters in the systems. Other alters in the back may not always be aware that this is what is happening, and the front shell especially will not know that they are being “gone through” for co-presentation.

Recognizing the trauma that occurred, and finding out where the shell fragments came from, will help. Allowing both the shell alters and the other alters to recognize that this is how they have been presenting, and why, will be an important step. Back alters may then begin presenting without going through the shell, and the person may look “more multiple” than they ever have for a period, with accents or young voices coming through. What is actually happening is that the back is presenting without masking who they are through the shell. Meanwhile, the shell alters may decide to coalesce, for greater strength, and may decide to change jobs. Each system will decide what is best for them.

Internal Councils:

Survivors of Illuminati programming will always have some type of hierarchy inside. This is because the cult itself is very hierarchical, and puts this hierarchy inside the person. What better way to inspire loyalty to leadership than to put the leadership inside the person’s head? Trainers are also very hierarchy conscious themselves. They know that a system without hierarchy and head honchos inside to direct things will be a system in chaos. They will not leave the person’s system leaderless inside.

Many trainers will put themselves in the person, over the internal programmers or trainers. This is because they are egotistical, but also because it uses a well known phenomenon of human nature: PEOPLE TEND TO INTERNALIZE THEIR ABUSERS. The survivor may be horrified to find a representative of one of their worst perpetrators inside, but this was a survival mechanism. A tenet of human behavior is that often people will punish someone less who mimics them. A brutal nazi will be less likely to punish another brutal nazi, but will look down upon and punish a weak, crying person. So, the survivor will internalize the rough nazi inside, to avoid being hurt. The survivor may mimic accents, mannerisms, even claim the perpetrator’s life history as their own.

The ultimate form of internalization comes with internalizing hierarchical councils. The person, under pain, hypnosis, and drugs, will be taught to incorporate a highly dissociated group inside to lead the others. These will often be created from core splits, because the trainers want them to be extremely strong, stable alters in the system.

Triads of three elders may be seen

Platinum's may have a head council of three

Jewels will have a triad, made up of ruby, emerald, diamond in many systems, to rule over the others

And, of course, an internal “leadership council”, “System Above”, “Ascended Masters”, “supreme council”, regional council, world council, etc. may be found. The councils found will vary with each survivor.

These internal groups will correlate roughly to the outside group. Often the child or youth at age twelve will be presented to these groups in a formal coming of age ceremony. This ceremony is considered quite an honor, and will involve the child being traumatized and accepting the leadership of the council for the rest of their life. Undying loyalty is promised. There may be other occasions the person will be forced to come before the councils throughout their lifespan, either for judgment, to pass tests, for punishment, or elevation. These councils will be seen as holding power of life or death, and the child or youth will do anything to gain their favor. The child will internalize them. The trainer will help with the internalization, using photographs or holographic images of the people to “burn them in”. Each member of the group will be given different leadership tasks.

It is not uncommon for the survivor to incorporate a parent, both parents, or grandparents, into their internal leadership hierarchy in a generational survivor.

High priests and priestesses may sit on ruling councils inside.

Suggestions:

Internal leadership councils will often be some of the most resistant to, and hostile towards therapy, especially in the early stages. They will verbally banter with, or refuse to speak to, the therapist, as being “beneath their notice.” They are mimicking the haughty, hierarchical attitudes they have been exposed to all their lives.

They also have the most to lose, if the survivor leaves the cult, and may fight this decision tooth and nail. They will often be the alters with an “attitude”.

Both the survivor and therapist need to recognize that these parts had powerful needs that were met in the cult setting. To ignore this and argue with them will only entrench their belief that therapists are stupid and unknowing people. Acknowledge their internal role while gently pointing out reality. Try to enlist their aid in helping the survivor strengthen. Discuss honestly the pros and cons of leaving the cult. These are highly intellectual alters, and they need to express their concerns and doubts. Setting good boundaries and not allowing verbal abuse of the therapist is important. These alters are used to "pushing people around" verbally, and have been rewarded for it prior to therapy. Now, they need to learn new coping skills and behaviors, and the process may take time. Allow them to vent their anger, displeasure, and fears about the decision to leave the cult. Offer them new jobs inside the person of leadership over safety committees, or even decision making committees.

Sometimes, a system that has broken free from the cult, and has no external hierarchy that they are accountable to will go through a short period of chaos as word gets out: we're free, and don't have to do what the cult tells us to do any more! Hundreds of internal arguments may break out as to: what do we do for a living? where do we live? what do we eat? what hobbies will we have? Everybody wants to come out, see the daytime, and live this new, free life. But the freedom may cause imbalance with all of the switching going on inside. Enlisting the aid of the internal hierarchy, and creating a limited democracy, with ground rules, may help during this time. Don't dismantle the internal hierarchy overnight, or the systems will be rudderless. Enlist their aid in helping direct which direction the survivor goes. Things will settle down after a period, as the systems learn to listen to each other, vote on ideas, and begin going together in the same direction.

Human Experimentation

This is one of the most grievous things that still occurs in the Illuminati today. The Illuminati were famed for deciding years ago to "go scientific" and incorporate scientific experimentation into their training principles. This is one area where they broke with other, more traditional groups, who still followed "spiritual principles". The Illuminati decided to use scientific data, especially in the psychiatric and behavioral sciences, to drive their training practices. This became known openly during W.W.II, when the world heard about the experimentation on Jews and other groups in the concentration camps, but human experimentation had been quietly going on for years before underground.

It also did not stop at the end of the war. German trainers and scientists were scattered around the world, and hidden, where they continued teaching others the principles they had learned, and continued with ongoing experimentation.

Some of this experimentation occurred with government funding through groups such as the CIA and NSA. The Illuminati had people infiltrated throughout these groups, who used the principles discovered and shared them with their own trainers.

Experimentation is going on, even to this day. It is done secretly. Its purpose is to help improve and create more sophisticated training techniques. To prevent "programming failures", or "pfs" as they are called in the cult.

Many, many survivors, if not all, will have been told that they are only an experiment. This may or may not be true. Trainers like to tell their subjects that they are experiments, even if they aren't, for several reasons:

1. It creates immense fear and helplessness in the subject (the thought is, if this is an experiment, I will have to work really hard to survive this)

2. It devalues the person immensely. They will feel that they have no real value as a human being, that all they are is an experiment. Someone who feels devalued doesn't care, and will be willing to do things they wouldn't if they felt some value, some humanization.

3. It gives the trainer added power, as they are the one who can begin or stop the "experiment". Almost always, when the person is TOLD they are an experiment, it isn't really true. When trainers and cult members really do experiments, the subjects are never told, because it could bias results. The fear could interfere with drug effects, and skew the results. Most recent cult experimentation has been in the area of: drug effects: using different drugs, both alone and in new combinations and dosages, to induce trance states and open the person to training. Drugs are looked for which will shorten the time interval needed to induce trance state, which are quickly metabolized, and leave no detectable residues the next day.

Behavioral science: watching and recording data on different environmental parameters on human behavior. Modifying the environment.

Praise and punishment as motivators.

Isolation techniques: recording data both physiological and psychological from different isolation methods. Removing, adding, combining different methods of sensory isolation, and the effect of each.

Effectiveness of virtual reality in implanting programming.

Effectiveness of new disks created to put programming in. Cult graphics and computer experts will work to create better and more effective VR disks, which are tested on cult subjects for their effectiveness. The cult wants more and more standardization, and less room for human error and weakness, in its training techniques, which is why it is going more and more to high tech equipment and videos. Attempts to break programming, cause program failure; recording what is effective, what isn't and develop new sequences to prevent pf. Subjects under hypnosis are ordered to try and break certain internal programming sequences. The ways they go about this, and what seems effective, are shared with the trainers, who then create new programs to prevent degradation of programming from occurring.

Harmonic/light, sensory deprivation and over stimulation and the effects neurologically and physically. New combinations of sensory input are always being tested to see which achieve the most lasting results, and can be done rapidly.

The cult is always trying to find new, better, faster methods to break down subjects, put programming in,

and prevent the programming from failing.

This has been the emphasis in most research it has done. The results of this research is shared worldwide, both by internet, phone calls, and international trainer conferences, where trainers worldwide share the results of what they are finding. New techniques are incorporated by other groups which are eager to find out what is being discovered.

Suggestions:

If you have experimental programming, realize that the alters who were used in it are heavily traumatized. They also will feel devalued, less than human, and this was reinforced heavily by the trainers who worked with them. They probably weren't used in initial experiments, as described above, but may have been used in second level experimentation.

I will explain what those terms mean.

Top trainers and leaders will initiate an experiment with a new drug. They will learn to triturate dosages, and record all observable facts on hundreds of subjects. After enough data is gotten, they will then clear it for use by trainers in local groups. It will then still be considered experimental, but will be second level, instead of first level experimentation. At this point, all trainers in local groups will be told to record and report any adverse reactions to the drug, any usual dosages needed, etc. This data is collected in databanks (yes, the cult is now in the computer age), inside of encrypted files, which will then be sent to a central base in Langley, Virginia.

Alters used in experiments, or told that they were experiments, need to realize they are valuable. They will need to realize they went through intense programming, and be allowed to vent and discuss their experiences. The fear related to believing they were an experiment needs to be vented appropriately. They will be angry at the dehumanization, intentionality, and coldness of what they went through, and quite rightly so. They may rail against the effects in their life now of the experiments and procedures they went through, and need to grieve over loss of body image; loss of trust in people; the sense of betrayal and helplessness that they felt during the procedures. They may want to journal, or draw pictures of their experiences.

A warm, empathetic therapist, who listens, and believes, and does not discount what they went through, is invaluable at this point. Allowing internal cognitives and helpers ground parts who went through bizarre sensory experiences, and creating "grounding committees" inside will also help. Extra support may be needed while dealing with experiences and feelings of this intensity.

Function Codes:

Trainers will place within the subject's systems a special way to organize the fragments that are related to the job they were trained to do. These are called Function Codes, and there are three main types:

Command Codes: these are irreversible commands, put in at the limbic level of conditioning. The first code always put in is the “halt “ command, which stops the person in their tracks, and is the first code any new trainer learns. This will stop the subject from assassinating their trainer, if they have MK ULTRA or other assassin training in place.

Other command codes will include: system destruct codes (suicide); shatter codes; erasure codes; and antisuicide codes.

Access Codes: these are specialized codes, often coded into short messages, or numerical codes, that allow access into the person’s system. A trainer will always begin a session by repeating the person’s personal complete access code, which will allow authorized entry into the system without setting off booby traps and internal protectors. These codes may also depend and be set up on sight recognition and voice recognition of the person giving the codes. In other words, the system will respond to the codes only if a person who appears to be an authorized person, such as the person’s trainer, gives them. This is to prevent unauthorized access or using of the person by others outside of the person’s local cult group.

Function codes: these are the “job codes” or work codes within the system.

Often, several will be coded to link together to perform a task. These are usually a letter, such as a Greek alphabet letter, combined with a numeric sequence that corresponds to their place on the internal grid or landscape.

Suggestions:

If the survivor has function codes, or the other codes internally, it will help if the different system controllers can share these with the person. The person can then get to know the fragments, hear their history, and help them begin coalescing with other parts internally. It may help to find the template these codes were fragmented from, and help the template realize how they were traumatized to create these fragments.

About deprogrammers:

Often people who call themselves deprogrammers will attempt to find these codes and help the person. This is an individual decision of each survivor and therapist. There may be excellent deprogrammers, but I have always felt extreme caution, and never used one myself for two reasons:

1. I would never ever give away the locus of control away to an outside person again. It would remind me to much of my own abuse, and I believe the survivor should be self empowered in therapy as much as possible.

2. There are no quick cures, or miracles, or short cuts in the process of undoing the extensive amount of abuse that has occurred with Illuminati programming. Even the best deprogrammers will admit that after they are done, the person will usually have an idea of what was put in them, but must finish with years of therapy dealing with how they FEEL about the programming that was done. Illuminati programming takes YEARS to put in, with extensive, methodical abuse, and a realistic therapist will realize that it will take years of patience, support, and hard work by both therapist and survivor to undo a lifetime of conditioning and pain. This is not to say that deprogrammers don't help people; good, reputable, safe ones have been reported to be of great help. But the person can also undertake the process themselves of undoing their own programming, and often the survivor is the best "internal deprogrammer" of all. They know their inside people and what motivates them, better than anyone else.

Chapter Fourteen

Spiritual Programming

Note: this chapter includes discussion of both cult and Christian spirituality; do not read if these themes are triggering

Any discussion of Illuminati programming would be lacking if it did not address spiritual programming. Most of the previous chapters have dealt with scientifically based, organized, structured programming.

But the Illuminati are first and foremost not scientists, but spiritual. The very foundation of the group is based on the occult. And they go to great lengths to grind in these occult beliefs in their people's systems.

The amount of spiritual programming in the person's systems will vary from person to person, and depends on the individual group, their religious heritage, the leader's beliefs, and the trainers in the group.

All children go to rituals, where they are dedicated from before birth as well as at intervals throughout their life. In these rituals, demonic entities are invoked, to coerce the person into servant hood, loyalty, and secrecy; as well as reinforce the programming being done.

Trainers will invoke demonic layering during programming sessions. This is done after acute trauma. The person is asked if they want more pain, and they will always say "no". The trainer then offers them a way out: if they will accept a "protector" or "protectors" they won't be hurt any more. The trainers will want this, knowing that with these "protectors'" they can shorten the training sessions. The protectors, or guardians, will reinforce the programming internally, without outside help. This concept will seem controversial to people who do not believe in spiritual realities, but I am only describing what the Illuminists believe, and their trainers practice.

Spiritual programming will also include: being forced to memorize rituals, THE BOOK OF ILLUMINATION, and other books which contain cult beliefs. The person will be saturated from infancy on, in classes and training sessions, with cult beliefs. They will go to rituals where the adults participate in spiritual worship, wearing robes, and giving obeisance to the group's particular guardian deity. Moloch, Ashtaroth, Baal, Enokkim are demons who are commonly worshipped. The child may see a sacrifice, either real or a set-up, to these deities; animal sacrifices are common. The child will be forced to participate in the sacrifices, and will have to go through blood baptism.

They will be forced to take the heart, or other internal organs, out of an animal that has been sacrificed, and eat them. The adults, and leaders of the group, will place their hands on the child's head, while it is drugged, and invoke demonic entities.

One ritual which is actually programming is the "resuscitation ritual". In this ritual, the child may be heavily drugged, and shocked or tortured, to the point that his heart may stop. The head priest will then "resuscitate " the child, using drugs, CPR, and incantations. When the child comes back, and is awake, he or she will be told that they were "brought back to life" by the demonic entity that the particular group worships, and that now the child owes it their life. They are told that if they ever tell, or try to get the demon to leave, they will return to the lifeless state they were in prior to resuscitation.

Spiritual "healings" due to the demonic are also common. Injuries caused by torture, or programming sessions, or even military exercises, will be healed almost instantaneously during invocations.

Jewel programming will often have demons loyal to the generational family spirits layered in. These are called the "family jewels". The demons "guard them" and help protect the programming surrounding them.

In a sense, every ritual that a young child is part of, is an intense programming experience, as the child observes the adults around them, and imitates their behavior. The child will be severely punished if it falls asleep, and will be told that demons will kill it if it goes to sleep again during a ritual.

They are taught to be completely silent, no matter what they witness during the rituals. The child will witness things that seem utterly unbelievable, including faces appearing transformed by the demonic, channeling, other voices coming out of a leader's mouth, reading of members, telling the future. Group guidance will often be given through channeling of a strong spirit or principality; members who can channel powerful spirits and survive are respected, and their guidance will be looked for.

Some groups will use scriptures negatively or program the child to hate Christian symbols and theology. Other groups will encourage the amnesic front to embrace a Christian lifestyle, while forcing the back alters to renounce and blaspheme the choices the front has made, to separate the two alter groups even further. The cult alters will be told that since they renounced Christianity, they have committed the “unpardonable sin” and can never be forgiven. They will be shown scriptures that supposedly back this up.

In moments of despair, during intense torture or isolation, a person will often cry out to God for help. The trainers or other cult members will often mock the person, telling the person that God has forgotten them, or ask “where is God now? He must hate you.....”

Any negative experience the person undergoes, will be used to reinforce the concept that they have been abandoned by God. The cult will gleefully point out the contradictions between what the person experiences, and what Christianity teaches should happen to them.

They may distort scriptures, or use false scriptures. They may distort Christian hymns, or use them in programming. A favorite hymn is “may the circle be unbroken”, since it can have two meanings.

Suggestions:

Spiritual programming can be some of the most damaging programming within a person’s systems, since it attempts to cut them off from the source of real healing. It is an intentional distortion of truth, with events calculated to teach and reinforce wrong concepts of God. Many survivors are unable to hear Christian terms, or are intensely triggered by any religious discussion.

The survivor and therapist need to realize that these negative reactions are the result of years of false teaching, pain, punishment, distortion and set-ups. It is important not to judge the parts of the person that are negative towards spirituality, or come out, proclaiming the power and benefits of cult spirituality. The survivor’s front may be horrified to hear or learn about parts that have these feelings, especially if they are a strong Christian. These parts inside are sharing the only reality they have ever known, and need time and patience to ground, and experience reality outside of the cult setting.

Demonic oppression may need to be dealt with, and even deliverance, to bring relief to a system that is being terrorized by the demonic.

Each therapist and survivor will need to come to terms with their own spiritual beliefs. I personally believe that a therapist needs to consider the possibility of the demonic, since this is what the survivor has been exposed to all their life. The cult certainly does believe it is real, and anyone who has been involved in a cult setting will have had experiences that are in-explainable by normal rational scientific principles.

The survivor needs hope, and healing. A positive spirituality based on love, gentleness, forgiveness, that is the opposite of the coercing, punitive, negative spirituality the survivor has known, will help immensely in the healing process. A spiritual belief system that offers hope, healing, grace, mercy, and affirmation will often give the survivor the support they need to go on during the often difficult process of healing.

Chapter Fifteen

Core splits, Denial programming, the last Five Steps of Discipline

Virtual Reality Programming

Virtual reality programming (VR) is a form of programming that has become more and more widely used in the past few decades. It involves the person being placed in VR headsets and suit while a cult created VR disk is used to run the program. It can be used to create 3D and holographic images, and especially is useful in scripted programming, and target practice sequences for assassin training. Under hypnosis , the person will really believe they are in the scene.

Virtually any scenario can be recreated. Images to be “burned in” will be shown on the VR disk, and reinforced repetitively during the programming sequence. Some trainers feel it removes the element of “human error” in training, and use it quite extensively. VR programming, like any other programming, means going inside and finding out the distortions that were placed in the parts that went through the programming, allowing them to see how they were deceived, and dealing with the trauma associated with the programming.

Denial Programming:

Denial programming begins with the first experiences the infant goes through in life. The child has been horrendously wounded and traumatized, yet the next morning, the adults around him are acting normally, as if nothing had happened. They are modeling a lifestyle of denial for the infant and young child. This is reinforced later by the child being told:

“It was just a bad dream” (oh, how the child wants to believe this lie. It makes the pain less to think it didn’t really happen)

“It’s just your imagination; it isn’t really happening” (which is again embraced as an escape from the horror). Denial will also be fed by the adults around the child telling them that they will never be believed if they disclose. There will be set ups to teach the child what they see and hear, and to teach the child to trust outside adults to tell them their reality.

A typical set up will go like this:

The adult will hold an object such as an orange in their hand, and ask the young child, about age two or three, “what is this?”. The child will quickly respond, “oh, an orange!” The child will be shocked, and told, “no, it’s an apple.” The child will be confused, because what they are looking at is obviously an orange. It is the color orange, smells like an orange, looks like an orange. The question will be repeated. The child may answer again,” an orange,” and will be shocked again. Finally, the child, unsure and not wanting to be punished, will say, “an apple,” and be praised.

The purpose of this exercise is to teach the child to not trust their own reality, and look to outside adults or leaders to tell them what reality really is.

That is the basis of denial: the person learns to not trust their own reality, because of punishment and fear when they have spoken the truth.

Alters will be created as the child grows, whose purpose is to deny the cult abuse. If any leakage or breakthrough occurs, the denial alter’s job is to create a plausible explanation: it was a nightmare, a book the person read, a movie they saw, etc. These alters will read and quote literature that refutes SRA. THESE ALTERS OFTEN BELIEVE THAT THEY ARE SAVING THE LIFE OF THE SURVIVOR. They have been told that if the survivor remembers, and believes the abuse, the survivor will be killed, or the denial alter will be severely punished or shattered for not doing their job. These parts have a vested interest in their job: they believe their very existence and they body’s survival, depend upon them.

Suggestions:

Arguing with a denial alter will not work, since they are not motivated by logic, but fear. A better approach is to ask them what they fear if the person remembers. This will open up the deception and lies that were ground in. They may be protecting the survivor from suicidal alters behind them, who are programmed to kick in if denial is broken through. Allowing them to vent their concerns, and enlisting the aid of helpers or cognitives who do not have suicidal or denial programming will help. Showing them reality in a gentle way, allowing them to “listen in” on others who share will go a long way.

Some denial is the natural consequence of self protection from the horrors of abuse; not all denial is programming. But if denial is constantly blocking therapy, and causing it to come to a complete standstill; if the person becomes highly suicidal every time denial is set aside briefly, then the possibility needs to be considered. Safety, inner cooperation, and patience will go a long way in decreasing denial. As denial backs down, you can expect an immense amount of grieving as the truth is realized. Denial protected the survivor from the horrendous pain of the truth, and should be let go of extremely slowly and cautiously, with plenty of support during the grieving stage.

Core splits:

Core splits are intentional traumatic splits created from the core personality.

The core may be literally “splintered” by overwhelming psychological and physical/spiritual trauma. The trauma needed to create a core split must be very early and psychologically devastating. Fetal splits may occur, but they are rarely a core split; instead, the core creates an alter, but remains.

Core splits are done between the ages of 18 months and three years. Usually at least one parent or main caretaker is involved in the trauma, because this creates the psychological devastation necessary to split the core. Physical trauma alone rarely causes core splits. The torture is intense and prolonged, until the child collapses. It may be shocking, stretching, being hung in a high place, or a combination of several techniques. Being placed in “shock boxes”, or near drowning are also used.

The techniques that create core splits are also dangerous, since they can also cause autism if the child cannot endure the programming. When I was in the cult, I fought to stop core splitting because occasionally children were lost or the foundational personality was too weakened.

The core may split into two, three, or up to eight splits internally. Each split will be a piece of the “core child”. The original core will not resurface after splitting. These splits are used by cult trainers to be used as templates to create systems within the child. A core split, or a split from one, will be a strong alter, and can be re-split many times in the programming process, to create a multifaceted and diverse system within.

Suggestions:

Core splits represent intense foundational trauma. They will be the basis for later systems, which may be completely dissociated from the split as time goes on. Work on core splits should go very slowly, and only late in the therapy process when there is immense intrasystem cooperation. The survivor will need every internal resource to deal with these traumas, and plenty of outside therapeutic support.

It may mean hospitalization unless the survivor can keep the trauma from emerging too quickly, and the therapist and survivor can go extremely slow.

Other, less dissociated systems and fragments should be integrated.

Acknowledging the abuse cognitively will be the first step in dealing with core trauma. Letting more dissociated parts grieve about “hearing about” what happened may come next. Allowing feelings near the core to come close, a little at a time, with helpers and internal nurturers offering support will help.

These feelings should be titrated, and looked at a little at a time. Splits may be different ages, and may need to express themselves in different ways.

There may be “dream programming”, a “fantasy world”, or other flight from reality surrounding the core splits, that protects them from contact with the outside world, which is perceived as brutal and cold. Parts may be completely disconnected from outside reality in an effort to buffer pain.

Slow, patient nurturing and reality orientation will help these tremendously traumatized parts begin to join outer reality. Some parts will always have been aware of what happened, but won't care to join the outside world.

Patience, allowing them to vent, will help most.

Steps of Discipline:

Step seven: Not caring

This step will take the child further into a perpetrator role. The child will be forced to hurt others and prove their ability to not care during the process.

Step eight: Time travel

The child will be taught spiritual principles of "traveling" both internally and externally, with set ups, role playing, and guided exercises reinforced with trauma. The goal will be to reach "enlightenment", an ecstatic state of dissociation reached after severe trauma.

Steps nine, ten, eleven:

These will involve programming that will vary according to the child's future role in the cult. Sexual trauma, learning to dissociate and increase cognition, decrease feeling will be emphasized in these steps.

Step twelve: "coming of age"

A ceremony of becoming at age twelve to thirteen, the child will be formally inducted into the cult and their adult role in a ceremony of "coming of age". They will prove this ability by performing the role/job they have been training for, to the satisfaction of the trainer and leaders; by undergoing a special induction ceremony. The ritual and ceremony will be held with other children of the same age, who are dressed in white and given a prize as acknowledgement that they have completed the basics of their training successfully.

They will continue to be abused, even as adults, but the major traumatization and creation of system templates will have occurred by this age. Future training will refine what was already placed in the child by this age, or build upon the foundation.

Suggestions:

Grieving the abuse, acknowledging the feelings associated with undergoing the trauma will be important. It will be necessary to deal with perpetrator guilt, since by this time the child will be a perpetrator, and will have identified with the adult role models around them. This can be difficult to do, since perpetration will horrify the survivor when they remember this. Supporting the survivor, remaining non judgmental, and encouraging acceptance of these parts is important. Pointing out that at the time, they saw no other options available will help. Realizing that perpetrator alters saved the child's life, and that they had no other way to act, especially originally, the first time, will need to be pointed out. The survivor may feel hostile towards, or reviled by perpetrator alters, but they are the expression of the abuse and limited choices they were allowed. Grieving being a perpetrator will take time and caring support by others.

About the author:

Hi, my name is Svali. Both I and my entire family were involved in a cult group until several years ago, when we broke free. I used to be a programmer in the cult, and now I want to share the knowledge that I have to help others.

It is possible to break free of cult abuse if a person is involved. It is a long, heart-breaking process, but well worth it. In the articles that I will be providing, I hope to help the survivor of cult abuse find tools to help in their journey towards freedom.

I have been a consultant to an on-line survivors group that helps people dealing with issues related to cult programming and becoming free, for the past year and a half. I myself have been in therapy for ritual abuse and DID for nine years, with the last five being aware of the recent cult abuse.

I am also a writer, and a registered nurse. I currently work as a diabetic educator in Texas 20 hours a week.

I have also self-published a book on breaking free of cult programming, which several experts in the field have said has "invaluable information" for the survivor of ritual abuse.

Both my ex-husband and my two children broke free of cult abuse last year. My children are living with me while my husband is working on healing. They all have DID (dissociative identity disorder, formerly known as multiple personality disorder) as well, which makes life at home interesting! I am currently married to my second husband, who is also a recovered DID and who got out of the cult five years ago.

Equipment Frequently Used by Trainers:

It may help therapists to realize the equipment that trainers use. If their client describes these items, which may appear quite sophisticated, believe them. The cult has become quite technologically advanced.

Training room: the average training room is a neutral colored room, with walls painted either a dull gray, white, or beige. Some may be painted in various colors, as part of color coding. They are often located in secret underground rooms, or basements of large private residences, and will be entered from the main building through a covered doorway. Impromptu training rooms may be set up during military exercises outdoors, in covered canvas tents.

Trainers: the Illuminati have a rule: there must always be a minimum of two trainers working with a person. This prevents a trainer from being either too severe, or permissive, or developing too close a bond with the subject; the watchful eye of the other trainer prevents this. Younger trainers are paired with older, more experienced trainers. The older trainer will teach the younger, who does most of the actual work. If the younger is unable to finish a task, or loses heart, the older one will step in.

Head trainers: will teach, they will also work with the council leaders and hierarchy. All members are required to come in for a "tune up" (reinforcing programming), even top leaders, from time to time.

EEG machine: will often have abbreviated hookups for quick use. Used extensively with brain wave programming; also to verify that a certain alter is out when called up. May be used to verify deep trance state before initiating deep programming. Trainers are taught to read these readouts.

Trainer's table: a large table, frequently steel covered with plastic, or easily cleaned material. On the sides at intervals are restraints for arms, legs, neck to prevent movement.

Shock equipment: models and types are quite varied, depending on age and company. Most have a set of rubber covered wires, with electrodes that may be connected with Velcro, rubber (steel tips imbedded under finger and toe nail beds), or gel pads (larger body areas such as chest, arms, legs). Some are tiny electrodes, which can be taped next to eyes, or placed within genitalia. These are connected to the "shock box", which has controls that can determine amount of electricity , and frequency, if interval shocks are desired.

Drugs: any number of opiates, barbiturates, hypnotics, sedatives, anesthetic agents. Resuscitative drugs, antidotes are also kept, clearly labeled and indexed. Many drugs, especially experimental ones, are only known by code names, such as "alphin 1".

CPR equipment: in case person has adverse reaction to drugs or programming. At times, a child alter will come out inadvertently during a programming sequence, and will be overdosed with the drugs meant for adult alters. The trainers must give it the antidote, and resuscitate it, just as if a real child is out. They are well aware of this fact, and will severely punish child alters, to teach them to come out only when called out.

Virtually reality headsets: the keystone in recent years. Many programming sequences utilize holographic images, and virtual reality set ups, including assassination programs, where the person realistically "kills" another human being. These virtual disks are far more advanced than those in video arcades.

Body building equipment: used in military training to increase fitness, lean body mass.

Steel instruments: used to insert into orifices, cause pain

Stretch machine: used as punishment, "stretches " person without breaking bones. Extremely painful.

Trainer's grids and projectors: used to project grids on wall or ceiling.

Movie projector: to show movies, although new VR disks are replacing these computer: collect and analyze data; keep computer grid on person's system. Current military computer access codes will be used to download into governmental computers.

Trainer's Journals: contain indexed copies of subject's systems, including key alters, command codes, etc.

Comfort objects: used to comfort subject afterwards. May be toy or candy for child alters, or oils for massage. Warm towels, or beverages may be given, as the trainer "bonds with" and comforts person they worked with. This is probably the most important part of the training process, as the trainer explains calmly, kindly how well the person did, how proud they are of them.

Chapter One
An overview of the Illuminati

In order to understand Illuminati cult programming, it is first necessary to understand a bit about the structure and philosophy of the organization. The Illuminati are a group of people who follow a philosophy known as "Illuminism" or "enlightenment". The Illuminati were named several hundred years ago, but trace their roots and history to the ancient mystery religions of Egypt, ancient Babylon, and even Mesopotamia. Out of these ancient religions, which were practiced secretly over hundreds and hundreds of years, there arose esoteric groups which continued to practice the rites, traditions, and enculturation brought in from the original groups.

Over the centuries, these groups practiced openly in some countries, and covertly in countries where Christianity or other religions opposed their practices. Some of the groups which came out of these ancient roots included the order of the Knights Templar, Rosicrucian's, Baphetomism, and Druidic cults. These groups were the forerunners, or roots, of modern day Illuminism. The original Illuministic leaders chose to take what they felt were the best practices of each root religion, combine them into principles, then organized these principles according to specific guidelines.

Modern day Illuminism is a philosophy funded by the wealthy, but practiced in all social strata. It is a philosophy whose tenets have spread across the world. It started with the German branch of Rosicrucian's, spread to England, then came to the United states with the first settlers.

The Illuminati have 3 main branches: the Germanic branch, which oversees the others, the British branch, which handles finances, and the French/Russian branch. All 3 branches are represented in both the United States and Canada, as well as every country in the world.

How the Illuminati are organized in the United States:

The Illuminati have groups in every major city of the United States. They originally entered the U.S. through Pittsburgh, Pa., and from there, spread across the US. There are 18 cities across the US, which are considered major "power centers" for Illuminati power and/or influence. These include: Washington, DC and the surrounding areas; Albany, New York; Pittsburgh, Pa. the "golden triangle" of the Winston Salem, Raleigh, NC area, Minneapolis, Minn, Ann Arbor, Mich, Wichita, Kan., Phoenix, Az., Portland, Or., Flagstaff, Az., Seattle, Wash., Houston, TX., Los Angeles, CA. and surrounding areas, Atlanta, Ga., New Orleans, La., Springfield, Miss. Other cities are important to the Illuminati, as all, but these cities funnel money for them, conduct research, and often regional councils sit within them.

Hierarchy of the Illuminati

The Illuminati have organized their society along extremely hierarchical, or stratified, levels. In fact, the top levels are known as:

Hierarchical level

The Illuminati have divided the United States into 7 geographical regions; each region has its own regional council, composed of 13 members, with an advisory board of 3 elders to each one. These regions interact for purposes of finances; personnel; teaching, etc. Beneath each regional council, is a local council. This is a council of 13 members, the head of whom sits on the regional council, and gives it information about the local groups underneath his leadership. The local council will also have an advisory council of 3.

A local leadership council in a large metropolitan area might look like this:

- Head of local council (reports to regional council)
- Two intermediaries (report all activities under leader to him)
- Four administrators (oversee finances, administer, set up group activities)
- Six head trainers (over trainers in local groups, teach other trainers)

Underneath the above leadership council, will be six people designated as informers or intermediaries, who go to the local group meetings, interact with local group leaders, and report to the leadership council.

Anarchical level: the levels below the leadership council are known as the anarchical levels.

Underneath the intermediate level, is the local group level. It will look like this:

Local "Sister groups" (will vary in number, according to the size of the city, or cities, in the area). A large metropolitan area may have anywhere from ten to twenty seven groups.

Each sister group will be headed up by:

A high priest and priestess: this job is rotated every 3 years, to allow different people within the group to take on leadership roles. Each group will also have different members, with specific roles/jobs within the group. These roles will be addressed in Chapter 2.

One thing that I would like to emphasize is the fact that the Illuminati today are generational. There members are born into the group, which is highly organized, as described above. The set up discussed above is representative, with minor variations, of most major metropolitan regions of the United States. Smaller population centers will be organized under similar guidelines, but will be umbrellaed together with several cities within the region to create the local leadership council.

HOW THE ILLUMINATI MAKE MONEY

The Illuminati are involved in many areas of making money, as they need continued financing to survive. There are several illegal enterprises that they are involved in, as well as legal ones.

- Drug running: The Illuminati linked up with the Mafia and the Columbians, years ago, to help each other out with bringing drugs into the United States. They also provide couriers for taking drugs and money out of the States. The Illuminists are generally wealthy businessmen, who have 4 layers of people underneath them. The fourth layer down actually has contact with the people in the drug industry. They never identify themselves as Illuminists; only as people interested in investing, with a guaranteed profit, and are highly secretive. In return, the local groups supply people willing to be couriers of money or drugs, or people willing to help cover for the local operations.

- Pornography: The Illuminati are linked in many cities with pornography/prostitution/child prostitution/ and white slavery sales. Again, several layers are present, as a buffer, between the true "management" and those either engaged in the activities, or in paying for/funding and eventually being paid for the activities.

- Children: are often supplied from the local cult groups, and taught to be child prostitutes (and later, adult prostitutes); are photographed and filmed in every type of pornography available, including "snuff films" and violent films.

- Gun running: The Illuminati and other groups are also involved in international gun sales and shipments. The Illuminists have well trained couriers who will cross international and state lines. These couriers are highly secretive, and will not reveal their sources, on pain of suicide or assassination. These people are accountable to others above them, with two more "buffer layers" of people above these, before the person in the Illuminati with money, who helps fund this, is found.

- Buying access codes for military computers: The Illuminati will have people from all strata of civilian life trained to go and make pickups near or on military bases. A typical person used might be the innocent looking wife of a military person, a local businessman, or even a college student. There is a contact inside the base, also a dissociative Illuminist, who brings the information to the outside contact. Occasionally, the contact person is paid with money, information, or goods. The military computer codes are changed on random schedules; the Illuminati have at least 5 or 6 contacts on each major base, who alert them when the codes are getting ready to change, on pain of death. The Illuminists like having access to military computers, because that will gain them entrance to closed files the world over.

- Hiring and selling assassinations: this is done worldwide, more in Europe than in the States. These people are paid big money to do either a private or political assassination. The money is paid either to the assassin, or to the trainer; usually they both divide the fee The assassin is offered protection in another country for awhile, until the trail runs cold. If the kill is done in Europe they may be sent to the far east or the U.S., and vice versa if the kill is done in the U.S. The Illuminati have a wide arena of places and false identities to hide these people, unless for some reason they want the assassin disposed of as well. Then, he/she is caught and immediately executed.

- Mercenaries/military trainers: guess who gets paid money to come in and train paramilitary groups? Who has training camps all over the states of Montana, Nevada, and North Dakota? Who occasionally will offer their expertise in return for a large financial reward? They never advertise themselves as Illuminati, unless the group is known to be sympathetic to their cause. Instead, these are tough, cold, brutal military trainers, who offer to teach these groups in return for money, or even better, a promise to affiliate with their group in return (loyalty in return for knowledge). More and more paramilitary groups have been brought into the Illuminati this way, without their full knowledge of who and what the group really is. This gives the Illuminists a way to monitor these groups (their trainers report on them, and their activities), and it can be useful to have trained military groups that they can call on someday.

- Banking: The original Illuminists were bankers, and they have highly trained financiers to organize their money, and funnel the above illicit funds into more "respectable" front groups/ organizations. They will also start benevolent charities, community organizations, etc., as fronts, and funnel the money from a broad base into these groups. The Illuminati particularly pride themselves on their money making and manipulation skills, and their ability to cover their paper trails expertly, through layer after layer.

  All banking trails eventually will lead to Belgium, the Illuminati financial center for the world. These are some of the major money making enterprises that the Illuminati are engaged in. They have a lot of financial resources, backing their enterprises, which means that in reality they can engage the best lawyers, accountants, etc. to help cover their trail as well.

Chapter Two:

Jobs in the Illuminati (or Why They Spend All That Time Training People)

To understand generational programming, it helps to understand WHY the cult goes to the amount of trouble that it does to place programming into people. Training represents time and effort, and no one- especially a cult member- will spend that amount of energy unless there will be a return on the investment. This will be a simple overview of some of the more common jobs in the cult. It is not meant to be exhaustive, or in any way considered to be complete.

The cult has a very organized hierarchy of jobs. Like any large organization, in order to run smoothly, it needs people who are well trained in their jobs- so well trained, that they can do their tasks without even thinking about them. To maintain secrecy, this group must also have people completely dedicated to not revealing their roles in the cult- even under threat of death or punishment. The cult wants members who are completely loyal to the group and its tenets, who never question the orders they are given. These qualities in group members ensure the continuance of the cult, and that its secrets are never revealed to the outside world.

- Informers: These people are trained to observe details and conversations with photographic recall. They are trained to report to their local cult leader or hierarchy, or trainer, and will download large amounts of information under hypnotic trance. Detailed knowledge of conversations or even documents can often be retrieved in this manner. They are often used as "plants" to gather information in both governmental settings, and within the cult meetings.

- Breeders: These people are often chosen from childhood to have and breed children. They may be chosen according to bloodlines, or given in arranged marriages or cult alliances, to "elevate" the children. A parent will often sell the services of a child as a breeder to the local cult leader in return for favors or status. These children are rarely used as a sacrifice; usually they are given to others in the cult to adopt or raise, but the breeder is told that any child born to her was "sacrificed" to prevent her looking for the child. Occasionally, in anarchical cults, a local leader or parent will have a child as the result of an incestuous liaison. Such a child is given away or killed, but the mother will be told the child was given away to a distant branch, and must be given up.

- Prostitutes: Prostitutes can be a male or female of any age. They are trained from earliest childhood to give sexual favors to one or more adults in return for payment to the child's parents or their local cult group. Occasionally, the prostitute may be given to a member of the cult, on a temporary basis, as a "reward" for a job well done. Child prostitution is a big business for the cult, and training very young children in this role is taken very seriously. Child prostitutes are also used to blackmail political figures or leadership outside the cult.

- PornographyA child used in pornography (which may include bestiality) can also be of any age or sex. Child pornography is also big business in the cult, and includes snuff films. Children are trained in this role from preschool on, often with the help or approval of the child's parents. The parents are paid or given favors by the cult in return for selling their child or allowing their child to be trained in this area.

- Media personnelThese are very bright, verbal people. They will be sent to journalism school and will work for local or regional media upon graduation. These individuals have many contacts within the organization as well as the outside world. They write books and articles sympathetic to the Illuministic viewpoint without ever revealing their true affiliation. They will tend to do biased research in their articles, favoring only one viewpoint, such as denying the existence of DID or ritual abuse. For instance, they will interview only psychiatrists/psychologists sympathetic to this viewpoint and will skew data to present a convincing picture to the general public. If necessary, they will outright lie or make up data to support their viewpoint. There are members of groups whose people have been purposely trained to try and help formulate public opinion on the nonexistence of the cult (i.e., cults don't exist, no rational person would believe this "mass hysteria"). The Illuminists believe that to control the media is to control the thinking of the masses. For this reason, they take training media personnel quite seriously. Helpers at rituals Cleaners clean up meticulously after rituals. They will scour the site after a ceremony, rake the area, etc. They are taught this job from preschool years on.

- Preparers: set up tables, cloths, candles, and paraphernalia quickly and efficiently. This job is learned from infancy on.

- Readers: read from the book of Illumination or local group archives; they also keep copies of sacred literature in a safe vault and are trained in ancient languages. Readers are valued for their clear speaking voices and ability to dramatize important passages and bring them to life.

- Cutters: are taught to dissect animal or human sacrifices (they are also known as the "slicers and dicers" of the cult). They can do a kill quickly, emotionlessly, and efficiently. They are trained from early childhood on.

- Chanters: sing, sway, or lead choruses of sacred songs on high holy occasions.

- High Priest/Priestess: The person who holds this job is changed every few years in most groups, although it may be held longer in smaller, more rural groups. These people administrate and lead their local cult group as well as coordinate jobs within the cult, give assignments, and pass on meeting dates given from the local hierarchy or leadership council. They also will activate the local group's telephone tree, evaluate their local group members for job performance, and lead in all spiritual activities. They report to the local or regional leadership council over their group.

- Trainers: These people teach local group members their assigned jobs and monitor the performance of these jobs at local group meetings or after an assigned task. These people report to the high priest/priestess over their group, as ell as to the local head trainer on leadership council.

- PunishersThese are the people who brutally punish/discipline members caught breaking rules or acting outside of or above their authority. They are universally despised by other cult members, although they will be praised for a job well done by the local high priest or priestess. Usually physically strong, they will employ any method deemed necessary to prevent a recurrence of the undesired behavior. Punishment may be public or private, depending upon the severity of the infraction. Each local group has several punishers.

- Trackers:These people will track down and keep an eye on members who attempt to leave their local group. They are taught to use dogs, guns, taser, and all necessary tracking techniques. They are also adept at using the internet to monitor a person's activities. They will track credit card use, checks written, and employ other methods to find a missing person.

- Teachers: These people teach group classes to children to indoctrinate cult philosophy, languages, and specialized areas of endeavor.

- Child care: These people care for very young children when the adults are at local group meeting. Usually care is for young infants only. After age two, children are routinely engaged in some form of group activity led by trainers of the youngest children. Infant child care workers are usually quiet and coldly efficient.

- Couriers: These members run guns, money, drugs, or illegal artifacts across state or national lines. Usually they are people who are young and single without outside accountability. They are trained in the use of firearms to get out of difficult situations. They must be reliable and able to get past any anticipated barriers.

- Commanding officers:These people oversee military training in the local groups and help ensure the smooth running of these exercises. They will delegate jobs to those ranking under them and are responsible to the local leadership council. The council will have at least one member on it representing the military branch of the Illuminati. In addition, there are many military- related jobs beneath the commanding officers.

- Behavioral scientists:These individuals often oversee the training in local and regional groups. These students of human behavior are intensely involved in data collection and human experimentation in the name of the pursuit of knowledge of human behavior in the scientific realm. They are almost universally cold, methodical, impersonal people and will employ any methods to study trauma and its effects on the human personality. Their main interest centers around implementing programming and cult control in the most efficient and lasting manner.

There are many other jobs inside the cult. The cult spends quite a bit of its time getting people to do these jobs for them for FREE, which is why they PROGRAM people to believe they are doing their "family" and the world a service. The reality, of course, is that the individual is being abused and taken advantage of by the cult.

CHAPTER THREE:
CONSPIRACY THEORY TWO, OR THE ILLUMINATI PLAN TO RULE THE WORLD
(ALSO KNOWN AS "NOVUS ORDEM SECLORUM")

Prior to discussing actual programming techniques, it is important to understand the philosophy underlying why the Illuminists are programming people. All groups have goals, and the Illuminists are no exception. Money making is not their final goal - it is a means to an end. This end point, or goal, is no less than to rule the world. The Illuminati has a set plan similar to the Soviet Union's previous "5- year" and "10- year " plans. This is what the Illuminists themselves believe and teach their followers as gospel truth.

Whether they will actually succeed is another matter altogether. The following is the Illuminist agenda at ALL levels of the Illuminati. As with any goal, the Illuminati has specific steps which it plans to implement to reach its objectives. Briefly, each region of the United States has "nerve centers" or power bases for regional activity. The United States has been divided up into seven major geographical regions. Each region has localities within it that contain military compounds and bases that are hidden in remote, isolated areas or on large private estates.

These bases are used intermittently to teach and train generational Illuminati in military techniques, hand- to- hand combat, crowd control, use of arms, and all aspects of military warfare. Why? Because the Illuminists believe that our government, as we know it, as well as the governments of most nations around the world, are destined to collapse. These will be planned collapses, and they will occur in the following ways:

The Illuminati has planned first for a financial collapse that will make the great depression look like a picnic. This will occur through the maneuvering of the great banks and financial institutions of the world, through stock manipulation, and interest rate changes. Most people will be indebted to the federal government through bank and credit card debt, etc. The governments will recall all debts immediately, but most people will be unable to pay and will be bankrupted. This will cause generalized financial panic which will occur simultaneously worldwide, as the Illuminists firmly believe in controlling people through finances.

Next there will be a military takeover, region by region, as the government declares a state of emergency and martial law. People will have panicked, there will be an anarchical state in most localities, and the government will justify its move as being necessary to control panicked citizens. The cult trained military leaders and people under their direction will use arms as well as crowd control techniques to implement this new state of affairs. This is why so many survivors under 36 years of age report having military programming. People who are not Illuminists or who are not sympathetic to their cause, will resist. The Illuminists expect this and will be (and are BEING) trained in how to deal with this eventuality. They are training their people in hand-to- hand combat, crowd control, and, if necessary, will kill to control crowds. The Illuminati is training their people to be prepared for every possible reaction to the takeover. Many mind control victims will also be called into duty with preset command codes. These codes are meant to call out a new, completely cult loyal presenting system. Shatter codes programmed under trauma will be used to destroy or bury non-cult loyal alters.

Military bases will be set up, in each locality (actually, they are already here, but are covert). In the next few years, they will go above ground and be revealed. Each locality will have regional bases and leaders to which they are accountable. The hierarchy will closely reflect the current covert hierarchy.

About five years ago, when I left the Illuminati, approximately 1% of the US population was either part of the Illuminati, sympathetic to it, or a victim of Mind Control (and therefore considered useable). While this may not sound like many, imagine 1% of the population highly trained in the use of armaments, crowd control, psychological and behavioral techniques, armed with weapons and linked to paramilitary groups.

These people will also be completely dedicated to their cause. The Illuminati firmly believes that it can easily overcome the other 99% of the population, most of whom are untrained, or poorly trained, such as "weekend hunters." Even the local military will be overcome as the Illuminati will have regional cell groups with highly trained leaders. They also count on the element of surprise helping them during their takeover. Many of the highest leaders in the militia branch of the Illuminati are or have been officers in the military, and so already have a good knowledge of which techniques will work best to overcome a region's or locality's defenses.

After the military takeover, the general population will be given a chance to either espouse the Illuminati's cause, or reject it (with imprisonment, pain, even death being possible punishments). These people very much believe that the intelligent, or "enlightened" or Illuminated, were born to rule. They are arrogant, and consider the general population as "dumb sheep" who will be easily led if offered strong leadership, financial help in an unstable world economy, and dire consequences if the person rebels. Their utter ruthlessness, and ability to implement this agenda, should not be minimized.

The Illuminati banking leaders, such as the Rothschilds, the Van derBilts, the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, and the Mellons, as examples, will reveal themselves, and offer to "save" the floundering world economy. A new system of monetary exchange, based on an international monetary system, and based between Cairo, Egypt, and Brussels, Belgium, will be set up. A true "one world economy", creating the longed for "one world order", will become reality.

There is more to the Illuminist agenda, but these are the basics of it. This agenda is what the Illuminati really, truly, believe, teach, and train for. They are willing to give their lives up in this cause, in order to teach the next generation, as they believe that their children are their legacy. I was told that my children's generation would see this takeover, sometime in the 21st century. At present, the Illuminati have quietly and covertly fostered their takeover plan by their goals of the infiltration of:

1.The media
2.The banking system
3.The educational system
4.The government, both local and federal
5.The sciences
6.The churches

They are currently, and have been working the last several hundred years, on taking over these 6 areas. They do NOT go to an institution, and say "hi, I'm a local Illuminist, and I'd like to take over your bank). Instead, they begin by having several people quietly invest funds over several years, gradually buying more and more shares in the bank (or other institution that they wish to control), until they have a financial controlling interest in it. They never openly disclose their agenda, or their cult activities, as often they are amnesic to them. These are well respected, "Christian" appearing business leaders in the community. The image in the community is all important to an Illuminist; they will do anything to maintain a normal, respected facade, and DESPISE exposure. On one leadership in a major metropolitan city, where I was a member, there sat: one head of the local small business administration; one CEO of a government defense firm; one principal of a Christian school; one vice mayor of the city; one journalist; one nurse; one doctor; one behavioral psychologist, one army Colonel, and one navy Commander. All except one attended church weekly; all were well respected within the community. NONE of them appeared "evil", or "marked".

If you met them in person, you would probably instantly like any of these intelligent, verbal, likeable, even charismatic people. This is their greatest cover, since we often expect great evil to "appear" evil, led by media portrayals of evil as causing changes in the face and demeanor of people, or marking them like the biblical Cain. None of the Illuminists that I have known, had unkind, or evil appearing, persona in their daytime lives, although some were dysfunctional, such as being alcoholics. The dissociation that drives the Illuminists is their greatest cover for being undetected at this time. Many, if not most, of these people are completely unaware of the great evil that they are involved in, during the night.

There are other groups which are not actually part of the Illuminati, but the Illuminati are aware of them. The Illuminati are not the only group that follows esoteric practices, or worships ancient deities or demons. They encourage divisiveness between different groups (divide and conquer is one of their ruling principles), and are not concerned about other groups. Instead, they will often welcome them into their umbrella, if possible. This has been happening more and more in recent years, as the Illuminati trade teaching their training principles, which are considered the best by most secretive groups, in exchange for loyalty to the Illuminati. They will send their trainers to these groups, and the trainers will report to the local regional council.

In the political arena , the Illuminists will fund both sides of a race, because their greatest maxim is that "out of chaos comes order", or the discipline of anarchy. That is why they sent arms to, and funded, both sides of both the great World Wars in this century. They believe that history is a game, like chess; that only out of strategy, fighting, conflict, and testing can the strong emerge. I no longer agree with this philosophy, but at one time, I did, with all my heart. Hopefully, as these people and their agenda are exposed the common man will rise up against this intended rule to be foisted upon an unsuspecting mankind.

Chapter Four
How the Illuminati Program People:
An Overview of Some Basic Types of Programming

In the first few chapters, I defined Illuminism, its reach, and some of the philosophy, money making enterprises, and agendas that help explain WHY they program people. I believe that these are important to understand, as a preface to the next few chapters. Why? The programming techniques that I will describe take an incredible amount of effort, time, dedication, and planning on the part of the cult to place in the individual. Only a very motivated group of people would spend the time it takes to do this. These chapters are very hard for me to write, as an individual, since my role in the cult was that of a programmer. So, the very techniques you will be reading about were often those that I used to place programming in individuals that I worked with. I no longer do these things, nor do I espouse doing them; the reason I am writing this book is that I believe that therapists who work with DID, as well as survivors, deserve to know WHAT is done to people, HOW it is done, as well as be given some ideas on how to undo the programming that the cult places in people.

First, I would like to address unintentional programming versus intentional programming. This is also known as the environmental milieu the child is raised in. The programming of a generational Illuminati infant often begins before its birth (this will be addressed later) but once it is born, the very environment the infant is raised in becomes a form of programming. Often, the infant is raised in a family environment that combines daytime abandonment with dysfunction in the parental figures. The infant soon learns that the nighttime, and cult activities, are the truly important ones. The infant may be deprived of attention, or even abused, in the daytime; and is only treated as special, or "seen" by the parent, in the cult setting. This can lead to very young alters around the core or core splits, who feel "invisible", abandoned, rejected, unworthy of love or attention, or that they don't even exist, unless they are doing a job for their "family".

Another milieu and conditioning process the infant must face is that the adults around him/her are

INCONSISTENT, since the adults in a generational cult family are almost always also multiple, or DID. This sets up a reality for the infant/toddler that the parents act one way at home; an entirely different way at cult gatherings; and yet a different way in normal society.

Since these are the infant's earliest experiences of adults and adult behaviors, it has no choice but to accept this reality that human beings act in shockingly different ways in different settings. While unintentional, this sets the infant up for later dissociation, in mimicry of the adults around it.

INTENTIONAL PROGRAMMING

Intentional programming of an infant in the Illuminati often begins before birth. Prenatal splitting is well known in the cult, as the fetus is very capable of fragmenting in the womb due to trauma. This is usually done between the seventh and ninth month of pregnancy. Techniques used include: placing headphones on the mother's abdomen, and playing loud, discordant music (such as some modern classical pieces, or even Wagner's operas). Loud, heavy rock has also been used. Other methods include having the mother ingest quantities of bitter substances, to make the amniotic fluid bitter, or yelling at the fetus inside the womb. The mother's abdomen may be hit as well. Mild shock to the abdomen may be applied, especially when term is near, and may be used to cause premature labor, or ensure that the infant is born on a ceremonial holiday. Certain labor inducing drugs may be also given if a certain birth date is desired.

Once the infant is born, testing is begun at a very early age, usually during the first few weeks of life. The trainers, who are taught to look for certain qualities in the infant, will place it on a velvet cloth on a table, and check its reflexes to different stimuli. The infant's strength, how it reacts to heat, cold, and pain are all tested. Different infants react differently, and the trainers are looking for dissociative ability, quick reflexes, and reaction times. They are also encouraging early dissociation in the infant with these tests.

The infant will also be abused, to create fragments. Methods of abuse can include: rectal probes; digital anal rape; electric shocks at low levels to the fingers, toes, and genitalia; cutting the genitalia in ritual circumstances (in older infants). The intent is to begin fragmentation before a true ego state develops, and customize the infant to pain and reflexive dissociation from pain (yes, even tiny infants dissociate; I have seen it time and time again; they will glow blank and limp, or glassy, in the face of continued trauma.)

Isolation and abandonment programming will sometimes be begun as well, in a rudimentary sense. The infant is abandoned, or uncared for by adults, intentionally during the daytime, then picked up, soothed, cleaned up and paid attention to in the context of preparing for a ritual or group gathering. This is done in order to help the infant associate night gatherings with "love" and attention, and to help the bonding process to the cult, or "family". The infant will be taught to associate maternal attention with going to rituals, and eventually will associate cult gatherings with feelings of security.

As the infant grows older, i.e. at 15 to 18 months, more fragmenting is intentionally done by having the parents as well as cult members abuse the infant more methodically. This is done by intermittently soothing, bonding with the infant, then shocking it on its digits; the infant may be dropped from heights to a mat or mattress and laughed at as it lays there startled and terrified, crying. It may be placed in cages for periods of time, or exposed to short periods of isolation. Deprivation of food, water, and basic needs may begin later in this stage. All of these methods are done in order to create intentional dissociation in the infant. The infant of this age may be taken to group meetings, but outside of special occasions, or dedications, will have no active role yet in the cult setting. The small infants are usually left with a cult member, or caretaker, who watches them during the group's activities; this caretaker role is usually rotated among lower level or teenage members.

Between the ages of 20 and 24 months, the toddler may begin the "steps of discipline" which the Illuminati use to teach their children. The age the child begins them will vary, depending upon the group, the parent, the trainer, and the child. These "steps of discipline" would be better called "steps of torment and abuse" as their purpose is to create a highly dissociative child, out of touch with their feelings, who is completely and unthinkingly loyal to the cult. The order of the steps may also be varied a little, depending on the whims of the trainer or parents.

I will first discuss the first five steps of discipline: (note: these steps may vary somewhat from region to region, but most follow this outline at least roughly, even if not in the same order)

First step: to not need

The small toddler/child is placed in a room without any sensory stimulus, usually a training room with gray, white, or beige walls. The adult leaves and the child is left alone, for periods of time: these may vary from hours, to an entire day as the child grows older. If the child begs the adult to stay, and not leave, or screams, the child is beaten, and told that the periods of isolation will increase until they learn to stop being weak. The ostensible purpose of this discipline is to teach the child to rely on its own internal resources, and not on outside people ("strengthen it"). What it actually does is create a huge terror of abandonment within the child. When the adult, or trainer, returns to the room, the child is often found rocking itself, or hugging itself in a corner, occasionally almost catatonic from fear. The trainer will then "rescue" the child, feed and give it something to drink and bond with the child as their "savior". The trainer will tell them the "family" told the trainer to rescue the child, because its family "loves" it. The trainer will instill cult teachings, at this point, into the helpless, fearful, and almost insanely grateful child who has just been "rescued" from isolation. The trainer will reinforce in the child over and over how much it "needs " its family, who just rescued it from death by starvation or abandonment. This will teach the very young toddler to associate comfort and security with bonding with its trainer, who may be one of its parents, and being with "family" members. The cult is very aware of child developmental principles, and has developed exercises like the above after hundreds of years of teaching very young children.

Second step: to not want

This step is very similar to the first step, and actually reinforces it. It will be done intermittently with the first step over the next few years of the child's life. Again, the child is left alone in a training room, or isolated room, without food or water for a long period of time. An adult will enter the room, with a large pitcher of ice water, or food. If the child asks for either, as the adult is eating or drinking in front of the child, he/she is severely punished for being weak and needy. This step is reinforced, until the child learns not to ask for food or water unless it is offered first. The ostensible reason the cult gives for this step is that it creates a child who is strong, and can go without food and water for longer and longer periods of time. The real reason this is done is that it creates a child who is completely dissociated from its own needs for food, water, or other comforts, who becomes afraid to ask outside adults for help. This creates in the child a hyper-vigilance as she/he learns to look for outside adults for cues on when it is okay to fulfill needs, and not to trust her/his own body signals. The child is already learning to look outside itself to others to learn how it should think or feel, instead of trusting its own feelings. The cult now becomes the locus of control for the child.

Third step: to not wish

The child is placed in a room with favorite toys, or objects. A kind adult comes into the room and engages the child in play. This adult my be a friend, aunt, parent, or trainer. The child and adult may engage in fantasy play about the child's secret wishes, dreams, or wants. This will occur on several occasions, and the child's trust is slowly gained. At some later point, the child is severely punished for any aspect of wishing or fantasy shared with the adult, including the destruction of favorite toys, going in and undoing or destroying secret safe places the child may have created, or even destroying non cult protectors. This step is repeated, with variations, many times over the ensuing years. Occasionally, the child's siblings, parents, or friends will be used to reveal inside fantasies the child has revealed to them during the daytime, or in unguarded moments. The ostensible reason the cult gives for this step is to create a child who doesn't fantasize, who is more outwardly directed, less inwardly directed. In other words, the child is to look to adults for permission in all aspects of its life, including internal. The reality is that this step destroys all safe places the child has created internally, to retreat from the horrors it is experiencing. This step creates in the child the feeling that there is no true safety, that the cult will find out everything it thinks. Exercises like this are also used to create young alters in the child who will self report to the cult trainers any secret safe places, or covert wishes against the cult, that other alters have. This will then begin to set up intersystem hostility and divisiveness, which the cult will manipulate throughout the person's life span in order to control them.

Fourth step: the survival of the fittest

This step is used in order to begin creating perpetrator alters in the young child. ALL CULT MEMBERS WILL BE EXPECTED TO BECOME PERPETRATORS; THIS BEGINS IN EARLY CHILDHOOD. The child is brought into a room where there is a trainer and another child of approximately the same age, or slightly younger, that the child being taught. The child is severely beaten, for a long period of time, by the trainer, then told to hit the other child in the room, or they will be beaten further. If the child refuses, it is punished severely, the other child is punished as well, then the child is told to punish the other child. If the child continues to refuse, or cries, or tries to hit the trainer instead, they will continue to be beaten severely, and told to hit the other child, to direct its anger at the other child. This step is repeated until the child finally complies. This step is begun around age 2 to 2 1/2, and is used to create aggressive perpetrator alters in the young child. As the child becomes older, the punishing tasks become more and more brutal. Children are expected to become perpetrators of others at very young ages, and will "practice" on children younger than themselves, with the encouragement and rewarding by the adults around them. They will also be mimicking these adults, who role model perpetration constantly as normal. The child will be taught that this is the acceptable outlet for the aggressive impulses and rage that are created by the brutality the child is constantly being exposed to.

Fifth step: the code of silence

Many, many different stratagems are used to put this in, starting at around the age of two years old, when a child starts becoming more verbal. Usually, after a ritual or group gathering, the child is asked about what they saw, or heard, during the meeting. Like most obedient young children, they will comply. They are immediately severely beaten, or tortured, and a new alter is created, who is told to keep or guard the memories of what was seen, on pain of their life. The new part always agrees. The child and this new part are put through a ceremony of swearing to never ever tell; and alters are created whose job it is to kill the body, if the other parts ever remember.

The child is also put through severe psychological torture to ensure that it will never be tempted to tell, including: being buried alive; near drowning; watching "traitor's deaths" involving slow painful torture, such as being burned, or skinned alive; being buried with a partially rotted corpse and being told that they will become a corpse like it if they ever tell, etc. The scenarios go on and on, invented by people with endlessly cruel imaginations, in order to ensure the secrecy of the young child. These methods have been perfected over hundreds of years of practice by the cult with its children. The reason these things are done is self evident: the cult is involved in criminal activities, as explained in the first few chapters of this book, and they want to ensure the continued silence of its children. This is one reason why the cult has survived so long, and with its continued shroud of secrecy; why more survivors are afraid/ unwilling to disclose their abuse. In order to reveal cult secrets, a child must go against some of the most tremendously horrendous psychological trauma and abuse imaginable; even as an adult, the survivor has difficulty putting these things aside, when discussing their abuse. Children and adults alike are told that if they ever tell, they will be hunted down and shot (the assassin training lets the child know that this is no idle threat); that they will be tortured slowly. The child will be exposed to setups and role plays throughout their growing up that reinforces this step.

SUGGESTIONS THAT MAY HELP

I believe in also offering some ideas on how to undo some of the above mentioned programming, as I do not believe in knowledge, only for knowledge's sake. The survivor often needs tools, in order to try and undo some of the horrendous abuse that the cult places him/her through, especially as memories of these things occur. THESE ARE JUST MEANT AS HELPFUL HINTS AND DO NOT REPLACE THE

ADVICE OF A GOOD THERAPIST.

1. Early milieu programming:
This is difficult to undo, since it hits on core abandonment issues, and rejection, for the survivor. This will often have been the survivor's very first, earliest experiences as an infant, involving its relationship with its parents and primary family members. Working on this requires the whole hearted effort of all alter systems inside, to join in nurturing the core splits who experienced severe parental rejection, and the cognitive recognition that the DAYTIME was important, too; that the adults around the infant were the unhealthy ones. The infant's often feel unlovable, overly needy, depressed; but nurturing alters inside can help comfort them, and share the reality that the infant really was loveable, no matter what the outside adults around it were like. Here, too, an outside supportive therapist, and a strong, nurturing faith system, can help tremendously in the healing process, as new messages are brought in to the abandoned, wounded parts. Sorting through what happened, grieving over the real issues of abandonment, and bringing reality to very young, deeply wounded parts will take time.

2. Early intentional fragmentation: (ages 0 to 24 months)
Usually there are cognitive parts of the survivor inside, who have never ever forgotten the abuse, and can help share the cognitive reality of the abuse with the amnesic alters. This should be done extremely slowly, since this first abuse was done quite early in life. Creating an internal nursery, with safe toys, objects, can help. Older nurturing adult alters inside can help hold and care for the wounded infants inside the nursery, while acknowledging and grieving over the abuse which occurred. It is important to believe an validate the young parts when they come forward to share. Allowing them nonverbal ways of expressing themselves can help, as these are quite young parts, who often cannot talk yet. Having older children inside who are close to the infants verbalize their wants, needs, and fears can also help, as often the youngest parts inside do not trust ANY adults, even internal ones. A strong ,caring outside therapist is also important to healing, by modeling healthy nurturing to a system that may have no concept of this, while balancing the need of the infant for outside nurture with the need for the internal system(s) to learn their own self nurture techniques. Internal helpers can reach the infants, ground them, share present reality (that the body is older, the infants are safe, etc. These helpers may be internal older children, as mentioned before). The survivor may also want to find support adults when possible, who can help with modeling healthy caring with good boundaries.

A THERAPIST OR FRIEND CANNOT RE-PARENT THE SURVIVOR. The survivor will long for this, but realistically, the survivor has one set of parents, good or bad, or sadly, even terrible. No outside person can come in and redo the complete re-parenting of another. What the therapist and support person can offer will be caring, empathy, listening, while the survivor grieves over the loss of adequate nurture. They can offer friendship or empathy with good boundaries. They cannot become the survivor's parents, or therapy will not progress. Instead, enmeshment will begin.

3.The First Five Steps of Discipline (there are twelve total; others will be addressed in later chapters)
Try to find the parts that experienced the abuse. This may mean doing system mapping (drawing pictures of what things look like inside), and going to the cognitives (intellectuals) or controllers (head honchos inside) for information. An internal helper, or recorder, may also be extremely helpful in doing this.

Remembering safely assumes that the person has a qualified therapist, and also has laid the groundwork for good intrasystem cooperation, as discussed above. Memory work should not be done until there is good communication and cooperation inside, or the person will be overwhelmed by the memories as they come out. They will be flooded and re-traumatized instead of helped, and may de-compensate. With good communication, memories can be brought out a little at a time, in manageable pieces, while cognitive alters continually help keep the survivor from going completely into the memory, and they can also help ground the more wounded parts.

The cult will put people through certain types of programming in order to achieve a specific goal: separating the intellect, or cognition, form the feelings in a person. Cognitive alters in these systems are always considered "higher" than the feeling alters; cognitive alters are taught to "pass down" their feelings to the "lower" feeling alters. While these labels are untrue, the cognitive alters will fear feeling the intense, overwhelming emotions that caused them to split further and further from the more limbic, or feeling alters internally. This will drive continued system divisiveness in the survivor. It is important that cognitive parts realize that the feeling alters are part of them; that they can practice sharing their feelings in SMALL steps without needing to be flooded, or overwhelmed.

A reminder: EXTERNAL SAFETY IS PARAMOUNT TO UNDOING INSIDE PROGRAMMING. You HAVE to be able to promise these parts external safety, and deliver on this promise, or they will understandably balk at working inside on undoing programming. Why should they try and change, only to go back and be punished again? No system will undo its own protective dissociation, if the abuse is ongoing, or it will continue to destabilize and re-dissociate over and over. This is because dismantling the dissociation would mean dismantling its own survival and protection. Stopping contact with perpetrators and having a safe therapist are the very first steps to take, before attempting to undo internal programming. A system can still work on stopping cult contact, and begin healing , while being accessed, but it will slow therapy down tremendously as the internal energy will be diverted to staying safe rather than undoing trauma. A person can heal, and most survivors are still in cult contact when they enter therapy. BUT the progress will go much more quickly once cult contact is broken. (see chapter on preventing accessing of the survivor)

Chapter Five
Colors, Metals and Jewel Programming

Color coding (To see more about color go here)
One form of programming that is quite common in the Illuminati is color programming. Why is it done? The answer is that trainers are human, and also quite lazy. Color programming is a simple way to organize systems, and allows the trainer to call up alters easily within a system. With the thousands of fragments that many multiples in the cult have, colors is a way of organizing them into an easily accessible group.

Also, young children recognize colors before they can read, so this training can occur quite early. It is begun at about age two in most children.

How it is done: The child is taken into a room with either white, beige, or colored walls. If the room is a neutral color, the lights in the room will be changed, so they color the room with the light's color. If "blue" is the color being imprinted, or put in, the trainer will call up a young child alter, either a controller or core split for a system. They will tell the child that they will learn how to become blue, and what blue means. The room will be bathed in blue light, as mentioned, or has been painted blue for use in this kind of programming. The trainer will be dressed in blue clothing, and may even have a blue mask on. Blue objects will be placed around the room. The alter inside the child is called up, drugged, hypnotized, and traumatized on the table. As they are awakening from the trauma, still in trance, they are told that blue is good, and that they are blue. That blue is important. That blue will protect them from harm. That blue people don't get hurt. This will go on for awhile.

They then ask the child if they want to be "blue", like the trainers. If the child says yes, they will continue on. If the child says no, it will be re-traumatized until it says yes. The child is often naked, and told it cannot wear clothing until it "earns" the right to wear beautiful blue clothing. Over and over the "safety of being blue" (ie freedom from harm) and danger of not having a color is emphasized. The children really wants to be blue after a while of going through this. They may be given blue candy as a reward for choosing to become the color. They may be given blue sunglasses or tinted lenses to wear. They are allowed to wear blue robes once they identify with the color chosen for them.

Once the child completely identifies with the color (or rather, the main alter or template for the system accepts this color), then they are taught in progressive stages, over many training sessions, what the color blue means. They are in set ups, or dramas with other blue children, where they act out the role of a "blue". They are drugged, hypnotized, traumatized, while the meaning of blue is ground in over and over. They are forced to act in "blue" ways. Different trainers and regions will assign different meanings to different colors. Many military systems are coded blue, or protective. The military alters all are called up periodically to reinforce blue training. If the trainer at a later date wants to access a blue system, they may call them up by color, or wear a piece of clothing or a scarf in the color they want to reach.

This becomes an unconscious trigger for this color to come forward. Color coding is one of the first methods that is inlayed over systems. An entire system may be color coded one color; or two or more colors may be coded in , with each system controller (most systems have three) being given a different color over its part of the system.

Metals programming:

Metals programming is a type of programming that many Illuminati children are given. Because it is so similar to jewels programming, I will discuss how it is done under jewels. Metals can be from bronze (lowest) to platinum (highest).

Jewels programming:

Many Illuminati children will go through either metals or jewels programming, and occasionally will go through both. Jewels is considered higher than metals, and more difficult to obtain. Which is put in and when, is dependent on the child's status, its parents status, the region it is born in, the group it is born into, and the trainers that work with it.

Basically, either metals or jewels is a form of reward based programming.

Here is how it works:
The child is shown a piece of jewelry such as a ring, or else a large example of the jewel (or metal) being put in. They are asked: "isn't this Amethyst, or Ruby, Emerald, Diamond) beautiful?" The child will be eager to look at it, touch it, and is encouraged to by a trainer with a soft kind voice. The trainer will ask the child, "wouldn't you like to be beautiful, like this jewel? (or metal jewelry)". The child is usually eager to be. Here is a sparkling gemstone, placed in their small hands (the training often begins between age two and three). Of course they want to be beautiful, sparkly, valued. The trainer will extol the beauty of the gem (or metal), will tell the child how special, valued, wanted gems are, and basically build up the idea of becoming like a jewel.

The child is then told that in order to become a jewel, they must "earn the right". This involves:
a.) passing through steps of discipline (see chapter three)
b.) passing "special tests"
c.) being rewarded for special achievement

Becoming a jewel (or precious metal) is dangled before the small child, like a carrot, as the reward for doing well in training sessions. The earning of one is linked to going through the rungs of the long, arduous training process expected of Illuminati children; having a jewel or metal involves stepping up in status and being praised. But the price is enduring hours of abuse called "training" but in reality is organized, systemic abuse to make the child do what the trainer wants them to become.

Over time, with the help of drugs, hypnosis, shock, and other trauma, as the child goes through it's training process, it will begin earning its jewels and/or metals, one by one. These will become full alters inside.

Amethyst is usually the first one earned, and is linked to keeping secrets, never telling, and passing the first step of discipline. Each step is linked to receiving either a jewel or precious metal.

Ruby will often be next, and is linked to sexual abuse and sexual alters inside. As the child is repeatedly sexually traumatized and survives, or creates sexual alters to please adults, they are "rewarded" by being allowed to become a ruby.

Emerald will often come later (ages 12 to 15). This is considered very precious, and is linked to family loyalty, witchcraft, and spiritual achievement. Emeralds will often have a black cat, or "familiar" linked to them.

Diamond is the highest gemstone, and not all children will earn it. It is considered a high achievement. and may not be earned until adulthood, after passing rigorous tasks. It will be the controlling alter in a gemstone system. A diamond has passed all twelve steps of discipline, plus passed unusual tests and will have highest family loyalty.

"Family jewels" are often passed down internally during training sessions with trainers and family members. All high Illuminati families will have jewels hidden in secret vaults (real, outside jewels) which have been passed down for generations.

The children will often be given jewelry to wear in the daytime, as a reminder or reward, once they pass their programming. A child may be given a ruby ring or garnet pin to wear; in fact, a grandparent or parent may insist the child wear it. On ritual occasions, the child will be allowed to wear jewelry from the family's vault, once they reach a certain status. They may be allowed to wear a ruby pendant or emerald bracelet during high rituals, and will be quite proud of the fact, since the cult is first, foremost and always an extremely status conscious group. The children pick up on this, and the adults will make a big fuss over the children who have earned the right to wear jewels. This gives them a huge incentive to earn them.

Color programming: it is important to have good internal communication with both internal alters and an outside therapist while working on color programming. If an individual finds that certain parts believe that they are a certain color, or if this comes up in therapy, they will want to find out if possible how they came to have this belief system. Slowly discovering how the colors were put in will help. Grieving for the vast amount of deception, the amount of abuse heaped on the child, and the very young alters who were the original templates may occur. These parts may be barely verbal, and may want to draw their experiences, or use colors in collages (with the help of older parts inside), to describe to a safe outside person what their reality has been. Validating to them that they are NOT just a color, that they are part of a whole person, may help. The survivor may see colored overlays for awhile, as they are undoing this programming, as parts inside share their memories. This is normal, although it may feel uncomfortable to see objects as yellow or green, for example. Grounding oneself, having cognitives do reality orientation, and patience will help the survivor work through this time.

Jewel programming and metals may be more complex, since the child's sense of special ness, pride and status may be bound up in these alters. Rubies, emeralds and diamonds are considered "high alters" inside and are used to leadership roles, both internally and externally. Acknowledging their importance to the system; listening to them grieve at leaving the cult, which meant giving up their status externally, and giving them new positions inside that are important can help. They can become system leaders in helping the person stay safe, once they make the decision to leave the cult, and become strong allies. But they will often be among the most resistant, and even hostile, to the idea of leaving the cult at first, since they have only known and remembered being rewarded for jobs well done, and have learned to "pass down" the traumas to "lower parts" inside. They will often honestly not believe they have been abused, and will only remember being petted or allowed to lead, or being told they were special, valued. Listening to how they feel; acknowledging that leaving means giving up things that were important to them, finding out what needs motivated them, and trying to find healthy outlets for them to get their needs met outside of cult meetings will help. Letting a jewel have leadership within, or chair internal meetings may make up for loss of external leadership when the survivor leaves the cult.

Acknowledging their importance to the survivor is also important. Recognize that these parts are EXTREMELY dissociated from their own abuse/trauma, and are in no hurry to remember. But both the survivor and a good therapist can bring reality gently to them, as they let them know that they were abused; that they are actually part of the "lower emotional parts" who were abused, and will eventually need to acknowledge this. This task takes time and good outside support to accomplish. Allow them to vent their feelings. They will often be highly cognitive at first, but feelings will come, especially grieving, then pain at having been deceived by the cult, then the anguish of realizing that the abuse they passed down to others inside was actually happening to them. They may become quite depressed at this stage, but will also lend tremendous stability and strength to the system, in staying safe and cult free, once they have reached this stage.

These are some thoughts on color, metals, and jewel programming. Other types of programming will be addressed in the next chapter.

Chapter Six
Brain Wave Programming

These include: the child's ability to dissociate; the region of the country or which country the child grows up in; the level of ability of the trainers the child has contact with; physical resources and equipment available. There is no one "recipe" that fits every person and it would be ridiculous to state that all people who go through brain wave programming have it done the same way. More and more, programmers are talking, sharing knowledge over the net, both nationally and internationally, and sharing both successes and failures. But there is no one standardized methodology for brain wave programming. It will often be influenced by the child herself, as well as the trainer's whims. Different groups may organize the systems differently, or try to achieve different effects.

All of this said, what is brain wave programming? Simply put, brain wave programming involves having a young child go into a deep trance state, where they then learn to dissociate into a certain brain wave pattern. This is a complex skill, and not all children can achieve this. The goal is for the child to reach, for example, a consistent delta state, where delta brain waves show up on the EEG, which is attached to the child's head by electrodes in the scalp. Usually, two or even three trainers will work on one child during the initial stages. One will "prep" the child, using a hypnotic drug to induce a trance state. They will have also placed the electrodes on the head, using an abbreviated version of the method used in traditional hospital setting. If delta state is being induced, only the electrodes needed to pick up delta waves will be placed, for example. This is to save time.

The prepped child will be on a "trainer's table", and will be quite relaxed. The average child is about eight years old when this is begun, since the cerebral cortex and neurological development are not advanced enough at earlier ages (It has been tried at earlier ages, quite unsuccessfully, in the past; this practice was dropped because of the neurological damage and "failure to take rate" that trainers were seeing). The non prepping trainer will then let the child know exactly what he/she expects: that they will achieve a special state, called "delta state". The trainer tells the child, while they are in trance state, that they will know when they reach it, by the readings from the electrodes.

The trainer will tell the child alter, who has been called up to be a "template", or building block for the new system, that delta is good. They will emphasize this over and over. The child will then be shocked to increase its receptivity to learning. This also arouses the child from its drugged state and it will be more alert. It will want to please the trainer. The trainer will tell the child that she/he wants it to perform certain mental exercises. It will then give it backwards counting exercises, used to help the child achieve deeper trance states. Other verbal cues to trance down may be given. When the prepping or technical trainer sees delta waveforms, he or she will signal the verbal trainer with a hand motion. The verbal, or teaching trainer will immediately reward the child, saying, "good, you are in delta now." The trainer will caress the child, tell it what a good job it is doing. If the child bounces out of delta state, the verbal trainer will immediately become harsh, and will shock the child as punishment. The child is told that it left delta (which is "good") and needs to go back in.

The induction, counting, will be repeated until delta state is seen again, when the child is repeatedly rewarded for entering, then staying in this state for longer and longer periods. The trainers are using biofeedback principles to teach the child to consistently cue into a brainwave pattern. When the template can stay in delta pattern consistently, the template will be rewarded. This will occur over several months.

The trainers will now have a template that stays always in delta state, that they can begin splitting and using as the basis of forming a new system inside. They will do this using the tools of drugs, hypnosis and trauma. The new system created will record delta waves on an EEG if done correctly. The new system will be taught what delta means. The trainers will often flash a cue, or delta (triangle) symbol on a projector overhead, and "grind in" the delta imprinting. They will wear robes with delta signs on them, and cloth the subject in clothing or robes imprinted with the delta sign. They will teach the alters under hypnosis what deltas do, how they act. They will reward them when they comply, and shock or otherwise traumatize them if they do not act like "deltas". They will be given delta jobs. They will watch high frequency films, that show delta functions. They may build in a computer like structure to hold the system, showing pictures of its organization while the subject is under deep trance, after creating a clean slate through trauma.

These are some examples of how delta programming may be induced.

Other brain wave states will be induced in similar manners. They will often be formed from templates which are extremely young internal child alters who may be splits from core splits, as the basis for the programming. Common brain wave states used are:

Alpha: this is the most easily reached brain wave state, and also includes both the youngest and most easily accessed alters in the entire system. Young children have long periods of alpha activity and must be trained to enter other brain wave states for long periods. System access programming; access codes and sexual alters will often be placed in alpha, which may also be coded red in some systems.

Beta: this is the next most easily reached state, and is often associated with aggressive impulses. Beta state will often hold cult protectors, internal warriors, and military systems. They may be color coded blue.

Gamma: this will often hold extremely cult loyal alters, and holds more emotion than the other states, except for alpha. Suicide programming will often be layered into this system, as these alters would rather die than leave their "family". Scholarship programming may be held by this system, since they easily memorize by rote. Several languages may be spoken by different alters in this system, as the Illuminati like to program in plural linguality, with up to eight languages, both modern and ancient being spoken.

Delta: this is one of the more cognitive brain wave states, and will often be highly dissociated. It may also be the "ruling" or controlling state over the other brain wave systems. Often, delta state may be configured inside as a computer, and the delta alters will have emotionless, flat alters with photographic memories. They may hold most of the cognitive memories for the other systems, especially if extensive amnesia programming has been done. Delta state may have up to three levels of training: delta 1, delta 2, and delta 3 which will also correlate to security access allowed within the cult; i.e. access to highly confidential information. Behavioral sciences programming may be held by this system. Internal programmers, self destruct, psychotic, and shatter programming as well as other punishment programming sequences to prevent outside access or internal access to the systems may be held within delta systems. It may be color coded both orange/blue/purple, and will also often be the entry way to higher systems such as jewels or internal councils, inside.

Epsilon: this is often a "hidden system" and may hold CIA programming and high level governmental programming . Assassin programming may be held in this system, or in the beta system, depending on the trainer. Covert operations, courier operations, learning to tail a subject, or "drop a tag", disguises, getting out of difficult situations, may be handled by this system, which sees itself as chameleon-like. It may be color coded brown.

Phi/Theta/Omega programming: this represents negative spiritual programming. These are the "dark" ritual alters, who participate in blood rituals, sacrifices, and ceremonies. Internal witches, warlocks, seers, psychics, readers, and occult practitioners will be placed in this system, which has highly developed right brain and deep trance abilities. They will often be color coded black.

This is an overview of some of the more common brain wave systems. It is often placed in over a matter of years, from ages 8 to 21 being the primary ones, with occasional reinforcement of the programming from time to time.

Suggestions:

Brain wave programming is a very complex form of programming which creates automatic amnesia and communication barriers between the different brain wave states. This will also be reinforced by shock and punishment to prevent its "degradation", or undoing. Internal system controllers and programmers will also work to reinforce the programming, especially at night, when the person is asleep (physically).

All brain wave systems will have system controllers, usually set up in a group of three (the Illuminati love triads, as being the "mystical" and most stable number. They believe that systems built upon triads are extremely strong, unbreakable, and will often program in threes: three back ups, three system controllers, etc.) With the help of a good therapist, the survivor needs to get to know the internal system controllers and communicators. They are there, they have to be, because the trainers placed them there to communicate with and be accountable to them externally, and will often have complete knowledge of their own system. They will also be quite flat, and dissociated from the knowledge of their own pain or the abuse that created them. This is a distancing mechanism, and the person's survival depended on the ability of their controller to do this at one time. They will often be quite hostile, and very unwilling to look at their own abuse; they will become indignant at the idea, and claim that they are cognitive, and "above" being abused (another lie they were told by their abusers).

Time, patience, and finding out what their needs are; listening to them vent their frustration; pointing out reality (ie, the controllers, and all parts are related to each other; are part of the same person; and ALL were abused even though they were able to dissociate from their pain), and trying to help them meet their needs for recognition, acceptance, and approval will begin to allow them to question their previous loyalty. These systems are often driven by fear: fear of punishment; fear of remembering (they were often the most tortured systems in the survivor, and were promised amnesia in return for continued cooperation). Their fears are real, and should be listened to and respected, as shatter programming and flood programming are real threats to the survivor, and can cause functionality to go down.

Flood programming is a sequence put in place to punish a system if its internal programming is allowed to degrade or access to an unauthorized person, either internally or externally, is allowed. It will involve the fragments who hold highly traumatic memories, both emotional and physical, being pushed to the front where the person is "flooded" with wave after wave of memories. If this is triggered, and it frequently is if the survivor is in therapy, the first priority should be slowing the memories down. This may mean trying to reason with internal controllers or deltas who are allowing the flooding; they need to know that if the front, or previously amnesic alters down, or are re-shattered due to traumatization, it will weaken all the systems.

Bargain with them. Prayer will help in this situation. Physical safety, including inpatient therapy, may be needed if flooding or shatter programming are activated. Suicide programming is often layered in with both types, and external physical safety will be paramount for the survivor, with lots of outside accountability as they undo these intense programming sequences. Frequent reality orientation; explaining new, better jobs can help. Undoing brain wave programming should ideally only be done with lots of safe external support, which may include extra therapy sessions; hospitalization if programming that could cause loss of functionality or suicide are triggered; and should be geared towards increasing internal communication and cooperation. Alters jobs can be changed, from internal programmers to internal Deprogrammers; internal shatterers or punishers to internal protectors; internal reporters who report back to the cult can instead be asked to report internally on what the body is doing, and to keep it safe.

These are examples of possible changes. Make friends with system controllers, as they can become strong helpers and will work with the therapist to keep things safe for the survivor.

Chapter Seven

Military Programming

I want to devote an entire chapter to military programming, and how it is done. Why? As noted in chapter three, the Illuminati are emphasizing the importance of military training more and more, as part of their plan for eventual takeover. All children in the current generation are undergoing some form of military training as part of this plan.

Military training is begun quite young. It is often started by three years of age with simple exercises. The children are taken by their parents to a training area, which may be a large inside auditorium, or a remote area outside where training maneuvers are done. Tents are set up, with command centers for the different commanding officers and military trainers.

The children are taught to march in time, keeping a straight line. They are punished by being kicked, shocked with a cattle prod, or beaten with a baton if they move out of place. They will be dressed in small uniforms in imitation of the adults.

The adults will have ranks, badges and insignia indicating their level of achievement in the cult hierarchy and military. Badges and medals are given out to indicate the person's level of training and tests passed. Commanding officers are often brutal and will teach even the youngest children with harsh measures.

The children will be forced to march long distances, which increase as they get older, in any weather. They are forced to learn to cross obstacles. They will be given "fake" guns, with blanks, when they are young. These guns are perfect replicas of real guns, but fire blanks. The children are taught to load and fire all manner of firearms, both real and fake, under close adult supervision. They will spend hours learning to aim, sight, and fire these guns at targets. At first the targets are bulls eyes, but as the children get older the targets will be similar to police cut outs of humans. The children are taught to aim for the head or the heart. Later, they will graduate to realistic manikins. This is conditioning them to kill a human being.

They will be shown violent films of warfare, much more explicit and graphic than normal movies in group classes. Killing techniques will be shown in slow motion. The motif "kill or be killed" will be ground in over and over. The trainer will ask the children what mistakes the people who were killed made. Being killed is considered weakness; being a killer is considered strength.

The children will be forced, by age seven or eight, to crawl on their bellies with simulated blanks firing overhead. They are not told these are blanks and they are extremely painful if the child is hit in the back or buttocks. They quickly learn to keep down under fire. Battle conditions will be simulated as the children go through years of "boot camp" training.

They will be rewarded with merit badges for doing well, such as completing an obstacle course, or staying cool under fire. In other words, the cult creates a microcosm of real military training for their children and youth. Nazi concentration camps will be simulated, with guards and prisoners. The "guards" are usually older children or youth who have done well. The "prisoners" are younger children or those being punished for not performing well in maneuvers. There is intense pressure to want the guard role and not be a prisoner, since prisoners are locked up, beaten, kicked, and laughed at.

Hunting and tracking games where the prisoners are given a half hour lead are frequent. These may also involve the use of specially trained dogs taught to knock the quarry down but not kill them. Older children are taught to handle the dogs, and use them. Youth are taught to help the adults train the dogs.

Teens may be rewarded by becoming "youth leaders" who are allowed to plan the weeks activities. The military training will closely follow the principles of Nazi military and S.S. training. The trainers often speak in German to the children, who must learn the language. All C.O.s and high ranking adults speak in German during these exercises. They may also speak in French, since linguistic ability is encouraged in the Illuminati.

Exercises for older youth will include games where groups compete against each other, and the older teen leads, with the help of an adult advisor. Groups that win are rewarded, groups that lose are punished. The youth are taught to leave behind the weak, or slow members. Unfit members are shot or killed, and the youth leader learns to do these tasks. They are taught to bring their unit through simulated battles with other units, and cool, cognitive logic under these conditions is rewarded. The goal is to creative cognitive leaders inside the military systems, who are dissociated from emotions under the stress of battle conditions.

The youth and their followers are taught and trained in all manner of crowd control. They will see special films, that address all possible responses to a military takeover, and the crowds' response. These situations are then acted out during exercises, and the older Youth leaders and their units are expected to deal with the different responses. The "crowd" is coached by their trainers to act in different ways.

The ultimate goal of all of this is to create an organized army of children, youth, and adults, who will know exactly what to do during the coming takeover of the world. The training that I described is going on not only in the U.S., but in every country in the world. Top training centers are located in Germany, Belgium, France, and Russia. Military trainers are often sent to these countries, to learn new techniques, then sent back to their home countries.

What to do:
It is important to realize that military alters inside are extremely hierarchical. They will often be ranked inside, with lower "foot soldiers" accountable to inside alters with increasing rank. Usually, the higher the military rank, the higher the alter will be inside the system. A soldier with no rank may not have much knowledge about, or pull, inside the system. Its only job is to blindly obey others, after years of conditioning to do this.

Ranking officers inside will often be modeled after outside perpetrators, officers, or trainers. An internal General will often have much more knowledge than lower ranks, and should be befriended, as they can help with therapy.

It will take time, effort, and patience for both the survivor and the therapist to get to know these military officers. They are often abrupt, arrogant, and extremely hostile to therapy. They are often strongly loyal to the cult and proud of their badges, awards, and achievements that were earned through years of traumatization and hard work. They will often be reluctant to give this up, for the perceived "loss" engendered by leaving the cult.

They will also have strong programming surrounding them, including "honor/dishonor" suicidal programming (the brave, honorable soldier will die rather than betray his group, etc.). It is important to deal with the suicidal programming and intense limbic conditioning that many of these alters have been subjected to, while at the same time reasoning with the higher ranking members.

They will have photographic memory and recall of all aspects of military history. Giving them safe, appropriate, physical outlets in the daytime can let them vent off steam. These are very physically conditioned alters, who enjoy running, walking, target practice with guns and knives. Letting them go hiking (with a safe support person), practice outdoor skills, can be helpful.

Acknowledging their importance to the survivor, and the trauma they underwent, respecting their loyalty, bravery, and appealing to their sense of honor to help the system stay safe (these alters often have a highly developed, although misguided, sense of honor) can help. Internal commendation for bravery, even an internal awards ceremony (they are used to this) for the parts that have decided to leave the cult, and protect the body, can be performed. They are used to praise and recognition for work well done, and need this motivation. They were used to getting this from the cult, but the survivor can turn the locus of control internally, instead of externally, to break bonds with the cult.

Military protectors can change their job to keeping the body safe, away from perpetrators. They can be a system's greatest asset, as they are great at "kicking butt", and are not easily frightened. They may be able to tell outside perpetrators to leave the survivor alone, and protect the survivor from outside accessing.

Allowing them to vent their feelings in therapy, in journaling, in pictures, and in collages can also help. Although higher ranking officers internally are often very dissociated from their feelings, they can begin to empathize with the others below them, who took their pain, and the brunt of the brutal, punitive experiences. They have to be willing to acknowledge that they were abused at some point, that they were deceived and used. Finding the youngest alters they were split from will help with this process. With time and good internal communication, as well as patience from both the therapist and survivor, military alters can become one of the strongest assets and allies in staying cult free.

Chapter Eight
CIA , Governmental, and Scholarship programming.

Some systems will have internal CIA programming. Some of the methods mentioned in earlier chapters, such as brain wave programming and color coding were developed in part through funding by the CIA in the 1950's and 1960's. Military intelligence officers working in Langley, Virginia, used these government funds to conduct research on human subjects. They reported what they were learning to trainers throughout the U.S. and Europe.

CIA programming can include having alters in a system trained in different techniques of both finding a target, and studying the target without being detected. The end result of tagging the victim can include having a sexual assignation with the target, or may involve having people inside trained to assassinate a target.

These are complex programming sequences, and are put in over years of training, with periodic reinforcement. Alters may be trained to become hyper aware of their environment, and able to overhear conversations that are whispered. Internal recorders are taught to download these conversations, as well as other info. Photographic recall is emphasized, as the person will be hypnotized or put into a delta state for "downloading" information to the trainer or CIA operative.

The survivor with CIA programming will have been taught extensively how to "drop a tag" (detect anyone following them, and ditch them). This training will be begun in early childhood and built upon as the child grows older. They will often be taken into a neutral colored training room. They may be drugged, or hypnotized, usually a combination of both.

They will be shown training films of how a CIA operative works. They will be told that they are "special", "chosen", "one in a thousand" who is the only one who can do this special work. They are told that they get to be a secret agent for the CIA. The young child, having no idea who the CIA is, focuses on the fact that they have been chosen because they are special, needed, and will be eager to please. The child will be taken to a dinner party, or a drama set up by the trainer. There will be a group, anywhere from ten to sixteen people at the "party". Afterwards, the child will be questioned by the trainer extensively. Who was sitting where? What were they wearing? What color were their eyes? Their hair? Who gave the speech? What did they say? The child will be praised for correct answers, but punished, shocked if unable to recall details. This is to reinforce natural photographic memory, and assist the child with recording details. The next few times, the child's abilities will improve, as it wants to avoid punishment.

In the next level of training the child will be asked to observe, and figure out: who is the most important person in the room? Why? They will be taught body movements, and mannerisms, that give nonverbal clues away. The child may be taught to approach important adults, or an assigned target, first in role play, later in real life, and engage them in innocuous conversation while looking for information they have been clued to get. They may be taught to be innocently seductive, and will be dressed for the part. They will frequently be taught to lure the target into having intercourse with them.

An older youth, or adult, will also be taught not only how to lure a target into bed, but later how to kill them, if they are an assassination target, while they are asleep or relaxing after sexual relations. They will be taught to go through the target's belongings for any information needed by the trainer or cult leader. Often, before an assignment for an assassination, the cult member will be indoctrinated with reasons why killing the victim is a service to humanity. They will be lied to and told that they are the head of a porno ring, a pedophile, or a brutal villain. This will engage the assassin's natural anger towards the person, and will motivate them, while helping to overcome their natural moral reluctance and guilt at killing a human being.

They will be taught how to disguise themselves, with change of clothing, sex (masquerading as the opposite sex), makeup, contact lenses, and get out of the situation safely. They will be taught how to overcome interrogation techniques with extensive training and hypnosis, in case they are ever caught. They will be taught to self suicide with a pill or dagger, if they are ever apprehended, in most cases.

Suggestions:

CIA programming will involve the use of sophisticated technology to reinforce its effectiveness, and can be difficult to break. It may involve the person being traumatized in isolation tanks (this will also be done with brain wave programming). It may involve sensory deprivation, sensory overload, isolation, sleep deprivation. It may involve hours of listening to repetitive tapes on headphones. The subject is shocked, or severely punished, if they try to remove the headphones. They will be hypnotized, tortured; subjected to different drug combinations; they will be exposed to harmonic tones, often in one ear or the other. They will be exposed to flashing strobe lights, which may induce a seizure, and alters will be programmed to cause seizures if the subject tries to break programming. They will be shown high speed films with different tracks, one for the left eye and one for the right eye, to increase brain splitting or dichotomous thinking.

The survivor and therapist need to work slowly to undo the effects of this trauma. The person will need to come to terms, slowly, and carefully, with how the programming was done. They may need to learn their own access codes (this will also be true of brain wave, and other sophisticated programming techniques). They will need to communicate with the traumatized alters and fragments inside, let them know they were used. They will need to help the young alters, who were split to create the system, and often underwent the worst traumas. Grieving for the abuse, the trauma, the methodical calculation used and scientific methods used to put in this programming, will take time. Venting feelings, including rage, safely will be important. The survivor may be afraid of strong feelings and will fear especially anger and rage, since they will associate those feelings with having to kill, hurt, or assassinate others. Allowing the feelings to be expressed slowly and carefully, being aware that homicidal and suicidal feelings will probably come up, is important.

If there is a concern about the ability to control acting out, the client may need to go inpatient in a safe facility that understands mind control and cult programming. They will fear being labeled "psychotic" since the programmers told them that they would be called this, and locked up forever. The WORST thing a therapist or hospital can do in a situation like this, is play into those fears, or label the person psychotic. Constant grounding in reality, using grounding exercises; slow, careful venting of rage and betrayal feelings; reinforcing over and over that the survivor can remember, and NOT go psychotic, or die, BELIEVING and VALIDATING the survivor, are all important. The survivor may have unstable behavior at points, but this is not psychosis, but rather, the natural reaction to extreme trauma. The survivor needs to realize this, and that they can overcome its effects, with time and good therapy. They will need hope, and a good support system.

Governmental Programming:

Governmental programming will involve the person being trained to take leadership positions or administrative positions in the government. They may be trained to network with others in governments, both local , national, and international. The Illuminati's stated goal is to infiltrate, and eventually cause the downfall of, all major governments in the world. Government operatives are taught to do this by: infiltrating local political parties running for leadership both locally and nationally working for top leaders, as administrators, financial advisors funding governmental races and backing the person sympathetic to the Illuminati, or putting their person in to win, creating political chaos and unrest with operatives trained in dissension. The people selected for governmental programming are usually highly intelligent with native charm, or charisma. They are also skilled people manipulators. These abilities may be enhanced through programming, encouraging the person to project a "persona" that will draw people to them.

They are also taught finances extensively. This programming is done by: hypnotizing the person, whether child, youth, or adult (it is usually initiated in late childhood in suitable candidates), and inducing deep trance with drugs. The person is shocked, then told the trainer's and cult agenda for the person. They are told that they are very special to the Illuminati, and will be one of the people who helps change world history. They are told they will be rewarded with wealth, popularity and power for achieving the cult's agenda. They are told, and shown, what the punishment for disobedience is. They are shown training films about government, how it works, national and international affairs. They will meet with special teachers, who coach them on the inner political workings of the group they want to infiltrate, including the power structure and strengths and weaknesses of key players.

They will learn any languages necessary for the position. They will go to University, or get any training and education needed for credibility. They will receive special scholarships to finance this, if needed. They are given opportunities to practice their skills at infiltration, information gathering, people manipulation, and politics in set ups, and later in real situations. If they need to learn to control the media, they will learn methods to do this. They will have extensive back up and coaching during their entire career.

Suggestions:

Governmental programming is quite complex, since it ties in with the person's natural abilities. They may not be able to separate themselves easily from the role that they perform and often will only feel that they are acceptable when they do their job. They may find it difficult to believe that their career, friendships, marriage and contacts have been secretly guided by the cult for most of their life. These parts may feel offended, betrayed, or furious when this realization hits. They will also find it difficult not to use the manipulation skills that come so naturally, both on their therapist, and themselves, to dull the pain that the truth may bring. The person and the alters that have undergone this type of programming have a lot to lose if they give up their roles and persona, and need to count the cost of getting out and acknowledge the difficulty of doing so. They will need to grieve over being used, and for the false interpretation of reality they have believed all their lives. Listening to other parts inside and acknowledging the reality of the cult abuse will be important steps in breaking free. Success in a new career in the person's daily life will also help restore a broken self image.

Scholarship training:

The Illuminati revere scholarship, especially oral tradition. Children with good memories and native intelligence may undergo specific training in the area of scholarship. This will include learning under trauma, with praise for accomplishment. It will also mean punishment or being shocked for poor performance. Some of the major areas of scholarship include, but are not limited to:

Oral tradition: history of the Illuminati, especially the child's particular branch, memorizing genealogies. Learning and becoming fluent in multiple languages, both modern and ancient, including but not limited to: English, French, German, Russian, Spanish, Arabic, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Egyptian hieroglyphics; ancient Babylonian, ancient Chaldean and cuneiform writings. Some revered ancient texts are written in very ancient languages, and certain ceremonies may include rituals which utilize them. Learning ancient and modern history and becoming adept at planning role plays and dramatizations. Learning to teach others the above skills. The child who becomes adept at scholarship will also be expected to become a skilled teacher, and in turn, pass their knowledge down to others. They will practice teaching in both classroom and individual sessions.

Suggestions:

Scholarship programming will involve alters who are intensely loyal to the cult, since they believe they are related to a long, unbroken line of people since earliest history. They will often be immersed in cult philosophy, having read and memorized numerous esoteric volumes related to it. Appealing to logic, intellect, having an open mind and discussing the pros and cons of leaving the cult with them will often be received the best. They despise open conflict, and prefer addressing issues intellectually. They will be skilled debaters, and quite verbal. Asking them to read books that address becoming free from the cult, and asking them to sit in and listen to accounts from traumatized alters both in their system and others inside, will often help them make the decision to switch loyalties. Although they will have been immersed in false ideologies and doctrines, they are frequently willing to attempt to be intellectually honest. They will read and debate both sides of an issue, and may become some of the first to make the decision to leave the cult once convinced that it is abusive.

Chapter Nine:
Programming Linked to Stories, Movies, Cartoons, or role Play Dramatization

In this chapter, I want to address a special type of programming that is universal with the Illuminati. It is programming that is linked to a story, movie, cartoon, or role play dramatization.

For countless centuries, Illuminati trainers and leaders have used role playing to reinforce as well as program children, and it is a favorite mode of teaching up to this day. A typical drama set up, or role play, will involve a "visit through time." The child is told, while drugged or hypnotized, that it and the other children with it (usually, a small group will go through this programming together) are going to " time travel". The trainer or teacher is seen as immensely powerful by the children, as he or she magically transports them through time. They enter another room, where people are dressed up in period costumes from whichever time period in history the teacher wants the children to see. Everything is historically accurate and well researched. An example: if the children are to visit ancient Rome, they will be taken to a room in the Senate, where the characters are dressed in togas. They will be speaking to each other in ancient Latin and debating issues. Caesar, or another king will enter the senate. Roman customs for a scenario such as this one will be adhered to throughout the role play.

One purpose of this role playing, is that the children are told they are getting a "behind the scenes " peek at history. Illuminati agenda will be put forward, and the children will "see" that famous figures in history were actually Illuminists. This will reinforce their "special ness" and the historicity of the group. It will also reinforce language training, since the scenes may occur in medieval England, or the French court of Louis XIV, etc. The scenes will also contain a moral that builds on programming the children have been undergoing. Maybe they will watch a "traitor" being "guillotined" in the French court. Or an unworthy senator, who tries to betray his king, will be stabbed. The child may be given a role in the play, such as taking a secret message to the king or queen, to reinforce courier programming. The child really believes that they have stepped back into history, and are part of the process of helping create history.

With modern times, programming has become more sophisticated with the advent of technology. Before television or movies, programming was often "scripted" around famous fairy tales, or stories, read aloud by one trainer while the second trainer worked with the child. A good see-song voice is necessary in a "reader". The child would be read the story, and under hypnosis and trauma, told that they are one of the characters in the story. They are told the "real" meaning of the story, its "hidden meaning" and told that whenever they hear the story, to remember what it really means.

Now days, movies and videos are frequently used in programming. Favorite scripts include: Walt Disney movies (Disney was an Illuminist), especially Fantasia, Sleeping Beauty, The Little Mermaid, Cinderella, Beauty and the Beast. The Wizard of Oz, both books and movie, has been used. Any movie that incorporates Illuministic themes can be used. E.T. and Star Wars have been used in more recent years.

How Script programming is done:
The trainer will play the movie for the child. The child is told that they will be "asked about " the movie, this cues the child to use photographic recall about what they are viewing. The trainer may show the child an edited shorter version of the movie, with only parts of the whole, or may show the child a short scene from the movie.

After watching the movie, or scene, the child is drugged to relax it, then asked what it remembers. The child will be shocked if it cannot recall items the trainer deems important, and will be forced to watch the scenes repetitively.

When the child has total recall of the segments, the trainer will tell the child that it is one of the characters. The child may be heavily traumatized first, and a blank slate personality created inside to be the desired character. The first thing the blank slate sees is a recording of the movie, or scene. This is its "first memory". The trainer will then link the scene with Illuminati ideology. They will teach the child the "hidden meaning" in the movie, and praise the child for being one of the few "enlightened ones" who can understand what it truly means. The script programming will often be linked to other programming the child is undergoing. Military programming may be linked to Star Wars. Total recall programming may be linked to Data in Star Trek. Computer programming may be linked to Hal in 2001 A Space Odyssey; internal labyrinth programming may be linked to the movie "Labyrinth". The possibilities are quite varied and will depend on both the child and the trainer as to which direction script programming will go. Music from the show, or scene, will be used as a trigger to access the programming inside or bring forward these personalities.

Suggestions:

Scripted programming will often involve a great deal of traumatization, to create the "blank slate" alters desired. The programming will be ground in with repetition, electroshock, torture, drugging and hypnosis. The alters inside who have gone through this programming will often be highly disconnected from external reality and may believe that they are part of a "script". They may be Dorothy seeking the Emerald City (or the achievement of Illuminati rule on earth). They may be a computer or the character Data. Reality orientation will be very important. Allow these parts to experience safe outside reality, and test for themselves if they are really part of a man or woman. Looking in a mirror may help, when they express readiness. Having cognitive helpers who can share daily life memories with them, may help to ground them. At first they will be very surprised, even indignant or hostile, at suggestions that they are not the character. They will think the therapist is a trainer, or part of the script, since this is the only reality that they have known. Re-grounding, patiently, over and over to present reality, increased communication with others inside, and eventually grieving over the intense amount of trickery and deception that they experienced, will be necessary. With time and patience these parts will be willing to give up their old "scripted" roles and become part of the person's present reality.

Chapter Ten
The Sixth step of Discipline: Betrayal; Twinning, Internal walls, Structures, Geometry

This chapter will address the sixth step of discipline in the Illuminati:

Betrayal programming.

Betrayal programming will begin in infancy, but will be formalized at around ages six to seven, and continue on into adulthood. The sixth step can be summarized as : "betrayal is the greatest good." The Illuminists teach this to their children as a very important spiritual principle. They idealize betrayal as being the true state of man. The quick witted, the adept, learns this quickly and learns to manipulate it.

The child will learn this principle through set up after set up. The child will be placed in situations where an adult who is kindly, and in set up after set up "rescues" the child, gains its trust. The child looks up to the adult as a "savior" after the adult intervenes and protects the child several times. After months or even a year of bonding, one day in a set up the child will turn to the adult for help. The adult will back away, mocking the child, and begin abusing it. This sets in place the programming: adults will always betray a child and other adults.

Another set up will involve twinning, which deserves special mention here. The Illuminati will often create twin bonds in their children. The ideal is to have a set of real twins, but of course this is not always possible. So, the child is allowed to play with, and become close to, another child in the cult from earliest childhood. At some point early on, the child will be told that the other child is actually their "twin", and that they were separated at birth. They are told that this is a great secret and not to tell anyone, on pain of punishment. The child, who is often lonely and isolated, is overjoyed. It has a twin, someone who has a special bond to them by birth.

The children do everything together. They are taught together, do military training together. They tell each other secrets. They are also frequently friends in the daytime as well. They are taught to cross access each other just as real siblings would be.

But at some point, they will be forced to hurt each other. If one "twin" is considered expendable, the ultimate set up will be one in which one twin is forced to die while the other watches. One twin may gather secrets from the other twin, be forced to disclose them to a trainer or cult leader, then may be forced to kill the other. One twin may be forced to hit, or hurt the other. If they refuse, the other twin will be brutalized by the trainer, and the refusing twin told that the child was hurt because of their refusal to comply. Many setups will involve one twin being forced to betray the other, turning on the other child after intense programming. This betrayal set up will devastate both children, and they will learn the true lesson: trust no one. Betray, or be betrayed.

The children will also have adult role models on every hand, since the cult is a very political, hierarchical, back stabbing society. Adults are constantly betraying each other, stepping over each other to move up. The children will watch one adult being praised, advanced, because they betrayed others below them, or set them up to fail. The children will learn quickly to mimic the adults around them, and both adults and children can become quite cynical as to human nature. They will have seen it at its worst, whether in training sessions, the brutality of a C.O. in military, or the gossip and back stabbing that occurs before and after rituals. They also incorporate the message internally: play the game, or be run over. Even the youngest children learn to manipulate others adeptly, at a very young age, while the adults laugh at how quickly they are learning adult ways. People manipulation is considered a fine art in the cult, and those who do it best, as in any group, often win out.

Suggestions:
Betrayal programming may have totally shattered the survivor's trust in outside people. It will take a therapist a long, long time to gain the survivor's trust. These are people who were taught over and over again that talking, sharing one's secrets, would be punished harshly. Inside littles will be very cautious at first, not trusting that the therapist is not just another trainer who will one day shout "aha!" and betray them if they begin to trust. This trust building takes time and patience, and must be earned through session after session where the therapist shows trustworthiness and non abusiveness. Survivors will test therapists over and over again, to see if they really are what they say they are. This is a normal part of the therapy process. Survivors may even try to back away from therapy, or outside support, as true caring support will "wig them out", i.e. conflict incredibly with their world view and experiences prior to leaving the cult.

Both survivor and therapist need to realize that some amount of distrust is healthy, based on what the survivor has experienced, and may be life saving, helping to protect them from outside accessing. Honor this need and be patient while the survivor tests over and over. The survivor can try to reason with inside alters who may have been betrayed to the point of legitimate paranoia. They may ask them to watch, and see what the therapist, and/or support person is like. To take their time, check them out. To be aware that what they went through may magnify normal feelings of caution. Helping orient these parts to outside reality, and especially positive experiences of trusting a little, and not being harmed, will help make great strides in undoing this. The survivor may feel confusion and internal conflict, as they experience a world where trust is possible. They may pull away, or the reverse, become highly dependent on the therapist and share too quickly due to a longing for safe intimacy that has never been met. Setting healthy boundaries while acknowledging needs will help the survivor through this stage.

Another type of programming involves the deliberate creation of internal structures within the cult member.

Internal structures: temples, eyes, mirrors, carousels etc.

The Illuminati trainers will try to create internal structures within the person's personality systems. Why? They believe this creates better stability. It also gives the alters and fragments a place to "hang on to" inside, and creates a convenient way to call them up. If a fragment is indexed inside to an internal helix, for example, the trainer knows how to locate them more easily.

Internal structures will vary greatly depending on the trainer, the group, the region of the U.S. or Europe and the goals for the individual. Common internal structures will include, but are not limited to:

- Temples: these are often consecrated to principle Illuminati deities, and spiritual alters will congregate here. This may represent actual temples, Masonic or private, that the subject may have visited.

- Temple of Moloch will be created out of black stone with a fire burning internally.

- All seeing eye of Horus: one of the most common structures in an Illuminati system; universal. Horus is a deity revered by the Illuminati, and the all seeing eye internally represents the fact that the cult can always see what the individual is doing. It will also represent being given to Horus in a high ceremony. The eye may be closed, or open, depending on the system's status at the time. This eye will also be linked to demonic watching of the person's activities at all time.

- Pyramids: the Illuminati revere ancient Egyptian symbology, especially "mystery religion" and Temple of Set teachings. Pyramids will be placed internally both for stability (a triangle, and/or pyramid represents strength and stability), and as a calling place for the demonic. Pyramids and triangles, and the number three, represent calling up the demonic in Illuminist philosophy.

- Sun: represents Ra, the sun god

- Geometric figures: configurations of circles, triangles, pentagons, etc. Geometric patterns are considered sacred, and are based in ancient philosophy. There may be hundreds overlapping in a training grid for complex systems, which will house fragments in each one.

- Training grids: these may be simplistic, such as cubes with patterns on them, rows of boxes, or more complex such as helixes, double helixes, infinity loops. Each trainer will have favorites classified as simple, medium and complex, depending on the child and its ability to recall and memorize.

- Columns: Greek Doric, ionic columns. Often hold "time travel" programming, with a portal between two columns.

- Computers: complex, highly dissociated systems with alters and fragments held within a computer system.

- Robots: may be seen in older systems

- Crystals: gems, balls, multifaceted. Used in spiritual systems to enhance occult powers. Alters and fragments may congregate on facets of a large ball.

- Mirrors: used internally to reinforce other programming sequences, internal twinning, and distortion of reality programming. May create shadow systems of functional systems. May also lock in demonic programming.

- Carousels: used in some programming sequences to confuse alters inside. Often linked to spin, confusion programming internally. May be used to punish internal alters; they will be spun on the carousel if they tell.

- Deck of cards: this can include cards from a deck, or complex configurations made of hundreds of card inside. Dominoes programming is similar. All touch each other and if person tries to dismantle programming, the deck will "fall".

- Black boxes: represent self destruct and shatter programming sealed off into a black box to protect system. Should not be opened without careful preparation and good therapy.

- Mines, booby traps: see above

- Spider webs: represent linked programming, with a spider (internal programmer) who continuously reweaves the web and reinforces internal programming and punishments. The web also communicates with other systems. Can also represent demonic linkages internally, woven in.

- Internal training rooms: used as punishments for internal alters. Will represent external training rooms person has been in.

- Internal walls: these will often represent very large internal amnesia barriers. The walls may be very thick, impermeable or semi permeable. A typical use for a wall will be to maintain high levels of amnesia between "front" or daily living, amnesic alters, and "back" or cult active alters that contain more of the person's life history. The back may be able to selectively see over and cross past the wall, but the front will be completely unaware that there is a wall, or what lays behind it.

- Seals: usually in a group of six or seven, represent demonic sealing, and may cover end times, shatter programming, as well as role within cult in new hierarchy.

These are some common programming structures. Again, there are many, many other types of internal structures used and the number and type are only limited by the trainer's and survivor's creative abilities. The way that these structures are placed within the person are fairly similar. Under drugs, hypnosis and electroshock, the person is traumatized into a deep trance state. In the deep trance they will be told to open their eyes and look at: either a projected image of the structure, a 3D model of it, or a holographic image using a virtual reality headset. The image will be ground in, using shock and bringing the image closer and closer to the person's visual field. It may be rotated, if graphics are available, or a 3D is used. They may be told that they are entering inside it, if it is a temple or pyramid, under deep hypnosis, that they (the alter being programmed) will now "live inside" the structure/box/card, etc. This will also be used to reinforce amnesia and isolation programming internally, since the structure will be used to reinforce walls between the alter/ fragment and other alters and fragments internally.

Suggestions:
If the survivor finds structures inside, it will help for them first of all to try and realize WHY they are there. What purpose do they serve? To reinforce amnesia? Isolation? spiritual programming? punishment? To hold dangerous programming sequences? This is important, since some structures such as internal walls or barriers may have been created not only by the cult, but reinforced by the survivor as well, as a means of internal protection. The survivor may not want to dismantle internal structures too quickly without knowing their purpose and what they contain. Both the survivor and the therapist will need to go slowly. Learning how the structures were put in and which alters are linked to the structure, will be a first step. Long, slow and careful preparation, with lots of system cooperation, will be needed to look at some structures. This may only come after years of extensive therapy. Each survivor will progress at their own pace. If a wall is present, taking it down slowly, one brick at a time, or allowing part of it to become semi permeable, may be first steps in healing. Training rooms can have the equipment turned off and dismantled; it can be turned into a safe room, redecorated and refitted with toys and safe objects. Computers can slowly begin to realize that they are human, and gradually allowed to take on human characteristics.

Survivors can use their creativity to reclaim themselves, with the support of their therapists, and undo what was done.

Chapter Eleven
Suicidal Programming

I have decided to write an entire chapter about suicidal programming, since it is often the most dangerous programming that the survivor will face during their healing process. ALL ILLUMINATI SURVIVORS WILL HAVE SUICIDAL PROGRAMMING PROTECTING THEIR SYSTEMS. I emphasized this to also reiterate the need for good therapy and a strong support system for the survivor.

The Illuminati know and realize that with time, individuals in their group may start to question what they are doing. Or they may become disenchanted with their role. They may even desire to leave the group or try to dismantle their own programming.

The trainers are well aware of this possibility and to prevent this, will always program in suicidality. The suicidality, or suicidal programming, may surround one or more systems internally. It may be layered into more than one system.

From earliest childhood, survivors have been conditioned to believe that they would rather die than leave their "family" (the Illuminati group). This is the core, or basis of suicidal programming. It will be closely linked to loyalty to one's family as well as the group (remember, this is a generational group and leaving it may mean giving up contact with one's parents, spouse, siblings, aunts, uncles, cousins and children, as well as close friends). These people will all try to contact the survivor, and try to draw them back into the cult, asking "don't you love us anymore?", or even becoming accusatory and hostile if the survivor does not respond the way they wish. The survivor will be told that they are "crazy". Or delusional. That their family loves them and would never be part of a cult. The family members will all still be amnesic, unless something happens to trigger their own memories.

One of the most frequent suicidal programming sequences placed internally will be "come back or die " programming. A family member may activate it by telling the survivor that they are missed and their family wants to see them. If the survivor fails to return, the programming will start running. It can only be deactivated by a code word from the person's trainer or cult contact person. This ensures that they will recontact. If the survivor tries to break this programming, they will need assistance, both internal and external, for safety.

Hospitalization may be needed in a safe facility that understands DID and programming, as well as suicidality, as the alters inside will begin fighting if the person tries to break the programming. They have been programmed to commit suicide, or be shattered internally, or at the very least, severely punished, and are afraid of the repercussions of not obeying. The survivor will need to get to know these internal alters, and reassure them that they no longer need to do their jobs.

Chronometric suicidal programming is another type placed within. This does not need contact with family members to activate. In fact, it is activated automatically after a certain amount of time WITHOUT cult contact. Controller alters and/or punishing alters will have been programmed that if a certain period of time goes without contact with the trainer, they are to commit suicide. They will be told that the only way to prevent this is recontact with the trainer, who knows a command code to halt the program. The time interval may be anywhere from three months to nine months, each system is different. Call back programming may have this type of programming as a back up, to ensure that it is followed through on.

Systems layered programming is a particularly complex form of suicide programming where several systems (up to six at a time), are programmed to fire off suicide programming simultaneously. This always needs hospitalization for the survivor's safety.

Honor/dishonor programming is common in military systems. In this, the military parts are told that an "honorable and courageous" soldier will take his life, rather than reveal secrets or leave his unit.

"No tell" programming will often be reinforced by suicidal programming.

Access denied programming, which prevents unauthorized access both externally and internally, will often be reinforced by either or both suicidal/homicidal programming.

Almost all suicidal programming is put in place to either ensure continued obedience to the cult's agenda; to ensure regular recontact; or prevent the individual or an outside person from accessing the person's system without authorization (i.e. the correct access codes, which the trainers are careful to use at the beginning of each session). It will frequently block therapy, as the survivor will be terrified, and rightly so, of dying if they reveal their internal world, or disclose their history.

Suggestions:
First, both the survivor and the therapist need to find out what suicide programming is present (it's a safe bet it's there, no need to ask IF it is present). Internal communication, and finding out which alters or fragments hold suicide programming will be important. Physical safety, whether with a safe outside person, or inpatient hospitalization, while working on suicide programming is extremely important, as this programming may either drive the survivor to self destructive behavior, or back to the cult. Dealing with suicide programming assumes that the survivor and therapist have initiated good system communication internally. This is extremely important, since the survivor will need cooperation inside with dismantling suicidality.

Letting alters inside know that they no longer have to do their job, that they can change, may help. Reality orientation, letting them know that if they kill the body, that they will die, may also help (many times, these parts have been deceived into believing that they themselves will not die, if they do their jobs. This means they need to hear the truth). Having controller alters, high alters with pull inside the system, agree to help the therapist dismantle the programming will help. But be aware that SOME INTERNAL SUICIDE SEQUENCES WILL BE PUT IN THAT EVEN CONTROLLERS CANNOT DISMANTLE. Creating a safety committee inside whose main job is to keep the body safe and ask for help if suicidal programming begins to kick in, BEFORE ACTING OUT OCCURS, will also help tremendously.

As the survivor develops trust with their therapist and realizes the value of life, and that life can be much better than it has ever been before, they will become more willing to reach out and ask for help if they become suicidal. The survivor may also find that they encounter core despair. This despair may have been used by the cult to run suicidal programming, but it is not programming itself. A very young core split may have taken many of the feelings of despair, hopelessness, failure to thrive and desire to die, that the child felt growing up in a horribly abusive atmosphere. This is not programming but true feelings, and it will be important to differentiate this from programming. If core despair comes up, the alter containing this may also report having been trained to NOT SUICIDE, or give up. The trainers will do this, if despair begins overwhelming the subject at an early age, to prevent the child's suicide.

The survivor's cognitives, helpers, nurturers, will all need to be gathered together to help this part of the core heal. There will be intense, and rightful, grieving and anguish for the immense pain that the young child suffered. Hopelessness will come out. It can help if alters with happier memories can try and share their memories with this very young part. External support and caring can also make a big difference. Healing the immense pain held by this core split will take a long period of time and should not be hurried. Antidepressants can help, as the depression may be shared through all systems. Messages of hope, new and positive experiences can all help the survivor work through this type of programming, as well as journaling, poetry, artwork and collaging the feelings. Time, patience, support, the ability to vent feelings in a safe manner and physical safety when needed, will all help immensely as the survivor works through these issues.

Chapter Twelve
Preventing Reaccessing of the Survivor

This is by far one of the most important chapters I have written in this book. Why?

Deprogramming cannot be consistently successful if the person is still in contact with the abusers. Survivors will take one step forward, then will find themselves knocked down internally. All the hard work in therapy will be undone or set back. They and their therapist will find that they have trouble finding internal alters. Whole systems may shut down. A child presenting system may come out. Confusers and scramblers will take over therapy sessions and blockers will block therapy.

No one chapter can ever be totally comprehensive in how to prevent reaccessing. What I will share are some of the more common ways that the cult and trainers will try to reaccess individuals, and give some techniques on avoiding this.

The cult has a vested interest in keeping its members. After all, it has spent generations telling its members that if they leave they will die, be killed, or go psychotic. It makes them quite unhappy to see someone who is quite alive and very clearly not psychotic leave. It also makes their more restive members question the truth of what they have been told if they see someone get out. Having a member leave may break the hold of some programming in other members. Trainers especially hate to see anyone leave, and grind their teeth over this problem at night. People leaving the cult is considered a training failure and the trainers may be punished severely.

So, the cult has come up with certain ways to keep their members with them, willingly or unwillingly. These include, but are not limited to:

E.T. phone home (phone programming) : the individual will have personalities whose sole job is to call and report to the trainer or cult leader. These are often young child alters who are eager to please, starved for attention and nurture, and who are heavily rewarded for calling back in. Any survivor who attempts to leave the cult must deal with the urge to phone home. To phone their abusers. To phone their friends who are in the group. To phone their parents, siblings, cousins, or aunts. This urge may become overwhelming at times and worst of all, the survivor may be totally amnesic to the fact that the people they are calling are cult members who are urging them, in code, to come back. Common phrases used include: your 'family' loves you, misses you, needs you. So and so is ill and needs to see you. You are so special to us. You are so valuable. You need to come see us. Why are you so distant? Why haven't we heard from you lately?

The list goes on and on. Sweet, kind phrases with double meanings, placed in the person during training sessions. Trainers are not stupid and know that if cult members said "come to the ritual meeting at midnight next week", the survivor would run the other way, and be validated as well that they are not making things up. So, they ingrain code messages behind innocuous phrases such as described above. These, and other messages, are meant to trigger recontact programming.

In recontact programming, (ALL ILLUMINATI MEMBERS HAVE RECONTACT PROGRAMMING, IT IS NEVER LEFT TO CHANCE) the person has parts whose only job is to have contact with their trainer or cult leader, or accountability person (person one step above them in the cult). These parts are heavily programmed under drugs, hypnosis, shock, torture, to have recontact. The individual will feel restless, shaky, weepy, afraid if they try to break this programming. It will often be linked or joined in to suicidal programming (see previous chapter for more on suicidal programming). They may experience PTSD symptomology, or even flood programming, and internal self punishment sequences, as they fight this programming internally.

Siblings are often cross trained to access each other with special codes. Remember when.... may initiate this. I love you, or, your family loves you, can also be used. Phrases will be individual, depending on the person's family members and background.

Certain clothing or jewelry worn can be used to draw a cult loyal system, such as a color coded system, or jewel system , to the front. The person must physically resemble the person the individual was "keyed into" during the programming sequence, to prevent inadvertent popping out of alters by anyone wearing a ruby pin, for example. This kind of cueing will be based on sight recognition of a person, plus the clothing color or jewelry being worn a certain way.

Phone calls from concerned family members, friends, and cult members will flood the survivor's phone lines and answering machine, especially during the initial getting out phase.

Hang up calls, three or six in a row, or calls where a series of tones are heard, may be used as cues to recall the individual and fire off internal programming.

Birthday, holiday or we miss you cards, or letters, may be sent with trigger codes imbedded in them.

Flowers with a certain number of flowers, or color may be sent. Daisies may fire off daisy programming internally.

The possibilities are almost endless, depending on the trainers, the group the person was with, and the people they are most bonded to in the cult. Special training sessions will be given, with code words and cues built into the system's programming.

If all else fails, hostility will start. "You don't love us" will be heard, even when the survivor has stated repeatedly that they care. Boundaries drawn with cult members will be misinterpreted as lack of concern, or withdrawal. Accusations, guilt, and anger as well as manipulation will be used as hooks to make the survivor feel guilty for withdrawing from the cult.

Isolation programming may activate, as the cult support system is withdrawn in the survivor's life, and they try the difficult task of developing healthy, appropriate relationships outside of the cult. Often, the therapist will be the survivor's lifeline and sole support at first. The individual may fall into codependent relationships quickly, or relationships with other survivors to fill the void in their life. At worst, desperate for caring and feeling isolated, they will make friends with the first kind person they meet. This person could be a cult set up, sent to initiate a friendship quickly. Survivors should be wary of "instant friendships" or instant bonding with others. Most good relationships take time and effort.

Suggestions:
One of the most difficult tasks, but most important safety wise, will be for a totally amnesic presenting system to realize who their abusers really are. It will seem unbelievable, when back parts come up in therapy, and disclose that beloved, or even barely tolerated family members are in the cult. Believing these parts and listening to them will be crucial to safety. Protectors will be important to the survivor's safety, especially if they are willing to give up cult allegiance and help keep the person safe. Outside accountability with safe persons is extremely important. The problem is that generational Illuminati survivors have often been surrounded all their lives by a network of other cult members. Unknown to them, their closest friends and family members are part of the group. Amnesia poses the greatest danger to the survivor in the beginning stages, as they will trust people before they remember that they are unsafe.

A survivor may remember the father taking them to rituals, and believe that their mother or grandparent is safe. Only later in therapy will they remember that mother or granny was actually their trainer, since the most painful memories tend to come later. The survivor may only remember ritual abuse in early childhood, and think they were let go at a certain age. This is extremely rare, since the group has put in years of effort into training them. Almost never will they just "let someone go" in generational families. But they may be given false or screen memories, especially if they are in therapy, to confuse the survivor and the therapist.

The client will need to listen to and believe internal parts who have more information than they do, and take appropriate steps to be safe. This will probably mean cutting off contact with perpetrators at this point. Again, outside accountability is paramount. Safe houses, a women's shelter or a safe church family may be alternatives. One of the worst things the survivor can do is isolate, or go out walking late at night alone, or go camping in the woods by themselves. Abduction will often occur in these scenarios, when the survivor is alone and vulnerable. Safe roommates can help keep the survivor safe.

Locking up the phone in the trunk of the car may help if phone programming is intense. This gives the survivor the chance to wake up or stop phone calls, if an alter has to get up, find the car keys, turn on the light, go outside, and open a car trunk, bring the phone inside and hook it up again before making a phone call.

Building a support system through safe support groups, a good therapist, church, or work can also help. Whenever possible and practical, moving away from the town or state where the survivor was active in the cult can help. Why? Remember the survivor's whole support network was the cult in their old town. The trainers and/or family members have invested time and effort into the survivor and have a big stake in their coming back. If the survivor moves far enough away, a cult group in the new city or state will not know them as well, and will not have a lengthy history with them. This can help decrease the chance of reaccessing by the cult, in conjunction with good therapy and a safe support network.

The survivor will have to rebuild their support system anyway, so why not do it as far as possible away from people they have known who might hurt them? It can be intensely triggering to the survivor to see their old trainer walking down the street towards them, and inside alters may destabilize or feel unsafe. This is one case where distance is good.

One caution though: even if the survivor moves, they will need to work intensely on blocking internal recontact programming at the same time, or they may be quickly reaccessed. Trainers will often send the person's system codes and grids over the internet to cult groups in the new city, and will try to send someone who physically resembles the trainer or a family member to initiate contact with the survivor.

Internal communication and letting inside alters know that they can change their jobs will help. Reward internal reporters for changing allegiance and committing to keep the survivor safe. The cult used to reward them for doing their job; now the survivor can reward them for changing jobs. Develop new interests, work or hobbies that can help the survivor meet new, safe people. The survivor may want to practice friendship skills in support groups, as long as they are run by reputable, safe therapists.

Be aware that holiday dates are often important dates for reaccessing. Calendars are available that show important holidays for SRA groups. Birthdays are also dates when the individual is expected to return and there may be programming surrounding this.

Callback programming (where the person is given a specific date or holiday when they are to return to the cult, or be punished) may need to be broken as well. Allowing the alters who went through the programming to share their memories, acknowledging their needs, and trying to meet those needs in healthy ways will bring healing.

The survivor will need to go through a period of grieving for loss of contact with family members and friends in the cult. No matter how abusive, how disliked, it can be very difficult to cut off with perpetrators, especially if they were the only people close to the survivor. The survivor needs to acknowledge the difficulty of creating a new, healthy, cultless support group. The survivor needs to recognize that learning new skills and developing healthy friendships will take time.

One issue often brought up by survivors is: how much do I tell others about my past? This is an individual decision that the survivor and therapist need to look at together. In general though, caution in sharing is best, since sharing too much about the survivor's past may draw the wrong people to them. These people may be dysfunctional, or possible cult members. It is usually best to base new, non cult friendships on healthy aspects of the person at first and very gradually share small bits of information as the friendship progresses, and sharing seems appropriate. With time and opportunities, the survivor will learn the importance of appropriate boundaries and will want healthier relationships in their life.

Chapter Thirteen
Shell programming, Internal Councils, Human Experimentation, Function Codes

Parts of this chapter could be extremely triggering, please read with caution and only with a therapist if a survivor.

Shell programming is a form of programming used to create a “shell” on the outside, that other alters inside speak through. This is a designed to hide the person’s multiplicity from the outside world, and works extremely well with highly fragmented systems. It also takes a person with the ability to dissociate to a great degree.

How it is done: with shell programming, the trainer will often take a clear plastic or glass mask, and put it in front of the subject. They will be extremely traumatized, shocked, drugged, and told that they (the alter or alters in front) are the “mask” that they see. Their job will be to be a shell, or voice, to cover for the others behind. These parts will be so traumatized that they literally see themselves as only a shell, with no real substance or body.

Others inside will then be directed to come next to the “shell” alters, and use their voice to cover their own. This allows greater fragmentation of the person, while being able to hide it from outside view, since the internal alters will learn to present through the shell. Shell alters always see themselves as “clear”, and will have no color if color coding is present in other systems.

Suggestions

It is important to realize that what the system is actually doing is co-presenting, although not co-consciously. For a shell program to work, the shell alters have been taught to allow co-presentation with the other alters in the systems. Other alters in the back may not always be aware that this is what is happening, and the front shell especially will not know that they are being “gone through” for co-presentation.

Recognizing the trauma that occurred, and finding out where the shell fragments came from, will help. Allowing both the shell alters and the other alters to recognize that this is how they have been presenting, and why, will be an important step. Back alters may then begin presenting without going through the shell, and the person may look “more multiple” than they ever have for a period, with accents or young voices coming through. What is actually happening is that the back is presenting without masking who they are through the shell. Meanwhile, the shell alters may decide to coalesce, for greater strength, and may decide to change jobs. Each system will decide what is best for them.

Internal Councils:

Survivors of Illuminati programming will always have some type of hierarchy inside. This is because the cult itself is very hierarchical, and puts this hierarchy inside the person. What better way to inspire loyalty to leadership than to put the leadership inside the person’s head? Trainers are also very hierarchy conscious themselves. They know that a system without hierarchy and head honchos inside to direct things will be a system in chaos. They will not leave the person’s system leaderless inside.

Many trainers will put themselves in the person, over the internal programmers or trainers. This is because they are egotistical, but also because it uses a well known phenomenon of human nature: PEOPLE TEND TO INTERNALIZE THEIR ABUSERS. The survivor may be horrified to find a representative of one of their worst perpetrators inside, but this was a survival mechanism. A tenet of human behavior is that often people will punish someone less who mimics them. A brutal nazi will be less likely to punish another brutal nazi, but will look down upon and punish a weak, crying person. So, the survivor will internalize the rough nazi inside, to avoid being hurt. The survivor may mimic accents, mannerisms, even claim the perpetrator’s life history as their own.

The ultimate form of internalization comes with internalizing hierarchical councils. The person, under pain, hypnosis, and drugs, will be taught to incorporate a highly dissociated group inside to lead the others. These will often be created from core splits, because the trainers want them to be extremely strong, stable alters in the system.

Triads of three elders may be seen

Platinum's may have a head council of three

Jewels will have a triad, made up of ruby, emerald, diamond in many systems, to rule over the others

And, of course, an internal “leadership council”, “System Above”, “Ascended Masters”, “supreme council”, regional council, world council, etc. may be found. The councils found will vary with each survivor.

These internal groups will correlate roughly to the outside group. Often the child or youth at age twelve will be presented to these groups in a formal coming of age ceremony. This ceremony is considered quite an honor, and will involve the child being traumatized and accepting the leadership of the council for the rest of their life. Undying loyalty is promised. There may be other occasions the person will be forced to come before the councils throughout their lifespan, either for judgment, to pass tests, for punishment, or elevation. These councils will be seen as holding power of life or death, and the child or youth will do anything to gain their favor. The child will internalize them. The trainer will help with the internalization, using photographs or holographic images of the people to “burn them in”. Each member of the group will be given different leadership tasks.

It is not uncommon for the survivor to incorporate a parent, both parents, or grandparents, into their internal leadership hierarchy in a generational survivor.

High priests and priestesses may sit on ruling councils inside.

Suggestions:

Internal leadership councils will often be some of the most resistant to, and hostile towards therapy, especially in the early stages. They will verbally banter with, or refuse to speak to, the therapist, as being “beneath their notice.” They are mimicking the haughty, hierarchical attitudes they have been exposed to all their lives.

They also have the most to lose, if the survivor leaves the cult, and may fight this decision tooth and nail. They will often be the alters with an “attitude”.

Both the survivor and therapist need to recognize that these parts had powerful needs that were met in the cult setting. To ignore this and argue with them will only entrench their belief that therapists are stupid and unknowing people. Acknowledge their internal role while gently pointing out reality. Try to enlist their aid in helping the survivor strengthen. Discuss honestly the pros and cons of leaving the cult. These are highly intellectual alters, and they need to express their concerns and doubts. Setting good boundaries and not allowing verbal abuse of the therapist is important. These alters are used to "pushing people around" verbally, and have been rewarded for it prior to therapy. Now, they need to learn new coping skills and behaviors, and the process may take time. Allow them to vent their anger, displeasure, and fears about the decision to leave the cult. Offer them new jobs inside the person of leadership over safety committees, or even decision making committees.

Sometimes, a system that has broken free from the cult, and has no external hierarchy that they are accountable to will go through a short period of chaos as word gets out: we're free, and don't have to do what the cult tells us to do any more! Hundreds of internal arguments may break out as to: what do we do for a living? where do we live? what do we eat? what hobbies will we have? Everybody wants to come out, see the daytime, and live this new, free life. But the freedom may cause imbalance with all of the switching going on inside. Enlisting the aid of the internal hierarchy, and creating a limited democracy, with ground rules, may help during this time. Don't dismantle the internal hierarchy overnight, or the systems will be rudderless. Enlist their aid in helping direct which direction the survivor goes. Things will settle down after a period, as the systems learn to listen to each other, vote on ideas, and begin going together in the same direction.

Human Experimentation

This is one of the most grievous things that still occurs in the Illuminati today. The Illuminati were famed for deciding years ago to "go scientific" and incorporate scientific experimentation into their training principles. This is one area where they broke with other, more traditional groups, who still followed "spiritual principles". The Illuminati decided to use scientific data, especially in the psychiatric and behavioral sciences, to drive their training practices. This became known openly during W.W.II, when the world heard about the experimentation on Jews and other groups in the concentration camps, but human experimentation had been quietly going on for years before underground.

It also did not stop at the end of the war. German trainers and scientists were scattered around the world, and hidden, where they continued teaching others the principles they had learned, and continued with ongoing experimentation.

Some of this experimentation occurred with government funding through groups such as the CIA and NSA. The Illuminati had people infiltrated throughout these groups, who used the principles discovered and shared them with their own trainers.

Experimentation is going on, even to this day. It is done secretly. Its purpose is to help improve and create more sophisticated training techniques. To prevent "programming failures", or "pfs" as they are called in the cult.

Many, many survivors, if not all, will have been told that they are only an experiment. This may or may not be true. Trainers like to tell their subjects that they are experiments, even if they aren't, for several reasons:

1. It creates immense fear and helplessness in the subject (the thought is, if this is an experiment, I will have to work really hard to survive this)

2. It devalues the person immensely. They will feel that they have no real value as a human being, that all they are is an experiment. Someone who feels devalued doesn't care, and will be willing to do things they wouldn't if they felt some value, some humanization.

3. It gives the trainer added power, as they are the one who can begin or stop the "experiment". Almost always, when the person is TOLD they are an experiment, it isn't really true. When trainers and cult members really do experiments, the subjects are never told, because it could bias results. The fear could interfere with drug effects, and skew the results. Most recent cult experimentation has been in the area of: drug effects: using different drugs, both alone and in new combinations and dosages, to induce trance states and open the person to training. Drugs are looked for which will shorten the time interval needed to induce trance state, which are quickly metabolized, and leave no detectable residues the next day.

Behavioral science: watching and recording data on different environmental parameters on human behavior. Modifying the environment.

Praise and punishment as motivators.

Isolation techniques: recording data both physiological and psychological from different isolation methods. Removing, adding, combining different methods of sensory isolation, and the effect of each.

Effectiveness of virtual reality in implanting programming.

Effectiveness of new disks created to put programming in. Cult graphics and computer experts will work to create better and more effective VR disks, which are tested on cult subjects for their effectiveness. The cult wants more and more standardization, and less room for human error and weakness, in its training techniques, which is why it is going more and more to high tech equipment and videos. Attempts to break programming, cause program failure; recording what is effective, what isn't and develop new sequences to prevent pf. Subjects under hypnosis are ordered to try and break certain internal programming sequences. The ways they go about this, and what seems effective, are shared with the trainers, who then create new programs to prevent degradation of programming from occurring.

Harmonic/light, sensory deprivation and over stimulation and the effects neurologically and physically. New combinations of sensory input are always being tested to see which achieve the most lasting results, and can be done rapidly.

The cult is always trying to find new, better, faster methods to break down subjects, put programming in,

and prevent the programming from failing.

This has been the emphasis in most research it has done. The results of this research is shared worldwide, both by internet, phone calls, and international trainer conferences, where trainers worldwide share the results of what they are finding. New techniques are incorporated by other groups which are eager to find out what is being discovered.

Suggestions:

If you have experimental programming, realize that the alters who were used in it are heavily traumatized. They also will feel devalued, less than human, and this was reinforced heavily by the trainers who worked with them. They probably weren't used in initial experiments, as described above, but may have been used in second level experimentation.

I will explain what those terms mean.

Top trainers and leaders will initiate an experiment with a new drug. They will learn to triturate dosages, and record all observable facts on hundreds of subjects. After enough data is gotten, they will then clear it for use by trainers in local groups. It will then still be considered experimental, but will be second level, instead of first level experimentation. At this point, all trainers in local groups will be told to record and report any adverse reactions to the drug, any usual dosages needed, etc. This data is collected in databanks (yes, the cult is now in the computer age), inside of encrypted files, which will then be sent to a central base in Langley, Virginia.

Alters used in experiments, or told that they were experiments, need to realize they are valuable. They will need to realize they went through intense programming, and be allowed to vent and discuss their experiences. The fear related to believing they were an experiment needs to be vented appropriately. They will be angry at the dehumanization, intentionality, and coldness of what they went through, and quite rightly so. They may rail against the effects in their life now of the experiments and procedures they went through, and need to grieve over loss of body image; loss of trust in people; the sense of betrayal and helplessness that they felt during the procedures. They may want to journal, or draw pictures of their experiences.

A warm, empathetic therapist, who listens, and believes, and does not discount what they went through, is invaluable at this point. Allowing internal cognitives and helpers ground parts who went through bizarre sensory experiences, and creating "grounding committees" inside will also help. Extra support may be needed while dealing with experiences and feelings of this intensity.

Function Codes:

Trainers will place within the subject's systems a special way to organize the fragments that are related to the job they were trained to do. These are called Function Codes, and there are three main types:

Command Codes: these are irreversible commands, put in at the limbic level of conditioning. The first code always put in is the “halt “ command, which stops the person in their tracks, and is the first code any new trainer learns. This will stop the subject from assassinating their trainer, if they have MK ULTRA or other assassin training in place.

Other command codes will include: system destruct codes (suicide); shatter codes; erasure codes; and antisuicide codes.

Access Codes: these are specialized codes, often coded into short messages, or numerical codes, that allow access into the person’s system. A trainer will always begin a session by repeating the person’s personal complete access code, which will allow authorized entry into the system without setting off booby traps and internal protectors. These codes may also depend and be set up on sight recognition and voice recognition of the person giving the codes. In other words, the system will respond to the codes only if a person who appears to be an authorized person, such as the person’s trainer, gives them. This is to prevent unauthorized access or using of the person by others outside of the person’s local cult group.

Function codes: these are the “job codes” or work codes within the system.

Often, several will be coded to link together to perform a task. These are usually a letter, such as a Greek alphabet letter, combined with a numeric sequence that corresponds to their place on the internal grid or landscape.

Suggestions:

If the survivor has function codes, or the other codes internally, it will help if the different system controllers can share these with the person. The person can then get to know the fragments, hear their history, and help them begin coalescing with other parts internally. It may help to find the template these codes were fragmented from, and help the template realize how they were traumatized to create these fragments.

About deprogrammers:

Often people who call themselves deprogrammers will attempt to find these codes and help the person. This is an individual decision of each survivor and therapist. There may be excellent deprogrammers, but I have always felt extreme caution, and never used one myself for two reasons:

1. I would never ever give away the locus of control away to an outside person again. It would remind me to much of my own abuse, and I believe the survivor should be self empowered in therapy as much as possible.

2. There are no quick cures, or miracles, or short cuts in the process of undoing the extensive amount of abuse that has occurred with Illuminati programming. Even the best deprogrammers will admit that after they are done, the person will usually have an idea of what was put in them, but must finish with years of therapy dealing with how they FEEL about the programming that was done. Illuminati programming takes YEARS to put in, with extensive, methodical abuse, and a realistic therapist will realize that it will take years of patience, support, and hard work by both therapist and survivor to undo a lifetime of conditioning and pain. This is not to say that deprogrammers don't help people; good, reputable, safe ones have been reported to be of great help. But the person can also undertake the process themselves of undoing their own programming, and often the survivor is the best "internal deprogrammer" of all. They know their inside people and what motivates them, better than anyone else.

Chapter Fourteen

Spiritual Programming

Note: this chapter includes discussion of both cult and Christian spirituality; do not read if these themes are triggering

Any discussion of Illuminati programming would be lacking if it did not address spiritual programming. Most of the previous chapters have dealt with scientifically based, organized, structured programming.

But the Illuminati are first and foremost not scientists, but spiritual. The very foundation of the group is based on the occult. And they go to great lengths to grind in these occult beliefs in their people's systems.

The amount of spiritual programming in the person's systems will vary from person to person, and depends on the individual group, their religious heritage, the leader's beliefs, and the trainers in the group.

All children go to rituals, where they are dedicated from before birth as well as at intervals throughout their life. In these rituals, demonic entities are invoked, to coerce the person into servant hood, loyalty, and secrecy; as well as reinforce the programming being done.

Trainers will invoke demonic layering during programming sessions. This is done after acute trauma. The person is asked if they want more pain, and they will always say "no". The trainer then offers them a way out: if they will accept a "protector" or "protectors" they won't be hurt any more. The trainers will want this, knowing that with these "protectors'" they can shorten the training sessions. The protectors, or guardians, will reinforce the programming internally, without outside help. This concept will seem controversial to people who do not believe in spiritual realities, but I am only describing what the Illuminists believe, and their trainers practice.

Spiritual programming will also include: being forced to memorize rituals, THE BOOK OF ILLUMINATION, and other books which contain cult beliefs. The person will be saturated from infancy on, in classes and training sessions, with cult beliefs. They will go to rituals where the adults participate in spiritual worship, wearing robes, and giving obeisance to the group's particular guardian deity. Moloch, Ashtaroth, Baal, Enokkim are demons who are commonly worshipped. The child may see a sacrifice, either real or a set-up, to these deities; animal sacrifices are common. The child will be forced to participate in the sacrifices, and will have to go through blood baptism.

They will be forced to take the heart, or other internal organs, out of an animal that has been sacrificed, and eat them. The adults, and leaders of the group, will place their hands on the child's head, while it is drugged, and invoke demonic entities.

One ritual which is actually programming is the "resuscitation ritual". In this ritual, the child may be heavily drugged, and shocked or tortured, to the point that his heart may stop. The head priest will then "resuscitate " the child, using drugs, CPR, and incantations. When the child comes back, and is awake, he or she will be told that they were "brought back to life" by the demonic entity that the particular group worships, and that now the child owes it their life. They are told that if they ever tell, or try to get the demon to leave, they will return to the lifeless state they were in prior to resuscitation.

Spiritual "healings" due to the demonic are also common. Injuries caused by torture, or programming sessions, or even military exercises, will be healed almost instantaneously during invocations.

Jewel programming will often have demons loyal to the generational family spirits layered in. These are called the "family jewels". The demons "guard them" and help protect the programming surrounding them.

In a sense, every ritual that a young child is part of, is an intense programming experience, as the child observes the adults around them, and imitates their behavior. The child will be severely punished if it falls asleep, and will be told that demons will kill it if it goes to sleep again during a ritual.

They are taught to be completely silent, no matter what they witness during the rituals. The child will witness things that seem utterly unbelievable, including faces appearing transformed by the demonic, channeling, other voices coming out of a leader's mouth, reading of members, telling the future. Group guidance will often be given through channeling of a strong spirit or principality; members who can channel powerful spirits and survive are respected, and their guidance will be looked for.

Some groups will use scriptures negatively or program the child to hate Christian symbols and theology. Other groups will encourage the amnesic front to embrace a Christian lifestyle, while forcing the back alters to renounce and blaspheme the choices the front has made, to separate the two alter groups even further. The cult alters will be told that since they renounced Christianity, they have committed the “unpardonable sin” and can never be forgiven. They will be shown scriptures that supposedly back this up.

In moments of despair, during intense torture or isolation, a person will often cry out to God for help. The trainers or other cult members will often mock the person, telling the person that God has forgotten them, or ask “where is God now? He must hate you.....”

Any negative experience the person undergoes, will be used to reinforce the concept that they have been abandoned by God. The cult will gleefully point out the contradictions between what the person experiences, and what Christianity teaches should happen to them.

They may distort scriptures, or use false scriptures. They may distort Christian hymns, or use them in programming. A favorite hymn is “may the circle be unbroken”, since it can have two meanings.

Suggestions:

Spiritual programming can be some of the most damaging programming within a person’s systems, since it attempts to cut them off from the source of real healing. It is an intentional distortion of truth, with events calculated to teach and reinforce wrong concepts of God. Many survivors are unable to hear Christian terms, or are intensely triggered by any religious discussion.

The survivor and therapist need to realize that these negative reactions are the result of years of false teaching, pain, punishment, distortion and set-ups. It is important not to judge the parts of the person that are negative towards spirituality, or come out, proclaiming the power and benefits of cult spirituality. The survivor’s front may be horrified to hear or learn about parts that have these feelings, especially if they are a strong Christian. These parts inside are sharing the only reality they have ever known, and need time and patience to ground, and experience reality outside of the cult setting.

Demonic oppression may need to be dealt with, and even deliverance, to bring relief to a system that is being terrorized by the demonic.

Each therapist and survivor will need to come to terms with their own spiritual beliefs. I personally believe that a therapist needs to consider the possibility of the demonic, since this is what the survivor has been exposed to all their life. The cult certainly does believe it is real, and anyone who has been involved in a cult setting will have had experiences that are in-explainable by normal rational scientific principles.

The survivor needs hope, and healing. A positive spirituality based on love, gentleness, forgiveness, that is the opposite of the coercing, punitive, negative spirituality the survivor has known, will help immensely in the healing process. A spiritual belief system that offers hope, healing, grace, mercy, and affirmation will often give the survivor the support they need to go on during the often difficult process of healing.

Chapter Fifteen

Core splits, Denial programming, the last Five Steps of Discipline

Virtual Reality Programming

Virtual reality programming (VR) is a form of programming that has become more and more widely used in the past few decades. It involves the person being placed in VR headsets and suit while a cult created VR disk is used to run the program. It can be used to create 3D and holographic images, and especially is useful in scripted programming, and target practice sequences for assassin training. Under hypnosis , the person will really believe they are in the scene.

Virtually any scenario can be recreated. Images to be “burned in” will be shown on the VR disk, and reinforced repetitively during the programming sequence. Some trainers feel it removes the element of “human error” in training, and use it quite extensively. VR programming, like any other programming, means going inside and finding out the distortions that were placed in the parts that went through the programming, allowing them to see how they were deceived, and dealing with the trauma associated with the programming.

Denial Programming:

Denial programming begins with the first experiences the infant goes through in life. The child has been horrendously wounded and traumatized, yet the next morning, the adults around him are acting normally, as if nothing had happened. They are modeling a lifestyle of denial for the infant and young child. This is reinforced later by the child being told:

“It was just a bad dream” (oh, how the child wants to believe this lie. It makes the pain less to think it didn’t really happen)

“It’s just your imagination; it isn’t really happening” (which is again embraced as an escape from the horror). Denial will also be fed by the adults around the child telling them that they will never be believed if they disclose. There will be set ups to teach the child what they see and hear, and to teach the child to trust outside adults to tell them their reality.

A typical set up will go like this:

The adult will hold an object such as an orange in their hand, and ask the young child, about age two or three, “what is this?”. The child will quickly respond, “oh, an orange!” The child will be shocked, and told, “no, it’s an apple.” The child will be confused, because what they are looking at is obviously an orange. It is the color orange, smells like an orange, looks like an orange. The question will be repeated. The child may answer again,” an orange,” and will be shocked again. Finally, the child, unsure and not wanting to be punished, will say, “an apple,” and be praised.

The purpose of this exercise is to teach the child to not trust their own reality, and look to outside adults or leaders to tell them what reality really is.

That is the basis of denial: the person learns to not trust their own reality, because of punishment and fear when they have spoken the truth.

Alters will be created as the child grows, whose purpose is to deny the cult abuse. If any leakage or breakthrough occurs, the denial alter’s job is to create a plausible explanation: it was a nightmare, a book the person read, a movie they saw, etc. These alters will read and quote literature that refutes SRA. THESE ALTERS OFTEN BELIEVE THAT THEY ARE SAVING THE LIFE OF THE SURVIVOR. They have been told that if the survivor remembers, and believes the abuse, the survivor will be killed, or the denial alter will be severely punished or shattered for not doing their job. These parts have a vested interest in their job: they believe their very existence and they body’s survival, depend upon them.

Suggestions:

Arguing with a denial alter will not work, since they are not motivated by logic, but fear. A better approach is to ask them what they fear if the person remembers. This will open up the deception and lies that were ground in. They may be protecting the survivor from suicidal alters behind them, who are programmed to kick in if denial is broken through. Allowing them to vent their concerns, and enlisting the aid of helpers or cognitives who do not have suicidal or denial programming will help. Showing them reality in a gentle way, allowing them to “listen in” on others who share will go a long way.

Some denial is the natural consequence of self protection from the horrors of abuse; not all denial is programming. But if denial is constantly blocking therapy, and causing it to come to a complete standstill; if the person becomes highly suicidal every time denial is set aside briefly, then the possibility needs to be considered. Safety, inner cooperation, and patience will go a long way in decreasing denial. As denial backs down, you can expect an immense amount of grieving as the truth is realized. Denial protected the survivor from the horrendous pain of the truth, and should be let go of extremely slowly and cautiously, with plenty of support during the grieving stage.

Core splits:

Core splits are intentional traumatic splits created from the core personality.

The core may be literally “splintered” by overwhelming psychological and physical/spiritual trauma. The trauma needed to create a core split must be very early and psychologically devastating. Fetal splits may occur, but they are rarely a core split; instead, the core creates an alter, but remains.

Core splits are done between the ages of 18 months and three years. Usually at least one parent or main caretaker is involved in the trauma, because this creates the psychological devastation necessary to split the core. Physical trauma alone rarely causes core splits. The torture is intense and prolonged, until the child collapses. It may be shocking, stretching, being hung in a high place, or a combination of several techniques. Being placed in “shock boxes”, or near drowning are also used.

The techniques that create core splits are also dangerous, since they can also cause autism if the child cannot endure the programming. When I was in the cult, I fought to stop core splitting because occasionally children were lost or the foundational personality was too weakened.

The core may split into two, three, or up to eight splits internally. Each split will be a piece of the “core child”. The original core will not resurface after splitting. These splits are used by cult trainers to be used as templates to create systems within the child. A core split, or a split from one, will be a strong alter, and can be re-split many times in the programming process, to create a multifaceted and diverse system within.

Suggestions:

Core splits represent intense foundational trauma. They will be the basis for later systems, which may be completely dissociated from the split as time goes on. Work on core splits should go very slowly, and only late in the therapy process when there is immense intrasystem cooperation. The survivor will need every internal resource to deal with these traumas, and plenty of outside therapeutic support.

It may mean hospitalization unless the survivor can keep the trauma from emerging too quickly, and the therapist and survivor can go extremely slow.

Other, less dissociated systems and fragments should be integrated.

Acknowledging the abuse cognitively will be the first step in dealing with core trauma. Letting more dissociated parts grieve about “hearing about” what happened may come next. Allowing feelings near the core to come close, a little at a time, with helpers and internal nurturers offering support will help.

These feelings should be titrated, and looked at a little at a time. Splits may be different ages, and may need to express themselves in different ways.

There may be “dream programming”, a “fantasy world”, or other flight from reality surrounding the core splits, that protects them from contact with the outside world, which is perceived as brutal and cold. Parts may be completely disconnected from outside reality in an effort to buffer pain.

Slow, patient nurturing and reality orientation will help these tremendously traumatized parts begin to join outer reality. Some parts will always have been aware of what happened, but won't care to join the outside world.

Patience, allowing them to vent, will help most.

Steps of Discipline:

Step seven: Not caring

This step will take the child further into a perpetrator role. The child will be forced to hurt others and prove their ability to not care during the process.

Step eight: Time travel

The child will be taught spiritual principles of "traveling" both internally and externally, with set ups, role playing, and guided exercises reinforced with trauma. The goal will be to reach "enlightenment", an ecstatic state of dissociation reached after severe trauma.

Steps nine, ten, eleven:

These will involve programming that will vary according to the child's future role in the cult. Sexual trauma, learning to dissociate and increase cognition, decrease feeling will be emphasized in these steps.

Step twelve: "coming of age"

A ceremony of becoming at age twelve to thirteen, the child will be formally inducted into the cult and their adult role in a ceremony of "coming of age". They will prove this ability by performing the role/job they have been training for, to the satisfaction of the trainer and leaders; by undergoing a special induction ceremony. The ritual and ceremony will be held with other children of the same age, who are dressed in white and given a prize as acknowledgement that they have completed the basics of their training successfully.

They will continue to be abused, even as adults, but the major traumatization and creation of system templates will have occurred by this age. Future training will refine what was already placed in the child by this age, or build upon the foundation.

Suggestions:

Grieving the abuse, acknowledging the feelings associated with undergoing the trauma will be important. It will be necessary to deal with perpetrator guilt, since by this time the child will be a perpetrator, and will have identified with the adult role models around them. This can be difficult to do, since perpetration will horrify the survivor when they remember this. Supporting the survivor, remaining non judgmental, and encouraging acceptance of these parts is important. Pointing out that at the time, they saw no other options available will help. Realizing that perpetrator alters saved the child's life, and that they had no other way to act, especially originally, the first time, will need to be pointed out. The survivor may feel hostile towards, or reviled by perpetrator alters, but they are the expression of the abuse and limited choices they were allowed. Grieving being a perpetrator will take time and caring support by others.

People contact me by letter and email to describe ongoing harassment with non-lethal weapons, mind control techniques and intimidation. Many of their stories sound plausible and are told coherently, in detail, and with a context that makes sense of them. This may be a prior husband or boyfriend in the military, prior employment in the intelligence community, working for a defense contractor, or something similar. But, no matter how plausible, none of the accounts can be proven or disproven.

Karen Wetmore's story is completely different. I have never met anyone who has worked so hard for so long to obtain solid documentation of her allegations of mind control experimentation. As you will read in these pages, Karen filed numerous Freedom of Information Act requests with the CIA and military, corresponded with numerous officials and politicians, and read a great deal of background material. Piece by piece, she assembled her facts, until she had documented a large network of professional connections, relationships and contacts between her own psychiatrists and the network of CIA and military mind control doctors.

Karen's claim that she was a victim of CIA mind control experimentation is backed up by extensive circumstantial evidence – enough to establish her case in a court of law, in my opinion – but also by direct evidence and documents. As she explains, the starting point was discovering the name of Robert W. Hyde, M.D. in her medical records. I was already aware of Dr. Hyde. He was cleared at TOP SECRET by the CIA as a contractor in its mind control program, MKULTRA. He received $148,515.00 from the CIA in 1955 under MKULTRA Subproject 10 for LSD experiments. He received $5,580.00 in 1961 under MKULTRA Subproject 61, and $24,500.00 in 1956 under MKULTRA Subproject 66.

In 1955, Dr. Hyde published a paper in the American Journal of Psychiatry, volume 111, pages 881-895, entitled, "Experimental Psychiatry II. Clinical and Physio-chemical observations in experimental psychosis." This paper is about LSD experiments. Dr. Hyde's coauthors were Max Rinkel, M.D., Harry Solomon, M.D., and Hudson Hoagland, Ph.D. Dr. Hoagland worked at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, which was the site for MKULTRA Subproject 8, funded in 1953 for $39,500.00 to support LSD experiments. Dr. Hyde was the contractor on Subproject 8.

Other coauthors of Dr. Hyde's on published papers include J. Sanbourne Bockoven, M.D., Jackson DeShon, M.D., and Harry C. Solomon, M.D. Keep an eye out for these names as you read Karen's story. In 1958, a book was published entitled, Chemical Concepts of Psychosis, edited by Max Rinkel and Herman Denber. The book is the Proceedings of the Symposium on Chemical Concepts of Psychosis held at the Second International Congress of Psychiatry in Zurich, Switzerland, September 1-7, 1957.

Participants and contributors to the Symposium include the following documented CIA and military mind control contractors and LSD researchers: Robert Heath, Hudson Hoagland, Paul Hoch, Abraham Hoffer, Albert Hofmann, Amedeo Marrazzi, and Humphrey Osmond. This is the network of doctors who conducted LSD, brain electrode implant and other experiments for the CIA and US military during the time period that Karen Wetmore was being experimented on in hospitals in Vermont. Paul Hoch, M.D. killed tennis pro, Harold Blauer, with an experimental dose of mescaline provided by the US Army at New York State Psychiatric Institute on January 8, 1953. Harold Blauer was never told he was receiving a hallucinogen. His family received an award of $18,000.00 on June 17, 1955 from the New York Court of Claims.

We know for a fact that CIA and military mind control contractors killed at least one person with mescaline in the 1950's. What are the odds that Harold Blauer was the only one who died? Keep this in mind as you read Karen Wetmore's account of the hundreds of deaths at Vermont State Hospital during the time period of MKULTRA, MKSEARCH and other CIA mind control programs.

The involvement of Vermont State Hospital and Vermont School of Medicine in CIA mind control experiments, which was extensive and lasted over a long period of time, has never been documented before. This is original investigative work by Karen Wetmore. Additionally, she is the first person to bring the existence of the CIA's MKCOTTON program to public attention. I filed a Freedom of Information act request about MKCOTTON as a result of Karen's research, but the CIA told me they had no additional information on it.

Karen Wetmore is a courageous survivor and investigator. She has overcome many severe obstacles in order to get her story down on paper. Read it, and pray for those who died.

INTRODUCTION

Before I obtained my medical records from the Vermont State Hospital and the Medical Center Hospital of Vermont, I never could have imagined that the information in those records would lead me straight to the CIA drug and mind control research known as MKULTRA.

My medical records contain shocking details of drug and mind control research including methods employed by CIA known as Special Interrogations. The content of the records would lead to a lawsuit filed by me in 1998 and they would give me the name of a famous CIA Technical Services Division employee and MKULTRA researcher, Dr. Robert W. Hyde. Hyde was involved in my treatment in VSH and he was Director of Psychiatric Research at the VSH during the years I was a patient there. I would go on to identify numerous other CIA researchers, CIA sites, cover funding groups and CIA methods, all of which were operational at VSH-UVM in the 1950's, 1960's and 1970's.

Although CIA drug and mind control programs were conducted using names like BLUEBIRD, ARTICHOKE and Project OFTEN, for convenience, the CIA research will be referred to as MKULTRA unless specifically noted.

For fifteen years, I obtained original source documents that prove not only that Vermont institutions conducted CIA experiments but that a massive, coordinated state and federal cover-up is ongoing, decades after the 1977 Senate hearings on MKULTRA were held. The 1977 hearings never mentioned Vermont or Robert Hyde and at the closing of those hearings, Americans were told that the important details of the secret experiments had been told. My investigation shows otherwise.

While I was going through the process of integration for multiple personality disorder with my therapist Kathy Judge, who I began seeing in 1988, I filed a lawsuit against the State of Vermont and the Vermont hospitals after the State of Vermont refused to provide me with copies of my VSH medical records. Even after I obtained a lawyer, the State was not forthcoming with my medical records. When I finally did receive the incomplete copy of the VSH records and read the contents, I learned that not only did I have far more memory loss than I realized but that I had been subjected to experiments without my knowledge or consent. Robert Hyde's name in my records would lead me on a fifteen-year search for the truth about what happened to me and to thousands of other unwitting VSH patients.

An almost unbelievable set of circumstances began to unfold after the filing of the lawsuit. The phone company informed me that my telephone was wiretapped. They would continue to tell me this over the next fifteen years. Mail, including certified mail sent to a United States Senator would be stolen. I had frequent encounters on the street, in stores and in traffic with strangers who appeared to go out of their way to insure that I saw them. One of these strangers was identified as an undercover federal agent and the car license plates of several other strangers led back to the federal government. I would be harassed until finally I vehemently complained to my Senator and to the FBI.

In 2008, I was the subject of a front page Rutland Herald article on the Vermont CIA experiments and I participated in a 2009 documentary on the CIA research for the Smithsonian channel.

My story is extreme. The events and circumstances that I was caught up in beginning at the age of thirteen when I was hospitalized the first time would remain a mystery to me for over three decades. The early childhood trauma I was exposed to and that produced the amnesia and the MPD would not be known by me or by any caregiver until the mid-1990's. VSH and Burlington hospital doctors knew my diagnosis in the 1960's but kept the information from me, my family and from subsequent caregivers. The Vermont CIA experiments stole my chances at an early age to live a normal life, but I was not the only VSH patient to have been subjected to unwitting research.

I obtained documents that not only show that thousands of other VSH patients were used and abused in the covert experiments but that during the twenty-year period when Vermont institutions conducted the CIA drug and mind control research, almost 3,000 VSH patients died - as many as 186 a year, year after year for twenty years in a row until the CIA's MKULTRA was shut down in 1973. VSH death rates immediately returned to a more normal level beginning in 1973 and without the federal funds provided by agencies who admitted wittingly funding the secret CIA MKULTRA research in hospitals all across the country, VSH never again conducted active patient research. Were CIA terminal experiments conducted at VSH? Those who know the answer to this question aren't willing to talk. Federal officials, who have the power to investigate, won't.

This book details my search for the truth about what happened to me and to thousands of other VSH patients during the CIA experiments in the 1950's, 1960's and 1970's in Vermont. Anyone who has read my medical records cannot explain how I survived. My therapist was never sure I would survive integration for MPD. I've had two heart attacks. I have three autoimmune diseases, macular degeneration, PTSD, chronic depression, an anxiety disorder, and schizoid tendencies and although an integrated multiple, I remain dissociative for certain stressors. But I survived.

Not only did I survive, I uncovered the dark, secret history of brutal CIA experiments that no one in the CIA, the State of Vermont or the federal government ever dreamed anyone would discover. Even now, fifteen years after finding the CIA in Vermont, it's still hard for me to comprehend.

Vermont, the place I was born and have lived my life. Vermont, the scenic Green Mountain state, with its majestic mountains, its beautiful autumn foliage and its liberal social attitude. Vermont, the very last place anyone would imagine CIA drug and mind control research. It's apparent to me that CIA thought that Vermont was the perfect place to conduct its research without fear and with impunity.

I survived the evil of the Vermont CIA experiments. Many, I fear did not.

MEDICAL RECORDS – WETMORE v. STATE OF VERMONT, 1997-2002

Eight years after beginning therapy for multiple personality disorder and beginning the integration process, Kathy suggested that I try to write a narrative of my life. I was struggling in the fall of 1997 after an intense period of integration. I had been multiple for over four decades and I was feeling increasingly overwhelmed by what I tried to explain to Kathy as the intrusion of some other terrible world. It made no sense to me or to her but she hoped that writing the narrative might offer some relief.

I began to write about my life. I had learned prior to integration that I had several violent early childhood traumas. Because of the amnesia I suffered as a four-year old child, I was never able to tell anyone what had happened to me, and the memory loss kept me from having any conscious awareness of the traumas.

When I got to the Vermont State Hospital (VSH) years, the narrative came to a screeching halt. I realized that I didn't have much memory about my experiences while a patient in VSH. I wasn't totally without memory, but the memories I had didn't tell me much at all about my time in the hospital. Kathy and I talked it over and she suggested that I contact the VSH and the Burlington hospitals I was also a patient in as a teenager to request copies of my medical records.

Although doctors had asked me for my permission to obtain my medical records in the past, I always refused to allow them to do so. I believed that the information in the records would show that I had been the terrible monster that I believed myself to have been while a patient in VSH. I thought that anyone who saw the records wouldn't want anything to do with me. But after going through eight years of therapy with Kathy and knowing that no matter what, I really could trust her, I decided to go ahead and obtain my records.

I phoned the Fletcher Allen Hospital in Burlington and asked for copies of my medical records. There was no problem. I then called the VSH to request my records. The woman on the phone was hostile and insulting. I couldn't believe it when she refused to allow me to obtain copies of my medical records. I reminded her that I had a right to obtain my records, but she continued to refuse to send them to me. I was furious.

The spotty memories I had about my time in VSH were memories I tried to keep out of my head. My entire life had been impacted by my feelings about having been locked up as a thirteen-year old child. I felt that I had been treated like an animal in VSH and the behavior of the VSH personnel on the phone triggered feelings of anger.

I phoned the Vermont Commissioner of Mental Health office to complain about the VSH personnel who refused to allow me to obtain my records. Much to my surprise, the response I got from the Commissioner's office staff was the same. I was flatly refused access to my medical records.

It was always difficult for me to explain how my VSH hospitalizations changed my life forever. Nothing was ever the same. As a thirteen-year old child, I was thrust into a strange and frightening world of madness and cruelty. My life after the first hospitalization was filled with shame, fear and the ever-present sting of the stigma I carried for years. I was never able to return to school and I watched my friends continue with their lives while I remained on the sidelines. I was the crazy girl. I was the one who had been in the state mental hospital. I became lonely and isolated.

I never believed that I belonged in VSH. I knew that I was sick, but it appeared that the doctors didn't know any more about what was wrong with me after my months in VSH than before I was a patient. I remembered being treated badly by the doctors in both hospitals but I could never explain exactly why or what had happened to cause them to treat me so harshly. I believed it must have been something about me that caused me to be held in VSH for so long. Because the memories I had were so broken and spotty, I was never really sure what had taken place. I never spoke about my time in VSH and I carried a deep, lingering fear of returning to the hospital. My entire life had been shaped by my experiences in VSH and in 1997 I was determined to not only find the truth about what had happened to me, but I wasn't going to be treated like a second class citizen by the State of Vermont again

I fumed for hours after my phone conversations with the State. Terrible images filled my mind. I recalled the Burlington doctors shouting at me, threatening me and demanding that I stop screaming. No matter how I had tried to stop screaming, I couldn't. I didn't know why. Surely, I must have been crazy.

Images of my father sitting beside me in the ambulance on the way to VSH in 1965 flooded my mind. Dad tried to reassure me that everything would be okay as I lay strapped to a stretcher, sobbing. I drifted in and out of consciousness that night in 1965 but I always remembered seeing my father cry. It was the only time I ever saw my father cry.

Images of lying on the floor of a seclusion room watching disembodied eyes staring at me through a slit in the locked door crept into my mind. People dressed in white suddenly rushed into the seclusion room, grabbed me, threw me face first against the wall and put me in a straightjacket. They never spoke to me. As they tied my arms and legs to the bed, I was terrified. At thirteen my life had become a nightmare from which there was no escape. There was no one to help me.

In the fall of 1997, I was determined to fight back against the State of Vermont. I took out a phone book and began to look for a lawyer. The first few numbers I called, the lawyers were either not there or not available to take another case. The first lawyer who answered the phone and was willing to meet with me was Alan George. I met with him and after talking for a couple of hours, he agreed to help me obtain my medical records.

Alan immediately encountered problems with the State of Vermont. They continued to refuse to relinquish my medical records. Vermont's Attorney General's office offered excuse after excuse as letters and phone calls were traded for weeks. I asked Alan if maybe the court could help, but he indicated that lawyers preferred to work things out between themselves if possible. My lawyer wasn't having any better luck than I had.

Finally after weeks of back and forth communication, the State agreed to provide me with copies of my medical records. Upon hearing the news from Alan, I grew uneasy. What would I read about myself in those records? What awful things would they say about me? Would they confirm that I was the monster that I had believed myself to be?

I always knew that I had been in a seclusion room on a locked back ward when I was eighteen years old. I knew that I had been in leather wristlets. I knew that I had been kept in a straightjacket. I just never knew or even thought about how long I was kept in those conditions. No subsequent caregiver, even Kathy, had ever asked me directly about my time in a straightjacket. I have no way of knowing if I would have remembered anything about it even if someone had asked me. To this day, I only have fragmented memories of that time. I also knew that I had been violent toward myself and toward the VSH staff in 1970-1971. I wondered how Kathy would feel about me after she read the record and even more troubling for me, was the question of how I would feel about myself.

When Kathy learned that I had retained a lawyer she was understandably concerned. It hadn't been a year since I underwent the integration process and I was still fragile. She had suggested that I get my records and believed that the information would help in my therapy. Kathy was as surprised by the unwillingness of the State to provide me with my records as was everyone else. The last thing she wanted for me was to become involved in a battle with the State of Vermont.

Alan called me when the records arrived at his office. He remarked that he didn't see anything out of the ordinary in the records. Another lawyer working with Alan, Kim Hayden, dropped the records off at my apartment. I was trembling as I began to read.

The records were not in chronological order and were difficult to follow. I spread them out on the living room floor, stacking doctor's orders, nurse's notes, drug charts and other sections in the proper places. As I began to locate the 1970-1971 seclusion room charts, my heart began to pound

The charts were dated, daily logs of my time in seclusion. At the top of every page was printed, "Seclusion, wristlets and full straightjacket." I stared at the pile of seclusion charts stacked on my carpet. The seclusion began in October, 1970, and went on almost without interruption until June 21, 1971. I couldn't believe what I was looking at. How could I not have known this? How could I have been kept like this for almost nine months and not have remembered? I was horrified at both the conditions I was kept in and by the realization that I could not remember a substantial portion of my own life.

I stared at drug charts that showed I was given massive amounts of multiple drugs, sometime seven or eight drugs at a time. I was frequently given placebos. There were electric shock treatment charts. I was administered vaginal suppositories for months while tied to a bed in seclusion. There was no indication in the records as to the reason why the suppositories were ordered. Despite warnings printed at the top of each page of the drug charts indicating that I was allergic to phenothiazine drugs, I was given the drugs anyway.

I stared at letters to and from the VSH Superintendent, George

Brooks. There were letters to and from the Mental Health Commissioner, Jonathan Leopold. There were letters from the Rutland court where I had been involuntarily committed in 1965 and in 1970. I read letters my mother wrote to George Brooks and to Leopold where she pleaded with them not to treat me harshly. She tried to schedule a meeting with VSH doctors and she bitterly complained about Dr. Otto Havas. I was overwhelmed by what I was reading. What did it all mean?

I shared my alarm with Kathy, who was understandably shocked by the things I told her were in my records. The next day I met with Alan and Kim. They had more closely read the records and quickly determined that not only had my civil and Constitutional rights been violated, but that I had been experimented on. There was going to be a lawsuit. Alan needed an expert medical witness and I suggested a former psychiatrist I had successfully worked with, Dr. Thomas Fox. Tom had recently become Commissioner of Mental Health in New Hampshire after leaving his position as Director of Psychiatry at the Rutland Regional Medical Center.

I spoke with Tom on the phone and Alan sent him a copy of my medical records. It didn't take long before Tom agreed to be an expert witness. Kathy had known Tom for a long time and my opinion of him couldn't have been better. Tom had been one of the very few psychiatrists I had ever had who actually helped me. I trusted him.

The 1965 and 1971 Medical Center Hospital records contained disturbing and confusing information as well. In 1965, despite being warned by doctors called in to consult on my condition to immediately stop the phenothiazine drugs, the Fletcher psychiatrists not only continued to give me the drugs I was allergic to, they increased the dose. There were records showing I was given frequent massive doses of Sodium Amytal, a drug commonly used in the 1960's as a "truth drug."

I was transferred from almost seven months in seclusion in VSH to the neurology unit of the Degoesbriand Hospital, a part of the Medical Center. There were numerous EEG's conducted and one in particular stood out. During the EEG, conducted only days after I was admitted, I was given 1800 mg of a drug called Metrazol. It was obvious in reading the chart notes that the drug caused me to hallucinate and experience substantial physical and psychological pain. At one point during the administration of Metrazol, I accused the doctors of causing my distress and I accurately blamed the drug for the hallucinations. It would take me months to learn what Metrazol was used for and who routinely used it. It was apparent that the Burlington hospitals had also engaged in experiments without my knowledge or consent. I was simply stunned.

In my 1970 VSH records was a letter to my mother from Mental Health Commissioner Leopold. In it he named several psychiatrists who were involved in my treatment: Dr. George Brooks, Dr. H. P. LaQueur, Dr. Otto Havas, Dr. Karl Trieal and Dr. Robert W. Hyde. I didn't recognize LaQueur or Hyde's names. After discovering that I had been used in experiments, I decided to learn all that I could about the VSH and about the doctors who worked there. I was able to obtain two books written about VSH. I also obtained information about the Human Radiation Experiments, a program conducted during the time when I was in VSH. Not only was Robert Hyde's name in the list of participants, but so was the University of Vermont College of Medicine.

Kathy helped me to try to identify Hyde and LaQueur and it didn't take long before we both realized that the same Robert W. Hyde who was Director of Research at VSH was the very same Robert W. Hyde who worked for the Central Intelligence Agency and conducted extensive drug and mind control experiments. The revelation was beyond shocking for me, for Kathy and for my lawyers.

Dr. Robert W. Hyde was born in Vermont and graduated from the University of Vermont College of Medicine. He was an only child. He and his wife Elizabeth had no children. He worked at the Marine Hospital in Louisiana and when WWII broke out he became an officer with the rank of Lt. Colonel. Hyde became Assistant Superintendent at Boston Psychopathic Hospital and went on to become Superintendent at Butler Hospital in Rhode Island. By 1964, Hyde was Assistant Commissioner of Mental Health in Vermont and became Director of Research at VSH. Hyde was on site at VSH the entire time I was a patient, 1965-1972. Hyde died in 1976, one year after the Rockefeller hearings about CIA mind control experiments and one year before the Senate Select Committee hearings in 1977. Newspaper articles written during the 1977 hearings make only brief references to Hyde. In an article published on August 4, 1977 Hyde is described as being, "Vermont born…and having died in 1976."

Hyde began working for CIA in 1952. He tested LSD while at Boston and acted in the capacity of consultant to CIA covert mind control programs. According to John Marks in his book, The Search For the Manchurian Candidate, Hyde was one of the CIA's primary consultants. Hyde is connected to the major figures and the primary research sites during MKULTRA. I realized that I was looking at a major player in the secret CIA experiments.

It seemed curious to me that such a major figure in the CIA experiments would have remained relatively overlooked by journalists. As I began to search for information about Hyde, I would slowly begin to suspect that he wasn't overlooked, but that he had been carefully protected.

I have no memory of ever seeing or meeting Hyde. This would have been highly unlikely considering the amount of time I spent in VSH and because after I returned to VSH from four months in the Burlington psych unit, Baird 6, I spent over another year at the state hospital. Hyde would have been onsite. He ran a regional ward and would have walked the grounds and wards of the hospital just like all of the other VSH staff doctors. My records state that he was active in my treatment and fully informed about my case. My search for Robert Hyde would span the next fifteen years and would lead me to shocking evidence of the covert CIA research conducted in Vermont.

It's difficult to explain the emotions that I had after learning that I had been experimented on by the CIA. After the initial shock came deep-seated feelings of fear, anger and an almost indescribable feeling of having had the CIA traipse through my mind, doing God only knows what and leaving their footprints all over my unconscious. It was akin to a psychological rape as far as I was concerned. It took me some time to adjust to the new reality in my life and over the next few months the fear changed into anger and then changed into a fierce determination that I would find definitive proof that the CIA had conducted MKULTRA in Vermont. CIA entered my life as a thirteen-year old child and their tactics shattered my life for decades after. I made a very conscious decision that I would never again be afraid of the CIA.

One of the positive emotional effects that came with learning that I had been used in CIA experiments was that, for the first time since I was thirteen years old, I realized that it wasn't because of something terrible about me. It was because of the terrible things that were done to me. It was a life altering realization.

I located Dr. Colin Ross, internationally respected specialist in multiple personality disorder and recognized expert on the CIA drug and mind control programs. We spoke on the phone a couple of times and Alan sent him a copy of my medical records. They never arrived. Alan resent the records and they were received. Dr. Ross agreed that I had been an unwitting subject of drug and other experiments. He agreed to act as an expert witness in the lawsuit.

As much as I wanted to name the CIA as a defendant in the suit, I agreed with Alan when he said that to do so would tie me up in the courts for possibly decades. This had been the pattern of CIA when they faced lawsuits. I would also have had to be interviewed by a CIA psychiatrist. There was still uncertainty as to exactly what CIA had done to me and this would have potentially placed me in danger. The lawsuit would bring out the experiments but we left CIA out as a defendant.

I began to gather everything I could find on the CIA experiments. The 1961 book, The Vermont Story: Schizophrenic Rehabilitation written by VSH doctors was particularly helpful to me. The very first time I read it, I knew that the story being told in this book was a lie. Despite the fact that I couldn't remember most of what happened to me in VSH, I did remember the months and years I was there both before and after the 1970-1971 experiments. The kind, caring treatment described in this book was something I never saw and I was pretty sure no one else who had been a patient there had ever seen either.

The book's bibliography was filled with the names of other researchers who were cited as having participated in VSH research or had an influence on VSH research. I set about to identify these researchers. A second book written about VSH history, Empty Beds, was extremely valuable and not only identified Hyde as Director of Research, but it gave me many more names to search for. There were also research grants identified and the book contained information about VSH research and personnel exchange sites. One in particular stood out: Boston Psychopathic Hospital.

Boston Psychopathic was a primary CIA site where LSD and other experimental drugs were tested under MKULTRA. VSH had a long-term research and personnel exchange relationship with the Boston hospital. I doubted that this was a coincidence. I went on to learn that the University of Vermont College of Medicine conducted behavioral research under the Department of Energy Human Radiation experiments. A list of participants includes the UVM College of Medicine, the White River Junction, Vermont Veteran's Hospital and the Agricultural College in Burlington, Vermont. UVM doctors staffed the Burlington hospitals and their resident doctors rotated to VSH. I also learned that McGill University, the infamous site of Dr. Ewen Cameron's experiments, was a research and personnel partner of VSH, UVM and the Burlington hospitals. McGill doctors were onsite in the Vermont hospitals during the MKULTRA years.

The declassified CIA documents I obtained from the National Security Archives included Hyde's MKULTRA subprojects 8, 10, 10a, 63 and 66. A key document related to Boston Psychopathic hospital identified researchers who belonged to CIA cover groups. Not only did some of these names match the VSH book bibliography, but VSH Assistant Superintendent Dr. H. P. LaQueur was identified as a member of the Society for Biological Psychiatry and the Manfred Sakel Foundation. LaQueur worked for the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) during WWII. OSS became CIA in 1947.

A few months after Alan became my lawyer, his partnership with the law firm broke up and he joined another law firm. The new firm was headed by a former Vermont Governor. I continued to search for information about the CIA. I understood that because the very first thing taken from me when I was a patient in VSH was my credibility, I would need to be able to prove through documents that CIA experiments were conducted in Vermont. Despite the fact the CIA wasn't named in the lawsuit, I was determined to find out the extent of their activities in Vermont and, hopefully, learn all of what they did to me and why.

My VSH records were clearly incomplete and no matter how Alan tried to get the rest of the records, the State denied that they existed. As I continued to gather information about the CIA, my lawyers began to scrutinize my VSH medical records. The information in them raised many questions and only months after obtaining the records unusual things began to happen.

I was committed to VSH in October 1965 at the age of thirteen and again in October 1970 at the age of eighteen. I was served commitment papers in October, 1970 and the record shows that I asked to be present at my court hearing. Dr. George Brooks, Superintendent of VSH, notified the Rutland court that I would be transported by VSH to the hearing.

One hour before I was scheduled to be transported to the Rutland court, records show that I was taken to a seclusion room. There is nothing in the records to explain why I was taken there. VSH and Brooks notified the court that I would not be able to attend the hearing and Brooks suggested that Judge Howard Douglas conduct the hearing without me. VSH staff psychiatrist Dr. Otto Havas sent a letter to the court describing my condition as "severely psychotic." There is nothing in my records to support the diagnosis made by Havas.

Two Vermont legal aid lawyers, Charles Currington and J. Frederick Strong, were appointed to represent me during the hearing but never contacted me. They never spoke with me and they never offered any evidence on my behalf. They never raised objections to the fact that although I had requested to be present at the hearing, I was not allowed to attend. The judge held the hearing without me.

Alan said that the hearing should have been rescheduled so that I could attend and it was clear to him that not only had my civil and Constitutional rights been violated but that I had been illegally committed. There was a discussion between my lawyers as to whether or not one of the counts in the lawsuit should include kidnapping. It was decided not to use the word kidnapping but the illegal commitment was part of the lawsuit.

It's apparent to me after reading the VSH records that VSH locked me in a seclusion room to prevent the judge from seeing or speaking with me. If the judge had spoken with me he would have quickly determined that I was not psychotic and very likely would not have committed me to VSH.

Given the extremes VSH went to insure that I would be involuntarily committed, it's clear that the CIA research was far more important to them than the law or my civil rights were. I asked Alan to find the legal aid lawyers who were appointed to protect my rights but he did not attempt to locate them.

Declassified CIA documents note that during MKULTRA, CIA enlisted the help of judges, police, family doctors and others in positions of power in order to obtain subjects for their experiments. I will very likely never know how much if at all this played into what happened during the involuntary court commitment. The 1970 court hearing would not be the only time I experienced questionable behavior by the court.

Before Alan joined the new law firm, Kim began contacting McGill University in Montreal, Canada about the CIA research. McGill and the Allen Memorial Institute admitted their role in the CIA experiments during the 1977 Senate hearings. Kim was in the process of developing at least the beginning of a communication process with McGill when Alan called a halt to the telephone calls to McGill.

Kim was noticeably frustrated byAlan's decision. Despite not naming CIA as a defendant, any information that McGill could have provided would have been very helpful. I began to notice that after Alan changed law firms, he gave subtle and not so subtle hints in his actions or lack of actions, of a change in attitude about the lawsuit. It wasn't that his expectations about the suit had changed, but I became uneasy watching him walk away from evidence that might have helped us. Over the months and years to come, I grew frustrated and angry and I remained completely in the dark about why Alan did some of things he did. I told myself that having no experience with how lawyers operated, maybe I was interpreting things the wrong way when it came to questioning Alan's handling of the lawsuit.

Alan and Kim had voiced their shock and disgust with the way I had been treated in the Vermont hospitals. Alan and I had several conversations about his confidence that I would prevail in the lawsuit. I liked Alan and in 1997 there was no reason not to trust the things he told me.

My lawyers requested copies of my Social Security medical records in an effort to find the information missing from the copies sent to us by the State of Vermont. I went on Social Security disability in the mid 1970's. Weeks went by without a response from Social Security and Kim finally contacted them by phone

The woman from Social Security explained to my lawyers that, "Everyone's records are kept in the salt mines in Baltimore, Maryland."

The problem was that my records hadn't been found there. The search continued until we were informed that my Social Security records were located in St. Louis, Missouri.

Kim attempted to speak with Social Security in Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania. I was with her that day when during her phone conversation I heard her say, "Are you telling me that the Social Security Administration does not have a phone number that I can call and speak with someone who might be able to answer my questions?"

When Kim hung up the phone she expressed shock at the conversation. She told me she had never heard of such a thing and she was unable to explain what had just transpired on the phone. When Alan came into the office Kim told him about the phone call. Alan listened and then without answering Kim, he turned and walked into his office, leaving Kim and I standing in the hallway.

My Social Security records finally arrived and I sat in the hallway of the law firm to read them. I was immediately perplexed by the content of the records. Although I had been granted disability because of my time in VSH, there was little reference to VSH. I read brief summaries about my 1978 Johns Hopkins hospitalization and other brief summaries of my condition. There were only a couple of pages total and the information was nothing that helped me.

A couple of years after my 1972 release from VSH, I applied for Social Security disability after being urged to do so by personnel in the Morrisville welfare office. I had been receiving $20.00 a week for room and board and $8.00 a week for personal use. Up until this time I had no idea that I would be eligible for disability benefits.

I was initially reluctant to open all of my medical records to Social Security and I withheld permission for them to obtain the VSH records. I carried a deep-seated fear that somehow the records would prove that I was the monster that I believed myself to have been in VSH. A friend finally convinced me to open all of my medical records to Social Security.

A few months later I opened my door to find a man who introduced himself as a representative of Social Security. He told me that he worked out of the Morrisville office and that he had never made a home visit like this before. He appeared to be visibly shaken.

The man told me that he had just come from VSH where he had gone unannounced to read my medical records. I never forgot what he said next.

"I want to extend an apology to you from the entire state of Vermont and I promise you that no one will ever bother you again. You will receive disability benefits."

I remember feeling confused by his remarks. I didn't ask him any questions, maybe because I was stunned by what he said. In the 1970's I had no idea what he might have seen or even what he was referring to. I remember feeling relieved that I would receive benefits. I never forgot his remarks to me that day.

It is at least possible that what the man from Social Security read in my VSH records involved the CIA experiments. His visit to me was prior to the 1977 Senate hearings and the resulting public knowledge of the CIA programs. Whatever he saw in my VSH records was enough for him to make a personal visit to me and to extend an apology to me. I will very likely never know if he did in fact see evidence of the CIA research.

After the 1977 hearings, CIA enlisted Social Security in identifying and locating possible unwitting subjects of the CIA experiments. In my opinion it is highly unlikely that CIA revealed Vermont hospital's participation in the experiments to Social Security. The Vermont CIA research has been too well covered up for too long. I consider the Social Security Administration to have been lied to by CIA, just like CIA has lied to the rest of the country. Despite my requests to Alan to try to locate the man who visited me that day, Alan chose not to.

In the mid 1980's when I was living with my parents in Brandon, two men who claimed to be representatives from the Social Security Administration paid me a visit. I remember them getting out of their car and following me into my parent's house. My mother went into the living room to give us privacy to talk in the kitchen. I recall sitting down with the men at the kitchen table. My memory ends there.

I have no memory of anything that was said by me or by the two men. I have no memory of them leaving. It would be decades before I would realize that Social Security doesn't make home visits to people receiving benefits. Kathy and I have discussed this incident many times since I learned about the Vermont CIA experiments. My mother and I have also talked about this. We all agree that the likelihood was that these men misrepresented themselves and that the distinct possibility exists that they were in some way checking on me. Was it a check on my memory? Was it to insure that my memory loss remained? These would be only two of the many questions that I would have about the actions and behavior of the CIA.

In 2008, I phoned Social Security in St. Louis to try to obtain my own copy of my medical records. I learned that there were duplicate sets of my records and for reasons the woman at Social Security couldn't explain to me, the duplicate sets had been destroyed on June 30, 2004. She didn't know who authorized the destruction of the records and she didn't know why there were two sets of records.

The woman tried to be helpful but she did not know the answers to my questions. I asked if there was someone else I might speak with but she said she had no idea who to refer me to. I hung up the phone with more questions than I'd had before I called.

If I've learned anything over the fifteen years I've investigated the CIA in Vermont, I've learned that CIA has the power to keep certain information covered up. Social Security was likely a victim of the cover up. I learned an interesting piece of information a few years ago about how CIA insures that certain activities remain secret. The scenario goes something like this:

CIA briefs Governors, Congressman and Senators on classified programs, insuring that the official can never speak publicly about the information. The penalty for doing so is treason. I suspect that this method goes a long way in keeping certain CIA activities quiet. I'm sure there are situations when this is vital to national security, but using these methods to keep Americans from knowing about CIA illegal activities conducted on American soil is a whole other ballgame.

The day I sat in the law firm reading my Social Security records I noticed a man walking down the hall toward me. I recognized him as the senior law partner, F. Ray Keyser, a former Vermont Governor. Keyser was Governor from 1961-1963. The expression on his face confused me. He looked afraid.

I continued to watch him walking toward me and I tried to understand what I was seeing. Why would this man look afraid? It made absolutely no sense to me and I strained to see if maybe I was misinterpreting his facial expression. I wasn't.

I told Kathy about the incident and I brought it up many times over the next few years. It would take almost 15 years before I would be able to even speculate about why the former Governor might be affected by me or by the content of what I had learned in the lawsuit being handled by his law firm

Another former Vermont Governor and former U.S. Senator, Robert Stafford had an office in the law firm. Stafford, a highly respected official was a member of the 1977 Kennedy hearings on CIA MKULTRA and was Vermont's Governor from 1959 -1961. It's highly improbable that during behind closed-door meetings, Vermont's role in the drug and mind control programs wasn't discussed. Was Stafford held to secrecy? I don't know. I tried to have Alan arrange for me to meet with Stafford but the meeting was never set up.

During the preparation for the lawsuit, we tried to obtain the Church Committee report on CIA MKULTRA. We weren't having any luck getting a copy. Alan was a long time friend of U.S. Congressman James Jeffords of Vermont. Alan and Jeffords played golf together and during one of their golf games, Alan tried to talk with Jeffords about the CIA MKULTRA experiments. He told Jeffords that he had a client who wanted a copy of the Church report. Apparently every time Alan tried to speak with Jeffords about the CIA, Jeffords walked away from him. We never obtained a copy of the Church Committee report.

By 2008, I had enough original source documents to prove that CIA experiments were conducted in Vermont and that they were covered up by state and federal officials. I began to scrutinize my contacts with government officials and agencies. I also began to take a closer look at Vermont state officials.

It seemed improbable that CIA could have conducted a 20-year long research program in Vermont hospitals and in the University of Vermont without someone in Vermont state government knowing about it and allowing it. During the lawsuit I didn't have the documentation that I would obtain in the years after the lawsuit ended. What I didn't know in 1998 was that I was looking at a massive, coordinated state and federal cover up.

Alan tried to locate the defendant doctors named in the suit. Several who were named had died and Alan was almost totally unsuccessful in locating the others. Ironically, in the years after the lawsuit ended I was able to locate several of the defendants with relative ease. Alan did locate Dr. Robert Hugel, the psychiatrist who treated me in Mary Fletcher in 1965. A sheriff armed with papers to serve on Hugel waited unsuccessfully at the foot of Hugel's driveway to serve him.

Dr. George Brooks, VSH Superintendent during the 1970-1973 hospitalization was in a nursing home and Alan was asked by Brook's attorney to demonstrate sympathy and drop Brooks from the lawsuit. Alan suggested to me that it would be better to drop Brooks from the suit. I found that I had no sympathy available for George Brooks and I refused.

One VSH doctor I had always remembered for removing me from terrible conditions in a seclusion room in 1970 was Dr. Frederick Curlin, who was Assistant Superintendent in 1970-1971. My VSH records show that upon my admission to the Medical ward in October, 1970, Curlin and Brooks were my doctors of record while I was on the Medical ward. I have no memory of seeing either during that time. I cannot stress enough how unusual it would have been to have the Superintendent and the Assistant Superintendent actively directing a patient's care on the Medical ward.

The scattered memories I have of Curlin include him coming to the locked ward, 1A where I was being kept naked, with my arms secured behind my back in leather wristlets in a seclusion room. There was no bed and no mattress on the floor. I recall nurses' aides opening the door as Curlin ordered them to remove the restraints, remove me from the seclusion room and dress me.

Curlin led me toward the exit and the nurses shouted at him that he could not take me off the ward.

"The hell I can't!" Curlin yelled back. My memory ends at the door exiting 1A.

My medical records match my next memory of standing next to Curlin on Weeks 3 where he told me that Dr. O`Shea would take care of me. I have no additional memories of this episode.

The other memory I have of Curlin involves him bringing a red chestnut horse behind the locked ward for me to see. The horse was held by a boy I knew, Vern, who wore a bright blue shirt. I never learned how Curlin knew I loved horses or why he brought the horse for me to see. It seems unlikely that I would have brought the subject up the day he removed me from seclusion.

I recounted the fragmented memories to Kathy over the years before the lawsuit. I believed that Curlin had been a good guy who had rescued me. In 1998, I began searching for Curlin. I was certain that he had information that would help the lawsuit and help me understand what had happened to me. My mother, who had also believed that Curlin was a good guy, had several phone conversations with him in 1970 and he told her that he was originally from New York state. I located a Curlin listed in New York and called the number.

The woman who answered the phone was hostile. I could barely get a word in as she barked at me, demanding to know who I was and what I wanted. I told her my name and that Dr. Curlin had been my doctor in VSH in 1970. Her attitude immediately changed upon hearing my name. I found this curious.

I left my phone number with her after confirming that she knew how to reach Dr. Curlin. The next day, Dr. Curlin phoned me, and much to my surprise and confusion, I couldn't contain my emotions upon hearing his voice. The pain that surfaced from deep inside of me when I heard him speak frightened me. I couldn't seem to stop crying and the emotion was coming from an unfamiliar place inside of me. I told myself that my reaction must be because he removed me from the terrible conditions in that seclusion room.

When I was finally able to speak I told him about the lawsuit and about the abuse I had discovered in my VSH records. I asked him simple, direct questions and his responses immediately disturbed me.

"How did you know I was in that seclusion room?"

"Being Assistant Superintendent has its advantages."

"Did someone tell you that I was there?"

"Brooks and Havas were out of town."

"But how did you know I was there?"

"Being Assistant Superintendent has its advantages."

"Did you know Robert Hyde?"

"Yes. He was always cleaning horse's stalls and always wore jodhpurs."

“Was that horse you brought for me to see, yours? What was its name?”

“Yes. Her name was Beauty. You need to sit across from me and look into my eyes. Let me buy you a plane ticket to California.”

“I don’t like to fly.”

“Let me buy you a bus ticket.”

“Dr. Curlin, I’m not going to leave Vermont. Why did you leave VSH? When I returned from Baird 6, you were gone.”

“I was only there for a year. You don’t remember the Kennedy Assassination do you?”

“Yes, I remember the assassination.”

“You don’t remember the Kennedy Assassination, do you?”

“Yes, I told you that I do.”

“You don’t remember the Kennedy Assassination, do you?”

“Dr. Curlin, yes I do remember it. I was eleven years old. Did you know that VSH was conducting CIA experiments?”

“Call me Doc. I love you Karen,”

“Are you CIA, Dr. Curlin?”

“Not every good Indian is a dead Indian. I do love you.”

I took notes during my conversation with Curlin. His responses were strange and made me feel very uncomfortable. I tried to persuade him to come to Vermont and meet with my lawyer. He flatly refused, saying that he didn’t have good memories about Vermont. He tried to portray himself as having been misused in some unexplained fashion while he was in Vermont.

I spoke with Curlin again and I tried to stress to him that he needed to answer my questions. He refused. I was suspicious of his involvement in the experiments I was subjected to and when the phone call ended I had decided to name him as a defendant.

Kathy and her husband Jimmy traveled to California to visit friends and Kathy set up a meeting with Curlin. Kathy testified at a deposition about the meeting at a restaurant. She said he and a woman he identified as his wife entered the restaurant after Kathy and Jimmy had taken a table in the center of the nearly empty restaurant. Curlin immediately had them move to a table directly in front of a large window overlooking the street.

Curlin evaded Kathy's questions about what happened in VSH. Several times he expressed his love for me, which made both Kathy and Jimmy uncomfortable. In a story Curlin told to Kathy and Jimmy about an Irish couple who had angered the wrong people, Curlin described how the couple was killed when a bomb planted in their car exploded. Kathy testified that she had previously told Curlin that she and Jimmy were Irish and that she felt Curlin's story was meant as a threat.

When Curlin was served with the lawsuit papers, he phoned Kathy. He was angry. Kathy explained that he was given every chance to tell what he knew but that he chose not to. Curlin was clearly upset when the call ended.

It would be ten years after this before I would learn very disturbing information about Curlin and about our interaction in VSH. It would also take another ten years before I would learn that information about Curlin's conduct with me in VSH was apparently kept from me and hidden in the closing of the lawsuit. The information would shock me.

In the years preceding the lawsuit, I had weeks and weeks of repetitive dreams. The dreams were filled with images including a piece of land my parents bought for me to safely ride my horse. Graphic images of guns and sexual symbolism also filled the dreams. Both Kathy and I initially thought the images were entirely symbolic, until I was able to learn from relatives and other people from my early childhood that the images were from real events.

Kathy and I spoke frequently about the memories on the phone. It was during this time that I began to receive 3 A.M. phone calls. When I answered the phone, whoever was calling always hung up. This continued for weeks and became an every night occurrence. I finally notified the phone company.

A trap was set up on my phone and immediately the 3 A.M. calls stopped. Within literally a few hours after the trap was removed from my phone, the calls began again. The trap was reinstalled and the calls once again stopped. When the second trap was removed, the calls began again.

I spoke with a representative of the phone company who told me that the phone company believed that my phone was tapped. I was shocked. Why would anyone want to tap my phone? The phone company failed to find a physical tap on my line and they were able to rule out the source of the tap as anyone in my neighborhood. Over the next several years, telephone technicians frequently reiterated that my phone was tapped. I remained mystified as to why anyone would bother to wiretap my phone.

On one memorable occasion, phone techs stood in my kitchen and said that the problem was the same problem that caused me to have the trap placed on the phone.

"The trap was put on the phone because of the 3 A.M. phone calls. This is different. Now there are strange noises and clicks and people's voices," I said to the techs.

"You have the same problem you first had," they replied.

As of the writing of this book, my phone remains tapped. This has been verified numerous times over the years by the phone company. I learned that after September 11th and the Patriot Act, the small room inside the phone company where wiretapped phones were visible to phone techs by the red lines, was off limits and locked. The security manager at my current phone company has informed me that regardless of whether or not I change my phone number, which I have several times, or I move, the people tapping my phone have the ability to continue the wiretap. He even suggested that satellites are responsible for the tap. This appears to be very sophisticated. I've asked myself many times, why after all of these years would CIA remain interested in my activities. I have no satisfactory answer.

I've become accustomed to the fact that nothing I say on the phone is private and that someone is listening, but the situation makes me extremely angry. In the 1990's I had no idea who might have wiretapped my phone or why. I now understand why my repetitive dreams, which were filled with actual memories, would be of interest to CIA, given the fact that CIA's top goal in the experiments was to create permanent amnesia. I may not have known who was tapping my phone in the 1990's but I have no doubt now that it is CIA and directly related to the experiments conducted on me in VSH.

Shortly after the lawsuit was filed in 1998, I began to notice strangers who appeared to be following me. At first I thought it must have been my imagination, but as the months passed I realized that I really was being followed. I complained frequently to Kathy and then I decided to keep a record of the car license plates, a description of the vehicles and a description of the men in those cars.

It didn't take long before I saw that the same cars were always behind me and always parked near me. The men in these cars seemed to go out of their way to insure that I saw them. This made no sense to me. On several occasions I was approached on the street by men I did not know who tried to engage me in conversation. I was not receptive, in fact, I reacted angrily. They always hurried away when they found that I would make a scene.

One man in particular followed me everywhere. On one day in particular, he followed me around the grocery store. I found it strange that when I went from aisle to aisle, there he was, just standing there with nothing in his hands and no shopping cart. He followed me into the check out line and never made eye contact with me. I remember thinking to myself that I could follow someone better than he could.

After seeing this man for months, I turned on the television one evening and saw his photograph on the local news. I couldn't believe what I was seeing. The man was wanted and apparently had a criminal background. I phoned Kathy and told her that I was certain this was the same man who had been following me.

Months after this incident I was able to learn that this man was not a criminal but that he was an undercover federal agent. I even learned his name. My head spun. What was going on? Why would a federal agent follow me? I subsequently learned that more than one of the car license plate numbers I recorded was traced back to federal agents. Someone was very clearly worried about the information I was uncovering.

It took me years to realize that very likely the federal agent who followed me around grocery stores and stayed so close by me might have been protecting me. I never looked for anyone else who might have been out of place or paying close attention to what I was doing, but apparently he was either aware of someone or watching for someone. I asked Dr. Colin Ross for his opinion and he speculated that I might have created a division within the intelligence community. I had my protectors and my non-protectors.

By 2009, I was still being followed. I'd almost grown accustomed to seeing the strangers, yet at the same time their presence made me very angry. I made Senator Bernie Sander's office aware of my situation back in 2000 and Sanders was the only elected official to ever try to help me. In 2009, the actions of one of the men following me began to disturb me.

I noticed him parked in his car next to mine when I exited a local pharmacy one Sunday morning. There was no one else inside the store, so I realized that he wasn't waiting for someone to come out. He stared at me. The expression on his face was hostile. I noted that he was blondish, wore wire rim glasses and I had the eerie feeling that I had met him before. I drove away that day hoping that I wouldn't encounter him again.

Weeks later I stood in the check out line of a store, and I realized the man standing behind me was standing too close to me and I moved away from him. He moved closer. I stepped forward again, this time making sure that my back wasn't to him. Again, he moved closer. I turned around and looked at him and I recognized him as the blond man with wire rim glasses. He never made eye contact. I exited the store and as I got into my car, I realized that he was parked directly in front of me. I watched him get into his vehicle. I didn't drive away. I wanted him to leave first and after what seemed like a long time, he drove away. There was something I couldn't put my finger on about this guy and the more I thought about it, the angrier I became.

The next day, I phoned Senator Sander's office and reported the activities of this man. By 2011, Sander's office was fully informed about the CIA in my life and I was told that the office would send a Congressional Liaison officer to complain to CIA about what Sander's staff termed "stalking."

In 2009, I also filed a FOIA request with the FBI in an attempt to learn if FBI was following me. I doubted that they were but I wanted to make sure. I had never found FBI participation in MKULTRA.

The FOIA came back no documents located. After the incidents with the blond man, and my growing anger at the behavior of CIA, who I was certain was behind the harassment, I phoned the FBI office in Albany, New York and explained the situation I had been involved in with CIA. I recall telling the FBI that I realized it all sounded crazy and that the behavior of the CIA was indeed crazy, but that what I was reporting to FBI was accurate.

I told the woman on the phone about being followed for months by a man I was able to identify as an undercover federal agent and I gave her his name. I asked the FBI to help me stop the harassment I was being subjected to by CIA and asked them to check with Senator Sander's office if they still didn't believe me.

I never saw the blond man again and as the weeks went by, I noticed I wasn't being followed. My new lawyer thought it was unusual for the FBI not to open a case file on a complaint, but I never heard from FBI. By May 2011, I had only one encounter with a stranger in a parking lot. It was similar to the other encounters, without the hostility demonstrated by the blond man.

The harassment stopped in late 2010, except my phone remains tapped. I stopped seeing strangers following me, and my mail stopped being stolen. I did however note that by 2010 I stopped sending FOIA requests and no longer requested the help of elected officials. I suspect the reason the harassment stopped was because of the complaints I made to Sanders and the FBI. I don't doubt that CIA was responsible. Who else would have the sophistication to pull off the types of surveillance that I was subjected to for years after I filed the lawsuit and discovered the Vermont CIA experiments?

The lawsuit was extremely stressful for me and during the first court hearing, I witnessed something that troubled me. I sat beside my lawyer, listening in disbelief as the judge spoke in glowing terms about one of the defendant doctors. The judge talked about his experiences with the doctor who acted as an expert witness in previous legal cases. The judge couldn't say enough good things about the doctor and as I looked over at my lawyer, he remained silent. I had never been involved in a court hearing before but the lavish praise coming from the judge didn't seem appropriate to me.

Shortly after this incident the lawyers for the doctor and the Burlington hospital petitioned Alan to request that we drop his clients from the suit. In the letter he wrote to Alan, the attorney included a cryptic line: "No good deed goes unpunished."

Over my strong objections, Alan dropped the doctor and the hospital from the suit after laying out all of his reasons to me. In the years after the suit ended I would obtain damning information about the hospital and about the University of Vermont College of Medicine.

Alan believed that the medical records made the case and although he understood that the CIA experiments were the reason I had been treated the way I had, he wanted to stay clear of talking about CIA during the trial. He doubted the jury would believe CIA was behind the research. I remained incredibly frustrated by the things Alan did and didn't do; all the while trying to tell myself that he was looking out for my interests.

During Kathy's deposition, the lawyers for the State brought boxes marked MSIS. I knew that a few of my medical records in 1970-1971 were marked MSIS and I asked Alan to request copies of the records the State obviously had. The lawyers frequently referred to information during Kathy's deposition that we didn't have. Alan never obtained the information staff when I was in VSH. These people could have provided valuable information about what happened to me. None of these people were deposed, not even Dr. Curlin. I was almost constantly in an emotional uproar over how the suit was being handled and about the information I continued to obtain about MKULTRA.

Alan was provided with a list of potential witnesses who were on

By the spring of 1999, I didn't feel well. I assumed it was due to the stress I was under. I had been diagnosed with macular degeneration, a disorder that could potentially cost me my eyesight. Tom believed that high doses of the drug Mellaril given to me in VSH when I was 13 years old were responsible. I had a difficult time with the diagnosis. The State of Vermont notified Alan that VSH had located more medical records and asked us to come to VSH to read the material. I never knew why the documents couldn't have been mailed, but Alan, Kathy and I drove to VSH to read the new material.

I felt sick inside at the thought of returning to that Hell-hole and when we entered the hospital I remember a terrible feeling of dread enveloping me. The documents located by the State were not informative at all. I felt relief when we drove away from VSH but I continued to not feel well.

On the morning of June 14, 1999, I felt a single, brief, searing pain in my chest. Over the next several hours my left arm began to throb until by 6 P.M., I could no longer stand the pain in my arm. I went to the emergency room.

I don't remember much of what happened in the emergency room. I knew the doctors suspected I was having a heart attack. Kathy was called and after what I later learned was several hours spent stabilizing me, I was taken to intensive care. During the middle of the night I had chest pains again. I saw a doctor standing outside of my hospital room and for the first time I wondered if I would die.

I spent five days in intensive care. Tests revealed that I had suffered a heart attack and that there was also evidence of damage from a previous heart attack. The doctors said they weren't sure if the heart attack was due to a sudden spasm, but that I did not have coronary artery disease. I went to cardiac rehab and during my recovery the lawsuit was put on hold.

When I was strong enough to continue the suit, I gave a deposition. Kim had left the Keyser law firm and I missed having her participation. The State's lead lawyer pretended to sleep through the deposition. I found his behavior both disgusting and revealing and I told myself that the State was more worried about my lawsuit than they would like me to know.

When the lead lawyer for the State finally questioned me, he was insulting every chance he got. He tried to learn how much I actually knew about the CIA and Hyde. He tried to find out if I could in fact remember what had happened to me and although I told him that I could remember some things, he chose to not ask me what those things were. I was exhausted by the end of the deposition. Although I wasn't aware of it at the time, Kathy and Tom realized that I was dissociating again.

Dr. Tom Fox gave three depositions in all. He stated that in his opinion I had been experimented on and that he had never seen such brutal treatment before. I had the chance to talk with Tom in the months before his depositions and he told me how important it would have been for him to have known what happened to me in VSH. He remarked that he, the Rutland hospital staff and Kathy had all been working in the dark with me.

"If only we had known how you had been treated. We could have helped you so much more and so much sooner," Tom told me.

In 2001, Tom was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer. He somehow managed to give the third deposition and appear at a court hearing, but by the summer of 2002, Dr. Tom Fox lost his battle with cancer. Everyone who knew him was devastated. I know that I was.

The suit dragged on. We no longer had an expert medical witness and I suggested that Alan contact Colin Ross, who had agreed to testify on my behalf. I couldn't understand Alan's reluctance to involve Dr. Ross, especially given the fact that he was one of the top specialists in the country on MPD and an expert on the MKULTRA program.

The State wanted me to be interviewed by their psychiatrist, which greatly disturbed me. Alan tried to fight the order from the court but I ended up having to meet with the psychiatrist. I guarded myself against the doctor but I remained pleasant. I wasn't about to give the State a window into my mind. As far as I was concerned, the State of Vermont had already taken more than enough from me.

Several months after the heart attack, my rheumatologist diagnosed me with a third autoimmune disease, antiphospholipid antibody disorder. He determined that the disease had been the cause of the heart attack when it thickened my blood, causing a blood clot. He prescribed a blood thinner

By the early spring of 2002, I was deposed again. The lead lawyer for the State was insulting and ridiculed me at every turn. I knew he was trying to elicit a dramatic response from me. I remained calm and quietly answered his questions, but on the inside I was fuming. I'd been interrogated before and the tactics of the lawyer felt familiar.

The lawsuit was sent into mediation and we met with the judge assigned to run the mediation. After he talked with the State lawyers, the judge told us the State offered a settlement. The sum was so small that it was obvious it was meant to be insulting. I told Alan that I was leaving and Alan too, walked out of the mediation.

My health began to rapidly decline and after blood tests revealed that the antiphospholipid disease was active, and producing cells that could kill me, my doctor told me that if I continued the lawsuit, I could die. He prescribed a powerful drug to attack the dangerous cells developing in my bloodstream. My anti-DNA was escalating rapidly.

I couldn't believe what was happening. I struggled with the diagnosis and what it might mean and I was facing the end of my battle to hold the State accountable for its actions. It was days before I finally decided that I had to drop the lawsuit. It was a painful decision, but I knew how sick I really was.

Alan was shocked when I told him that I had to drop the lawsuit and why. Alan believed that we had a good case and would have won the lawsuit. He agreed to notify the State. I remember thinking to myself that I couldn't believe that I had come this far only to have to stop before I learned what had really happened to me. I was determined to get well, and to once again continue to obtain the information that would prove the Vermont CIA experiments. I never could have foreseen how long it would take me to unravel the CIA experiments and the information sitting in my medical records.

Alan phoned me several weeks after the suit was dropped to tell me that the State offered a settlement. I was surprised. I was the one who dropped the lawsuit. The State wasn't obligated to pay me a cent. Even more surprising to me was that the amount being offered was over three times the amount that was offered in the mediation.

I questioned Alan about the amount. Why was the State even offering me money? Alan suggested that I take the offer. Again I asked him why were they settling when I ended the suit? He told me to take the money. I agreed to settle at the amount offered but the whole thing gnawed at me. It didn't make any sense.

I was pretty sure that Alan hadn't really believed that the CIA was responsible for my treatment in the Vermont hospitals. He knew that Hyde was CIA and he knew about a few other doctors' connections to CIA, but he had a hard time wrapping his head around the idea. He wasn't alone in that. I was still struggling with the revelation. I would remain on the powerful drug Imuran for a couple of years and the drug would eventually produce a remission in the antiphospholipid disease. I launched what would be an additional ten-year search to identify the connections of the Vermont hospitals to the CIA.

The lawsuit was over in the spring of 2002 but information that I was unaware of in 2002 would surface again years later and that information would be shocking.

MARY FLETCHER HOSPITAL – VERMONT STATE HOSPITAL, 1965-1969

I grew up in Brandon, a small, rural town in Southern Vermont. I was a friendly, curious and sensitive child who loved horses, idolized my older brother and adored my Grandfather. I was close to my parents and spent countless hours playing with my cousins and my friends. My family lived on Maple Street and there were acres of pastureland we played in. We swam in the summer, played baseball and hide and seek. We walked back and forth to school everyday and we counted the days until summer vacation. As far as anyone, including me knew, there was nothing unusual about my life.

My father worked in a lumber mill, and my mother stayed home to raise my brother and me. My parents married young; my father was twenty-two and my mother was sixteen. They lived a quiet, simple life in the small rural town of Brandon. I was born ten years after my brother and I idolized him.

When my brother enlisted in the Air Force in 1960, I fell into a deep depression. I missed him terribly and to make matters worse, my mother suffered a near emotional breakdown over Kip's enlistment. Even a television commercial for the Air Force sent her rushing out of the room sobbing. I began to feel very alone. It was because of my reaction to Kip being gone that my parents bought me a horse in March of 1960.

I had wanted a horse for as long as I could remember. The horse was pastured in a neighbor's field next door. Both Kip and I had grown up close to the neighbors and we spent many hours at their house. My cousin got her own horse a year later and our families spent their free time watching us ride and helping us learn how to take care of the horses. My Grandfather prided himself on his knowledge of horses and we grew even closer during this time.

In 1963, my parents bought a piece of land across the river that ran behind our house from the next-door neighbors who had allowed us to pasture the horse in their field. It was after I began riding my horse on this piece of land that I began to be preoccupied with suicidal thoughts. At the time, no one including me had any reason to factor the land into my emotional condition. It would be another 30 years before I would know about the violent trauma I had suffered on that land.

The suicidal thoughts and feelings grew. My behavior at home and in school dramatically changed and I made several minor attempts to kill myself. I managed to hide this from my parents. My friends knew that I was suicidal, but in an effort to protect me, they kept the knowledge to themselves. I stood on the streets of Brandon and timed the cars and trucks as they passed. I decided to step out in front of an oncoming vehicle, but couldn't make myself take that final step into traffic.

I knew that there was something wrong with me and I was frightened. I became withdrawn and obsessed with the dark thoughts I was having. I felt completely isolated from family and friends. I shut myself away in my room and stopped doing all of the things I had always done before.

My parents, especially my mother, attributed the changes in my behavior to adolescence and I found it impossible to tell them that I was consumed with the idea of killing myself. In 1963, while Kip was home on leave, President Kennedy was assassinated and I had an unusually intense reaction to the tragedy. I became even more withdrawn and secretive at home.

In the fall of 1964, I attended seventh grade at the union high school and the adjustment was very difficult for me. When I was in the first grade, the elementary school burned to the ground during Christmas vacation and all of my subsequent elementary school years were spent in church basements and office space substitutions for a school. There was a building for first and second grade, another for third and fourth and one for fifth and sixth grades. It was difficult to make the adjustment to the new school with all of the many students there.

Within weeks of starting classes at the new high school, I suffered an outburst at school and I was required to see a psychiatrist in Burlington. I remember very little about the session with Dr. Cohen except that I didn't like him and I wasn't open to talking with him. He set up a consultation at the Degoesbriand hospital outpatient clinic where I met German psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Hugel for the first time.

I immediately disliked Hugel. His approach was aggressive and I withdrew even deeper into myself over the next few months. The more he pushed me, the deeper I drew back into myself. When he said to me that there was nothing wrong with me, I agreed with him. I simply wanted to be left alone. The intense preoccupation with suicide became worse. I began to load and unload my father's 30-30 rifle and tried to fight off thoughts of shooting my mother or myself. The thoughts and feelings I was having were frightening, but the worst part for me was that it was becoming more difficult for me to hide the fact that there really was something serious going on.

My mother and I clashed frequently. The more distant I became, the harder she pushed to get closer to me and the angrier I became. When my relatives tried to tell her that I was sick and needed help, she resisted the idea, attributing my behavior to my age.

As more people noticed that something was very wrong with me, my mother became more convinced that my acting out was simply to defy her. She couldn't allow herself to believe that there could be anything emotionally wrong with me. I never doubted that my parents loved me, and that knowledge made the thoughts and feelings I was having even harder for me to contend with.

I had another meltdown at school. This time I was found wandering around the hallway confused and disoriented. I made a suicidal gesture, slashing my wrist. When my family doctor arrived at the school, I told him that if he sent me home I would either kill my mother or kill myself.

When my father and brother came to take me to the Mary Fletcher hospital I reassured myself that I would be able to escape by leaping from the car as it traveled along the highway. I was seated between my father and brother, which prevented me from jumping out of the moving car. Although I don't have any memory of the ride to the hospital or of my admission to the psychiatric unit, I do know that in September, 1965 my life would be changed forever by the events that would unfold.

The 1965 Mary Fletcher medical records show that I was immediately prescribed the phenothiazine drugs, Thorazine and Stelazine. Over the next thirty days I was also given frequent large does of Sodium Amytal. It's interesting to note that Sodium Amytal was used in MKULTRA as a way to allow the researchers to map the subject's unconscious mind so that the subject could be successfully exploited later. It's also noteworthy that the dangers of combining large doses of phenothiazine drugs and Sodium Amytal were well known by the medical establishment in 1965, yet this is exactly what was done in my case.

I don't have much memory of my 1965 hospitalization, but I do recall hiding under the bed sheets. I was frightened. This was the first time I had ever been in a hospital and the first time I had ever been away from home. The record notes that I was severely depressed and suicidal and that within days of starting the Thorazine, I had symptoms of an allergic reaction.

The records note that I had a rash, a fever, a sore throat and muscle spasms. Dr. Hugel and Dr. W. Stewart Agras continued the drug. Only days after my admission, I woke up to see a glass urine specimen bottle sitting on the table beside my bed. I got out of bed, grabbed the bottle and went into the bathroom. I broke the bottle and slashed my wrist. I felt nothing until I saw the blood gush from my wrist with the force of a fire hose. I didn't know that blood could come out of a body like that and I was frightened. I began screaming and running wildly around the room.

The record shows that pressure was applied to the 2 inch across and 7/8 of an inch deep wound. The severed tendon, noted to have been the palmaris longus tendon was operated on for hours and my wrist was placed in a cast. Hugel and Agras visited me the next morning and threatened me with transfer to the Vermont State Hospital. Hugel remarked that the only reason they weren't sending me directly to VSH was that no one had told me beforehand that suicide attempts were not tolerated.

During a psychological test days later, I complained to the psychologist that I did not feel well. He berated me and accused me of only pretending to feel sick to avoid taking the test. I couldn't understand what it was about me that made the doctors treat me so badly. The records show that I was never given any psychological counseling and I don't recall any of the doctors ever talking with me except to berate and threaten me.

My answer to one of the questions in the psychological test would bring about a dramatic reaction from the doctors and their reactions to my answer would alarm me.

"What does two heads are better than one mean?"

"If you are crazy in one head, you still have one more head to save," was my response.

The doctors stood in my hospital room and demanded to know why I gave that answer to the question. They demanded to know if I lied.

Over and over they shouted at me until I finally told them yes, I lied. Their reactions to my answer frightened me and made me realize that whatever it was about me, I had better keep the truth, whatever it was, hidden.

During the 30 days I was in Mary Fletcher, I never showered or washed my hair. I was afraid to take my clothes off and enter the shower. No one seemed to notice or tried to help me. In retrospect I find this suspect. I was a thirteen-year old child who was clearly emotionally ill and in need of help, yet I was left in conditions that few others would have been left in.

Kip was scheduled to be married that October and the timing of my breakdown cast a pall over the ceremony. I liked Sue, my future sister-in-law but it wouldn't be until after my integration in 1996 that I could finally explain to her that her marriage to my brother was not the cause of my hospitalization.

The records note that I continued to have allergic reactions to the drugs I was given. I began to have dystonic reactions, which were very frightening. My muscles went into severe spasms, twisting the muscles in my face and extremities. After each allergic reaction, the doctors gave me medication to counter the reaction and then continued to give me drugs they knew I was allergic to.

By October 21, 1965, the adverse drug reactions had become so serious that Dr. Agras asked for a medical consult. The consulting doctor's notes include: pulse: 120, temperature: 38.4, blood pressure: 110/60, white blood cell count: 22, 700, mild ache in throat, tonsil pain, cough, nodes in neck, tenderness in right lower stomach, covered with a rash, weak and unable to eat.

The consult diagnosed me with a severe allergic reaction to phenothiazine drugs and advised that the drugs be immediately stopped. Agras wrote in the records that he would not stop the drugs. He continued to give me the drugs I was allergic to and my condition rapidly deteriorated.

I began to lose control. For reasons unknown to me at the time, I began screaming uncontrollably. Agras, Hugel and two female psychiatrists, Dr. Elizabeth Forsberg and Dr. Rosemary Brewster stood in my hospital room and demanded that I stop screaming or they would send me to VSH. No matter how I tried, I couldn't stop screaming and I was terrified.

It's noteworthy that during my month-long stay at the Mary Fletcher psychiatric unit, none of the psychiatrists attempted to learn the reasons for the breakdown that led to my admission. After the serious suicide attempt in the hospital, no doctor tried to learn why I attempted suicide. Not once during my stay did any psychiatrist counsel or engage me in psychotherapy of any type. Instead they used Sodium Amytal and powerful tranquilizing drugs that they knew I was allergic to. Forty years later, I would find documents about the research being conducted in the Vermont hospitals where I was a patient that would raise questions about the use of LSD and whether or not my transfer to VSH had been the plan all along.

On October 24, 1965 I was transferred via ambulance to VSH. The admission record notes that I was covered with "a rash all over face, arms, legs and body, had bruises on arms and legs, had attempted suicide severing the palmaris longus tendon in left wrist and allergic to Thorazine."

The records show that I was placed in a straightjacket and given injections of Trilafon and Compazine, both phenothiazine drugs.

The record notes that, "Patient remained awake much of the night in a very disturbed state. This noon she was given 10 mg. of Trilafon and toward the end of the afternoon she was given 10 mg. of Compazine… following these injections she had a reaction which was felt to be a dystonic reaction. She has spasms in the corner of her mouth and the side of her face. She has spasms in her extremities and apparently in her diaphragm causing a loud moan. The patient was very frightened by this."

Dr. Covey administered an injection of a side effect drug. The injection helped and he repeated the injection. The symptoms gradually subsided. I stopped screaming. VSH nurses aides removed me from the straightjacket and from seclusion. I could barely walk.

In 1965, VSH and the University Of Vermont College Of Medicine had been conducting research using unwitting subjects for over a decade. Experimental drugs obtained from two CIA-contracted pharmaceutical companies were being given to VSH patients. VSH staff psychiatrists participated in experiments at verified CIA test sites and CIA researchers participated in experiments conducted at VSH. In 1963, VSH-UVM began sending the test results of child patients directly to CIA Chief Psychologist John Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC.

In 1965, Dr. Robert W. Hyde, longtime CIA researcher and CIA Technical Services Division employee was officially Director of Research at VSH. He would remain in that position throughout the years I was a VSH patient. In 1965, my family and I didn't know about the CIA research in Vermont hospitals. In 1965, I was thirteen years old and involuntarily committed to the Vermont mental institution. In 1965, the experiment had begun.

The locked adult women's ward, Weeks 3, held patients with all types of mental illness and as I looked around the ward, none of the women appeared to pose any threat to me. The nurses' aides didn't seem to be terrible people, but I wasn't about to make the same mistake I'd made in Mary Fletcher and trust any of them.

The doctor who gave me the shot that stopped the drug reaction, Dr. Covey, was a resident doctor from UVM. He was kind to me. My medical records note that he asked me if I heard voices and that I told him, yes. When he asked if the voices were coming from inside of my head or from outside, I answered that they were inside of my head. Over the next few days he asked me again and again about the voices, signaling to me that I had made a mistake answering truthfully. My stay in Mary Fletcher taught me that whenever the doctors reacted to something I said, trouble would follow unless I told them that I made up the whole thing. I told him that I made it up and it wasn't true. It worked. He backed off.

The record also notes that I described an incident in Mary Fletcher when black figures surrounded my bed and urged me to cut my wrist. I said that I didn't want to hurt myself but that these black figures frightened me and I couldn't resist obeying them. I have no memory of these black figures.

In the record, the notes quote me and then contain the written remarks of the nurses; "At the Mary Fletcher Hospital they used to say, get your wrist." She states that she did not want to lay her wrist open but that she was afraid of them. "I felt I should do what they said. It was like they were controlling my life. I didn't know who they were. They were like shadows."

"The figures were described as black all over and had no particular shape or form but she felt that they were men. She states that she was afraid of them. Patient states that she has not seen the black figures at the Vermont State Hospital, only at the Mary Fletcher Hospital. Patient also states that she has a weakness for broken glass."

In CIA mind control experiments conducted by Dr. Harris Isbell, he notes that a few of the experimental subjects he dosed with LSD reported that they, "…felt their experiences were caused by the experimenters controlling their minds."

A December, 1965 meeting of VSH doctors regarding my case notes that Dr. George Brooks stated that I was, "not the garden variety type and that it is thought that hysteria at this age becomes schizophrenia."

Dr. Rupert Chittuck, VSH Superintendent stated that I should remain in the hospital for "a considerable amount of time." It was decided that I not be allowed to attend school and that they would keep me on an adult ward, despite the fact that VSH had a children's ward. Many of the Weeks 3 nurses aides objected to having a thirteen-year old child on a locked adult women's ward.

In this meeting my diagnosis was stated to be "a differential diagnosis between schizophrenic reaction of the acute undifferentiated type and a severe anxiety reaction, with depressive, dissociative and hysterical symptoms…the latter diagnosis is favored."

On December 21-22, 1965, I was given a psychological test by Dr. Donald Eldred. The three-page summary of that test would show that the test was a PAS or a Psychological Assessment System. PAS was a specific psychological test created by CIA Chief Psychologist, John Gittinger. The PAS was routinely used by CIA to learn how to compromise and exploit a person's weaknesses. It was used to "get at" people. I wouldn't identify the VSH PAS until after the lawsuit ended, and I would not know until the mid-2000's that VSH sent the test results directly to Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC.

On several occasions, Dr. Chittuck came onto Weeks 3 accompanied by several doctors who I didn't recognize. Chittuck called me over to introduce me to the men. I recall standing surrounded by the men and hearing Chittuck say, "This is Karen."

I have no memory of what they said to me or what I said to them. I did notice that Chittuck never introduced any of the other patients to the groups of men who came onto the ward. In 1965, the identities of these men wouldn't have meant much to me, but decades later when I identified CIA personnel on site at VSH, my suspicions about who those men might have been were answered in the documents I obtained. I would also learn that the reason VSH doctors were so interested in me was because of the disorder that they knew I had; the disorder that the CIA was very interested in for its MKULTRA experiments.

VSH doctors prescribed up to 1800 mg a day of a phenothiazine drug called Mellaril despite the fact that I was allergic to phenothiazine drugs. A side effect drug was also ordered. The doctor in charge of my case, Dr. Caron, had little to say to me and rarely asked me questions. He frequently turned his back to me when we were in a room together. A patient told me one day what a great doctor he was and how much he was helping her. I wondered why he never tried to help me.

My parents provided VSH doctors with information they believed would help the doctors help me. My mother told them about my love for horses, my close relationship with my grandfather and about my unusually intense reaction to the Kennedy Assassination. She also told them that I ran away when I was only five years old and that when I was two, my brother was shot in the back in a deer hunting accident. She said I watched when the dressing on his wound was changed after he hemorrhaged.

There are no nurse's notes in the VSH records or in the 1965 Mary Fletcher records. This is also true for the 1970-71 VSH hospitalization and for the return to Weeks 3, VSH from the Burlington Baird 6 stay in 1971. Records are also entirely missing for the 1970-71 stay on 10B, where Dr. Otto Havas was the doctor. There is a single doctor's note by Havas for the 10B stay.

Despite the fact that I was not schizophrenic and the records note that the doctors were well aware of this in 1965, they labeled me as schizophrenic. The diagnosis would change to dissociative and the word dissociative appears in the 1965 PAS and in later records. VSH would mislead subsequent caregivers for years with a diagnosis they knew to be false. I learned decades later that the term "schizophrenic rehabilitation" was a cover for the true nature of VSH-UVM research. Countless VSH patients during the 1950's, 1960's and 1970's were labeled with an illness they didn't have.

My parents visited when they could and there were times when I wouldn't see them. I couldn't explain why I had the feelings I did about my mother and every time I refused to see them, I felt torn apart. I wanted to run to my mother and go home with her. I wanted things to be the way they had been before all the craziness had taken over my life. There was something causing my conflicted feelings toward my mother but I wouldn't know the cause of the terrible feelings for three decades.

Weeks 3 was chaotic and unpredictable. The women patients, who only moments before seemed fine to me, would suddenly erupt in screams or violence. There were times when I behaved the same way and I had no idea why. The night that one patient was dragged away to the dreaded 1A ward I had heard so many awful things about, was a frightening experience. She screamed and begged the aides not to send her to 1A. I told myself that it must have been a very bad place to be.

After I visited home a few times, I was discharged on a six-month visit in March 1966. I was taking 1800 mg of Mellarill and I knew that I had been changed by my experiences in the hospitals. I realized that the ways in which I had always believed the world to be were wrong. Doctors, nurses and hospitals were supposed to be good and safe but I knew this wasn't true. I had no more idea what had caused me to be hospitalized than I had before the breakdown. Now I was the crazy girl. I was the one who had been in the state mental hospital. I didn't share my feelings with anyone.

My friends went to school without me. I remained on the outside watching as their lives went on. I was overwhelmed with feelings of shame and I spent almost all of my time alone. There aren't many memories for me of the year or so after I was released from VSH but by the time I was fifteen, one event stands out above everything else - meeting Phil Cram.

Phil moved onto Maple Street with his parents and two brothers in 1967, and I was immediately interested in getting to know him. I returned to VSH in early 1967 but it was a short, uneventful stay, not quite six weeks. Phil was attracted to me too, especially when he learned that like him, I played the guitar. Phil was tall, slender and had an open, engaging personality. He had a beautiful singing voice, one so strong and clear that most people were surprised at just how talented he really was. We began spending much of our time together.

Phil's parents accepted me into their lives as my parents welcomed him into theirs. I stopped taking the Mellarill and I felt better. I wasn't isolated and lonely anymore and as I expanded my world I began to spend more time with other kids. We rode our bicycles together, played baseball and sat for hours on the railroad bridge on Pearl Street talking. When Phil and I played guitars and sang together, his younger brother Bernie practiced playing drums on any solid object he could find. Even my mother, who also played the guitar and sang, sometimes joined in. It was a good time.

There were times when Phil and I argued. I'd cry and he'd cry and then we'd make up. After one argument, he came to make up and gave me a single rose. Phil and I discovered that we were both better together than apart and we began to spend even more time with each other. He had a strength that I drew from and whenever I had problems, he seemed to be able to reassure me that everything would be okay.

I spent time at his house and he spent even more time at my house. By the summer of 1969, Phil and I were talking about getting married and both of our families were concerned that we were too young. Phil repeatedly said that when he turned eighteen, he would do what he wanted and that what he wanted was for us to be married. I agreed. All I wanted was to be with Phil forever.

In July, 1969 my parents stayed with Phil, Bernie and I at my uncle's lakeside camp. We swam and canoed. We fished and took long slow boat rides at sunset. Those two weeks were the happiest time in my life. I belonged in the world again, I loved Phil and he loved me.

On Sunday, August 3, 1969, I went to work with Phil at a local hamburger drive-in, despite being sick with a hard cold. I tried to stay at work but as the day progressed, I became too sick to work. Phil drove me home and I went to bed.

I had a very disturbing dream and when I woke up I told my parents about it. In the dream, Phil and I were sitting in the back seat of a car. I couldn't see who was driving. I looked out the car window to see the body of a large black dog dead in the road. When I turned back to tell Phil, he was gone.

The dream upset me but my parents reassured me that being sick had probably produced the nightmare. That evening Phil and I talked about getting married and we planned to go to Rutland the next day to shop for furniture. He told me that he would pick me up in the morning.

Phil and I lingered at the door that night, kissing and holding each other. I never loved anyone before and Phil had changed my life forever. Even now, forty-three years later, I can still see his face and feel the very powerful emotions I felt that night.

Monday, August 4, 1969 was a gloomy, rainy summer day. I waited for Phil to pick me up so that we could shop for furniture in Rutland, but as the hours passed and he was nowhere in sight, I became worried. I phoned his house and his sister-in-law said she didn't know where he was. Only minutes later, Bernie came to wait with me.

By noon, I knew something was very wrong and I called his house again. His sister-in-law told me that Phil had been in a car accident and he was in the hospital. I couldn't believe it and as I waited to hear any news, I prayed that Phil would be okay.

It was hours later when the news finally came. I watched as my father whispered something to my mother at the door and when I saw the expressions on their faces, I knew. Phil was dead.

Phil was killed in a head on car crash as he drove on Route 7 from Rutland to Brandon. Halfway home he pulled out to pass the car in front of him when another car pulled onto the highway. Phil couldn't stop.

I sobbed in agony. My parents sobbed. I couldn't believe that he was gone. Not Phil, not my Phil, it simply couldn't be happening. Losing Phil was and remains the worst thing to have ever happened in my life and to this day, I have never really gotten over it. I'm convinced that if he had lived, my life would never have been what it was and that very likely I would never have returned to VSH.

The weeks and months after Phil died remain a blur to me. Unknown to me at the time, a diamond engagement ring was found in the dash of Phil's car. No one told me about the ring until forty years later. I never got the ring.

The morning of his death, Phil and his mother Helen had a terrible argument about us getting married. Phil swore at her and left the house angry. Apparently he decided to go to Rutland alone, buy the engagement ring and surprise me with it. Helen spent the rest of her life blaming herself for Phil's accident. Shortly before Helen died, she and I had a chance to talk. Although Helen refused to acknowledge that she kept the ring, she shared several memories she had of Phil and I together. I didn't remember the things she told me, but I was grateful to her for sharing them with me. I hope that Helen found peace when she died. Phil would have wanted it that way.

I managed to hang on for one more year without Phil. A very dark cloud had enveloped me. I attended an outpatient mental health clinic-sponsored group a few times but nothing seemed to help. It was during the visits to this clinic that I first met Kathy Judge, who would play an integral role in my life twenty years later. In September 1970, I had to put down my horse. I became very physically ill a short time later and it was determined that I had hepatitis. Several people in town were diagnosed with the illness. After Phil died, I began taking Mellarill again at the urging of my parents, who didn't want to see me return to VSH again.

I developed severe vomiting and a strange black fur appeared on my tongue. I would learn decades later that I didn't have hepatitis, but that I had a toxic reaction to Mellarill. I was admitted to the Rutland hospital under the care of psychiatrist, Dr. James Todd.

I don't remember anything about Dr. Todd and there are no memories of the short hospitalization in Rutland. The records show that my diagnosis was “anxiety, hysteria, hysterical personality.” Todd ordered drugs including Paraldehyde. It’s noted that I had panic attacks and that I was screaming uncontrollably. Todd didn’t hesitate to send me back to VSH, despite what I learned later were the strong protests by the nursing staff.

Rosemary Johnson and I first met when she worked for Rutland Mental Health and was on staff at the outpatient clinic where I went after Phil died. I spoke with Rosemary when I was investigating VSH and she told me that the Rutland nurses were in an uproar over my transfer to VSH. She said it was clear to the nurses that my reactions were fearful and not in any way dangerous. Todd refused to be swayed and sent me to VSH. My parents also tried to stop my return to VSH but their efforts were in vain.

No one, including me could have imagined the horrors I would be subjected to for the next three years. No one could have imagined that the CIA had already singled me out for experiments and no one, especially me, could have imagined that it would be over 30 years before I would learn the truth about the CIA experiments I was swept into.

THE EXPERIMENT, 1970-1973

"By 1962 and 1963 the general idea we were able to come up with is that brainwashing was largely a process of isolating a human being, keeping him out of contact, putting him out of control, putting him under long stress in relationship to interviewing and interrogation and that they could produce any change that way without having to resort to any kind of esoteric means."

John Gittinger, testimony, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Hearings on CIA Drug and Mind Control Programs, MKULTRA

The VSH records show that upon admission on October 12, 1970, I was covered with a rash, unconscious, suffering from hepatitis and "uncontrollable." The records also note that, "within five minutes the rash disappeared." I was admitted to the medical ward, MS3, where my doctors were George Brooks and Frederick Curlin. The record shows that I was placed in restraints on my arms and legs and that I had severe vomiting.

I now know that I did not have hepatitis but that I had a toxic reaction to Mellarill. Blood tests taken during this time make no mention of hepatitis. My blood was sent to Biochemical Procedures, a Mead Johnson laboratory in California. It would take me until early 2012 to be suspicious of Mead Johnson's involvement with the CIA. I searched for Biochemical Procedures and found several connections to CIA back in 1971, but as of yet I cannot absolutely determine that Mead Johnson was a CIA lab. CIBA and Smith, Kline and French pharmaceutical companies also contracted with VSH-UVM research and all three were identified in declassified CIA documents as CIA contract labs.

The records show that I became violent on MS3, stating that I threw chairs at women patients. Although I have no memory of this incident, I doubt its accuracy. If I did indeed throw chairs, I'm sure I threw them at the VSH nurses, not at the patients. I do remember my transfer from MS3 to the infamous locked ward, 1A.

On October 19, 1970 the record shows that the doctor who signed the seclusion order was Dr. Elizabeth Forsberg - the same German psychiatrist who was part of my care in Mary Fletcher in 1965. She called my mother that night in 1965 to tell her that I was being sent to VSH. Despite the pleas of my mother not to send me to VSH, Forsberg refused.

I was placed in a wooden wheelchair with my hands and legs secured to the chair by strips of cloth. A cloth tie was wrapped around my neck and secured to the back of the chair. They wheeled me into the underground tunnel that ran beneath the entire hospital.

The nurses screamed at me, and one of them pulled my head back by pulling my hair. I have no memory of why they behaved so violently, given the fact of the way I was tied down, I posed no threat to them. I don't remember actually arriving at 1A but I do remember waking up in the seclusion room.

I heard terrible stories about 1A when I was thirteen. It was the most dreaded ward in the hospital and it was considered the end of the line. There was no worse place they could send a patient.

I woke up on the floor, naked, with my arms secured behind my back in leather wristlets. The gnawing, searing pain in my arms, neck and shoulders was impossible to relieve. It didn't matter how I held my body or the position I was in, it was impossible to escape the constant pain the wristlets produced. I heard frightening screams and strange shrieks coming from outside the seclusion room. The record shows I was held in these conditions until October 23, 1970.

Many of the women patients on 1A had been there for years and they were considered to be hopeless. There were old women who shuffled when they walked and middle-aged women who sat on wooden benches all day. There were young women with severe autism and there were severely retarded women who spent their days propped up against the hallway walls. A few of the women howled and screamed almost constantly and others could carry on a conversation. At least a few of the women were only on the ward temporarily, having been sent there in response to behavior that was unacceptable on open wards.

When I obtained the research project documents from VSH-UVM experiments, I realized that these women had been the target VSH population for the use of experimental drugs. In retrospect, I realize that many of the women's conditions were very likely created, if not exacerbated by the unethical experiments conducted by VSH-UVM.

Included in my medical records is a letter written by my mother to Commissioner of Mental Health, Jonathan Leopold after this incident, in which she complains about my treatment and begs him to stop treating me so harshly.

Leopold's letter of response wasn't written until months later and in it he adamantly denied that I had been kept in these conditions. The VSH records contradict Leopold. Apparently the reason I was removed from these conditions was because Dr. Frederick Curlin personally removed me from seclusion and took me off the ward with him.

The record shows that before Curlin took me to Weeks 3, I had already met Dr. Otto Havas, on October 21, 1970. Havas ran the Rutland County ward 10B. I don't remember the first time I met Havas, but I do know I did not like the man.

Havas was Hungarian and both his accent, which was similar to the German accent of Dr. Robert Hugel, from Mary Fletcher, and his uncanny resemblance to Hugel, immediately affected me. Havas had a cruel streak and over the next almost three years, I would learn just how cruel he could be.

By 1970, VSH had implemented regionalization, or the lodging of patients on wards designated by the country they were from; 10B was the Rutland county ward. Weeks 3 held Chittenden county patients and after Curlin brought me to Weeks 3, Havas met with me again.

I have no idea what Havas might have said to me or what he had said during our initial meeting, but I do know, from memory and from the record, what happened when Havas told me that I would be transferred to his 10B ward.

I ran wildly down the hall of Weeks 3 and smashed my head through the pane glass window of the door to the porch. I remember staggering and falling to the floor. There was blood gushing from my face, near my eyes. As I lay on the floor, several male aides ran toward me and I responded by fighting them. While I was pinned to the floor, face first, one male aide kneeled on the back of my thighs and repeatedly smashed my forehead on the floor. This aide would later say that I had kicked him in the groin.

I was again placed in a seclusion room on 1A, with my arms secured in wristlets. I spent three days on 1A before being transferred to 10B. I lasted eight days on Havas's ward before returning to 1A, where I again spent time in seclusion and wristlets.

Because there are no records for the 10B ward except for scattered notations by Havas later in the record, I have only a few scattered memories of being on 10B. One includes a strange incident between Havas and me.

After a morning meeting on the ward, Havas walked up to me and whispered something that I do not recall into my ear. Whatever he said upset me enough that I ran from him and off the ward. Havas chased after me. This would have been highly unusual. Doctors didn't chase patients through the hallways. Aides did that. When I reached the area in front of the dining hall, I inexplicably ran straight into a chalkboard that was propped up in the hall. I could have continued running, but for some reason I crashed head first into the chalkboard.

Havas threw himself on top of me and held me down until the aides came and took me to 1A. It would be a very long time before I unraveled this scenario.

On November 12, 1970, the day of my scheduled Rutland court hearing, which I had requested to be present at, I was taken to 1A at noon and locked in a seclusion room. There is nothing in the record to explain the circumstances that led to this incident.

I went back and forth from 1A to 10B until late December, 1970, when I was secluded and in restraints. Beginning on December 30, I was kept in wristlets and seclusion for up to ten straight days at a time without relief. The records show that on three separate occasions I was kept in wristlets and in seclusion for up to fourteen days at a time. Each time the wristlets were removed, I was placed in a straightjacket.

When in seclusion, I was often kept naked. My arms were secured behind my back day and night. There was no bed. There was no mattress on the floor. There were no blankets. There was no access to a toilet. I remember relieving myself on the floor like an animal and then being forced to remain in the small room with my own excrement. It was a degrading experience and the searing pain caused by the wristlets was constant and maddening.

While in seclusion and wristlets, I began smashing my own head into the door and against the walls. I learned during my investigation that self-injury of this type is common among people who are kept in extended periods of isolation.

The records show that on several occasions, I was left for two and three days at a time with no food or water. From December 30, 1970 until June 21, 1971, I was kept in seclusion and in wristlets and beginning on January 31, 1971, I was placed in a straightjacket. My arms and feet were tied to the bed. I remained this way until June 21st.

December 30, 1970 is a key date. The records show that it was the day I was transferred to 1A where I would remain until the following June.

A doctor's note written by Havas states that, "10B is not chemotherapeutically equipped to handle this patient."

Essentially this means that whatever experimental drugs VSH was preparing to give me would cause me to be unable to be on an open ward.

A computer-generated form dated December 30, 1970 includes biographical and clinical information about me. The information was transmitted via computer to an unknown computer terminal. Over the next several months, additional computer-generated information about me was transmitted via the computer data base system. During my investigation I learned that the computer-generated information was a component of the Rockland Project.

In the 2000's, I would learn that the Rockland Project, a $6.1 million dollar sophisticated computer network that connected to sites in several states, including Washington DC, was a project no one in the state or federal government wanted to talk about.

VSH continued to transmit clinical updates via the computer system throughout my time on the locked ward 1A and again in 1972 after I returned to VSH from four months in Fletcher's Baird 6. The transmissions suddenly end in 1972.

At CIA headquarters located at 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC, the site of John Gittinger's Psychological Assessment Associates, a CIA front, Gittinger kept the tests scores of each subject's PAS, or Personality Assessment System on a computer data base system. Test subjects' biographical information and clinical patient updates were kept with the PAS results. CIA spent "a small fortune" computerizing the PAS data bank. The CIA computer system was a multi-million dollar project, handled by CIA Project OFTEN and installed by the Office of Research and Development in 1968.

Vermont installed a $6.1 million dollar computer data base system in 1968, which became operational late the following year, and which is described in original source documents as "the most sophisticated computer system in the country." VSH had the primary computer terminal on site. Every one of the other states listed as sites for the computer data base system and connected into Vermont's data base were CIA research sites during MKULTRA.

Beginning with a 1959 research project, VSH sent the results of PAS's conducted on child patients directly to John Gittinger at Psychological Assessment Associates, 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC, according to original source documents.

John Gittinger created the PAS for CIA, who relied heavily on these tests, describing them in CIA documents as "the key to the entire clandestine business." PAS is described as being used "to compromise people," "to look for soft spots" and "to get at people." The PAS is described by CIA as "planned destructiveness."

CIA described the primary motive in using the PAS in a 1963 CIA Inspector General Technical Services Division assessment: "PAS objectives are to control, exploit or neutralize. These objectives are innately anti-ethical rather than therapeutic in their intent."

The test was given to VSH child patients and the results were sent directly to Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, according to UVM-VSH documents. Hyde routinely used Gittinger's PAS during his LSD experiments under the covert CIA funding source, Human Ecology. According to author John Marks, "Hundreds of thousands of dollars in Human Ecology grants and even more in Psychological Assessment contracts - all CIA funds - flowed out to verify and expand the PAS."

A bibliography of references on the use of Gittinger's PAS, compiled by Richard York and Barbara Allen, contains three citations for UVM-VSH research projects in 1959, 1965 and 1966. VSH doctors Rupert Chittuck, Superintendent at VSH until 1968, George Brooks, who became Superintendent in 1968, and Donald Eldred, are cited in the bibliography. York notes that the criteria for inclusion on the list required, "explicit and specific mention of the PAS in a paper, article or book."

Richard York is identified in declassified CIA documents and he was an employee of Gittinger's Psychological Assessment Associates. York frequently conducted CIA-funded research with Hyde and UVM-VSH documents identify York as a "Consultant" who visited VSH during the experiments.

The sophisticated computer system was abruptly cancelled in 1973 when CIA Director Richard Helms ordered a halt to all MKULTRA projects and the destruction of all MKULTRA documents. In 1973, after MKULTRA became public, VSH never again conducted active patient research. The federal funding agencies that poured money into VSH research during the MKULTRA years admitted their witting participation in MKULTRA. VSH obtained all of its research monies through these federal agencies.

During my investigation, I filed FOIA's with the National Institute of Mental Health and the United States Public Health Service, both of which funded the Rockland Project. No documents were located. I contacted Rockland State Hospital in Orangeburg, New York for Rockland Project documents. The main processing terminal was located at Rockland State Hospital. No documents were located. I contacted Vermont Department of Health, seeking this information. No one in Vermont government knew anything about the Rockland Project and they were not able to locate documents. Yet I obtained a Vermont Biennial Report that provided details about the Rockland Project.

I contacted former Vermont Governor, Phil Hoff, by phone. Hoff was noted in the documents I had about the Rockland Project as a part of the process that brought the computer data system into VSH. My initial conversation with Hoff was pleasant, but he denied knowing about the Rockland Project and also claimed not to know Robert Hyde or anything about the CIA research in VSH-UVM. The phone conversation ended on a positive note and I thanked him for his time.

Much to my surprise, Hoff phoned me back three separate times. It was clear to me by the third time he called me back, that he was either unwilling or unable to answer my questions about the Rockland Project. Governor Hoff then made a curious statement.

"It's just as if it never existed," Hoff told me.

"But Governor, it did exist. I have the documents that prove it existed," I replied.

"Karen, it's just as if it never existed."

I understood the meaning behind the Governor's cryptic remark. The Rockland Project was a component of the CIA covert research. Almost all documents were destroyed in 1973 when MKULTRA was going to be made public. I am convinced that Vermont officials, past and present, have knowledge of the CIA covert research, allowed it to take place and continue to cover it up.

During the lawsuit, my lawyer Kim Hayden contacted the Vermont State Archivist in an attempt to locate certain documents thought to be in the possession of former Vermont Governors.

Gregory Sanford wrote in his letter to Kim: "We do not have the bulk of the Governor Philip Hoff records; as I noted, he is the only 20th century governor to largely ignore the requirements of 3 V.S.A. 4 and, instead placed his records with Special Collections in the Bailey/Howe Library at the University of Vermont."

The VSH medical record notes that I was seen once a week for several weeks, in my seclusion room, by Patrick Sullivan, from UVM Department of Psychology. There are no notes by Sullivan in the records and I have only one brief memory of seeing him.

Sullivan introduced himself when he entered the seclusion room. He wore a green suit coat and a vest. He had thick brown hair and wore black rim glasses.

He said to me, "You can't be hypnotized."

My memory ends there.

Experts have told me that the quickest and surest way to disarm someone when planning to conduct hypnosis is to tell that person that they cannot be hypnotized. The tactic was apparently successful.

On December 12, 1970, Dr. Otto Havas began writing orders for vaginal suppositories. There is no medical reason noted anywhere in the records for the use of these vaginal suppositories. They would be administered twelve times while I was tied to a bed in a straightjacket. Havas wrote the order to be used at the discretion of the doctor. During these months in seclusion and restraint I was prescribed placebos, along with up to eight different types of drugs at a time. I was subjected to two complete drug washouts.

Dr. Tom Fox explained to me that drug washouts are typical in experiments and a hallmark of experimentation. All drugs would be completely stopped and a period of time would elapse so that the chemicals would leave my system. Then new drugs would be started. I was also administered regular enemas. I have no memory of the administration of the vaginal suppositories or the enemas.

A November, 1970 doctor's orders chart from my VSH medical records lists the following drugs administered to me: Haldol, 2 mg three times a day; Artane, 2 mg three times a day; Reserpine, 2 mg IM, twice a day, PRN; Chloralhydrate, 500 mg, HS; Darvon 60 mg PRN; and Sodium Amytal, 250 mg IM, PRN.

A doctor's orders chart from April-May, 1971 contains the following drugs administered to me: Lithium, 300 mg three times a day; Dilantin, 100 mg three times a day; Elavil, 50 mg twice a day; Sodium Phenobarbital, ½ AMP, IM; Sodium Amytal 250 mg PRN; and Kemadrin, 5 mg twice a day.

In my investigation into the CIA drug and mind control programs at VSH-UVM, I obtained 1957 research project documents using FOIA. These documents showed that VSH-UVM disguised active experimental drugs by using placebos. This insured that no staff or patients would suspect that the placebo contained an active chemical substance. I believe that there was an active experimental chemical in the placebos I was given.

After prolonged periods in wristlets, I was, on several occasions, allowed out of seclusion. I began attacking the aides and I tried to plunge my head through windows on the ward. I was selective in which aides I targeted for violence. Only the aides who had abused me were attacked.

The night nurse on 1A, Alice Laplant, was a tough old Vermonter. She brought me water by the pitcher and allowed me to drink until I was satisfied. Alice removed me from seclusion one night and brought me into the nurse's station where she gave me a cigarette. The nursing supervisor came through the ward and reacted angrily when she saw me sitting with Alice. I remember the conversation between them

"What is she doing here? She is dangerous!"

Alice took a long, slow drag off from her cigarette and replied, "I know I don't have any reason to worry about Karen. Can you say the same?"

The supervisor left the ward. I believe Alice knew that I targeted only the abusive aides and she was right. She never had anything to fear from me. I entered Mary Fletcher very depressed, withdrawn and suicidal and left totally out of control, driven to the extreme by repeated doses of drugs I had severe reactions to. I entered VSH a thirteen-year old kid who was in obvious need of psychiatric help only to be repeatedly subjected to drugs that were known to cause allergic reactions. At eighteen I was no closer to knowing why I had the 1965 breakdown or why I had been sent to VSH in the terrible condition that I arrived there in. In October, 1971 my world had just begun to disintegrate.

I sat on the floor of the seclusion room with my arms bound behind my back in wristlets. I don't know how long I had been there. I cried to God, asking Him what I had done to deserve this. I agonized over the fact that no one in my family had come to take me out of the horror I was trapped in. I wondered how they could leave me like this. I was helpless and sinking deeper into hopelessness.

My mother was frantically trying to see me on 1A, but she was repeatedly told that I refused to see her. The North office supervisor, Ruth Phillips told my mother that the best thing she could do was to go back home and forget about me. My mother was shocked and angry. She had no intention of going away and leaving me, but her attempts to visit me were routinely blocked by VSH staff.

I recall being in seclusion and seeing Ruth Phillips at the door. She told me that no one in my family was coming to take me home and that I would die in VSH. My parents and I were being played by the VSH personnel. VSH couldn't allow anyone to see the conditions I was being kept in and I learned that several people tried to see me, but were turned away.

By April, 1971, rumors about what was happening to me reached Rutland County Mental Health staff members Rosemary Johnson and Judy West. They traveled to VSH as part of their job representing Rutland county patients in VSH. While at VSH they reviewed the medical records of Rutland county patients and visited each patient - except for me.

Rosemary told me in the mid 2000's that she and Judy were not allowed to view my VSH records and that they were prevented from seeing me on 1A. They strongly complained but it got them nowhere. They left VSH unable to see me.

In April, 1971, Judge Henry Black signed the visitor log in VSH North office and tried to see me. VSH refused to allow him to see me. My mother also unsuccessfully tried to see me that day and Judge Black stopped her in the hall and introduced himself. He was visibly angry. Judge Black, who was accompanied by a female attorney, left VSH without either seeing me or apparently following up.

Judge Henry Black was described in an August 4, 1977 front page Rutland Herald article about his death as, "one of Vermont's most influential lawyers." Black was a member of the American Bar Association House of Delegates. He was president of the Vermont Bar in 1957.

How one of Vermont's most influential Judges learned about me is a question I cannot answer. I don't know why he allowed VSH to turn him away or why he didn't follow up. I do know that there was no way that VSH would have allowed him to see me locked in seclusion and bound to a bed in a straightjacket. I remained in those conditions for almost two more months.

In an ironic twist, the obituary of Judge Black on the front page of the August 4, 1977 Rutland Herald, is next to an article entitled, "CIA Experiments Confirmed; Turner Says None Going Now."

During the brief time I wasn't on 1A in the first couple of months I was in VSH in 1970, I met Goddard College students who worked at VSH as part of their studies. One student, Phil Fass and I immediately clicked, although the first time he said his name was Phil, I turned and walked away. Phil was sensitive and intelligent and we enjoyed each other's company, however brief the times we spent together were. When I was placed in seclusion in December, Phil was worried. The longer I remained in seclusion, the more concerned he became.

Over the next several months, Phil contacted Vermont Governor Deane Davis and explained my situation. Davis initially assured Phil that he would attend to the situation and Phil would be able to see me. A follow up contact with the Governor became a dead end. Phil contacted the ACLU and met with lawyers. He stressed that he simply wanted to see me and make sure I was okay. The ACLU told him that if he could find information for them about conditions inside VSH, they would make sure he was able to see me.

A second meeting was scheduled between Phil and the lawyers from ACLU. They met at a local diner. The lawyers told Phil that they had no idea what he was talking about after he asked if he could see me. The two men told him that if he didn't shut up and leave the situation alone, that they would make sure that Phil was locked up in VSH. Phil was stunned.

Phil wrote several letters to the Editor of the Barre Times Argus and the responses, many by personnel at VSH, were harsh and negative toward Phil. They wanted him to shut up and go away. Phil would remain in my life for the next few years, but in 1971, all that he could do was wait.

In April, 1971, I received electric shock treatments or ECT. The ECT chart shows that I had eight treatments and that each treatment involved the use of 30-35 shocks. The standard number of shocks given by medical professionals was one shock maintained for a fraction of a second. The records show the shocks were sustained over a 40-second period of time. On two separate occasions, the ECT failed to produce a seizure and the entire process was repeated.

CIA employed a type of ECT known as Paige-Russell. These ECT's used 35-40 shocks in each session, sustained over a prolonged amount of time. These ECT's produced a regressive state of confusion, disorientation and amnesia. Dr. Ewen Cameron, CIA researcher employed by McGill University and Director of the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal, Canada, used Paige-Russell ECT in his MKULTRA Subproject 68 "depatterning" experiments. CIA and VSH-UVM were longtime research and personnel exchange partners with McGill, and personnel from McGill populated VSH and the Burlington psychiatric units, both before and during the times I was a patient in the hospitals.

I spoke with former Goddard student, Jane Youngbaer in 2009. Jane was a friend of both Phil and I in 1970-1971. Jane described seeing me brought back to 1A after an ECT. She said I did not recognize her and that I was very different after the treatment. Jane was very disturbed by my condition.

On June 8, 1971, Havas made arrangements with neurologist, Dr. Hebert Martin at the Degoesbriand hospital in Burlington, a part of the Mary Fletcher hospital, known in 1971 as the Medical Center Hospital of Vermont, for me to be transferred to the neurology unit on June 21, 1971. Havas notes that I would be sent to the unit for "necessary brain studies and special treatment."

Havas writes that I was given eight ECT treatments in April and that there was no improvement. He also writes that ECT was given in an "effort to tame her."

In the book, Acid Dreams, by Martin Lee and Bruce Shlain, the use of LSD by CIA researchers is described: "LSD would be employed to provoke a reality shift, to break someone down and tame him, to find a locus of anonymity and leave a mark there forever."

The VSH medical referral form signed by Havas on June 18, 1971, lists my diagnosis as Neurosis, Hysterical, Dissociative Type and Personality Disorder, Schizoid. Drug sensitivities are listed as Penicillin, Darvon, Thorazine, Compazine, Tofranil and Mellarill. Noted as drugs currently prescribed are Mysoline and Thorazine.

Despite the pleas by my mother to Havas and other VSH doctors for information on my condition and for access to me, VSH did not inform my parents about my transfer to the Burlington hospital until June 21.

On June 18, 1971 the record shows that Havas conducted four ECT's. The record appears to have been written over showing 4 treatments. The number 6 is visible under the number 4. That night the doctor on call, Dr. Fontaine, treated eye and facial injuries I suffered. Dr. Fontaine was from McGill and her name appears again in the Baird 6 records in July of 1971.

ECT is known to cause amnesia and I believe that Havas conducted the treatments not only as part of the experiment, but also to insure that my memories of 1A were gone. For the most part, he was successful.

I woke up lying on a mattress in a seclusion room. I wasn't wearing wristlets. I tried to get up, but I couldn't. Nurses' aides brought me out of the seclusion room where Dr. Clare O`Shea conducted a neurological exam. O'Shea was the doctor Curlin brought me to on Weeks 3 after he removed me from seclusion in October, 1970

I was showered, dressed and placed in wristlets, with my arms in front of my body. 1A head nurse, Peggy Raymond and three other VSH aides accompanied me to a state-owned vehicle. Peggy gave me a cigarette. The car exited the grounds of VSH and pulled onto Interstate 89. It was June 21, 1971.

I remember looking out of the window of the car as it headed toward Burlington. The sky was a crystal clear blue, the sun was out and the pastureland and fields were a deep, rich green. I began to cry. I was overwhelmed by the knowledge that I had made it out of that terrible place alive. I stared out of the car window, smoked my cigarette and thanked God.

The next memory I have is of walking into the admission office at the Degoesbriand hospital. My arms were secured in leather wristlets, and I was accompanied by two VSH male aides and two VSH female aides. The woman conducting the admission suddenly left her chair and returned with a man who ordered the VSH aides to remove the wristlets and leave the premises. People sitting in the admission area seemed to react negatively to the event. I wondered what I had done to upset people.

I have few memories of the almost three weeks on the neurology unit. The records show that I was in a regressed child-like state and that I referred to myself, not as Karen, but as Skippy. The nurses began calling me Skippy. I would later say that Karen had died in VSH. I was prescribed Thorazine and Stelazine, despite a long-noted history of being allergic to the drugs.

CIA documents may help explain why, despite my repeated, well-documented allergic reactions to Thorazine and other phenothiazine drugs, VSH, Degoesbriand and Baird 6 doctors prescribed the drugs throughout the years I was a patient in the hospitals.

In the book, The C.I.A. Doctors: Human Rights Violations by American Psychiatrists, Dr. Colin Ross refers to CIA ARTICHOKE documents. ARTICHOKE was a CIA research program, the forerunner of MKULTRA. One of those documents reads:

"Still problematic is the use of drugs for deconditioning. Chlorapromazine (Thorazine) ought theoretically to have some value…It may be that this is exactly what we are looking for; perhaps it could decondition an enemy agent out of his simulated personality and back to his real one."

I was given a psychological test in which I was apparently not very cooperative. The record shows that I refused to use both hands during portions of the tests because I was holding a stuffed animal. The psychologist conducting the test was clearly checking my memory. It's noted that although I complained about my treatment in VSH, when pressed for details, I couldn't provide any.

Several EEG's were conducted. During one, I was placed in a strange room with walls on all four sides that looked like plastic. Suddenly as I lay hooked up to EEG leads, a man rushed into the room and broke a glass bottle on the floor. I reacted by crying.

The record states that, "The patient was purposefully upset by the breaking of the bottle."

On June 28, the records show that Dr. Charles Poser ordered an EEG with Metrazol activation. Prior to the EEG I was given phenobarbital. The record shows that I was given 1800 mg of Metrazol. I had hallucinations. I complained that I was in severe physical pain. Apparently I recognized that I was, in fact, hallucinating and I accused the doctors of giving me drugs that caused me to hallucinate. The doctor refused to give me more than 1800 mg of Metrazol, noting that I had an unusual tolerance to the drug. No seizure was produced.

Metrazol is described in declassified CIA documents as being used on POW's in Soviet gulags.

It causes excruciating physical and psychological pain, so severe that a POW is said to, "Say or do anything to avoid another dose of the drug."

CIA documents describe the effects of Metrazol and the CIA reason for using it. In his book, The C.I.A. Doctors, Dr. Colin Ross refers to CIA documents that read:

"Metrazol, which has been very useful in shock therapy, is no longer popular because, for one thing it produces feelings of overwhelming terror and doom prior to the convulsion. But terror, anxiety, worry would be valuable for many purposes from our point of view."

Metrazol was used in MKULTRA to produce amnesia and as a way to negate the effects of LSD. A pre-treatment of phenobarbital was routine. The use of Metrazol was stopped throughout most of the world in the 1950's because of the excruciating effects it produced. Yet, in 1971, in the Degoesbriand hospital, in Burlington, Vermont, a nineteen-year old patient who had just been removed from almost seven months in seclusion and restraint was administered 1800 mg of Metrazol. I have no memory of the Metrazol activation and learned of it only when I obtained my medical records in 1997.

The record shows that the hallucinations continued after I returned to my room. I complained to the nurses that I heard "men in my head."

The record shows a notation that I was suffering from "hallucinatory effects of Metrazol."

That night I went into the bathroom and tried to set myself on fire.

A psychiatric consultation was ordered and Dr. Charles Ravaris from Baird 6, the Fletcher hospital inpatient psychiatric unit visited me. It was decided that I would be moved to Baird 6 and on July 2, 1971, I was taken to the psychiatric unit.

I can only imagine that when I was transferred from the brutal conditions in VSH to the Burlington hospitals, that I must have believed that I was finally safe. I suspect that after the administration of the Metrazol, I understood that I was not safe in the new hospital. During my investigation I obtained documents that show that I was very definitely not safe.

Documents obtained from the Department of Energy include its list of participants in the Human Radiation Experiments; they show that, in 1955, the University of Vermont College of Medicine entered into a contract with the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine, in Texas. UVM Department of Pharmacology handled the research. The Human Radiation Experiments were the forerunner of the CIA MKULTRA experiments. The Department of Energy list of participants includes a designation for UVM for conducting behavioral experiments. Robert Hyde is named as a participant by DOE.

In 1955, the Chief Scientist at the School of Aviation Medicine was Hubertus Strughold, former Chief Scientist for Research at the Dachau concentration camp in Nazi Germany. Strughold's Dachau experiments were unspeakably horrific and caused the agonizing deaths of thousands of concentration camp victims.

Strughold conducted experiments using drugs and mind control in Dachau and is widely regarded as having been the first to do so. Strughold was brought into the United States after WWII through the Paperclip Project, which allowed certain Nazi war criminals to work for the American government.

The SAM-UVM contract grant, AF 18 (604)1093 was funded in part by the DOE, yet in the 2000's, DOE claimed to have no documents. UVM's Department of Pharmacology and VSH went on to conduct experiments using VSH patients. VSH secured a contract for the drugs, Thorazine and Reserpine, as well as other experimental drugs used in their research from Smith, Kline and French pharmaceutical company. Another contract was secured with CIBA and later a third contract was obtained with Mead Johnson.

In 1955, the CIA MKULTRA program was well underway at Boston Psychopathic Hospital where Robert Hyde conducted LSD and mind control experiments. VSH's research and exchange program with Boston Psychopathic was also well underway. UVM-VSH launched "schizophrenic rehabilitation" in 1955.

In 1961, UVM's first Chairman of the newly created Department of Psychiatry was Dr. Thomas Boag. Boag came to the UVM position from his position as Assistant Director to Dr. Ewen Cameron at McGill and the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal, Canada. Boag's appointment to the position at UVM was reported in a 1961 American Psychiatric Association bulletin. Cameron was actively conducting CIA drug and mind control experiments at both Canadian institutions beginning in the 1950's. In 1959, when VSH-UVM administered experimental drugs to unwitting VSH patients as a part of the schizophrenic rehabilitation project, Dr. George Brooks traveled to the Allan Memorial Institute to present his paper on VSH experiences with schizophrenics.

In a search of Boag's research, I found that Boag had conducted numerous experiments using LSD with Dr. Paul Maclean. Maclean was a Boston neurophysiologist. Boag's position as UVM Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry, and UVM's use of Special Interrogations, LSD, mescaline and other experimental methods and agents, certainly helped facilitate the covert research conducted at UVM, VSH and the Burlington hospitals during the 1960's and early 1970's.

A 1963-1966 VSH-UVM research project, "Programmed Instruction with Disturbed Students," lists Boag, from UVM's College Of Medicine and George Brooks from VSH as the primary researchers. This project used the PAS and sent the results of the tests on child patients directly to John Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC. The December, 1965 PAS conducted on me in VSH would have been sent to Gittinger.

In 1965, I have a faint memory of doing testing, some of which involved manual dexterity tests. I remember having my photograph taken. I also recall asking why the other patients didn't have their photographs taken and I was told that the other patients had already been photographed. No photo was included in my medical records. It's not a stretch for me to believe that my photograph landed on Gittinger's desk with my PAS.

Boag wasn't the only Ewen Cameron associate involved in UVM-VSH research. Dr. Heinz Lehmann, who would become Chairman of the Department of Psychology at McGill in 1971, is cited in UVM-VSH research documents. Two other Cameron Associates, Dr. Robert Malmo and Dr. Charles Shagrass are also cited in UVM-VSH research project documents.

In 1956, Brooks received the first fellowship from Smith, Kline and French and was sponsored by the drug company to spend six months on site at Boston Psychopathic Hospital. He was there for "special drug studies."

It's interesting to note that CIA academic funding came through and was paid through the use of "special study contracts" awarded through the use of CIA-connected foundations and groups. Smith, Kline and French Pharmaceuticals is identified in declassified CIA documents as providing drugs to CIA.

At the Burlington hospitals, where UVM doctors and medical students rotated to the units as well as to VSH, doctors from McGill populated all three hospitals. I spoke with several former staff members of Baird 6, who described McGill psychiatrists as routinely participating in the care of patients. One former staff member said that the McGill psychiatrists were simply part of the medical staff.

In 1955, Eric Wittkower, from McGill, created a CIA front group known as Transcultural Psychiatry. Wittkower's research is cited by VSH-UVM in the 1961 book, The Vermont Story, written about the VSH-UVM schizophrenic rehabilitation project.

A citation in the 1961 book, The Vermont Story was under the name of Eric Wittkower. The citation was for a conference held in Zurich, Switzerland on September 7, 1957. A Symposium on the Chemical Concepts of Psychosis was held in Zurich, Switzerland, September 1-7, 1957. A corresponding article was included in a 1958 book edited by Max Rinkel and Herman Denber - both CIA-LSD researchers. Rinkel is cited in UVM-VSH documents and Denber published with and conducted research with George Brooks.

Participants in the Symposium included CIA and LSD researchers, Paul Hoch, Hudson Hoagland, Abram Hoffer, Amedeo Marrazzi and Humphrey Osmond. These men were part of the CIA network that conducted LSD, brain implant and other mind control research, according to Dr. Colin Ross.

Hoch edited and published UVM-VSH research papers. Rinkel is cited in UVM-VSH documents and conducted extensive LSD research with Hyde. Hoagland conducted CIA-LSD research with Hyde at Worcester. Marrazzi worked out of Rockland State Hospital in New York, another UVM-VSH affiliate, under an Army contract.

During the summer of 1971, when I was a patient on Baird 6, a member of Transcultural Psychiatry, Dr. Thomas Chiu, was onsite. Chiu worked out of UVM's Department of Psychology. I have no memory of Chiu and learned of him through a former Baird 6 staff member. It's interesting to me that I have no memory of Chiu, who was on site at Baird 6 during the full four months that I was there. I can recall most of the doctors and the nurses on the unit.

For years in therapy with Kathy Judge, I told her numerous times before I obtained my medical records, that I had unexplained negative feelings about Chinese people. To my knowledge, I had never met a Chinese person and I had no reason to feel anything negative toward the Chinese.

After my investigation into CIA experiments in Vermont, Kathy and I spoke about the fact that Chiu was on site at Baird 6 and that he appears to be someone I cannot recall. Chiu, as a member of a CIA front group, has made me suspicious that I very well may have had contact with him and that it is no coincidence that I can't remember him.

Chiu worked out of UVM's Department of Psychology and he had been previously advised by Dr. Henry Murray, a well-known Harvard CIA researcher According to author Alston Chase in his book, A Mind For Murder, written about Unabomber Ted Kaczynski, Murray obtained LSD from Robert Hyde and conducted drug and mind control experiments on Kaczynski.

Author H.P. Albarelli, Jr. wrote in his book, A Terrible Mistake, that during the 1960's and early 1970's, UVM conducted drug and mind control research. CIA Director of Research and Robert Hyde's CIA boss, Sidney Gottlieb, stated in an interview that UVM "conducted Special Interrogations." Gottlieb also said that the CIA cover front groups, Human Ecology and Josiah P. Macy, Jr. Foundation "may have funded" UVM's research.

Special interrogations involved the use of electric shock treatments, chemical shock treatments including Metrazol, sensory deprivation, drugs such as LSD and mescaline, hypnosis and the creation of amnesia. In the 2000's, UVM denied a FOIA request I made about the SAM, LSD and mind control experiments. UVM claimed to have no documents or knowledge of CIA drug and mind control research and denied ever using unwitting subjects in their research. Documents I obtained contradict UVM's claims.

According to H.P. Albarelli Jr.:

"CIA's BLUEBIRD project focused almost exclusively on situations deemed "special interrogations" - or SI - in which the quick and complete inducing of full disclosure was paramount. Documents from the project's earliest meetings reveal a laundry list of methods including: heroin, morphine, polygraph, and electric shock, the use of "mechanical aids," lobotomies, hypnotism, fatigue, isolation, sensory deprivation and torture."

"BLUEBIRD laid the foundation for all of the CIA psychological manipulation and mind control programs to come."

BLUEBIRD was renamed ARTICHOKE in 1951. ARTICHOKE and MKULTRA ran alongside each other. In Montreal, in 1957, Ewen Cameron began conducting CIA funded brainwashing experiments known as depatterning.

According to John Marks, the President of Human Ecology, Dr. Harold Wolff, was "offered CIA access to everything in its files on threats, coercion, imprisonment, isolation, deprivation, humiliation, torture, brainwashing, black psychiatry, hypnosis and a combination of these with or without chemical agents."

"People with specific skills for special ARTICHOKE projects had been recruited from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, FDA, HEW and NIH…ARTICHOKE officials attempted to forge collaborative lines with Army, Navy and Air Force."

UVM secured a research contract with the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine in 1955. The contract was issued to UVM Department of Pharmacology.

The book, A Father, A Son and the CIA, by Harvey Weinstein, notes that:

"The Air Force was interested in sensory deprivation with space flights in mind. They sponsored numerous research projects through Human Ecology…Gittinger helped connect Cameron and McGill to the Air Force interest in brainwashing, sensory deprivation and isolation research."

In 1971, Baird 6 was a newly built psychiatric unit and I walked onto the unit to find the nursing staff dressed in regular street clothing. One of the nurses told me that my doctor was the "best looking doctor in the hospital." Dr. Richard Ellison was indeed a handsome man and as I would learn over the time that he was my doctor, he was also a very kind, caring psychiatrist. Ellison was still a medical resident physician. His superiors were co-Chairmen of the Baird 6 unit, Dr. Richard Lippincott and Dr. Charles Ravaris. Baird 6 head nurse, Karen Esty would become a person I would not only fondly remember, but who went out of her way to try to help me.

My first few weeks on Baird 6 are pretty much a blur. I was manic after only a day on the new unit and unable to settle down long enough to sleep. I could eat when I was hungry and I could drink soda and coffee. I could smoke cigarettes, sit in comfortable chairs, watch television and actually talk to other people. I could walk the hallway without being bound in wristlets or secluded in a locked room. I could sleep in a bed with sheets and blankets and not on the bare floor of a seclusion room. I'm sure it must have been like heaven for me.

Former staff at Baird 6 told me during my investigation that they, as nurses were not told that I had been kept in the conditions I was kept in VSH. Baird 6 nurses did not know that I had spent almost seven months in a straightjacket. They also said that this information was kept out of my patient chart. My medical records support their assertions and contain no mention of the long seclusion and restraint in VSH.

Also withheld from the Baird 6 nurses, was the fact that at the age of thirteen, I had been a patient in the Mary Fletcher psychiatric unit. The former Baird 6 staff told me that the information kept from them would have been vital patient information and information normally provided to the nursing staff. They expressed their shock and were very disturbed to learn that the information had been kept from them. I also learned that, in 1965, McGill psychiatrists were also on site at the Burlington hospital.

My diagnosis when I became a patient on Baird 6 was once again shifted upon admission to the unit, back to schizophrenic, despite the previously noted diagnosis of hysteria, dissociative and schizoid. The former Baird 6 staff members described for me the frequent staff conversations in 1971 about my diagnosis. The staff recognized that I was dissociative and were split as to whether or not I was a multiple personality.

When I was able to speak with one of the Baird 6 staff in the 2000's, her response to learning that I was diagnosed as a multiple personality, was, "I'm not surprised at all. Most of us thought so in 1971."

On each page of my Baird 6 medical records my name is noted as "Skippy." The staff called me by this name, as did the doctors. Beginning with my admission to the neurology unit on June 21, 1971 and throughout the four months I spent on Baird 6, it appears that I was no longer Karen.

After learning that I had been an unwitting CIA experimental subject and learning the details of the research I was subjected to, valid questions surfaced. Did the researchers create a new personality in VSH? Did they create more than one personality? I entered VSH locked ward 1A as Karen and walked out of the locked ward eight months later referring to myself by another name. This name was accepted without question by the Burlington doctors and used in my medical records. I learned later that in the CIA's BLUEBIRD and ARTICHOKE mind control programs, new personalities and amnesia were created in subjects known to be dissociative. In the summer of 1971, the experiment continued.

The Baird 6 records show that over the course of the four months I was a patient, painkillers were prescribed. There are nurses' notes describing my complaints about pain in my head, jaws and face. The pain was apparently severe. No cause for the pain is noted. The VSH drug charts also show that during my time in seclusion, painkillers were given on a regular basis.

During the 1997 lawsuit years, a small scar was discovered behind my right ear. A plastic surgeon described the scar as "surgical." Other doctors I consulted agreed that the scar was surgical. There is nothing in my medical records that shows any surgical procedure or notes any reason for a surgical procedure to have been done.

In 2009, while brushing my teeth, I spit into the sink what I initially thought was a tooth filling. When I examined it, I quickly realized that the object was not a filling. My doctor examined the object and examined the inside of my mouth. On the inside right cheek was a small slit. My doctors referred me to an Ear, Nose and Throat specialist who also saw the small slit in my cheek. The specialist jokingly asked me if I had been kidnapped by aliens. I answered that it wasn't aliens.

The small slit inside the cheek of my mouth turned into what looked like an injection site and eventually disappeared. Another doctor told me that the object could not have been part of a dental procedure. If it had been, the object would have emerged from my gums, not from my cheek. He agreed that a surgical procedure had likely been conducted.

In 2009, I gave the object to Dr. Colin Ross, who examined it under a powerful microscope. He concluded that the object appeared to be rock, not metal and contained no electronic or computerized components. How the object got onto my mouth and why I had a surgical slit inside of my mouth, and behind my ear, remains unknown. The scar behind my ear remains clearly visible upon inspection.

The Baird 6 records show that I was child-like at times and then at other times openly defiant and angry. I frequently stormed around bitterly complaining about VSH. The nurses wrote in the records that there was a coordinated plan to discourage me from talking about VSH and it's clear from the records that they did so. They also asked me during these times to be specific about my complaints about VSH. I couldn't be specific. It's very clear that I could not remember.

I also had unexplained episodes where I ran head first into walls, doors or people. These episodes appear to be similar to the VSH 10B episode when I ran head first into the chalkboard trying to get away from Havas. Several EEG's were done as well as skull x-rays. The record also shows that Dr. Fontaine, the McGill psychiatrist who treated my eye and facial injuries in VSH, saw me on Baird 6 at least two times. It looks like she was the doctor on call. The records also show that I attempted suicide on several occasions, usually cutting my wrist. It's also clear from the records that there was a concerted effort by the psychiatrists to have me accept the fact that I was "schizophrenic." I fought the diagnosis.

One EEG stands out. The records show that I was taken across the campus grounds with a medical student I was fond of. We stopped and had ice cream and then he took me for the EEG. He wrote that I immediately changed. My mood went from happy and enjoying myself to angry, unresponsive to him and finally totally mute.

When reading the reference to the EEG, I wondered why it was necessary to exit the Fletcher hospital and cross the "campus" to have the EEG. Was this EEG done in the lab of UVM College of Medicine? The Fletcher hospital had its EEG lab on site inside of the hospital. There was no reason to leave the hospital grounds.

I now know that I would have had reasons to be very frightened to have an EEG after the terrible effects of the Metrazol activation done in Degoesbriand. There would be another similar reaction to an EEG later in my life as well.

The Baird 6 nurse's notes contain descriptions of my condition and quotes from me on July 15, 1971. The record notes that I said I felt like, "clawing my eyes out." The record notes that I reported hearing a "whisper telling me to do things" and that I was unable to remember what these things were.

On August 28, 1971, the record shows that I complained of "sensations of something crawling all over her…that her arms and shoulders weren't hers…that she didn't feel like herself and that the cigarette in her fingers felt as thin as a piece of paper."

On August 29, 1971 the record shows that I was, "hyperventilating, frightened…apparently in great distress and tearful."

The record goes on to describe that I had, " feelings of depersonalization…detached from self, hands look funny, not herself… visual hallucinations, tactile hallucinations, things crawling up legs, visual distortions, hallucinations, things look bigger and smaller, rain falling from under the table…most preoccupied with going completely crazy…appears very frightened and out of control."

The record notes that I felt like I was losing control and that I was afraid I would remain this way forever.

Many of the symptoms described in the Baird 6 chart match symptoms reported by people who have been given LSD. In the book by CIA researcher, Harold Abramson, The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy, symptoms reported after taking LSD include quotes by patients:

"One half of my body feels different from the other half;" "It's as if half of my body is split off and independent of the rest;" "Parts of my body don't seem to belong to me;" "My hands and feet feel peculiar;" "Objects seem superimposed…in a strange fluid fashion." "My body seems to be doing strange things all on its own; changing size, growing younger and older;" "I have a fear that I might become permanently insane;" and "I have to struggle to keep things in control."

Phil Fass learned I was on Baird 6 and visited frequently. I liked Phil. He was an excellent friend to me and as we spent more time together, I began to fear that closeness. Phil wanted our relationship to grow and I realized that he felt more for me than I did for him. I might have been able to love him if things had been different, if I hadn't lost my Phil Cram and if all the terrible things that had happened to me hadn't happened. Phil and I remained in contact for a while longer.

I grew particularly close to head nurse Karen Esty. She tried hard to help me, as did most of the Baird 6 nurses. I was trying as hard as I knew how to be well, but my problems were overwhelming. Karen hung in with me.

It's notable that the Baird 6 records show no plan to help me transition out of the unit. There are no plans for my discharge or for where I would go when I left the Baird 6 unit.

In August, I was given ECT treatments. The chart shows that in one ECT I had a "prolonged recovery of respiration." In another ECT I stopped breathing for five minutes and had to be medically supported to breathe. The records show I expressed a significant amount of fear at having the ECT treatments, saying that they had made me worse before.

In October of 1971, a female patient confined to a wheelchair became the focus of most of the patients including me. She was a sweet person who was conflicted about going home on a weekend pass. She was suicidal and we were all worried about her. A few years before, she jumped from a sixth floor window of the Mary Fletcher hospital and ended up in a wheelchair. I vividly recall her promise to us that she would not do anything to harm herself.

It was Sunday morning and it was unusual for the doctors and the staff to call a meeting. We all gathered in the day room and were told that the woman we had all worried would harm herself, had committed suicide. The news hit everyone hard.

For reasons I cannot explain, the next day I went to the stairwell, opened a window and was preparing to jump when Dr. Ellison entered the stairwell and grabbed me. The incident was witnessed by a nurse from another floor.

I recall Dr. Ellison telling me, "You could have done anything else except this."

The hospital couldn't keep me on Baird 6 after this incident and when I was told that I would have to go back to VSH, whatever hope I had managed to find for myself, slipped away. My records note that I said numerous times over the four months I was on Baird 6 that I would rather be dead than ever go back to VSH.

I expected to be immediately transferred to VSH and as one day passed, then two days and then three days, I asked what the hold up was. I figured it would be easier to just get it over with. I never got an answer about the reason for the delay.

Karen Esty told me that I was going to be placed on Weeks 3 in VSH and that in January, Dr. Ellison would be the doctor on Weeks 3. She asked me to hold on until he came. I was familiar with Weeks 3. It was nothing like 10B and certainly nothing like 1A. I told her I would hang on until Dr. Ellison came. Karen and several of the nurses promised that they would visit me and the record shows that they kept their promises.

During my investigation, I learned from a former psychiatrist on Baird 6 the details of a behind-the-scenes arrangement that took place regarding my transfer back to VSH. The administrator of the Burlington hospital was in poor health and in his absence, Dr. Hans Huessy took over the position.

Huessy made arrangements with VSH and Superintendent George Brooks that I would be placed on the Chittenden county ward Weeks 3, which was overseen by UVM and the Burlington hospital. The arrangement included a provision that I would not be placed back on Havas' ward and that Havas would have no contact with me while I was a patient in VSH. Brooks and VSH agreed to the arrangement. It was a very unusual set of circumstances and it would take me years after I began my investigation to fully understand what it all really meant.

During my investigation of CIA MKULTRA, I was able to cultivate reliable sources of information from people who were on site at the three Vermont hospitals and from others who had valuable information that I never would have been able to find in documents.

I learned disturbing information about Dr. Curlin and I followed up on this information by filing a Vermont Records Act request in 2008. I requested documents regarding his dismissal as Assistant Superintendent from VSH. In August 1971, my source told me that Curlin was told by Superintendent George Brooks to leave VSH so as not to cause "a mess." Brooks had been informed that Curlin had sexual contact with female patients.

My Vermont Records request asked for documents held by the State in regards to the incident with Curlin. I spoke with an Assistant Attorney General about the matter and I learned, much to my shock, that it was assumed by the Attorney General's Office that I knew that Curlin had admitted "sexual misconduct" with me in VSH. I learned that Curlin's personnel records were made available to my former lawyer Alan George during the lawsuit and that in the closing of the lawsuit was an admission by Curlin about "sexual misconduct."

I told the Assistant Attorney General that I was never told about this and that I would speak with my former lawyer. Alan denied that he was provided Curlin's personnel records and that Curlin's admission was in the closing. I phoned the Attorney General's office again and told him what my former lawyer said.

"Your lawyer is a liar!" the Assistant Attorney General told me.

I initially defended Alan. I couldn't believe that he would have kept such important information from me. The Assistant Attorney General told me during our first conversation that he spoke with the lawyer who defended Curlin during the lawsuit and he stated that Curlin's admission was in the closing of the lawsuit.

The Assistant Attorney General denied saying these things to me during our second phone call, but he did tell me that he had read the closing and Curlin's admission of "sexual misconduct" was in the documents.

I decided not to challenge the State of Vermont and I withdrew my appeal on the records request. I stated that there was a "mutual misunderstanding" between the Assistant Attorney General and myself. The last thing I wanted was to get tangled up in any type of struggle with the State of Vermont again.

I went to the Rutland court and spoke with the court clerk who told me that when there is a settlement between the sides in a lawsuit, the details of the closing remain between the lawyers and are not part of the official court documents.

Suddenly things made sense to me. When the State offered me three times the amount they initially offered to settle after I ended the lawsuit, I repeatedly asked Alan why they would even pay me a single cent. They didn't have to because I ended the suit. His answer was only to take the money.

I was absolutely shocked that my lawyer would have kept the information about Curlin from me. It made no sense to me and it made no sense to Kathy. What did make sense to me was that Curlin insured that I would never come back on him in another lawsuit by paying me money. He knew that eventually I would find out about his "sexual misconduct." I was left to surmise that this was why the State paid me the amount they finally did.

Alan denied knowing about Curlin's admission. I asked him if he had ever been threatened during my lawsuit and he denied that he had. When I asked him to send the lawsuit documents to my current lawyer, a great deal of the documents had been " lost."

During the lawsuit one lawyer made a startling claim. He stated that, "People have been murdered over this before!"

I thought about his revelation and things really began to make sense to me, despite the steadfast denials by my former lawyer.

I will never know for sure what was actually in the closing of the lawsuit. I was never provided a copy of the closing. The information I have been able to obtain from several reliable sources tells what I need to know.

Curlin and Havas were friends, I learned from sources who knew them both. Even Curlin told me on the phone during the lawsuit that he and Havas were friends. Havas is the doctor who wrote the orders for vaginal suppositories when I was on 1A and his behavior with me in VSH is suspect at best. The behind-the-scenes arrangements between the Fletcher hospital and VSH to keep Havas away from me in 1971 also raise disturbing questions.

VSH Superintendent George Brooks very clearly knew that Curlin was involved in sexual misconduct, apparently with me. Brooks did not want a "mess" for VSH or for the covert CIA experiments being conducted at VSH-UVM. Any investigation into VSH would have put the CIA project in jeopardy. The last thing VSH wanted was a nasty sex scandal. If the information I received from multiple sources is true, Brooks covered up a crime.

It appears as if the Fletcher hospital was also privy to information about Havas. Whatever they knew caused them to make special arrangements with VSH to insure that Havas had no contact with me in VSH. The behavior of Havas during the 1970-1971 months he was my doctor raise disturbing questions as to his involvement in sexual misconduct as well. If the Fletcher hospital did in fact know anything about sexual misconduct by VSH doctors, they too committed a crime by covering it up. Havas wrote the orders for vaginal suppositories and they were used twelve times between December, 1970 and May, 1971.

Did Havas write the orders for Curlin or was Havas also involved in "sexual misconduct?" It appears as though I will never know for sure. But my medical records and the valuable information provided to me by sources in positions to know the truth, tell a story.

I realized, in 2008, that someone working at VSH had to have told Brooks about Curlin and me. It's obvious that Curlin didn't bring the information to Brooks, so someone out there saw something and knows even more. It's also clear to me that Curlin knew I could not remember, when no allegations of sexual misconduct were included in the lawsuit I filed.

It's difficult to realize that if the information about Curlin is true, personnel in two Vermont hospitals kept it covered up. The Vermont Attorney General's office apparently knew about Curlin, if the information I obtained is accurate, and they too kept it covered up. In 1971, all that mattered to VSH, UVM and the participating Burlington hospitals and personnel, was the experiment. In October, 1971, I returned to VSH where the medical records and my memory show that the experiment continued.

I was admitted to Weeks 3 on October 29, 1971 where charge nurse, Viola Littlejohn got me settled in. I'd known Littlejohn since I was thirteen. She was the nurse on duty the first night I was in VSH in 1965. Littlejohn was someone I trusted and thought highly of. She was a tough, no nonsense woman with a heart of gold. She liked me and I always got along well with her. I always knew where I stood with Littlejohn. I liked the fact that she had no hidden agenda. If she had something to say, she said it. She was one of the very few VSH staff I had positive feelings about.

Being back in VSH hit me hard. I was very depressed and overwhelmed by feelings of despair. It seemed that I would never leave the hospital. Somehow, I kept going. I waited for Dr. Ellison to come in January and when he finally arrived, I hoped that maybe he and I could work toward getting me out of the hospital. Several Baird 6 nurses, including Karen Esty visited me on Weeks 3 to provide support. I appreciated their visits.

Dr. Ellison encouraged me to study for my GED and he started helping me study. I was enrolled in the VSH school working toward my high school diploma. In addition, Phil Fass kept in touch, sometimes in person and other times by phone. Phil wanted me to move to New Jersey where he lived. I was hesitant, but we remained in contact for several months until for reasons I cannot recall, Phil stopped contacting me. It's possible I asked him to stop, but I don't know for sure.

While I was in Baird 6, I began to escape the hospital and the first time I did, raises questions. I was in a room directly across from the nurses' station under close observation. During the middle of the night, dressed in nightclothes, I managed to somehow leave the observation room, take an elevator down to the main floor and leave the hospital grounds, all the while unnoticed by anyone. I was found by a police officer downtown in Burlington. He returned me to Baird 6.

I began to escape from VSH in the fall of 1971 and each time I escaped I was successful. Waterbury, where VSH was located, is a small town. Many VSH staff reside on the same streets I took to make my way to the Interstate. There were even several instances when I escaped that I encountered the Waterbury Chief of Police on my way to the Interstate. He used to wave and say hello. He called me by name.

I stuck out my thumb and got a ride quickly. I was headed toward Waitsfield on Route 100. I noticed that the back seat of the car was filled with camera equipment of all kinds. I asked the man driving the car about it. He said he was a photographer. I told him where I was from and we talked for miles. When we got to the junction of the road I told him that I wanted to get out.

"I'm going out of the country on a job. Do you want to come with me?" he asked.

I was surprised by his offer, but I declined, saying I'd go back to VSH.

The man said he would turn his car around and drive me all the way back to VSH and when we arrived in the VSH parking lot, he extended his offer again.

"Are you sure you don't want to come with me?"

Again I declined his offer and as I watched him drive away, I thought that the entire incident was a little strange. I told no one in VSH about it.

I left VSH one night and hitchhiked on Route 100. I was picked up quickly by a priest who drove me as far as Waitsfield, where I asked him to let me out of the car. It was very rural and there were no streetlights. I couldn't see my hand in front of my face as I tried to walk. I finally went to a house where I told the people inside where I was from. They called VSH and I was returned to the hospital.

The next day, the same priest came up to me on Weeks 3. I asked him what he was doing there and he told me that he was the priest at VSH. I knew this was not true because I knew the priest at VSH. The man who claimed to be a priest left the ward and I never saw him again. Whoever he was, he wasn't a priest.

I escaped again. I would have been very aware of the fact that escaping VSH brought consequences, yet I escaped time after time for reasons I cannot explain. The records note the escapes but show nothing that might explain the reasons why I might have run.

I easily slipped out of the hospital, made my way through the streets of Waterbury and stood again on the Interstate. I looked closely at the young man who stopped to give me a ride. He was blond, with a short, military-styled haircut. I noticed he wore a pale yellow, button-down collar, short sleeve shirt. I decided that he looked safe and I got into the car.

He drove on Interstate 89 as far as the exit to Richmond and when he took the exit off the Interstate and began driving on the secondary road, I asked him why. He didn't answer me. He pulled his car off from Route 2 and when he began driving on a dirt road, I became very uneasy. Several miles up the dirt road he pulled down into a logging road and I knew I was in danger. He clearly knew where he was going.

He stopped the car at the bottom of a very steep hill, at the end of a logging road and turned off the engine. The area he parked in was remote and secluded.

He never looked at me and then said, "Get out of the car."

I knew he was going to hurt me and as I exited the car I decided that I was going to do as much damage to him, including kill him if I had to. I looked around the ground for a rock and when I found a suitable rock I picked it up and waited for him to come near me.

He opened the driver's side door and stood beside his car, resting his right arm on the roof of the car.

"Get out of here!" he announced.

I couldn't believe what I was hearing and I didn't move, expecting that he would come after me any minute.

He shouted to me again, "I said get out of here!"

Stunned, I began to walk away, carefully watching him to make sure he wasn't going to suddenly run up behind me. I walked up the logging road hill, still clutching the rock in my hand. I refused to run.

I reached the dirt road, still expecting him to change his mind and come after me. I walked along the dirt road picking out spots along the way I could jump into to hide myself if he came for me. Suddenly I heard a car coming. I didn't wave the driver down. I didn't step onto the road or let him know that I was in danger. To this day I don't know why I didn't signal for help.

The vehicle coming down the road was an old pickup truck and the old man driving it drove on by me and disappeared from sight. I kept walking and waiting for the blond man to come after me. I realized that the pickup truck had turned around and was coming back. The driver turned his truck around again and stopped next to me.

"I have a Granddaughter your age and I wouldn't want her out here alone so I came back. Get in," the old man said to me.

I got in.

I began telling the old man what had happened with the blond man and as I talked, I nervously looked back expecting the blond man to come racing up behind us. The old man pulled onto the Interstate and drove fast. When we neared the Waterbury exit, the blond man raced his car up behind us. He pulled his car up close to the rear of the truck and pulled back several times as if to try to intimidate the old man. He pulled alongside the truck and glared at us.

"That's him!" I shouted to the old man.

"Don't be afraid. He isn't going to hurt you," the old man replied.

The blond man slowed his car and eventually backed off and we lost sight of him when we exited into the town of Waterbury. I asked the old man to take me to the police, but he said that he would take me back to VSH and he would go to the police for me. The old man returned me to the VSH parking lot and drove away. I waited for the police to contact me but they never did.

Only after I learned that I had been experimented on was I able to understand this incident and the conclusion I reached is disturbing. As I would find in other situations related to the experiment in VSH, certain pieces of information that were contained in my medical records, particularly information given to VSH by my mother when I was thirteen, were apparently used in the experiments. Whether it was my love of horses, used by Curlin in 1971, or my intense reaction to the Kennedy Assassination, key information was pulled directly from my medical records.

"You can't remember the Kennedy Assassination, can you?" I was asked by one of the psychiatrists.

My close relationship with my Grandfather, noted in my 1965 records, was also used. They used information from my mother about my running away when I was five years old and the history I had with guns, including my brother being shot and my preoccupation with them. I am convinced they learned about my early childhood traumas in 1965 using Sodium Amytal. They used the information, like Gittinger said in reference to the PAS, to exploit, get at and compromise people.

It is not difficult for me to believe that the blond man was part of the experiment. Once he saw me pick up the rock, he knew that I would fight for my life. Those conducting the experiment already knew that when pushed I would react violently. They witnessed that behavior on 1A. The old man said something key when he told me that he had a granddaughter my age.

I also realized years later that the two men were clearly working together. All the time I was in the truck I looked back, fearful that the blond man would come after me. The truck went miles before the blond man actually pulled up behind us. How did he know what vehicle I got into? When I got into the truck on the dirt road, the blond man was still at the bottom of the logging road. It would have been physically impossible for him to have seen the truck or seen me get into it.

Even more disturbing for me is the young blond man, whose face I could never fully recall. He is the first person I thought of in the 2000's when the blond man with the wire rim glasses began to harass me. Something about the blond man with wire rim glasses was familiar. I felt that I had met him before and he was the only one of the many who tried to harass me in the years after I filed the lawsuit, that I felt threatened by. The threat I felt and told Kathy about many times was that I knew this man from my past. I will never know if the blond man in 1972 and the blond man in the 2000's is the same man.

The admission form in the October, 1971 records includes a physical done upon admission. One area stands out. Under the section where my face, neck and ears are examined, it is noted that I have an "old fibrosis" on the right TM joint. The admission physical in October, 1970 contains no such fibrosis.

The Baird 6 record shows that in July of 1971 the nurses noted my complaints about severe pain behind my right ear. They noted a large "sac" and inflammation present behind my right ear. No examination by a doctor is noted to have taken place and there are no further notes in the Baird 6 records that would indicate I was seen by a doctor or treated for any medical condition related to this problem. The 1972 VSH record also notes complaints by me about pain behind my right ear. A nurse's note describes a "bunch" behind my right ear. There was, according to the records, no further follow-up.

The surgical scar behind my right ear that was discovered during the lawsuit, combined with the large amounts of painkillers I was given on Baird 6 for facial, jaw and head pain and the extensive use of painkillers in VSH when I was in seclusion and restraint, lead me to the disturbing possibility that I was surgically implanted as part of the experiment. I may have been implanted while on 1A and the implant may have been removed when I was transferred to Burlington. It is also possible, based on information about the MKULTRA experiments, that I was triggered to escape by preprogrammed hypnotic suggestions. CIA used this method during Special Interrogations research. My VSH escapes suggest that one or both of these methods may have been used. The people who appeared in the escapes also strongly suggest that not only was I being closely monitored when I escaped, but that the people monitoring and following me had no intention of allowing anything to happen to me. It was during my final escape from VSH that I saw this play out.

Dr. Ellison began escalating his plan for me to leave VSH. He was due to leave his 6-month position in June, 1972 and he wanted me out of the hospital before he left. I obtained my GED in May and arrangements were made for my discharge on June 19, 1972.

On June 19, 1972 CIA Director Richard Helms ordered the destruction of all MKULTRA files, saying the files were "dynamite and could damage CIA operations." The files were actually destroyed on June 30, 1972. In June of 1971, Attorney General John Mitchell viewed secret files and was reportedly sickened for days by what he read.

I find it to be an extraordinary coincidence that I was discharged from VSH, an active CIA experiment site at the same time when CIA ceased MKULTRA operations, destroyed the files and faced public exposure for its covert experiments.

I went back to my parents' house and tried to begin a normal life. I got a job and tried as hard as I could, but it was no use. I left my parents' house and hitchhiked back to VSH. I walked onto the grounds in the middle of the night and was readmitted to Weeks 3. In retrospect, I can only assume that by this time I was institutionalized. I must have believed that I could not make it outside of the hospital. It's difficult for me to imagine that I voluntarily returned to VSH, but I did.

I don't remember what happened, if anything, to cause me to escape again only days later. I have no explanation for why I ran and the records provide me with no information as to the cause of my escape.

I easily escaped the grounds of VSH and quickly got a ride on the Interstate. The heavy-set man behind the wheel asked me if I would like to stop at McDonald's on the Barre-Montpelier road and I said, yes. He bought me a meal and we were on the Interstate again. I had no idea where I was going and as the miles passed, the man began to talk in a way that made me nervous.

He patted the seat of the car and asked me to slide over closer to him. I reacted immediately by sliding nearer to him and placing a knife to his throat. He had no way of knowing that the knife was a blunt-ended butter knife I took from the Weeks 3 ward, and I wanted to keep it that way. His arms were bigger around than my thighs and I knew if he realized that the knife wouldn't cut him, I was in deep trouble.

I saw a place up ahead on the highway and told him to pull over and stop. I immediately got out of the car, ran down into the wooded area and disappeared from his view. I came out of the woods to find a farmhouse, which I entered. No one seemed to be in the house. I have no idea why I entered the house or what I planned to do.

A man came in the door and was understandably startled to find me there. I told him I did not want to hurt him or hurt anyone and that I was from VSH. I told him that VSH had done terrible things to me. I noticed a rifle hanging on a rack over a door and told him I needed it.

He said, "You don't want this old BB gun."

I looked at the rifle and decided that I didn't need it. I left the man's house and ran into a large field. I found a hunting camp and since it was starting to get dark, I decided to enter the camp and stay the night. I curled up on the bed and tried to figure out what to do.

I heard voices outside and saw the light from a flashlight. It was the Vermont State Police. They came into the camp and brought me back to VSH. During my escapes from VSH, I had repeated contact with the Vermont State Police. Every time I was picked up by the troopers, they treated me with kindness and respect. They bought me cigarettes and sodas and listened to my hatred of VSH. Apparently, I was unable to provide specifics about the treatment I received in VSH.

The Vermont State Police were practically the only people during those years that consistently treated me like a human being. I will always have the utmost respect and regard for the Vermont State Police. Thanks guys.

I was initially returned to Weeks 3 but it was soon apparent that I was to be transferred to the locked ward, now called 2A. Weeks 3 aide, Edie walked me to the locked ward and I can only imagine the despair I must have been feeling as I approached the ward.

Edie and I were met at the door by seven or eight aides. They were clearly prepared to do battle with me. Edie spoke up and stressed that I had walked peacefully with her. The aides led me into the ward, down the hall and into a seclusion room. As I undressed, I noticed that of one of the aides, who I had known before and had no problems with, was trembling.

"Don't worry, Sherry, I'm not going to give you any trouble," I said.

Sherry looked surprised and responded, "I hope not, Karen."

I was Karen again. I had been Skippy from the moment I had left 1A over a year earlier. All throughout my time on Baird 6 and during the nine months on Weeks 3, I was called Skippy by staff and patients. But when I walked into the locked ward in July, 1972, I was once again Karen.

I wasn't forced to sleep on a bare floor and I wasn't restrained in wristlets. I slept in a bed and in the morning, I was allowed out of the locked room for a shower and to get dressed. I recognized many of the aides and patients from my time on 1A, but I also noticed new faces.

Dr. Karl Trieal, the Russian doctor who ran the 1A ward when I was there before, tried to talk with me, but I refused to speak with him. The records show that during the brutal months in seclusion on 1A, Trieal may have been the doctor of record, but that Havas was clearly in charge of my treatment. I had nothing but contempt for Trieal and he knew it.

One of the new faces on 2A was an aide named Debby. She approached me the first day and tried to engage me in conversation, but I wasn't interested in talking to anyone.

Debby later described the expression in my eyes as, "Like mirrored sunglasses. You can look out but nobody can see in."

Over the next several weeks, Debby continued to try to make friends with me.

I caused no problems on the ward and it was apparent, even to these aides who had participated in the brutal seclusion room months, that my time in Baird 6 had helped me. I was allowed to have ground privileges as long as an aide was with me. On August 8, 1972, there is nothing in my records to show what if anything had happened to cause me to run.

An aide named Sherry took me and another patient named Jane out of the ward and onto the hospital grounds. The record notes that we were on our way to the hospital canteen. I knew when I exited 2A that I was going to run and I lagged behind Sherry and told Jane to catch up to Sherry because I was running. Jane asked me if she could come with me and I told her it was up to her what she did. I had always made my escapes alone and I wasn't comfortable with someone else coming along, but I agreed. Sherry, a young, new aide was walking quite a distance in front of us, and not paying close attention to what we were doing and when I saw the opportunity, I took it.

Jane and I ran across the grounds and headed for the street. Initially Sherry thought Jane and I were playing a joke on her but she quickly realized that we were not. Jane and I reached the railroad tracks, climbed up the hill and made our way easily to the Interstate. Within moments, we got a ride and were gone.

An elderly couple gave us a ride into Montpelier, where they stopped at a store. Jane went into the store and bought two sodas and a pack of cigarettes. I remained in the car. We were soon on the Interstate again when Jane and I asked the couple to let us out of the car. I'm not sure how many miles away from VSH we were by the time we left the first vehicle. We stood hitchhiking for only moments before a young man in a fast car stopped to give us a ride.

It didn't take long before I realized that Jane and the young man knew each other. I sat in the back seat and she slid very close to the young man in the front seat as we sped along the Interstate. I became increasingly uneasy and finally I asked them to stop and let me out of the car. The young man pulled to the side of the road and I got out of the car. As I watched the car disappear up the Interstate, I suddenly felt overwhelmed by despair. I stood by the side of the Interstate for several minutes staring as the car sped down the Interstate. I was still carrying the glass soda bottle in my hand, and I stepped over the guardrail and made my way down the steep embankment. At the bottom of the embankment I found a small cluster of cedar tress where I laid down. I cut my wrist, closed my eyes and waited to die.

When I first heard the men's voices I thought I was dreaming or hallucinating. I have no idea how much time had passed.

"She's over here!"

I opened my eyes to see three men standing over me. They reassured me that they would not hurt me and said that everything would be okay. Two of the men picked me up, carried me up the steep embankment and placed me in the backseat of their car. One man stayed in the back with me while one drove the car and the third man looked back at me from the front passenger seat. The men repeatedly told me not to be afraid. I've always remembered what they said but I have never been able to recall their faces.

The record shows that I was brought to the New London, New Hampshire hospital by, "A man who refused to give his name and refused to give any other information except that he found her near the Exit 13 on the Interstate."

The record goes on to say that the man left the hospital and that New Hampshire State Police were notified and went to Exit 13 to check to see if I might have been in a car accident. I don't remember being brought into the hospital by the man. My memory begins again when I was in surgery.

At first I felt confused and then wary of the doctors. I refused to answer their questions until I was taken to a hospital room where I told them my name and where I had escaped from. The record shows that Dr. Karl Trieal informed the New Hampshire hospital that I was a "paranoid schizophrenic." Nothing in any of my medical records supports Trieal's diagnosis.

I have no doubt that Trieal told the New Hampshire hospital that I was a paranoid schizophrenic for a reason. The last thing VSH or Trieal wanted was for anyone, especially an out of state hospital staff and the State police, to believe me if I told them about VSH conditions. The diagnosis of paranoid schizophrenia would have insured that nothing I said would be given any merit,

I was taken to the Vermont state line by two New Hampshire State Troopers, who treated me very well. Two Vermont State troopers transported me back to VSH where I was taken back to 2A. I was not placed in seclusion.

A few days later, I asked an aide where Jane was and she said that, "Jane was probably back in Massachusetts."

This statement meant little to me in 1972 but in the 2000's it meant a great deal, given the fact that VSH-UVM conducted research with Boston Psychopathic Hospital and placed staff at VSH.

When I was first placed back on the locked ward 2A, I asked an aide where another patient I had known before was. Her name was Janie. She was about my age, blond and in horrible condition. Her coordination was severely impaired and she could barely walk. She had terrible seizures.

I was told that, "Janie died. She is a good example of what happens when you take too much LSD."

When I discovered the evidence of experimental LSD use at VSH and UVM, I wondered if Janie had been a victim of the experiments. I would later find shocking evidence that Janie may not have been the only death at VSH caused by the covert experiments.

After learning about the CIA experiments, I took a close look at this escape, the circumstances of which had always bothered me. Kathy and I talked about it many times over the years before I obtained my records. I always insisted that there was simply no way that the three men could have seen me at the bottom of the steep embankment. I knew they couldn't have seen me from the Interstate. How did they know I was there?

During the lawsuit, I went with Alan to New Hampshire to see Dr. Tom Fox and we drove past Exit 13. It was clear that it would have been impossible for those three men to see me at the bottom of the embankment. Alan agreed that it would have been impossible.

I thought about Jane going into the store while I remained in the elderly couple's car. Did she phone the young man she so clearly knew who picked us up? This was the only time I ever escaped with someone else. I always escaped alone. I realized that the three men had to have been following me. They knew I went down the embankment because they had been watching me during the escape. The man's refusal to give his name at the New Hampshire hospital is also key. There were three men in the car that day, yet only one went into the hospital.

I concluded that the three men were part of the continuing experiment as was Jane. Although I will never be completely certain, I learned about an interesting tactic used by CIA in their LSD experiments known as the "stable mate project."

CIA placed a non-mentally ill employee on a hospital ward to befriend a specific research subject. The employee was from outside the hospital and the same age as the intended subject.

The stablemate or the "running mate" is based on the concept of two horses from the same stable entered in a race.

According to the book, The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy, by Harold Abramson, a well known CIA researcher and research partner of Robert Hyde, "The horse, by having in the race a familiar partner to whom he is conditioned, is motivated to overcome the stresses of the strange competition because of adaption to a familiar and safe object."

Abramson goes on to say, "Earlier experiences led us to hope that under the action of LSD this process of identification with a stablemate might be potentiated."

My suspicions about having been given LSD in VSH while on 1A and in the 1965 Mary Fletcher hospitalization were supported by Dr. Tom Fox and by Kathy. Both believed that I had been given the hallucinogen, based on their experiences with others who had taken the drug. I would also have an experience in 1987 that would suggest that the chances of prior LSD use were high. I never willingly or wittingly took any drugs except those prescribed by a doctor.

I believe that my escapes were not only part of the experiment but that they involved the use of a triggered response mechanism set up in me by hypnosis and implants. CIA declassified documents show that CIA was very invested in controlling a subject's behavior. Numerous books on the CIA research and declassified CIA documents detail the use of hypnosis to achieve this control. The subject would not know or have any awareness that his or her actions were triggered by pre-programmed commands. I may never know for sure that these tactics were used on me, but my records and the memories I have of the escapes suggests that they were.

The new VSH aide, Debby, called the ward one day in August, 1972 and had an aide ask me if I wanted to go out on a pass with her and go swimming. I was surprised but very happy to go. Debby came to VSH and took me with her back to Moscow, Vermont, a small town near Stowe.

I remember walking along the quiet road with Debby on that summer afternoon. Debby bought us sodas in the small store in Moscow and she took me to a pond behind a house in the town. I felt free for the first time in almost three years. I almost felt normal. Debby was fun to be with and we laughed and swam in the pond.

Debby brought me to meet the people she lived with, Henry and Joyce. They welcomed me into their home and invited me to have dinner with them. I hadn't had a home cooked meal in a long time and Joyce was an excellent cook. I ate heartily.

We sat in the living room after dinner, talking and watching television. I remember sitting on the floor, resting my back on the chair Debby sat in. I hadn't spent time in a home in three years and I savored the experience. That evening, Henry drove me back to VSH and told me that I was welcome to visit anytime. It was the best day I had in a long time. Over the next few weeks, Debby took me back to Henry and Joyce's house many times and I enjoyed every minute of my time with them. I began to hope again.

RELEASED, NOT FREE, 1972-1981

When a person is involuntarily committed to a state mental institution, the Board of Mental Health is required to meet every six months and decide if the person can be released on conditions or continue to be confined. My records show that from October, 1970 until August, 1972, the Board met once, without my being present. Records show that in August, 1972 the Board finally allowed me to be present at the meeting.

If I was told ahead of time that I was going to meet with the Board and possibly be released, I have no memory of it. I was taken from 2A by an aide and led into a room where several doctors, including George Brooks sat at a table.

I had nothing but contempt for the doctors sitting in front of me asking me questions and it took me a few minutes to actually realize that this meeting might free me from VSH. I don't recall the questions I was asked or the answers I gave but I vividly remember watching George Brooks' reactions to my answers.

Brooks frequently glanced at the other men in the room and smiled, as if satisfied by my responses. I quickly figured out that Brooks had some type of investment in my success at this meeting. Two years of fighting these people had profoundly affected me. I hated everything they stood for. I began to give inappropriate answers to their questions.

I watched Brooks closely. He was visibly upset by my responses. At one point he physically almost flinched and lowered his head as if in disgust and disappointment. I couldn't understand why Brooks cared whether I stayed in VSH or not. I wondered why he would be so invested in my leaving. I failed the Board of Mental Health meeting.

It would take me thirty years to understand why George Brooks was so intent on my leaving VSH in 1972. Dr. Karl Trieal, who was the doctor for the locked women's ward 2A, where I was being kept, was preparing to retire. Dr. Otto Havas was going to take over the ward. Because of the arrangement made by Dr. Hans Heussy, VSH and Brooks could not allow me to be on the same ward as Havas.

Additionally, by the summer of 1972, the CIA drug and mind control programs had been canceled. It wouldn't be long before the first Senate investigation would begin and within a few years, every national news agency would report the CIA MKULTRA programs to the American public. Brooks and VSH, including Dr. Robert Hyde had a lot to concern themselves with in 1972.

I obtained documents and reliable information about several VSH staff psychiatrists, including former VSH Assistant Superintendent, H. Peter LaQueur, who held this position until Curlin replaced him in 1970. LaQueur had been an agent with the Office of Strategic Services during WWII. OSS became CIA in 1947. LaQueur was found in CIA declassified MKULTRA documents as a member of two CIA front groups. His name is listed as a member in a 1962 Society For Biological Psychiatry document and he is also listed as a member of another CIA front group called the Manfred Sakel Foundation.

John Bockoven was a former VSH staff psychiatrist and was a frequent research partner of Hyde and of CIA researcher Richard York. Bockoven was onsite at Boston Psychopathic Hospital during the MKULTRA LSD testing and is noted in VSH-UVM research project documents as having been onsite at VSH in the role of consultant to VSH-UVM research.

I filed a Vermont Records Act request with the Vermont Department of Personnel for verification of John Bockoven's employment by VSH. The request was granted and the one-page document on Bockoven was completely redacted.

I filed similar requests with the Vermont Department of Personnel seeking verification of employment of Dr. Otto Havas. No documents were found. Havas is noted in several VSH publications as an on-staff VSH psychiatrist, yet he was not found to be employed by VSH or by the State of Vermont. The Hungarian psychiatrist's employer has not been identified.

Dr. Karl Trieal, the Russian psychiatrist, began working at VSH as a staff psychiatrist in 1952, using the name Karl Trieal-Kink. He was on staff at the hospital until his retirement in 1972. No documents were located on Trieal. He was not employed by VSH or by the State of Vermont. The identity of his employer is not known.

VSH-UVM research project documents list the names of numerous, verified CIA researchers who acted in the capacity of consultants to VSH-UVM research programs. Dr. Milton Greenblatt, former Director of Research at Boston Psychopathic Hospital and a well-documented MKULTRA researcher is noted in VSH-UVM research documents as acting is the capacity of consultant to the Vermont experiments.

Dr. Richard York worked at Boston Psychopathic Hospital during the MKULTRA years and conducted CIA research. York was a frequent research partner of Hyde's and was on staff at Butler Hospital when Hyde was Superintendent at the Rhode Island hospital conducting LSD research for CIA. York worked for John Gittinger's Psychological Assessment Associates in Washington, DC from 1962-1966 and is noted in VSH-UVM project documents as having consulted on Vermont research and as visiting the VSH site.

In addition, almost a dozen more verified CIA-employed researchers and several known CIA research sites are named in VSH-UVM documents as participants in the Vermont hospital's experiments. These researchers and sites will be more fully detailed in later chapters.

I continued to go to Henry and Joyce's home with Debby and in September after driving me back to VSH, Henry and Debby asked me if I would like to live with them. I couldn't believe what I was hearing. I was excited and happy.

The next day I found my way through the VSH administration building and walked into George Brooks' office. Brooks was standing behind his desk when I went in and he looked both surprised to see me and uneasy that I was standing only feet from him. I was confused by the fact that Brooks was afraid of me. I had no memory of ever interacting with him.

I told him about Henry and Joyce and about Debby. I pointed out that Debby worked at VSH. I said I had a chance to leave VSH and live with them. I asked Brooks to let me go.

Much to my surprise, Brooks answered, "If you don't do anything for one week, I will let you go."

I assured him that nothing would happen and as I thanked him, I couldn't help but notice that he was still standing behind his desk as I left his office. Less than two weeks after I failed a Board of Mental Health discharge meeting, George Brooks kept his word and I walked out of VSH, never to return again.

Henry and Joyce welcomed me into their home. Joyce was severely crippled by arthritis and needed help around the house. I helped her with household chores and Debby and I helped her grocery shop. Joyce required the use of a wheelchair when going out of the house and Debby pushed the wheelchair, while I pushed the grocery cart. There were trips made to McDonald's and other outings that Joyce clearly enjoyed. Over the years to come I would learn much from Joyce about cooking and baking. I valued her as a friend for years.

Henry was Road Commissioner in Stowe and I also grew close to him. He and I rode dirt bikes together, rode snowmobiles and hiked on snowshoes through the woods. Henry put his motorboat into the Waterbury Dam on many occasions, giving Joyce, Debby and I an enjoyable summer. In the summer I helped Henry tend to his vegetable garden and Joyce and I froze many bags of those vegetables.

Henry and Joyce's home had a fully finished basement where Debby and I had rooms. I had frequent nightmares for the first few weeks I was out of VSH and after a particularly bad nightmare in which I woke up screaming, Debby brought me into her bed to sleep the rest of the night. Over the next weeks, the situation became sexual.

I wasn't gay and Debby knew this. After she insisted that we make out in the woods after we had ridden the dirt bikes deep into the woods, I was overwhelmed with shame and guilt. I jumped onto the dirt bike and intentionally crashed it. I was taken to the emergency room with a mild concussion and various bumps and bruises. The side of the motorcycle helmet I was wearing had two places where the helmet had cracked when I crashed.

My relationship with Debby became disturbing for me and she became frustrated by my lack of sexual interest in her. She often remarked that I was asexual because I never initiated contact with her or actively participated in contact. I tried to push the sexual aspect of our relationship out of my mind. Life was so much better for me living with Debby at Henry and Joyce's home. I told myself that my freedom was worth putting up with Debby's sexual advances. Most of the time I enjoyed being with her.

I left VSH with no money and only the clothes on my back. Debby used her own money to buy me clothes, winter boots and a warm jacket. She brought me to the Morrisville welfare office where I got twenty dollars a week for room and board and eight dollars a week for personal use. I grew more dependent on Debby.

It's hard to describe the effect being locked in VSH had on me. I hadn't been able to remain in my parents' home and every time I tried, I ended up back in VSH. I began to credit Debby for freeing me from VSH and the longer I remained free, the more I credited being with Debby as the reason. I carried a deep, pervasive fear of returning to VSH and that fear dictated my life for decades.

In the spring of 1973, Debby and I moved out of Henry and Joyce's home and we rented an apartment in Stowe. Debby continued to work at VSH and I tried to work at several places in Stowe as a dishwasher and chambermaid. The one job I had that I kept was at a Stowe motel where I did chambermaid work and I would have remained there except that the owner went out of business.

I had no friends, knew few people and pretty much lived in my own small world. I drove Debby's car, took care of our apartment, spent time with Henry and Joyce and considered myself fortunate to be free. VSH required that I be seen by the Lamoille County Mental Health clinic and I reluctantly complied. It was better than having to be seen by VSH doctors.

I have few memories of seeing counselors at Lamoille County Mental Health, but I did begin to regularly see a woman counselor. I was guarded, wary and unable to gain much insight into my problems. I doubt I was at all receptive to any attempts to analyze me.

Debby bought a house in Waterbury Center in 1976 and it was exciting to move into the brand new home. I took care of the household duties, played my guitar and tried to live my life. Debby, who was several inches taller than I was and outweighed me by over a hundred and fifty pounds, began to be physically abusive.

Debby threw me across the room and I crashed into the television. I have no memory of why she was so angry, but the physical abuse continued. She underwent a dramatic change in her personality. She was angry and sullen and we rarely spent time together without outbursts from her about how stupid and worthless I was. She seemed to take pleasure in ridiculing me. I began to try to distance myself from her.

I began to run cross-country in the fields near the house. One chilly fall day, after there was a small chimney fire in the house, I went out for a run. I reached the field several miles away from the house when I was suddenly bombarded by strange images that flashed in my mind. I saw railroad tracks, broken glass scattered on the ground, and images of my own bare feet. I felt frightened and confused. The images made no sense to me and I told no one about them. Years later, I realized that this was my first flashback related to my early childhood trauma.

In 1955, my father took me to a house fire in town. He held me in his arms as he stood near the railroad tracks. I had no shoes or socks on when he placed me in his car and drove to the fire. A crowd of people gathered as the house burned and when the people in the crowd were told that a woman was trapped in the burning house, the crowd reacted in panic. The woman died in the fire.

Several of my relatives provided the information about the fire to me during the 1990's when I was in therapy with Kathy. I learned that I struggled to escape my father's arms when the crowd panicked but because I had no shoes on, he didn't let me go. I was three years old and one year earlier, at another house fire, I became hysterical when the windows of the house exploded during the fire. My father finally had to leave the scene because of my hysterical reaction. I have no memory of the first fire and only bits and pieces of memories of the fatal fire.

While living with Debby, I began to lose weight and have fevers, and I developed a painful rash on my fingers. I was referred to a doctor in Burlington who suspected that I might have an autoimmune disorder. He wanted to hospitalize me for tests in the Mary Fletcher hospital, but I couldn't bear the thought of returning to that hospital again for any reason.

Debby was having financial problems. She told me that she quit her job at VSH because they wanted her to pass out medication and she refused. She held several jobs during this time but never seemed to be able to keep them. She decided to rent the house we lived in and move to Baltimore, Maryland with her parents. She suggested to me that I would find better health care at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Baltimore was a whole new world for me. I grew up in rural Vermont and had never been in a big city before. Debby's parents allowed us to live with them but as time progressed, tensions grew. Debby's mother couldn't understand why Debby insisted that I go to Johns Hopkins when there was a very good hospital closer to where we were living. Debby insisted, and I was seen by doctors at the famous Baltimore hospital.

I was admitted for tests and during the admission I truthfully told the doctors about my medical history and that I had been in VSH. A social worker visited me and suggested that I be seen by a consultant from the Phipps Clinic, a noted psychiatric clinic at Hopkins.

Prior to the consult, it was found that I had a "connective tissue disorder." The doctor told me that she suspected that I had lupus and she felt that the "L cell" that would confirm her diagnosis, would eventually be detected.

I was seen by a psychiatrist from the Phipps Clinic and arrangements were made for me to go to the Clinic once I was discharged. The psychiatrist who conducted the consult interview while I was still an inpatient on the medical ward told me that there was a very long waiting list to get into the world-famous clinic, yet I was immediately accepted. I went into the Phipps Clinic several days later and filled out paperwork. A woman asked me to follow her and I was led into a room where, much to my surprise, a dozen or so men were seated in chairs.

The chairs formed a circle in the small room and I sat down in one of the chairs. I was uncomfortable at how close together the chairs were. I recall looking around the circle of men in suits and ties and my memory ends there. I have no memory of any question I was asked or my responses or how long I was in the room.

I learned during my investigation into CIA programs that Johns Hopkins was a primary CIA research site. Several of the psychiatrists at Hopkins were major figures in the covert research: MKULTRA Subproject 87 was conducted there. Johns Hopkins would have been aware of Robert Hyde's CIA experiments and very likely would have been aware of the role that VSH-UVM played in MKULTRA. Who the dozen or so men really were in that room, I don't know, but because of Hopkins' role in MKULTRA, and my memory lapse during our meeting, I have reason to suspect they may have been CIA researchers.

I had another disturbing incident several weeks after I began to see an outpatient counselor at the Phipps Clinic. We met in her office for weeks until one day she said her office was unavailable. She showed me into another office and I immediately noticed something that bothered me.

There was a large glass window with curtains drawn across it. I became suspicious and refused to remain in the office. She asked me why and I said there were people sitting behind the window watching me. She engaged me in conversation for a few minutes and then offered to show me what was behind the window.

She opened a door into a room that looked like a movie theater. Several movie theater-like chairs, in two rows, faced the one-way mirror. There were trays next to each chair.

"See, no one is here, " she told me.

I took one more look around and agreed to talk with her, but I didn't forget for one moment that it was likely that people were watching and listening. Years later I wondered why I seemed to be immediately suspicious about the strange glass window.

My emotional condition was getting worse. I had traveled into downtown Baltimore on the city bus many times after moving to the city, but I began to have trouble making my bus connections. On one occasion I became lost in an unfamiliar section of the city. I tried to find my way back to a street I might recognize but I couldn't. Thanks to a middle-aged African American woman who helped me find my way back safely, I was able to board the right bus and make it home.

The drugs I was prescribed were causing problems both physically and emotionally. Lithium made me shake all over and Haldol caused a variety of dystonic reactions. The Haldol was finally discontinued. When I lived in the Waterbury Center house with Debby, I quit taking all the drugs I was prescribed and I did much better without them

I spent a month as an inpatient in the Phipps Clinic and I didn't receive any help at all. By the end of the month, I was eager to leave. I'd had enough of hospitals. But I continued to struggle. Tensions were high in Debby's parents' home. Debby and her mother didn't get along well and I didn't particularly like her mother.

I wanted to go back to Vermont. The outpatient counselor I was seeing suggested that I voluntarily spend some time in Spring Grove State Hospital. I cannot imagine myself agreeing to this, but apparently I did, and Debby drove me to the hospital one night in February.

I don't remember much of anything until I was on the ward. I immediately realized that I had made a mistake. The ward was coed and from what I saw, the patients were severely disturbed. I decided to let the staff think that I couldn't speak, calculating that it would give me more time to decide what to do. I palmed the drugs they gave me and flushed them down the toilet.

The next morning the patients were lined up and taken downstairs for breakfast. As we approached the dining hall I realized that there was an unlocked door. I saw a man come in the door and another leave through it. I began to hatch my escape plan.

Awoman psychiatrist came onto the ward that morning and gathered everyone for what appeared to be a group meeting. It didn't take long for me to see that she was drunk. Thankfully, she demonstrated no interest in me and I continued to prepare myself to escape. I was very aware of the fact that if I tried and failed to escape I would likely be held involuntarily, but I was willing to take that risk.

When the aide called us to line up for lunch, I prepared myself. I followed in a line of other patients to the downstairs floor and when I reached the area where the unlocked door to the outside was, I lingered back. The aide's attention was directed toward the front of the line and I watched him closely, waiting for my opportunity. Another patient began to talk to me and I angrily whispered to him to leave me alone and go on his way. He did and I took one more glance at the aide, who wasn't looking in my direction. I bolted toward the door. It flew open and I ran out onto unfamiliar hospital grounds. I chose a direction, not sure where it would lead and ran. I was only wearing a sweater and it was very cold outside but I ran as fast as I could.

I came to a tall wire fence and hesitated for a moment before I saw an opening in the fence. It appeared to be a well-worn path leading off the hospital grounds and I slipped through the opening. I ran a few yards to find myself on the street. I kept looking behind me, but no one was chasing me. I walked into a Dunkin Donuts shop and paced around trying to decide what to do next.

I had change in my pocket and using the pay phone I called Debby. I told her that if she didn't come and get me my next call would be to my family, who would make sure I left Baltimore. I told her not to notify the hospital and that if she didn't do as I asked, she'd never see me again.

Debby picked me up at the Dunkin Donuts shop and drove me back to her parents' house. She went back to Spring Grove to pick up my jacket after I refused to walk back into the hospital for any reason. I told her I wanted to go back to Vermont. It was only a few weeks later that we left Baltimore and headed back to Vermont.

During the CIA MKULTRA experiments, Spring Grove State Hospital was a primary research site, especially for LSD testing. According to H.P. Albarelli, Catonsville, Maryland, where Spring Grove State Hospital was located and which was only a few miles from where I had been living with Debby's parents for months, was a hotbed for CIA and intelligence personnel, even in the late 1970's. Spring Grove conducted mind control experiments for CIA that according to Albarelli included successfully using LSD "in surfacing repressed material in the minds of patients, permitting transference of vital information to psychiatrists." In retrospect, escaping Spring Grove State Hospital was very likely one of the best things I did during those years.

Debby and I stayed with my parents for a couple of months before we moved back to the Waterbury Center house. My mother didn't like Debby at all and found it difficult to tolerate her, but she tried to make the best of the situation for my sake. I still found it hard to be in my parents' house, but finally Debby and I went home.

It was a relief to be back in the house, but Debby grew even crueler toward me. She clearly resented the fact that I was not interested in her advances toward me. She tried to make me believe that there was something wrong with me because I rebuffed her. I became angrier and more depressed over the next few months, until finally I went back to Lamoille County Mental Health to see a counselor.

The counselor told me that there was a new woman psychiatrist at the clinic and suggested I talk with her. Despite my reservations about sitting in front of another psychiatrist, I agreed to talk with her.

Dr. Judy Nepvue came to Lamoille County Mental Health from her previous employment in California. She was originally from Morrisville and brought her ten children back to Vermont to live. Dr. Nepvue was soft spoken and could easily have been mistaken for any other Vermont housewife, but for me she was simply one more psychiatrist to guard myself against.

I returned to see Dr. Nepvue over the next few months and continued to see the counselor. Life in the Waterbury Center house was becoming harder for me to tolerate. Debby began spending more time away from the house and I began playing my guitar for hours at a time. I'd never given up playing the guitar and I'd actually gotten quite good. Playing seemed to take me away from the stress of my life and one day I opened the front door to find a teenage boy standing on the step.

Shawn heard me playing the guitar when he walked by the house and he mustered the nerve to ask me to teach him how to play. I agreed to help him and Shawn spent many weeks absorbing all the instruction I gave him. I enjoyed teaching him and I enjoyed having someone to talk with. Within months of beginning lessons, Shawn was able to form a teenage rock band in which he played lead guitar. I was proud of him.

I played my electric guitar on a Stowe nightclub stage one night and my performance went so well that two musicians asked me if I'd play with them in the next set. One guy played guitar and the other sang and when we took the stage together, we brought down the house playing a rocking blues number. It was a fantastic feeling.

Unknown to me at the time, a counselor from Lamoille County Mental Health was in the audience that night and reported back to Dr. Nepvue that he watched me perform. Dr. Nepvue later told me that she had already discarded the diagnosis I came to her with. She said she knew almost immediately that I was not a "deteriorating schizophrenic." Hearing about me on the Stowe stage only helped her make the diagnosis she had already decided was accurate. Dr. Nepvue worked with an expert in multiple personality when she was in California.

A new next-door neighbor moved in during the spring of 1981. The woman had a young daughter named Becky who liked to talk with me when she and her mother walked by the house. The woman, Sharon seemed pleasant and I enjoyed listening to the little girl talk about all the things little girls her age talk about. I hadn't been around any children in years and I had always loved kids. Phil Cram and I had talked many times before his death about having children.

I was in the kitchen doing dishes when Debby came up to me, spun me around and kissed me roughly. I reacted instantaneously by violently biting her lip. The expression of both shock and pain was evident on her face. She was bleeding and I just stood there, not speaking, and stared at her. I felt nothing. Crying, Debby left the kitchen to tend to her bleeding lip. This was the last time Debby tried to interest me in her. I recognized the look in her eye after I bit her. Debby was afraid of me.

My emotional condition worsened and I became suicidal. I had prolonged periods of almost hysterical sobbing, and even more disturbing for me was the fact that I couldn't understand where the tears, or the pain that produced the tears, was coming from. I called the counselor at the clinic and told him that things were getting out of hand. He told me to get to the emergency room.

I called Debby at work and told her what was happening. She didn't want to hear and refused to drive me to the hospital. I hung up the phone as the panic overwhelmed me even more. There was a knock at the door and I found my next-door neighbor, Sharon. She saw I was in bad shape and came into the living room, where I began to tell her that I didn't know what was wrong with me, but that whatever it was, it was getting worse.

Sharon told me that she would drive me to the hospital and I agreed to let her. On the way, Sharon revealed to me that she had been suspicious of Debby's behavior every since she moved next door. She told me that she was a Vermont State Police officer and that she had concerns that Debby was abusing me. I was surprised to learn that anyone had been paying attention to me or to Debby, but I was relieved to know that a Vermont State Trooper lived next door.

Dr. Nepvue admitted me to the general hospital. Copley Hospital was a small hospital and I would be among the general patient population. Dr. Nepvue walked onto ward with me and I was frightened to be admitted to yet another hospital. Dr. Nepvue assured me that everything would be okay and that I had nothing to fear in this hospital.

The first days in Copley are a blur. I seemed to be slipping in and out of some strange, unfamiliar world where at times I couldn't speak or even move. Other times I tried to fight off the barrage of voices screaming in my head, telling me not to eat and not to sleep. I thought I was going crazy.

One of the nurses introduced herself to me as Cheryl and asked me if I remembered her. I didn't. Cheryl told me that she and I had been friends when we were both eighteen years old. She had worked as a nurses' aide at VSH on Weeks 3. As hard as I tried, I never recovered memories of Cheryl.

Cheryl spoke to Dr. Nepvue and told her that she had heard that really bad things had happened to me in VSH. This led Dr. Nepvue to ask me to sign a release so that she could obtain copies of my medical records. I refused, telling her that I was sure that if she read about me in the VSH records, she would find out that I was a monster and she wouldn't want anything to do with me. She tried to tell me that would not be the case, but I wouldn't allow her to obtain the VSH records.

I had begun to hope that Dr. Nepvue was a psychiatrist who might actually help me and not make me regret I'd ever met her. I had seen her in an outpatient setting for months and her approach was something I had never experienced before. The woman was actually trying to help me learn what was wrong.

Debby strode into my hospital room and demanded that I pack my things and leave with her. I began to cry. Debby continued to rant and rave, which brought the head nurse into my room. She told Debby that Dr. Nepvue felt I needed to be in the hospital, which only made Debby angrier. She was rushing around the room trying to stuff my clothes into my suitcase when Dr. Nepvue came in.

Dr. Nepvue asked Debby to leave my room so that they could talk privately. Later, I learned that Debby had been told that she could not take me out of the hospital against doctor's orders and no such scenes occurred again. My condition continued to spiral out of control and my fears only grew as I watched myself fall apart.

I regressed into childlike states where I could barely take care of my daily needs. I then became suspicious and fearful and at other times I fell into almost catatonic states where I couldn't wake myself out of the strange captivity, and I couldn't communicate.

One of these episodes involved descending into a strange twilight where I felt trapped in a frightening nether world. I saw a desert-like landscape filled with structures I had never seen anywhere before. They appeared to be shaped in designs so foreign to me that I was later unable to even come close to describing them. I seemed to be alone in the desert but I was fearful that I would encounter something very terrible there. I don't know how long I was in this strange place and I have no explanation for it.

One weekend the nurses brought a man dressed in a suit and tie into the day room to talk with me. He introduced himself to the weekend nursing staff and to me as a member of the hospital administration. I had been experiencing an unusual preoccupation with God and the Devil and I was very disturbed by the thoughts and feelings that I was having. Dr. Nepvue was out of town for the weekend and I agreed to talk to the man.

He asked me what was troubling me and I tried to explain. He sat quietly listening and then began to talk to me about other dimensions. He described how a person living in a one-dimensional world would never be able to comprehend what it was like to live in a three-dimensional world. He asked me if I understood the point he was trying to make and I said that yes, I understood. I don't remember if we talked about anything else and I don't remember him leaving.

When I told Dr. Nepvue about the rather strange conversation I'd had with the man from the hospital administration, she seemed surprised. She went to the nurses' station and learned that the man who claimed to be from the hospital administration had actually visited me and when she sat back down to talk with me, she seemed even more perplexed. Whoever the man was, he was not a member of the hospital administration and to my knowledge his actual identity was never discovered.

In 1981, Dr. Nepvue scheduled me for a biofeedback session at Lamoille County Mental Health Clinic. She wanted to try to help me stop smoking. I was hooked up to a machine with various leads attached to my body. The man running the biofeedback machine asked me to shut off the persistent beeping the machine made in response to tension in my body. He explained to me that shutting off the beeping was a matter of concentrating and that he couldn't tell me how to do it.

Within moments, I shut off the beeping by merely concentrating. The man was obviously surprised and excited and I was a little unnerved by the fact that he ran out into the hallway of the clinic and asked the people there to be quiet.

He asked me to shut off the beeping again and I did so within moments. When Dr. Nepvue talked to me about the report from the biofeedback session, she told me that I had an unusual ability to raise and lower my body temperature, and raise and lower my heart rate and blood pressure, merely by concentrating and that I clearly had an ability to go in and out of trance. She called it "auto-hypnosis" and asked me if I had ever been hypnotized. I had no memory of ever being hypnotized.

In his book, The C.I.A. Doctors: Human Right Violations by American Psychiatrists, Dr. Colin Ross quotes from an MKULTRA Subproject 49 document that discuses the CIA's interest in auto-hypnosis:

"In order to investigate the possibility of hypnotic induction of non-willing subjects… an investigation should be made into non-verbal induction techniques…can auto-hypnosis be taught so as to be as effective as hetero-hypnosis in the canceling out of pain or other stress conditions; if this can be done a person could create his own world and be happy in it even though he were actually confined in a very small place which was extremely filthy."

Was MKULTRA Subproject 49, conducted by Alden Sears at the University of Denver, linked to the experiment I was subjected to at VSH, where I was held in seclusion and restraint for nearly seven months? Unfortunately, because of the many missing medical records, and because state and federal agencies and officials who know the answers refuse either to provide me the information or acknowledge the CIA Vermont experiments, I will never know.

Shawn, the teenage boy I taught how to play the guitar brought my acoustic guitar to the hospital. I woke up one day to find it in my room. I tried to play it but I couldn't seem to. Later during the hospital stay I was able to play again.

I was accustomed to periods of time when I couldn't do things I usually did, like play the guitar or draw. It was simply the way my life had always been. I was also familiar with being accused of doing things that I swore I did not do. Since childhood, I had felt that I was different somehow and I believed that difference was a bad thing that I tried to hide from people.

When I was in early elementary school and on summer vacation, I asked my cousins to go to my house to play. It took some effort to convince my aunt that day for whatever reasons. While my cousins finished their chores, I went back home where my mother confronted me about doing something that I had no memory of doing.

When my cousins finally came to the door, I greeted them with, "I've found something better to do."

They went back home, confused and angry I'm sure. I knew when my mother accused me of doing something that I had no memory of, that I needed to cover. As a young child I must have figured out that it was easier to let people think whatever they wanted to about me as long as they never were allowed to suspect that I was somehow different. I had no idea what the difference was, but whatever it was, I protected myself from everyone.

Dr. Nepvue decided to schedule an EEG in Burlington and she phoned Debby and asked her to drive me to the appointment. The EEG required that I remain awake the night before and as Debby and I drove to Burlington, all I wanted was to sleep. Debby promised that we would stop and get something to eat after the EEG and then she'd take me back to Copley.

I walked into the office for the EEG and I was almost immediately swept into a deeply disturbing panic. I struggled not to let anyone see how upset I was and as each moment passed, I grew more and more frightened. I knew that these people were preparing to do something dreadful to me and I felt helpless to leave or to refuse to allow them to harm me.

By the time I was led downstairs into the basement-level EEG lab, my mind was screaming at me to run. The feelings of impending doom and hopelessness overwhelmed me as I waited to be tortured. The technician who was going to conduct the EEG began to prepare me for the EEG lead wires to be attached to my head, when she started a conversation with me. Much to my shock, the moment I began to talk with her, all of the panic and feelings of impending doom disappeared. I felt very confused, but very thankful that nothing terrible happened.

After reading my medical records and learning about the Metrazol activation in 1971, I'm convinced that I had the panic reaction about the 1981 EEG because of the excruciating physical and emotional effect of Metrazol. Although I have never recovered any memory of the Metrazol activation, the information I have read about its effects tells me why I reacted the way I did in 1981 and according to Baird 6 records, the way I also reacted to an EEG while in Baird 6.

Debby drove me back to Copley after a meal and after initially trying to bring me back to the Waterbury Center house for a few hours. I was so exhausted that all I wanted was to go back to the hospital and sleep. I saw the anger in her face when she dropped me off in front of the hospital and I just didn't care.

Dr. Nepvue told me that she was going to start me on a drug called Mysoline. I learned after I obtained my medical records that I had been prescribed Mysoline in VSH. The drug hit me hard. My entire body felt numb. My brain didn't seem to want to work. I felt very detached. Slowly, I adapted to the drug.

Dr. Nepvue told me that the first time she met me she knew almost immediately that I was not a deteriorating schizophrenic. She told me that I was a multiple personality. The diagnosis meant little to me. She asked me questions about other names I may have used before but I had no memory of other names.

I learned years later in therapy that my mother remembered me referring to myself by other names and I too would remember some of those names. But in 1981, I had no such information available to me. I was relieved that whatever was wrong with me had a name and was something that was recognized and, from what Dr. Nepvue said, it was treatable. Maybe I wasn't hopeless after all.

I'd grown close to the nursing staff at Copley. They weren't psychiatric nurses but their kindness and compassion made a difference for me. It had been a very long time since people around me encouraged me and supported me. I began to let myself believe that I might actually have a life.

In the early summer of 1981, I was discharged and went back to the Waterbury Center house with Debby. I didn't think that I had any other choice. I knew from previous experiences that I couldn't live at my parents' home. Every time I tried, I ended up back in VSH. I had no place else to go and I didn't believe that I could make it out there in the world on my own. I told myself that Debby had saved my life by taking me out of VSH and I had stayed out because of her. I tried to make the best of things.

One afternoon Debby and I came home to find a young man sitting on the hood of his car parked in the driveway. It was Phil Fass. When I was living in Baltimore, my mother called to tell me that Phil had been looking for me. I got out of the car and hugged him.

Phil and I sat on the back steps and talked for a long time. It was so good to see him again. He wanted me to go with him and he told me that all I had to do was get in the car and we could have a life together. I remember feeling conflicted. I wanted to go with him and I was afraid to go with him. I told him I needed to think about it and we agreed that he would come back the next day. I still had feelings for Phil and it was clear that he still had feelings for me.

The next day I waited for Phil to come. I was going to leave with him, and as I paced the floor waiting, Debby confronted me. She had been eavesdropping on Phil and my conversation and she was angry.

"Either you tell him to get back into his car and never come back again or I will tell him that you are gay. I'll have him arrested if he comes back here."

I was filled with fear and with shame. I knew I wasn't gay and Debby knew I wasn't gay, but we had engaged in sexual activities. I could not allow her to tell Phil. When Phil came to the door, Debby was standing behind me. I told him that I wasn't going with him and that if he didn't leave, never to come back, he would be arrested.

Phil looked devastated. I watched him drive away and I hated myself for not having the courage to be sitting next to him in the car. I never saw Phil again. I realized how far I would go to remain free, yet deep down, I knew I was not free. Living with Debby had become another form of captivity and I couldn't seem to find the strength to just walk away.

I was admitted to Copley Hospital shortly after the incident with Phil. I was seriously depressed and Dr. Nepvue continued to try to get me to open up to her about my relationship with Debby, but the shame I felt was too great. I spent several weeks in the hospital and then one evening Dr. Nepvue told me that she would discharge me the next day.

I phoned Debby and told her I was coming home and would she come and pick me up.

"Find another way home. You left me alone. Do you know how many bills I have and with you in the hospital all the time I have to do the housework on top of everything else. Find your own ride."

My reaction was immediate and powerful, although I said nothing in reply to Debby. I hung up the phone furious at Debby and frightened by the prospect of being on my own. The nurses were aware that something was wrong but I refused to talk to them about it. How could I tell them about all the awful things I had been willing to do just to remain free? I was filled with self-hatred and disgust. I didn't want them to feel those things about me.

My mind raced as I tried to figure out what to do and where I would go. I didn't have much money and I didn't have a car. During the middle of that night, I fell into a suicidal despair. I couldn't see a way out.

Anna, one of the nurses I had grown close to, tried to talk with me. She kept reassuring me that whatever I said to her would not change how she felt about me and it wouldn't change how the rest of the staff felt either. Finally, I took the risk and told her everything about Debby and me, about all I was willing to do to stay out of VSH and how I just wanted a normal life for myself.

The next morning, Dr. Nepvue and I talked about my remaining in the hospital until a place for me to live could be found. One by one, the Copley nurses told me that they were relieved that I had finally been able to trust them enough to tell them the truth. They had suspected all along that Debby was abusive and that the relationship was sexual. I couldn't believe that they still supported me, but it was very clear that they did.

Anna and her husband, Harold, owned a huge house in Johnson and rented rooms to Johnson college students. The college was within walking distance of their home. Anna offered to have me rent a room from them and they would include me in their meals and in their lives. I was excited about the idea, but Dr. Nepvue had reservations about allowing me to leave with a staff member. Anna and Harold met with Dr. Nepvue and the decision was made that I would go with Anna and Harold to Johnson. Dr. Nepvue told me that I had to either get a job or go to college. I jumped at the chance to go to college.

I struggled with how to tell Debby that I wasn't coming back. One of the nurses told me that her daughter knew me. Deanna had been a friend of Debby's and I had known her for years. She worked at VSH and frequently spent the night at the Waterbury Center house rather than make the long drive to her own home. Deanna came to Copley to talk with me.

"Debby saved my life when she took me out of VSH," I told Deanna. "It's because of her that I've stayed out of that place."

"You don't have to pay with your life, Karen," Deanna replied.

Deanna's words immediately settled my conflicts about leaving Debby. She agreed to be at the Waterbury Center house when Harold and I went to pick up my things. That way Debby couldn't try to bully me into staying with her. Harold and I loaded my belongings into his truck and we drove away. I never returned to the Waterbury Center house again.

Decades later, I began to question many things about Debby. I thought about how quickly she singled me out in VSH and how George Brooks never hesitated to discharge me to live with Debby. I thought about how adamant Debby was that I be seen at Johns Hopkins and how her mother couldn't understand why Debby insisted on taking me downtown to Hopkins when Saint Agnes Hospital was only moments away from where we lived in Baltimore. I also wondered about Debby seeming to regularly come into large quantities of money. She tried in vain to have me return to the Waterbury Center house. I wondered if it was possible that VSH paid her to live with me. I doubt I will ever be able to answer these questions, but after finding the Vermont CIA experiments and not being able to fully know what happened to me during those experiments, questions remain.

I felt liberated living in Johnson and for the first time in years, I wasn't dependent on Debby or subject to her whims and abuse. Copley nurses gave me clothes to wear and visited me at Anna's home. I studied for the upcoming entrance into Johnson College, where I planned to take two courses. I helped with chores around the sixteen-room house and began to try to get to know a couple of the college students who also rented rooms from Anna and Harold.

One weekend day I walked down into Johnson village where I ran into Sharon and her daughter Becky. Sharon asked me to have coffee with her and we began to talk. I told her about leaving the Waterbury Center house and how I planned to attend Johnson College. Sharon was happy for me. She told me about her suspicions about Debby and about her concerns that I was being abused. I thanked her for helping me. It was good to sit in a diner and share a cup of coffee with a friend without worrying how Debby would feel about it.

It hadn't occurred to me before that anyone saw that Debby was cruel and overbearing. After talking with Sharon, I began to think about how locked in my own world I had been. My world was severely limited to my own subjective judgments about other people and the resulting determinations I made were shaped by my fears of returning to VSH and by Debby's almost constant proclamations about how stupid and worthless I was. Debby frequently reminded me over the years I was with her that VSH was still there. I understood the underlying threat in her words and she knew I did.

There were a few incidents when I was with Debby when she put my life in danger. I can't explain how I managed to push the incidents out of my mind and continue to stay with her.

Debby and I canoed across the Waterbury Dam one afternoon and it was a good distance from one shore to the next. On the way back across the Dam I decided to try to swim the distance. There was a canoe beside me and I felt safe enough to try.

In the middle of the Dam, Debby shouted at me that I was on my own and I watched in disbelief as she quickly paddled away, leaving me to swim without the safety of a boat nearby. I struggled not to panic in the deep water and kept swimming. When I finally reached the shore, I was completely exhausted. Several people who had been swimming and witnessed Debby leaving me in the middle of the Dam swam out to help me back to the shore.

The people on the shore were outraged and a few of them openly and angrily confronted Debby. One woman told me that they were afraid I was going to drown. I don't remember leaving the lake that day and I don't remember driving back home after this incident.

Another incident involved riding in a Jeep Debby borrowed. She drove to the dirt roads around the Waterbury Dam and began driving fast up and over steep hills. Several times I almost lost my grip and the faster and more wildly she drove, the closer I came to being thrown from the Jeep. I asked her to stop but she ignored me. I somehow managed to stay seated in the topless Jeep and I had a sickening feeling that she was trying to get me thrown from the Jeep. When she dropped me off at the house and drove away I felt very alone.

Debby liked to ridicule me, especially when I said that I was good at something. I often talked about the fact that I could ride horses and she loved to taunt me with remarks about how I made it all up. When we lived in the Stowe apartment, a neighborhood girl was taking care of a friend's horse and invited Debby and I to go along with her.

The horse wore a halter and on that chilly autumn day, Debby began taunting me to go ahead and prove that I really could ride a horse. She ridiculed me to the point where I decided to prove to her that I could ride a horse and ride it well. The young girl hitched a rope to the halter and I swung onto the horse's back.

The horse bolted and bucked and whirled in an effort to throw me from its back. I dug my legs into the body of the horse and as the horse raced wildly, I looked down at the ground. The dirt was solidly frozen in ruts and craters. I knew that if I were thrown, I would be seriously injured.

The horse finally gave up and began to walk under my control back to the fence where Debby and the girl stood. I was furious to learn that the horse hadn't been ridden by anyone for a long time and that Debby had set the whole thing up beforehand with the girl. I knew deep inside myself that Debby thought I would be thrown and very likely hoped that I would be thrown. After this incident, she never taunted me again about whether or not I could really ride a horse. The insides of my legs were black and blue for days, bruised from clutching the sides of the horse to hang on.

Many years later, in my therapy with Kathy, I learned that Debby had very likely targeted me while I was on 1A and that her good-natured generosity was merely a façade. Kathy helped me understand that Debby used me for her own needs and used my fear of returning to VSH to control me. Kathy also helped me understand that my illness as a multiple personality would have limited the choices I was able to envision for myself.

I later learned that Debby had been repeatedly fired from several area stores where she worked for stealing. There were also allegations that she was selling drugs. The information came as a shock to me and I never found out for sure if the allegations were true. The allegations did, however seem to explain why Debby suddenly had money she hadn't had only days before. She would come home with a three hundred dollar bicycle or an expensive camera and she never explained where the money came from.

When Debby realized that I wasn't going to go back to the Waterbury Center house, she repeatedly called my parents and tried to get them to talk me into returning. She tried to convince me to come back during a phone call I made to her. I called to ask her to allow my parents to drive to the house and take my dog back to Brandon with them. Debby pleaded with me to come back and offered me a room in her house where she said I could do as I pleased. I refused her offers.

I will never know Debby's true motive in taking me out of VSH and despite everything that happened while I was with her, I still believe that she saved my life when she took me out of VSH. After years of therapy I no longer blame myself for being willing to endure Debby's demands. I'm just thankful that I was able to find the courage to leave.

Dr. Nepvue and the Copley nurses supported me, encouraged me and helped me eventually find the courage to leave the Waterbury Center situation and I will always remember their kindness, their caring and their belief in me at a time when I had no belief in myself.

I began taking classes at Johnson State College in August, 1981 and the first day I was nervous and excited to begin a new chapter in my life. The campus was only a few minutes walk across a field from Anna and Harold's house and as I walked across the beautiful campus, I began to entertain dreams for myself of a college degree.

Studying was difficult for me and sitting in a classroom for the first time since I was thirteen years old was even more challenging, but I kept working at my class assignments. Each day I went to class and turned in the homework assignments and each day Anna and Harold were there to support me when I returned home. The Copley nurses always showed an interest in my classes when I went to the hospital with Anna. They cheered me on and it felt good.

I woke up one night in Anna's home to see my grandmother standing at the foot of my bed. I was confused. My grandmother lived in Brandon. What was she doing standing in my room in Johnson in the middle of the night?

"Gram, what are you doing here?" I asked her as I sat up in bed.

"Everything is going to be okay," she replied.

"Gram, what are you doing here?" I felt even more confused.

My grandmother vanished before my eyes. Stunned, I looked at the clock on the table next to my bed. It was 2:45 A.M.

The next morning I checked the newspapers to see if my grandmother had died, but I couldn't find any news. I told Dr. Nepvue about my experience and she suggested that I phone my parents. I hadn't much contact with my parents during this time but I finally decided to call.

My cousin answered the phone and put my mother on to talk to me. I told her what happened and told her the time on the clock when Gram vanished. My mother began to cry. My grandmother died the night I had the strange visit from her. She died at 2:45 A.M.

After my grandfather died, my grandmother shared with me that she had been visited by him the day after he died.

He told her, "Everything is going to be okay."

I have no explanation for what happened that night in Johnson except that my grandmother wanted to make sure that she visited me on her way to somewhere better.

By October, I began to slip into a deep depression and although I tried to fight my way out of it, the depression only seemed to deepen. I tried to hide the depression from everyone and the worse it got, the less I understood what was happening. I began to wonder if Debby had been right. Maybe it really didn't matter where I was or what I did. Maybe the problem was me.

I felt guilty that I was depressed. Anna and Harold had opened their home to me. I was attending college and I was freed of Debby, but there I was, descending into depression again. I couldn't understand what was wrong with me.

I sat on the grass that October day and watched the Johnson College students walk across the campus. The sky was a brilliant blue and the sun shone brightly. I began to feel strangely detached and I became aware of how separated I suddenly felt from everyone and everything. I stared at the college students and realized that no matter what I did, I would never fit in.

Anna tried to talk with me but I brushed off her concerns. I was numb. There was simply no way I could tell Anna that all that she had done for me had been wasted. I knew what I was going to do and once I decided to commit suicide, the eerie relief that settled over me convinced me that I had made the right decision.

That evening I walked across the campus, unsure of the reason I was there. I passed by the auditorium and heard the sound of music coming from inside. I quietly slipped into the darkened auditorium to find a young man on the stage playing beautiful music on the piano.

The young man finished playing and called out, "Who is there?"

"Just an anonymous music lover," I replied.

He wasn't able to see me sitting in the darkened auditorium and I sat for a few minutes longer to listen to his music. I left the building and began walking aimlessly.

I walked down into Johnson village where I bought four bottles of sleeping pills and a six-pack of beer. I purchased the pills in two different stores so as not to raise any questions about the amount of pills I bought. I stood on Route 15 and tried to decide which direction to go when a car offered me a ride to Morrisville.

Once in Morrisville, I was still not sure where to go to take the pills. I opened one bottle and took the contents, washing the pills down with beer. I walked in the darkness along the neighborhood streets and stared at each one of the houses as I passed by. I thought about the families inside and wondered what kind of life I might have had if only things had been different. When a dog began barking I told myself that only the dog knew I was there.

I realized quite suddenly as I approached the cemetery that this was the perfect place to take the pills. I climbed up a steep hill and entered the graveyard. There was a full moon and as I searched for the right spot to die, the light of the moon illuminated the gravestones and the cemetery.

I chose a spot toward the backside of the cemetery, sat down and leaned back against a headstone. I swallowed the other bottles of pills, throwing each bottle into the bushes. I didn't want to take the chance that someone might find me and know by the pill bottles what I had taken. I sat back and waited to die. There was no pain, and no second thoughts. I began to feel sleepy and I called out to Phil to let him know that I would be with him soon.

I woke up. My body felt numb and I couldn't believe that I was still alive. I tried to get up, but my legs didn't work right. I tried again and managed to get to my feet. I looked around trying to decide what to do next when suddenly I felt overcome by sheer terror. I looked around again, certain that there was someone or something terrible lurking in the moonlit cemetery. I felt I had to get out of there as quickly as I could because I could not let whatever the frightening presence was catch me.

I tried to run but my legs wouldn't obey and when I reached the steep hill I had climbed to enter the cemetery, I was afraid that my legs would buckle beneath me as I stumbled down the hill. I made it out of the cemetery and found myself standing in the middle of the road. I couldn't raise my head up. I don't know how long I stood in the middle of the road.

The voices of the men seemed unreal and I had difficulty answering their questions. The two police officers placed me in their cruiser and drove me to the emergency room where the nursing staff immediately recognized me. I remember being asked if I took any pills and then I recall Anna standing in front of me. My vision was blurry and I had a hard time seeing her.

My next memory is sitting on an exam table with a nurse standing in front of me. Without warning, I began to vomit and began choking. I clutched the arm of the nurse and my memory ends there. My memories after this are vague and scattered.

I learned later that Cheryl, my friend who had known me in VSH, offered to work an extra shift to sit with me on the ward. I was taken to intensive care. The doctors believed that I had been in the cemetery for hours and because of the below freezing temperatures, hypothermia had probably saved my life. Anna and Harold had been looking for me that night, after discovering I was not in my room.

I felt trapped between two worlds. I wasn't alive and I wasn't dead. I was angry that my suicide attempt failed. I tried to get out of bed to get dressed, but my body wouldn't obey. I raged at people I couldn't see who taunted me to get up and leave the hospital, when suddenly I realized that I could hear two men talking about me. I pulled back the curtain next to my bed to see two men in hospital beds. I thought it was strange that one of the men had a saxophone in the hospital bed with him.

"You need to stop causing all this fuss and stop fighting or they will send you back to VSH," one of the men said to me while the other played the saxophone.

The man who spoke to me smiled. I wondered how he knew I had been in VSH but I decided to take his advice. I resigned myself to the fact that I had failed to die.

I'm not sure how much time passed when Dr. Nepvue came in ICU and sat on the edge of my bed.

She hugged me and said, "We almost lost you."

I told her that I was sorry. She let me know that the nurses had gone together to ask the hospital administrator not to send me back to VSH. They assured him that they could keep me safe and offered to stay with me 24 hours a day until I was okay. I was moved by the news.

I told Dr. Nepvue that the two men in ICU had helped me quiet down. Dr. Nepvue looked confused by my statement.

"What two men are you talking about?"

"The two men in those beds," I replied and pulled back the curtain between us.

I was shocked. My bed was only inches from the wall and there were no beds on that side of the room. Dr. Nepvue told me that I was the only patient in ICU. I have no explanation for this incident except to say that I am thankful for the advice I was given that night in ICU by the two men who apparently had a message for me.

Anna visited me and I apologized to her. I told her that nothing she had done factored into my suicide attempt. I made sure that she understood how much I appreciated all that she and Harold had done for me. I couldn't really explain to Anna why I did it, except to say that once the strange numbness settled over me and the pain left, I wanted to die. The last thing in the world I was able to do was tell anyone what was happening to me.

I spent several days in ICU and slowly the nurses began to bring me out onto the general ward. The transition from the quiet of ICU to the noises of the ward affected me and I felt overwhelmed and fragile for the first few days.

When I was stronger, the nurses asked me to meet with them. These women and I had become close over the time that I had been a patient in the small Morrisville hospital and they were angry that I attempted suicide. I couldn't really explain why I did it and my inability to answer that question frustrated the nurses.

"If you wanted to die, why didn't you just go and buy a gun?"

The words hit me hard and I felt myself instantly go cold inside. I had no feeling for the nurses and no emotions about myself or about them. I stopped answering their questions and walked out of the room, leaving my fondness and my attachment to the nurses behind. I felt very strange, yet at the same time the lack of feelings seemed to liberate me.

Over the next few days, I didn't talk with anyone except Dr. Nepvue. The nurses tried to talk with me, but I had nothing to say. I spent my time reading and thinking about what to do next. I decided to rent a car and leave Lamoille County. Dr. Nepvue and I talked about my plan after I phoned a car rental agency in Montpelier to check on the availability of a small station wagon. I had enough money in the bank due to a small loan I had obtained for college costs. One of the weekend nurses offered to drive me to Montpelier to pick up the car.

I told Dr. Nepvue that I had reached a turning point and that deep down inside I feared that I was losing my will to survive. I didn't want to die and I certainly didn't want to go back to VSH. I needed something that would bring me bring me back in touch with the strong desire to live I had always drawn upon before.

Dr. Nepvue explained that if she let me leave and I did any harm to myself, she would be the person who would be held responsible.

"If I let you go, you have to promise me that you will not do anything to harm yourself," she said.

I promised her that I would not do anything to myself and stressed again that this was not about dying, it was about living again. Dr. Nepvue agreed to let me go. I made arrangements to withdraw from college.

Earlier that day, I had phoned my mother and asked her if I could come home for a while. I told her what had happened and she cried. She and my father wanted me to come home. After years of problems between my mother and me, we both just wanted everything to be okay. Neither my mother nor I were yet able to comprehend the reasons why things had become so bad between us beginning when I was thirteen years old. It wouldn't be until I obtained my medical records and learned the details of my early childhood trauma that we would even begin to mend our relationship. But in November, 1981, we were ready to try.

I got a ride to the car rental agency in Montpelier and the man behind the counter remembered me from the phone call I made to him the day before. The man held a big cigar between his teeth and squinted intently at me as we talked. I'm sure that I didn't look well and he knew that I called him from the hospital. I had no credit card but he was willing to take cash. After I filled out the paperwork, he showed me to the nearly brand new Chevy station wagon.

I sat in the idling Chevy and felt a rush of excitement at the prospect that I could go anywhere I wanted anytime I wanted to go. I drove out of Montpelier onto Route 2, choosing not to go onto the Interstate until I was more familiar with the car. I went onto the Interstate in Middlesex, turned up the FM radio, lit a cigarette and let each mile that I drove sooth me. I stopped for a six-pack of Coke, a carton of cigarettes and a deli sandwich in Waterbury Center and even the simple act of tossing the carton of cigarettes on the passenger seat seemed to symbolize my newly found sense of independence. I was on my own and it felt fantastic. The car rental was paid for one week and those seven days ahead of me felt like forever. I drove to Johnson and spent my last night at Anna and Harold's home.

Anna didn't want me to leave and after I packed my things into the car, I tried to say goodbye to her but she wouldn't come out of her bedroom. I drove to Stowe and bought a pair of jeans and a sweater at the second-hand shop. The new clothes seemed to symbolize my transformation even more and when I pulled onto the Interstate and headed toward Brandon, I knew I was leaving this part of my life behind. The physical and emotional strain of the last sixteen years had taken its toll on me. I was twenty-nine years old and I was tired.

GOD, KING AND BEGINNING, 1981-1988

I drove fast down Route 7 and the closer I got to old, familiar territory, the more I wanted to see my parents. I neared the village of Brandon and I was unexpectedly overcome by emotion. I pulled the car off from the road and called my mother from a pay phone to tell her that I'd be home in a few minutes. After I gathered myself I drove down Maple Street and pulled up in front of my parents' house.

My parents were at the car before I even got out of it. We hugged and we cried and we went inside and talked for a while. The dog that my parents rescued from the Waterbury Center house wagged her tail and lapped my face with her tongue. I looked around the living room of the house I hadn't been able to live in since I was thirteen years old and hoped that this time, I could stay.

I could see that my parents were genuinely happy that I was with them. I'd always known that they loved me, in fact I never doubted for one moment that they loved me and I loved them. I just was never able to explain why I couldn't remain in their home or why my mother seemed to elicit such unexplained and disturbing behavior from me. I looked at my father, who was becoming more and more crippled by arthritis. Dad was a quiet man but he was a good man who worked hard all of his life, paid his bills and loved his family. I saw the emotion in his blue eyes as we sat at the kitchen table talking. Dad was happy to have his little girl home again.

Mom could see that I was exhausted. I saw the concern in her face. I told her that I needed some time to rest and some good home cooking and that I'd be okay. My mother carried a deep sense of guilt about the VSH years and it appears from the medical records that VSH doctors like Havas did everything that they could to make sure that she did blame herself. I too blamed her and my family for abandoning me, and it would take over fifteen more years before she or I would know the truth about what happened in VSH.

My nephews came to see me. Jeff was born when I was fifteen and after 1970, I rarely saw him. Chris was born when I was on 1A and I saw him for the first time when he was three years old. I hadn't seen much of my brother and sister-in-law since 1970 and it felt awkward trying to reestablish the close relationship Kip and I had before I was first hospitalized.

Before I left Johnson, I met with Cheryl, the Copley nurse I had been friends with in VSH. We sat in the hospital cafeteria and I told her my plans. Cheryl had been so supportive during my months in Copley and nothing I told her changed that. She wanted only the best for me. In the 1990's, Cheryl was found murdered in Morrisville. To my knowledge no one has ever been arrested for the crime and although the police had a suspect they were never able to make a case against him.

One of the Copley nurses told me before I left that she would be attending Castleton State College and she gave me her phone number so that we could arrange to meet. That November night I drove along the winding road that parallels the Otter Creek from Brandon to Castleton. I'd been on this stretch of road many times but because of the winding curves and the ever-present deep waters of Otter Creek, I exercised caution as I made my way through the sharp turns in the road.

I was suddenly startled when the field on my right became illuminated in the otherwise pitch-black darkness. A huge deer raced toward my car and all I could think was that I was driving a rented car and it was going to be wrecked when the deer hit. My mind raced to try and make sense out of what was happening and right before my eyes the charging deer transformed into a huge hawk that flew directly over my car.

Everything was happening so fast and none of it made any kind of logical sense. The field was dark again and I was driving along the road. My heart was beating fast as I tried to comprehend what had just taken place. Only moments had passed but the scene that played out in front of me seemed to have gone on longer than a few moments. When I first saw the field illuminated it was as if I was no longer even in the car. Everything around me except the deer and the hawk had vanished. It was as if I wasn't physically present in the car, yet I managed to keep the car on the road. I told myself I saw what I saw but I knew the entire incident simply made no sense. As I continued to drive I wondered if I had hallucinated, yet deep down I really didn't think so.

I met with my friend in Castleton and told her about the strange incident on the highway. She suggested that I see a psychiatrist and I couldn't blame her for coming to that conclusion. The entire incident sounded crazy and it was crazy, yet I didn't believe that I was crazy enough to hallucinate. On the drive home I wondered what it all meant

My mother and father listened as I told them what had happened. I said that it made no rational sense yet I saw what I saw. I told them that I did not want to see another psychiatrist and they agreed with me. My parents had experienced the destruction psychiatrists had brought into our lives and they were not eager to go down that road again.

I tried to shake off the incident but it troubled me. My mother gently suggested that I talk with the new, young Congregational church minister. My brother and his wife thought highly of the minister and his wife.

"Why don't you let me phone him and go and talk to him? What can it hurt?" my mother asked as my father nodded his head in agreement.

When Reverend Peter Anderson opened the door and invited me into the parsonage I noticed how intently he was looking at me. We sat and talked for quite a while and I told him about being in VSH and problems with my mother. I told him about my recent suicide attempt and the frightening presence that drove me out of the cemetery that night. I talked about losing Phil and Reverend Anderson remarked that he had recently learned about Phil's death through Phil's mother Helen, who was a member of the Congregational church.

I attended Sunday School beginning in kindergarten and Kip also grew up attending the Brandon Congregational church. Mom stopped going to Sunday services around the time I first went into VSH but she remained a member. In the two or three years leading up to my 1965 breakdown, I began openly challenging the Sunday school lessons, which caused somewhat of an uproar among the Sunday school teachers. I was trying to settle my own questions about religion and I didn't hesitate to give voice to the questions I had, but the teachers usually couldn't give me answers that satisfied me.

I tried to read the Bible when I was still in early elementary school but I couldn't understand the things I was reading. I asked my mother for a white covered Bible when I was seven years old and felt frustrated that the words on the pages still made little sense to me. Mom tried to tell me that when I got older I would be better able to understand what I was reading. By the time I got my first horse in 1960, most of my preoccupation with religion had faded into the background.

Peter asked me if I objected to having his wife, Sharon sit in on our conversation. He said he didn't usually ask Sharon to join in but that he felt that Sharon might be able to help. I agreed and Sharon joined the conversation.

Sharon was only a few years older than I was and she seemed calm and gentle. She listened as Peter filled her in on our conversation and she asked me several questions. After a few hours Peter began to explain what he believed was behind my problems and as he spoke, my heart began beating rapidly.

Peter explained how "demonic oppression," as opposed to demonic possession could be responsible for both my emotional upheavals and the strange, unexplained events that had frequently occurred in my life. He said that sometimes unwitting contact can be made with forces better left alone and that exposure to evil people, evil places and evil things all contributed to spiritual oppression of a vulnerable person.

I tried to think of anything that I might have been exposed to that would cause such a problem, but I couldn't think of anything. I felt shaken by the things Peter and Sharon were telling me but, at this point in my life, I figured anything was possible. I certainly hadn't found any other answer for the things that had happened to me. Maybe Peter and Sharon were right. I asked Peter what could be done about such a thing and he asked me if I would agree to bring Kip and Sue into the conversation. He thought they could help.

My brother and his wife joined us and after they were filled in on the problem, we all agreed to meet the following night so that Peter could lay hands on me. I left the parsonage that November night and as I walked to the rented car, my brother hugged me.

"Everything will be okay. You'll see," Kip said as we walked to our cars.

"I'll stop at Mom and Dad's and talk to them with you."

My parents listened as Kip and I filled them in on Peter's belief that I was "oppressed." My father seemed to accept the possibility easier than my mother. She was very disturbed by the idea. She wasn't the only one.

When I was finally alone that night in my bedroom, I thought about all that had taken place over the last several hours. The strange incident on the highway with the deer transforming into a hawk, being told that I might have come in contact with something "evil" and being faced with a "laying on of hands." Could this all be true and if it was true could this be why my life had been so insane?

My 1971, Baird 6 records contain a curious description of my reaction to a man who was visiting the unit. For some unexplained reason I was convinced that he was “Satan.” According to the records I was very frightened by this man and absolutely convinced that he was evil and that he would harm me and others on the unit. I have no memory of this and, in retrospect, I find it to be out of the ordinary for me during the hospital years. The records contain no other references to spiritual preoccupations in the 1960’s and 1970’s, with the exception of Copley Hospital in 1981. I had definitely had several unexplained events in my life but the idea that I might be oppressed was very disturbing.

Peter, Sharon, Kip, and Sue stood in the parsonage preparing to lay hands upon me. I had no idea what to expect. Peter said prayers and asked me if I accepted Jesus Christ as my Savior and I said that I did. The four people in the room to help me placed their hands on my body as Peter said a prayer and in moments, the ceremony was over.

I’m not sure what if anything I expected to happen but what did happen was that I felt a huge physical and emotional surge of relief, as if I were suddenly unburdened. I told those gathered with me how I felt and they smiled. Peter explained to me that I would need to immerse myself in the Bible and that by doing so, I would have much better protection from potential “evil.”

I felt that I might have a new beginning. I wanted to understand about God and I spent hours reading the Bible. Sharon and I began to spend a lot of time together and it was nice to have a friend. She had a beautiful soprano singing voice and I often brought my acoustic guitar to accompany her when she sang. We spent many hours talking, laughing and sharing our deepest hopes and dreams with each other.

Peter counseled me and answered my questions. I attended church services every Sunday, except for the very first Sunday after the laying on of hands. I learned that Kip stood up in front of the congregation and talked about how thankful he was that his sister had come home, met Peter and found God again. People who knew my brother well were very surprised that he stood and spoke that morning. Kip was a quiet, unassuming guy and a little on the shy side. When I heard about him addressing the congregation I began to understand the significance of all that had happened. Kip, who was temporarily laid off from his job as a truck driver, spent time with me talking about the Bible. He told me how his own life had been changed when he became an active member of the church. It was so good to have my brother in my life again.

I immersed myself in study, sometimes getting up at four in the morning to read the Bible. Peter warned me about how important it was to stay grounded in the Bible. He told me that the oppression could come back a full seven times as strong without a firm foundation in God's word.

Sharon and I became closer and we spent much of our time together. Peter and Sharon had three young children and I enjoyed watching them play. Mom sometimes babysat for the children and both she and my father grew very fond of the entire family.

Peter's Sunday services were recorded and played back later on a local radio station and Sharon suggested that she and I work up a musical number to play for the congregation. She found a song and I set my own arrangement to it. We performed the song for the congregation and we both felt pleased and satisfied. Several parishioners came up to us after the song to tell us how much they enjoyed our song.

Sharon believed that my presence in she and Peter's life was not an accident and that something spiritually driven had led me to them. It was hard for me to take it all in and to try to comprehend what it all meant. I began to feel frightened by the enormity of the situation. The idea that God might be using me in His plans seemed to place a huge responsibility on my shoulders and I wasn't convinced that I was in any way up to the responsibility. Once again, depression settled in.

My preoccupation with religion caused me to experience fear and increasingly unsettling conflict. I wrote poetry about God and the Devil and described terrible scenes of destruction. I began to envision a battle between Good and Evil that would take place right in Brandon. Sharon had her own vision of God's plan for Peter's congregation and I seemed to be a part of her vision. I was growing uneasy with the intensity of my religious experience but I could not leave it. I couldn't walk away from God and I didn't want to walk away from God. I just wanted to be a normal, regular person who went to church every Sunday, believed in God and tried to live a good life. What was happening to me was far from normal and I feared that I might be trapped in the middle of something I couldn't defend myself against.

I went to see Peter and Sharon one night when I felt ready to pack up and flee Brandon. They showed me into their living room where I sat on the carpeted floor listening while Peter tried to reassure me. Nothing he said seemed to help. The only thing I could think of to do was to run as fast as I could and leave all of it behind. Yet, this time, there was no place to run. I was caught in a spiritual dilemma.

Peter reached for the Bible and turned to a Psalm I was unfamiliar with. Then in what I can only describe as the most profound and disturbing incident I have ever experienced, Peter's voice was no longer Peter's voice. I couldn't see Peter sitting directly in front of me and I couldn't actually see who it was sitting in front of me. Everything in the room had disappeared in a way similar to when I saw the deer turn into the hawk on the highway. There was nothing except the voice speaking directly to me, reciting the words of the Psalm.

With each and every word spoken, I felt incredibly frightened. I wanted to hide myself from the power of that voice and at the same time I felt drawn to the power of the words it spoke. Then it was all over. The room around me returned. Peter was sitting directly in front of me again. Sharon was there. I looked at them, trying to read their faces. Had they too experienced something? I asked Sharon what had just happened and she asked me to tell them what I had experienced.

I described what happened and Sharon smiled at me in a way that made me feel that whatever she and Peter also experienced, it was something good. Again I asked if they experienced something strange. Sharon said that Peter was led to read me the 91st Psalm. Peter agreed and said that it was important for me to understand that the 91st Psalm was my Psalm and that God wanted me to know it.

I left Peter and Sharon that night profoundly affected by the strange event and despite the fact that to this day I can still visualize what took place that night, I simply cannot explain it. It remains the most powerful and profound event of my life.

It's interesting to me that this incident with Peter and Sharon was the last of these strange incidents I had. Why I had them and why this one was the last one, I still don't understand. I do know that the 91st Psalm remains special to me.

Peter and Sharon suggested that I spend some time at a religious retreat in Massachusetts, and after talking with them about it, I decided to go. I wrote a poem shortly before I left for the retreat in which I described a large white building with large marble columns. It was surrounded by cedar trees.

When Kip and I arrived at the religious retreat, I was surprised by what I saw. The building was made of marble, it had huge marble columns and there were numerous cedar trees surrounding the property. I mentioned my poem to Kip before he drove back to Vermont. I took the coincidence of my poem as a sign that being at the retreat was a good thing.

I was shown around the huge estate by a staff member and then introduced to three women who would be sharing a dorm room with me. We talked to each other about the reasons we had come to the retreat. One woman told us that the staff had brought her to the retreat from New Orleans where she had been mixed up in a scenario that included crime figures. The retreat staff was hiding her. Another girl told about being accused of being "demonically oppressed." The girl was only in her late teens and seemed to feel that the label of oppression was misplaced. I kept information about my own circumstances to myself.

The daily routine of the retreat revolved around religious instruction. Almost immediately, I was uncomfortable with this instruction. The dinner meal was an odd mixture of ingredients we were told were vegetable based. It was like a thick paste. I found this somewhat strange. There was no actual food like meat, potatoes or vegetables and I was never sure exactly what we were being fed.

We sat around a table listening to a red-haired woman staff member instruct us on the Bible and when she made an obvious inflammatory remark about Jewish people, I bristled and looked around the table to see if anyone else had the same reaction that I did. No one seemed to object. One of the people sitting at the table was a young Jewish man named David and when the staff member made a second negative remark about the Jewish people, I couldn't sit silently any longer.

"David, you're Jewish, aren't you?" I asked turning my attention toward him.

He looked startled by my comment.

I then directed my anger and my comments at the woman staff member and said that in my opinion this was not religious instruction, it was religious bigotry. The woman was caught off guard and she became even more rattled when others in the group joined me with their own objections. When the class was over David came up to me and thanked me. He said he couldn't explain why he hadn't spoken up sooner. I began to watch the staff very closely. Something wasn't right.

One night several of us walked the long distance from the retreat into town to have a pizza at a little café. The owner of the café greeted us warmly until he learned that we were from the retreat. Upon hearing where we were from, his attitude toward us drastically changed and he became hostile. This did not go unnoticed by any of us and we talked about it all the way back to the estate. That night I phoned Peter and voiced my concerns but he urged me to stay. I then phoned my parents and filled my mother in on what was taking place. She encouraged me to come home.

The staff was not pleased to hear that I was disenchanted enough to leave, but agreed to drive me to the bus. In the dark of the night, the red-haired woman staff member dropped me off on the street in Worcester. I sat with three duffle bags and an acoustic guitar in a case on a city bus stop bench and waited for the bus. The bus driver nearly drove past me and I had to run to catch the bus. A sole passenger aboard the bus helped me get my duffle bags and guitar on the bus and bought me a cup of hot coffee when we pulled into the bus stop. After hearing that I had been dropped off at night by the staff at the retreat the bus driver commented that in his opinion this was not Christian behavior.

I bought a bus ticket to Vermont and waited in the small bus station. Much to my alarm, the attendant closed the bus station at eleven that night, forcing me to stand alone outside in the dark to wait for the bus. I was very uneasy waiting in the dark, alone in the city. A man and woman came after about twenty or so minutes to wait for the bus with me and I felt somewhat more at ease not having to wait all alone. When I finally boarded the bus I realized that I would have to stay awake all night because I had to change buses several times. I looked out at the street lamps along the Charles River and thought to myself how incredible it was to be sitting on a bus in Boston.

During my investigation, I learned that Robert Hyde and Dr. Hudson Hoagland conducted extensive CIA experiments at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology and that MKULTRA Subproject 8, conducted at Worcester, was Hyde's Subproject. Whether it was the four Vermont CIA research sites or the two Baltimore hospital CIA sites, it seemed that I had been in the same city or in the same hospitals again and again, where the CIA experiments were conducted. It seemed an incredible coincidence that I ended up in Worcester when at the time I had no idea that I had ever been used in CIA experiments. I never identified the religious retreat in Worcester as a CIA site, but the fact that CIA was very interested in using religion to control people, makes me suspicious. CIA was particularly interested in religious conversion (MKULTRA Subproject 98 dealt with individual and mass conversion) and the location of the retreat was in the same city as a well-known CIA front where Hyde had conducted MKULTRA research.

After learning about the Vermont CIA experiments and realizing I had been in two CIA sites in Baltimore, I took a closer look at the retreat experience in Worcester. Because the CIA, UVM and the two Burlington hospitals continue to refuse to provide me with the full record of the CIA experiments I was subjected to, I am forced to be suspicious about my experiences in the retreat. I had been at a total of seven CIA sites in three states and given the fact that the CIA was operating in Worcester, my suspicions only grew.

The first night I was at the retreat, I learned that one of the women was apparently being hidden by the retreat from organized crime in New Orleans. She wasn't there for religious instruction. I've recently wondered if what sounded like a witness protection program was in effect with this woman and if that was the case, as far as I know, the federal government runs the witness protection program.

I thought about the reaction of the man in the little café when he discovered that a group of us were from the retreat. His immediate reaction was clearly an indication that he had some type of strong negative feelings or knowledge about the retreat.

I attempted an internet search for the retreat after learning about the CIA experiments. I knew that a branch of the religious retreat was located in Switzerland, but I was unable to find the retreat. I found this unusual, having conducted many previous internet searches. It seemed to me that even if the organization no longer existed, I still should have been able to locate information on it. I never succeeded. It's as if it never existed.

The Rockland Project, which I have determined was a CIA project, is another instance where, to quote former Governor Phil Hoff, "It's just as if it never existed."

The actual location of the retreat was in a hamlet of Worcester called Shrewsbury. The Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology was also based in Shrewsbury. It's a stretch for me to believe this was a coincidence.

The religious instruction offered at the retreat was troubling from the start and I was always perplexed that the other people at the retreat seemed willing to be taught what was so clearly religious bigotry until someone spoke up and challenged the teaching. It was as if they were asleep or dulled somehow. In addition, I was essentially dumped on the city streets of Worcester, alone at night, in the cold of February to get a bus and get back to Vermont. CIA operated out of Worcester and when I look closely at the night I left the retreat, it was a run from the retreat. I had a long history of running and CIA knew this from the VSH experiments. Was that night in Worcester another experiment? Was the estate where the retreat operated a CIA site? I don't know the answer to these questions and I do not like the fact that I have to ask myself these kinds of questions. It's not knowing the full story of the CIA experiments I was subjected to that is so disturbing all these years later.

All of the others at the retreat with me were young people. I recall no middle-aged or elderly people. They were from all over the country. In retrospect, given what I've learned over the last fifteen years, I wonder if it's possible that all the people there were former CIA unwitting subjects like I was. I will very likely never know the answer but even the possibility that this could have been the case is very disturbing.

A few days after I left the retreat I got a phone call from one of the women who shared a dorm room with me. She told me that when the people staying at the retreat learned that I had been dropped off alone in the city they were not pleased. Apparently seven or eight of the people who were there openly challenged the retreat staff about how I was handled and about the religious instruction. She told me that the seven or eight people, including her, packed up and left the retreat right after I left. She was back home in Texas. She thanked me for waking everyone up. I'm left to conclude that my objections to how the retreat behaved were shared by many others staying there.

My experience at the retreat was a game changer for me. Peter and Sharon didn't seem to understand or believe the things I told them happened at the retreat. I plunged into a severe depression. My parents tried to support me and they were concerned as I sunk deeper and deeper into despair. In an effort to try to ease the situation, my arthritic father climbed the stairs to my bedroom one afternoon with my mother. They sat in my room describing how my room could be turned into an apartment and that they would do everything they could to help me. They wanted me to be home with them and my father said they didn't care if I went to church or not. He just wanted me to be home with them and safe.

I struggled with a terrible conflict. If I left the church and Peter and Sharon would I be surrendering my soul to the Devil? I didn't know what to do. I went to Pater and asked him for the key to the church. I wanted to go inside the church and try to decide what to do.

I was resistant to the idea that I had been exposed to a demonic force from the beginning when Peter first suggested that this had been the case. It frightened me and I was even more frightened at the thought of pulling back from Peter and Sharon. Would I find myself at the mercy of far more oppression than I had when I first came to them for help? I felt doomed.

I stood in the church looking at the stained glass windows and prayed for God to help me decide what to do. It was an almost eerie experience to be alone in the big church. The emotional conflict I was caught in felt threatening to my survival. I couldn't even kill myself because whether alive or dead, I felt that I was caught directly in the middle of God and the Devil. If I pulled away from the church, would I open the door for seven times the torment? Dying wouldn't protect me. I had no escape and it terrified me. I believed in God and it wasn't God I was trying to escape.

When I walked into Peter and Sharon's house that night in November, 1981, I didn't yet know about the violent childhood trauma I suffered and I didn't yet have the documents to prove that I had been experimented on by the CIA. It took me over twenty years after my experiences with Peter and Sharon to even begin to comprehend and to accept that Peter's determination that I had been "oppressed by evil" was true.

I would eventually realize that I was so afraid of the idea that I might have been influenced by something or someone evil that I had to distance myself from the intensity of my relationship with Peter and Sharon. For many years I was able to tell myself that they were wrong. Peter and Sharon weren't wrong but, in 1982, I was trying once again to survive.

In 1981, I wasn't able to recognize or accept the idea that I had been exposed to evil. After fifteen years of obtaining information on the Vermont CIA experiments, I clearly recognize that I was surrounded by evil. There is simply no other word that accurately describes and explains the CIA experiments. There was no ethical, moral or medical explanation for the experiments and the intent of the doctors who conducted the experiments is very clear in their research project documents.

I left the church that snowy day in March, 1982, and told my parents that I needed help. They were understandably concerned when I said I needed psychiatric help. They knew all too well what my previous attempts to get help from psychiatrists had brought me. I phoned my family doctor and told him that I needed help. He quickly arranged for me to be admitted to the Rutland Regional Medical Center psychiatric unit. I held my breath and prayed that I had made the right decision.

I don't have clear memories of being admitted to the Rutland psychiatric unit but I am sure I was afraid. The first person I recall talking with came into my hospital room and introduced herself as the occupational therapist, Mary Patten. Mary wore a bandana over her hair and was non-judgmental in her approach. I talked to her about the frightening spiritual crisis I was caught in and she reassured me that I would find help on the unit.

Dr. Bob Ross, a senior psychiatrist, visited me and we talked in more depth about my crisis. He told me that the unit staff had experience with situations like mine and asked me to hang in with them. He asked me for permission to contact Dr. Nepvue. I didn't talk to him about Dr. Nepvue's diagnosis, but Dr. Ross learned of it when he and Dr. Nepvue spoke on the phone.

Sharon and my sister-in-law visited me and Sharon, who was very frightened that harm would come to me while I was on the unit, tried to convince me to leave the hospital and enter a Christian-based psychiatric hospital. I felt torn. I was already uneasy about being in another psychiatric clinic and I was still deeply connected to Sharon. I followed Sharon and Sue to the door of the unit, still not sure if I was going to stay or leave with them.

A nurse standing at the desk stopped us and asked me, "What do I have to gain from you staying here Karen? What's in it for me?"

It was the perfect challenge and I stopped at the door. Sharon and Sue left without me.

Days became weeks on the unit. My family doctor visited me every day and promised me that before he allowed anyone to send me anywhere, he would discharge me.

He stressed, "Just don't do anything that will take the decision out of my hands."

He remained my doctor of record during the entire hospital stay.

The nursing staff on the unit was all psychiatric registered nurses. The difference between highly trained psychiatric nurses and the untrained and uneducated aides at VSH was markedly apparent. I sought out Mary Patten to talk with and time and time again, she seemed to provide me with information and insight I felt was extremely helpful.

Rosemary Johnson, the mental health clinic worker I first met after Phil Cram died in 1969, was one of the unit staff. I'd always liked Rosemary and she too became a person I went to for insight and help. The head nurse, Lynne Colville became another person I felt safe with. Lynne became a person I would turn to in times of crisis for many years to come. Hiding my strange condition was for me self-protection and although I was aware of the diagnosis, I didn't have much information about it. Rosemary, Mary and Lynne approached the subject numerous times, but for me, it was still something buried in my unconscious mind.

My family doctor ordered blood tests to check the status of the immune disorder and much to my surprise the L-cell, which was the cell that positively confirmed the diagnosis of systemic lupus, was found. I was shaken by the diagnosis. Mary had been diagnosed with lupus many years earlier and she helped me through the initial stages of acceptance and understanding of the disease. Mary and I would share a bond that would last for many years, but not only because of our shared illness.

Mary seemed to just "get it." She had a depth of understanding about the human condition I hadn't encountered before. Mary was a quiet, unassuming person who was very clearly motivated to help other people. She would go on to obtain her Master's Degree in Psychology and work on the unit as a therapist and she told me later that it was when she met me that she discovered her ability to counsel, not to just do occupational therapy. She became a highly sought out counselor by patients on the unit.

After a couple of months on the unit, Dr. Bob Ross retired, and filling his position as head of Psychiatric Services was Dr. Tom Fox. I'd seen Dr. Fox come in and out of the unit to speak with patients and the day that he officially took over remains a memorable day for me. Many years later he told me it was a memorable day for him as well.

I watched as Dr. Fox came into the dayroom to get patients to talk with. He had officially been my doctor for several days, yet he had never introduced himself to me and I was irritated. He asked me to come with him so that we could talk.

"You've been my doctor for days now but you haven't bothered to introduce yourself. So now you finally say something to me and I'm supposed to jump up and act like it's okay that you totally dismissed me for days?"

Dr. Fox smiled at me and said he'd be back a little later. He continued to see patients on the unit and when he finished, he came over to me one more time.

"You want to talk now?" he asked me.

I noticed a twinkle in his eye, but I still had reservations about this new psychiatrist. I went with him to talk.

"I apologize for not introducing myself before now," Dr. Fox began, "You've done hard time, haven't you?"

"So, you read my chart and saw I'd been in VSH," I fired back.

Dr. Fox smiled at me.

"I have to tell you, I haven't had a patient talk to me like that and I love it. Too many patients don't stand up for themselves. But I also recognize that you have done hard time. Pretty bad, huh?"

I was surprised by Dr. Fox's attitude. We talked and at the end of our first meeting, I felt that he might actually be someone who might help. It was worth a try. Over our next several meetings, he impressed me as being fair, open and willing to work with me. He didn't push me about my diagnosis of MPD but he said he hoped that he could help me make progress in dealing with the disorder. He seemed to appreciate the spiritual crisis I was struggling with and as the weeks went by, the intensity of my spiritual conflict diminished.

My condition was erratic and my behavior was unpredictable. Mary sat down with me and tried to learn about the other personalities, but I wasn't able to provide much information. It was frustrating for me to be so shut off from my own mind.

I fled the hospital for reasons I have never really understood. I wandered around Rutland city, where, apparently, I was struck by a bicycle. I was found by an ambulance crew, bleeding from my nose. Although the episode is fuzzy for me, I recall having a great deal of difficulty speaking. Dr. Fox met me in the emergency room and I went back to the unit on a stretcher.

Dr. Fox suggested that I consider attending the "day hospital" program. Day hospital was an intensive group therapy-based program run by Rutland Regional Hospital. There were several groups a day and Dr. Fox wanted me to remain on the unit while I attended. I agreed to give it a try.

Group therapy was grueling. Seven or eight patients sat in a circle discussing topics that ranged from personal situations to plans for discharge. I entered the group feeling that time was not something that I could afford to waste. The first day I began to talk in the group, which clearly angered one of the members.

"People who come into this group don't talk until they have been here awhile. I am the most senior member of this group and I've been here longer than anyone," the petite young woman announced, staring straight at me.

"Really? You've been here longer than anyone and if I've heard you right, you take some kind of pride in that?" I asked, staring right back at her.

She was caught off guard and shuffled around in her chair.

"Seniority or not, I'm here to work on my own issues and I'm not going to hang back just because you think I should," I said, looking around the entire circle.

A staff member later told me that I reminded him of a line from the song, Me and Bobby McGee: "Freedom's just another word for nothing left to lose."

He was right.

Group therapy was an interesting mixture of revelations by others whose issues more often than not set off the issues of many others in the circle. There were times when one person talking about how they felt or about whatever they were struggling with set off a chain reaction of emotion and identification among the other people. There were other times when days went by and we all sat there managing to accomplish nothing except to irritate each other.

There were days when I returned to the unit exhausted and emotionally fragile. The unit staff helped those of us in the group deal with the aftermath of a day in therapy. Despite the urging of Dr. Fox, I didn't talk about my MPD in the group. I was still protective and secretive about the disorder and only a few of the unit staff actually knew my diagnosis

By the end of June, I had gone as far as I could in the group and I talked with Dr. Fox about leaving the hospital. He voiced concern about my returning to live with my parents, but I didn't have other options at that point. The night before my discharge, Rosemary Johnson sat down with me.

"I want to you to know that Kathy Judge is in private practice now. If you ever decide to go into therapy and deal with the MPD, give Kathy a call."

Dr. Fox suggested that I see a therapist as an outpatient and it's clear to me in retrospect that, in 1982, I was not yet ready to deal with my disorder. I saw a psychologist after discharge and it was clear to me almost immediately that he and I were not a good match. He dismissed my diagnosis and told me he didn't believe in MPD. I remember looking at him that day and thinking to myself that there was simply no way I was going to get into a struggle about whether or not I was multiple with this guy.

"Whether or not you believe in my diagnosis doesn't change the way I have to live my life. I think me coming here is a mistake."

I didn't return to therapy with him.

Tensions between my mother and me were escalating again and the day I ended therapy, I boarded a bus to Morrisville where I secured a loan from the bank. I decided to buy a horse.

I think that I decided to buy another horse in an attempt to recreate a time in my life when having a horse helped me hold myself together. My parents were not altogether pleased by my news, but they agreed to go with me to look for a horse. Mom and Dad only wanted me to be okay and they hoped that maybe having a horse would help me.

I walked through three huge horse barns looking at each of the many horses stabled. When I reached the third barn I saw King. He was a beautiful red chestnut thoroughbred with a blond mane and tail and a white blaze down his face. King nickered softly to me when I approached him in the stall.

It would take twenty years for me to be aware of the possible connection between King, the red chestnut horse with the white blaze down his face and the other red chestnut horse with a white blaze that Curlin brought out behind the VSH back ward for me to see in 1970. I would learn during my investigation that CIA used horse imagery as hypnotic symbols in the drug and mind control experiments.

The ranch owner tried to discourage me from buying King. He was a high-strung former three-day eventer and only an experienced rider could manage him. As I rode him around the large ring I was nearly breathless with excitement. If there was one thing I could do well, it was ride a horse and riding King was akin to riding a bolt of lightening. King was magnificent and I needed to feel the ways in which he made me feel. I was alive again.

My cousins, Sally and Gene, had pastureland and barns at their home in Brandon and they agreed to let me keep King there. I did chores in their small stable and my mother joined me. She enjoyed being around the horses and has said many times over the years that for her it was one of the best times. My father and I began spending time together as well. It was nice to not only have time with my father but also to have the chance to get to know him all over again. Dad was frustrated that his arthritis prevented him from helping me do some of the heavy work required with a horse, but his quiet, constant presence was invaluable, as was the time we were fortunate enough to be able to spend together.

King's health problems began almost immediately. He was diagnosed with shipping fever and required a veterinarian. I was shaken by King's illness but the vet pulled him through the disease. The horse barn at my parent's home was repaired and the backyard was fenced in. I leased an adjoining piece of pasture from the neighbor who had allowed me to pasture my first horse on her property in 1960. I remember riding King down through the streets of Brandon the day I moved him to Maple Street. King had elegance in his movement and sitting atop the high-strung animal made me feel alive, free and in control.

The backyard soon was regularly filled with neighborhood kids who ranged in age from six to sixteen. King loved the attention the kids gave him and many of them helped me load hay bales and eventually joined in to build King a new barn. I grew close to these kids and they confided in me regularly about their problems and concerns. When the school bus passed by King's corral every afternoon, the kids on the bus could be heard calling King's name.

My father loved to sit in his chair in the backyard and listen to the kids. Dad's two brothers began to be regular visitors, as did my sister-in-law's father, Bob. I think Dad missed talking to people as he had always done when he worked and now that I was home and the back yard was almost always filled with people, he was content.

It's still difficult for me to find the words to explain my relationship with King. I know the terms that have been used, like anthropomorphism and dissociation and I agree that I did experience a form of both. In retrospect I realize that unconsciously I was King and he was me. King was a dissociated externalized self in animal form. I would later learn that things I did for him, I was on another level, doing for myself. I almost constantly worried that someone would harm him and that I would not be able to protect him. I got up out of bed many nights to stand and look out the window at the barn because I was so fearful. It got so I rarely left his side. I was constantly on alert for a threat from nameless, faceless people.

I realize now that the longer I had King, the less I was in touch with my own emotions or my own self. I recall standing beside him, stroking his neck and looking into his huge brown eyes. It was almost hypnotic. Every breath he took breathed life into me. King was a fiery, powerful animal who in the wrong hands could have actually been dangerous. He required an experienced rider and knowledgeable handling.

King foundered in 1986. Founder is a painful, potentially fatal disease of the hoof. The vet saved him and after a long recuperation I was even more cautious with him. No matter the weather, I remained by his side, all day every day. My parents worried about me in the freezing winter and in the heat of the summer. After King's illness, I began to have trouble with my stomach and my family doctor prescribed a drug to help.

I decided to build a new barn and the neighborhood kids eagerly pitched in to help. My uncle was instrumental in the construction of the barn, as was Dad. The kids learned carpentry from my uncle and father and they were proud when the barn was finished.

King began to have problems again and the vet diagnosed the condition as navicular disease, a serious and painful nerve disease in the feet and legs, usually found in horses that have been used for jumping. The vet suggested King be fitted with special shoes. It was only a matter of weeks before King's condition dramatically worsened.

I felt like I was trapped in a nightmare. I watched King as he took painful steps and inside of myself, I knew. On a cold, sunny November morning I looked out the window at the barn as I had done every morning for five years. This morning, King didn't have his head out the top dutch door of the barn as he always had every morning before.

When I opened the barn door I saw King lying down. I stared into his huge soft brown eyes and suddenly I felt sickened. I knew I had to put him down. I kneeled down next to him and cradled his head in my arms. For me, putting King down was committing suicide. I went inside and called the vet.

The vet refused to allow me to stay while he put King down. My father and uncle remained at the barn and my mother and I drove to my aunt's house to wait. When King first foundered, Sally and Gene gave me a Morgan mare that I kept in King's old barn. She was a sweet mare but she wasn't King. I hated to have her there when King was put down.

I sat in my aunt's house and listened while military jets conducted maneuvers overhead. The roar of the jets was at times deafening. At the time I had no way of knowing that the thundering roar of the jets flying overhead was a trigger to a childhood trauma. I learned years later that when I was eighteen months old my mother rushed outside to the fenced-in play area I was in after several low flying jets caused me to become hysterical. She couldn't calm me and had to call a doctor because of my hysterical reaction. My mother explained that when she couldn't help me calm down, she too became hysterical. I have no memory of the low flying jets and in retrospect I find it ironic that on the day King was put down, the jets flew over my aunt's house.

Returning to King's empty barn felt surreal, but I tried to push ahead and take care of the Morgan mare. I felt sick. The anti-nausea drugs my doctor had given me months before didn't seem to be working and he once again increased the dose. The neighborhood kids came to offer their condolences and they all had tears in their eyes. I stood in the shower that night and sobbed. Why did God take the only thing I really cared about away from me?

Over the days that followed, I took care of the mare and rode her a few times. My depression was steadily worsening. I watched rats scurry around under the bird feeders that were hung around the corral. For years, many birds came to the feeders, along with squirrels who liked to sit atop the board fence of the corral with their babies. When King was alive I refused to fire a gun near him and risk frightening him, but as I watched the rats eat the birdseed, I was repulsed.

I borrowed a rifle from a neighbor and Bob, my sister-in-law's father, gave me handmade bullets to use. I'd fired a rifle when I was in elementary school, target shooting with my brother, and I knew enough about a rifle to be able to shoot a rat. I loaded the gun and waited for the rats to show themselves.

I pulled the trigger and saw the rat stagger and fall. Suddenly I felt myself racing backwards, as if I was spinning through a tunnel at a hundred miles an hour. I felt disoriented and frightened by the strange sensations I felt. As if on automatic pilot, with no conscious thought or decision, I placed the barrel of the rifle under my chin and pulled the trigger. Nothing happened. I pulled the trigger a second time. Nothing happened.

My father and uncle rushed into the backyard. My father later told me that I was as white as a sheet. They asked me if I was okay and I said, yes. I still wasn't sure what had just happened. I had never killed anything before but even this didn't explain what I had done when I placed the barrel of the rifle under my chin. I took the rifle to Bob who ran a rod down the barrel of the gun to dislodge the bullets. The handmade bullets saved my life. I told no one about my suicide attempt.

I stared at the dead rat for hours. I couldn't bring myself to bury it and each time I tried, something inside of me prevented me from placing the rat's body in the hole I dug. One of the kids buried the rat for me. I tried to pull myself out of what felt like a quicksand of despair by getting up every morning and tending to the mare. I saddled her and rode a few miles each day but nothing seemed to matter. I kept seeing King's eyes as I knelt next to him in the barn. It was like I was looking into my own eyes.

The teenage boys next door were down behind the barn target shooting at a plastic Coke bottle and they invited me to shoot. I stood a considerable distance from the plastic bottle, aimed and fired. The bottle didn't move.

One of the boys ran up to check the bottle and turned around and shouted, "You hit it dead center!"

I laughed as the kids teased me to try again and I aimed and fired. The bottle didn't move. This time the boys were excited by the fact that I hit it dead center again.

"Where did you learn to shoot like that?" they asked.

I had no answer and in the back of my mind, I felt uneasiness. One time might have been a fluke but when I shot dead center twice without even moving the plastic bottle, it bothered me. It would not be the last time I had disturbing questions about guns

The dark, dreary skies of November only seemed to make the depression I felt worse and as each day passed, I became more overwhelmed. I knew I was in real trouble. I sat down with my parents and told them I had to get help and that I knew who to call. Rosemary Johnson told me when I left the hospital that Kathy Judge was in private practice and I knew that she was the person to contact.

When I spoke with Kathy on the phone, I told her that we had known each other at Rutland County Mental Health in 1969. Kathy was booked solid with patients until January and couldn't see me. Kathy would tell me years later that during this phone conversation she was struck by the fact that I talked as though she and I had just recently seen each other. I decided to try to hang on until January when she could fit me in, but things only got worse for me.

I visited Lynne Colville, the head nurse on the Rutland unit and after we talked Lynne asked my permission for her to speak with my family doctor. Lynne told me that she thought I should come back onto the unit. I knew she was right. Something was very wrong and I knew that my life was on the line. Arrangements were made by my family doctor for me to be admitted to the unit.

My family was fearful and tried to discourage me from going back into the hospital. My brother couldn't understand why losing King had affected me to the degree it had and I had no way of explaining to him what was going on. I didn't understand either. It was about King, but it was about something else too. I just didn't know what that something else was.

Dr. Fox immediately zeroed in on my relationship with King and told me that when he learned that King had died, he knew I would have problems. Dr. Fox asked me to explain to him how and why I constructed the new barn and the corral fence the way I had. I told him how important it was that the new barn had several windows in it and that it be big enough that King wouldn't feel closed in. The rear window had a screen across it so no one could reach into the barn.

I explained how when I built the board fence for the corral, each board had to be six inches apart and that the handle and lock on the gate was on the inside of the gate. I told him that the gate was very heavy and that my uncle rigged it with what's called a "dead man." A wire attached to the gate is fixed to a weight buried in a hole and this keeps the gate opening and closing properly. I explained that for some reason the dead man bothered me.

"The handle and lock on the gate were on the inside of the gate?" Dr. Fox asked me.

"Why do you suppose you put the handle and lock on the inside of the gate?"

I asked him to check my left leg. I was having pain and I wondered if he thought I foundered. He replied that he wasn't a foot doctor. Then he asked me to listen to a story:

"There was a young horse kept in a canyon with many other horses. The man, who had been searching for just the right horse for a long time, surveyed all of the horses and chose one particular horse because it was very special. He began to groom and train this horse for a very important occasion. The young horse was easily excited and the man instructed the horse about a very special carnival that was coming to town. All of the grooming and training was going to pay off when the horse heard the sound of fireworks at the carnival. The horse needed to recognize that the fireworks would signal the exodus."

I was stunned. I thought the word exodus meant exit and that Dr. Fox was telling me to kill myself. I didn't say a word to him. My condition rapidly deteriorated and my mind began producing frightening images, some of which I realized were hallucinations. I didn't tell anyone what was happening as fear and increasing paranoia over took me.

I entered the day room to find a doctor standing in front of a terminally ill patient. I saw the doctor transform in front of me into a priest and tell the woman that she was going to die. I was outraged and as he left the room and went into the hall, I chased after him. He disappeared. I went to the nurse's station where I saw the patient charts hanging in the metal container they were kept in. Beside each patient's name was another name. I was enraged when I realized that every person on the unit was an imposter. These people were playing a strange game with me and my head spun in confusion. I grabbed the Bible and slid it down the hall toward where Dr. Fox was sitting with a patient. He came up the hall.

I told him that he needed the Bible more than I did. He agreed. I described seeing the doctor who was pretending to be a priest. He agreed that it was a terrible thing to do. He asked me if I had stopped taking the Xanax he prescribed and I told him there was something wrong with the pills. I returned to my room and when I lay on the bed, a crazy-looking woman in the other bed suddenly pulled the curtain between us back and snatched the pillow from under my head. When I got out of bed to confront her, she had disappeared.

I began to hide food under my bed. I couldn't eat because of nausea and I listened as the nurses in the hall talked about me as if I were already dead. I recounted to Mary the story Dr. Fox had told me. I didn't see him standing behind the curtain, listening and I only learned of his presence later. Dr. Fox diagnosed me as suffering a psychotic break.

The church sent me a can of Christmas cookies. The coffee can was wrapped in Christmas paper. I brought the cookies up to the nurse's station to share them with the night shift. When I returned to my room I tore the paper off from the can and to my horror read on the coffee can: Poison - Do Not Eat.

I was panic-stricken. I thought that I had just given the nurses poison. I couldn't handle it and despite the efforts of the night nurse, Marlene, to stop me, I put on my jacket and fled the unit. I ran to the elevator.

I wandered around the basement of the hospital while security searched for me. There was a blizzard that night and they feared that I had gone out into the storm. I found myself curled up on the floor in the stairwell. I have no idea how much time passed until I returned to the unit. The sound of the elevator going up and down remained in my head for a long time. I couldn't get the mechanical noise out of my mind as it replayed again and again. The stairwell where I woke up was near the elevator shaft. Walking into the unit I passed by a nurse and watched her sneer at me. I realized I could only see her in profile and I told myself that she wasn't real.

Because my jacket was dry, the unit staff knew that I hadn't left the hospital. Dr. Fox ordered a shot of Haldol. I remember sitting in front of him at the nurses' station and suddenly feeling very sleepy. I put my head down on the counter for what felt like only a few moments and when I raised my head, I knew I had to get out of there. I knew that for some reason I was hallucinating and I wasn't sure that I could trust anyone on the unit. I was convinced that there had been something in the drugs they gave me.

The 1971 Metrazol chart shows that I recognized that I was hallucinating and I accurately attributed the cause of the hallucinations and the severe physical and emotional distress to the drugs the doctors were giving me. The incident in Rutland is the second time I was able to realize that I was having hallucinations. Apparently I didn't recognize that I was hallucinating all of the time.

Dr. Fox reluctantly let me go against medical advice and my parents drove me back home. I started shivering when I got into bed but it didn't take long before it was clear that I was having an adverse drug reaction. My muscles began to spasm severely. Mom called the family doctor. My facial muscles were in spasm and the spasms distorted my face.

The doctor gave me Benadryl and I pleaded with him, "I'm not crazy!"

"I know you're not crazy. You're having a bad drug reaction. I'll contact Dr. Fox and find out what he gave you. Don't worry. You will be okay," the doctor tried to reassure me.

My mother sat in the front of the ambulance and the ambulance attendant took my blood pressure. I knew the attendant. We had grown up together. I remember feeling very strange and very far away. I heard him call my name. My mother later told me the ambulance driver closed the window between us so that my mother couldn't see what was happening.

I was no longer in the ambulance. I had no body and no form. There was no physical or emotional distress. Wherever I was didn't seem to be a physical place. I felt a surge of exhilaration in that I had never felt anything as freeing and spectacular in my life. I realized that I was dying and I didn't mind. I clearly remember thinking if this is what dying is, I'm okay with it.

Suddenly and without audible words I "heard" a voice.

"This is not the right time."

I was immediately back on the stretcher in the ambulance. The emergency room doctors told me that I had a severe allergic reaction to Haldol. I learned later that the anti-nausea drug that I had been on since before King died had a phenothiazine drug in it. The two drugs collided. Dr. Fox later told me that very likely the psychotic break I had was drug-induced. In the ambulance my blood pressure dropped to a potentially life-threatening level. I think I was close to dying and the experience I had in those moments remains almost impossible for me to adequately describe. I do know that since that strange experience, I have never again feared dying

I recuperated at home and took Benadryl for several days. I had a very distressing incident after I got home. I tried to read the TV Guide and felt my mind mix into the words on the pages. It was a very frightening. My mind had lost the ability to separate itself from the words I tried to read. It was as if the boundaries of my mind had been breached. The experience passed after about twenty-four hours.

After I learned that I had been used in CIA experiments, I was able to reexamine the strange events during the unit hospitalization. Kathy and I talked about the things that happened during the unit stay many times. Even before I obtained my medical records, I couldn't stop returning to those incidents on the unit. They troubled me.

I looked closely at the "story" I thought Dr. Fox told me and came to a conclusion, based on information both from my VSH records and from documents about MKULTRA. Special interrogations utilized hallucinogens, hypnosis, isolation, chemical shock and ECT. I read several declassified CIA documents detailing CIA use of SI with unwitting subjects and CIA interest in dissociation, particularly in children between the ages of thirteen and eighteen.

I believe the "story" I thought Dr. Fox told me was actually a flashback to the experimentation. Because of the memory loss I have for those almost seven months in seclusion, I do not have memory of what happened during the experiments in 1970-1971 to fall back on. The fact that I was having an adverse drug reaction in 1987 may have made me more vulnerable for the flashback to occur.

The man selected the horse to groom and train for an upcoming occasion. This would fit with having been selected by those experimenting on me. I believe hypnosis was used, as was LSD. The use of a horse is also key, and information about my love of horses was available to the researchers when I was thirteen years old. CIA used imagery of horses in their experiments with selected subjects. The carnival may have signified a pre-selected event. The symbolism of fireworks might have been used in place of a gunshot. CIA special interrogations tested hypnosis by instructing a subject to pick up and fire a gun and have no memory of the event. The fireworks signaled the exodus. At the time I thought exodus meant exit and believed Dr. Fox told me to kill myself. I believe the word exodus had a double meaning in the hypnotic set-up: to move from one place to the other or to flee the scene and also to kill myself after the special occasion.

Much of the MKULTRA research is thought to have been done so that CIA agents could be protected if captured by enemy agents. If an agent could hold information in a dissociated state, he would be unable to give the information up even under torture. CIA interest in dissociation led the researchers to use special interrogation methods as well as other methods to intentionally further dissociate the subject. CIA wanted to explore the possibility that under hypnotic command, a subject might obey previously implanted hypnotic commands. Memory for the event and for the set-up would be lost.

The after-effects of the adverse drug reaction indicate an LSD flashback. I couldn't read without the words mixing into my mind; LSD is known to break down the normal barriers in the mind and leads to an inability to separate the internal from the external. I spoke with Tom Fox before he died and he believed that I was given LSD. Kathy agrees.

In the book, A Father, A Son and the CIA, author Harvey Weinstein quotes an excerpt from the book, Battle For The Mind: A Physiology of Conversion and Brainwashing, by William Sargent: "If a complete, sudden collapse can be produced by prolonging and intensifying emotional stress, the cortical slate may be wiped clean temporarily of its recently implanted patterns of behavior, perhaps allowing others to be substituted more easily."

Weinstein summarizes the research objectives stated in a 1950 CIA BLUEBIRD memorandum:

1. Discover means of conditioning personnel to prevent unauthorized extraction of information by known means.
2. Investigate the possibility of control of an individual by application of special interrogation.
3. To study memory enhancement.
4. Establish defensive means for preventing hostile control of Agency personnel.
5. To evaluate offensive uses of unconventional interrogation techniques including hypnosis and drugs.

A 1952 CIA Project ARTICJOKE memorandum maps out further objectives:

"The evaluation and development of any method by which we can get information from a person against his will and without his knowledge. Can we get control of a person to the point where he will do our bidding against his will and even against such fundamental laws of nature as self preservation?"

Robert Hyde conducted CIA experiments in Projects BLUEBIRD, ARTICHOKE and MKULTRA. After years of investigation and consults with experts, I believe LSD, hypnosis and other forms of brainwashing were used on me while I was a patient in the Burlington hospitals and in VSH. I would have one more disturbing incident during therapy with Kathy that once would once again raise the question of implanted hypnotic suggestion.

After I recuperated from the adverse drug reaction I returned to the unit in December, 1987. All signs of the drug-induced "psychotic break" were gone and I tried to settle into the routine of the unit again. There were new patients on the unit and I became friends with two. Peggy was a young mother struggling with her own issues from childhood. She and I shared a hospital room and quickly became friends. Andrea joined in with Peggy and I and the three of us spent most of our time together.

It was still almost impossible for me to openly discuss the MPD although I did talk more freely with Mary and Lynne. I was still struggling to understand my illness and to be able to access information buried in my unconscious mind. The unit staff watched as I cycled through one personality after the other. There were child alters and intensely protective alters. It still amazes me how consciously removed I was from my own self. Dr. Fox wanted me to deal with the MPD in private outpatient therapy and I was adamant that the only therapist I would see was Kathy Judge.

Kathy didn't have an opening in her schedule until January. The unit staff brought me the names of numerous local therapists and I rejected all of them. Kathy was the only therapist I would consider. Rosemary Johnson, who worked with Kathy in 1969 at Rutland County Mental Health, phoned Kathy. Rosemary reminded Kathy that she had known me in 1969 and told Kathy that she was the only therapist I would see. Dr. Fox also contacted Kathy to ask her to see me in therapy.

Kathy later told me that during the phone call with Tom Fox, he told her my diagnosis. Kathy told Tom that although she had experience in dissociation, she hadn't taken on a full-fledged multiple before and that she wasn't even sure that she believed in the disorder. Tom replied that she would believe.

"Why me?" Kathy asked Tom.

"Because she believes that it's you," Tom answered.

In January, 1988 Kathy Judge came to see me on the unit.

THERAPY, CHAOS AND INTEGRATION, 1988-1997

Kathy came to meet with me on the unit. I don't recall the details of our conversation except that I did acknowledge the MPD. I found it easy to talk with her and at the end of our meeting she agreed to see me in outpatient therapy. I remember feeling hopeful.

In 1969, when I attended the outpatient clinic where Rosemary and Kathy both worked, I never sought out Kathy to talk with. I watched her but I never approached her. She drove me home from the clinic one day and on an outing for the outpatient clinic, I recall swimming with her. In 1988, seeing Kathy again was just as if 1969 was yesterday.

Many years after that first meeting with Kathy, she told me that I presented one of my child alters during the meeting. Kathy would teach me in the years to come that despite what appeared to be self-destructive behavior or inexplicable behavior, that my personality system was organized to always insure my survival. MPD is the province of childhood trauma, as it usually develops in early childhood as a result of trauma. My expectations and assessments of the world and of people around me were based on a child's interpretations. In 1988, I was thirty-six years old, and I wasn't even close to understanding the illness that created such chaos in my life.

Although the MPD served its purpose by protecting my mind from unbearable early childhood trauma, the older I became, the more life-threatening the disorder became. My alter personalities were stuck back in a time long since passed and a great deal of the logic I used in my adult life was dictated by what Kathy described as " trance logic." I had frequent episodes of a cross-over in time where something in the present triggered off an emotional reaction that had much more to do with something that had happened in childhood. It didn't take Kathy long to realize that I had memory loss, but the extent of the memory loss wouldn't be discovered for several years.

In addition, despite the fact that I knew I was multiple, I was not consciously aware of the dissociations or what set them off. At times I heard conversations in my head and at other times I became aware of seeing and talking with my alters. I wasn't yet able to comprehend that the alters were actually all me.

On the unit Peggy and I had grown to be good friends. We supported each other, laughed together and cried together. I couldn't handle seeing my family and I didn't think returning to my parent's home would turn out any better than it ever had. I carried a deep-seated sense of shame about being sick and when I was with my family it only seemed to intensify. I desperately wanted to be normal and to not be the way I was. I knew that they didn't understand. I didn't understand either. Dr Fox and Kathy agreed that it would be okay for me to live temporarily with Peggy and her family. Peggy and her husband agreed that the arrangement might be good for both Peggy and me. Although Peggy was aware of my diagnosis, she didn't really understand what I was going through and I didn't expect her to. Peggy was my friend and in February, 1988, I was discharged from the unit and moved in with Peggy and her family.

Peggy had four beautiful children ranging in age from nine to two years old. The kids accepted me into their home and we all got along well. I slept in one of the bunk beds in their room. I always loved kids and enjoyed being around them.

Kathy had her hands full. Over the years Kathy has described herself as a "plain vanilla" therapist. She wasn't prone to over-reaction and her solid, sane approach to therapy began to prove to me that she was someone I could lean on without fear that she would suddenly step aside and allow me to fall. She didn't have a secret agenda. The Kathy I saw one week would be the Kathy I found the following week.

I was at times defensive, aloof and fearful about trusting her too much. I tested her frequently and many times in the beginning of therapy I contemplated leaving therapy. But in 1988, I was out of options and I knew that my life could not continue the way it had.

Kathy began to seek out experts in MPD. She attended a conference given by Dr. Colin Ross early on in our therapy, as well as other well-known psychiatrists like Dr. Richard Kluft.

During the first few months of therapy I began to dissociate more often and my personalities became more separate. Kathy later told me that I actually didn't become more floridly multiple in therapy. She said that I had been floridly multiple for a very long time before she began seeing me. I began to feel safe enough in therapy to allow the alters to emerge and be acknowledged by Kathy. It was a very frightening time for me.

For reasons that I cannot recall, I arranged to take out a loan at the bank in Morrisville to buy a car. The bank required me to sign the papers in person. Peggy cashed a check for me and dropped me off at the car rental agency. Once again I felt liberated and free behind the wheel of a rented car. I was no longer vulnerable and needy. I was capable and independent. As I drove along Route 100 toward Morrisville and listened to the FM radio, I felt transformed in every fiber of my being.

I signed the papers at the bank and returned to Rutland. I became increasingly uneasy at Peggy's for reasons I couldn't understand and I began to drive around in the rented car for hours at a stretch. My goal of buying a car had vanished.

I ate meals in diners and fast food restaurants and almost continuously drove. I began to feel a mounting and disturbing compulsion that I was at a loss to either explain or resist. Although I had no suicidal thoughts or feelings and no thoughts or feelings about harming anyone else, the strange compulsion overwhelmed my ability to resist. I purchased a pistol.

I drove away from the sporting goods store with the unloaded gun on the passenger seat. I began driving aimlessly searching for the place I was supposed to go. I wasn't sure where that place was or what I was supposed to do with the gun once I got there. I grew more confused as I drove, trying in vain to find the place I was supposed to go.

The compulsion was frightening. Whatever it was I was supposed to do was lost somewhere inside of me. I drove for hours until for the first time in my life I checked into a motel. I kept the pistol, now loaded, next to me on the bed in the motel room. For reasons I couldn't explain, being in a motel seemed to be a piece of the strange compulsion that was driving me. I waited, but I wasn't sure who or what I was waiting for.

My ease with the pistol both captivated and frightened me. I instinctively knew how to handle the gun. I loaded and unloaded it. I knew where the safety was and how to use it. The pistol felt natural in my hands. My mind raced to make sense of the situation.

The bed in the motel directly faced a large mirror and I sat on the bed and stared at myself in the mirror. I raised the loaded gun and placed it to my temple. I didn't feel suicidal but as I stared at my image in the mirror, I suddenly felt very frightened. I phoned Kathy.

Kathy later told me how frightened she was on the phone with me, fearing that I would either intentionally or accidently kill myself. Kathy made a decision when she first began therapy with me that she would never be a participant in having me sent to VSH and that night she hoped that I would safely unload the gun while we were on the phone.

After I unloaded the gun we talked for a long time. I tried to explain to her that I was not suicidal and did not have thoughts or feelings of harming anyone else. I was at a complete loss to explain the strange compulsion. Kathy instructed me to get rid of the gun before I came to her office. She would not see me while I remained in possession of the gun.

The next morning I checked out of the motel and contacted friends of mine who I knew would be safe with the gun and who would keep the entire situation quiet. The gun was eventually returned to the sporting goods store. I drove around for a long time, trying to understand what was happening to me. Eventually I drove to Kathy's office.

After learning that I had been used in experiments, this incident and the other episodes with guns, whether it was my familiarity with a gun or my accuracy when I fired a gun, came under close scrutiny. Kathy and I discussed the gun episodes many times and when I obtained declassified CIA documents and documents related to CIA Special Interrogations, I realized that my seemingly inexplicable knowledge and behavior related to guns may have come out of the experiments I was subjected to.

Declassified CIA documents describe Special Interrogation methods using unwitting subjects in hypnosis experiments. In one experiment a woman was placed in a hypnotic trance and instructed to pick up a gun and to fire it at another person. The woman did not know that the gun wasn't loaded. She was instructed that she would have amnesia for the event. The woman, who had expressed a fear of guns, picked the gun up and fired it at another person. She had no memory of the event. CIA use of guns in its mind control experiments has been written about in several well-known books.

I asked my brother if he had ever taught me to handle a pistol and he said no. He took me target shooting two or three times but a pistol was never used. Several people, including Kathy have told me that they would not have known how to load, unload or operate the safety of a pistol without prior instruction or experience with firearms. Yet I knew how to handle the pistol and I demonstrated an ability for accuracy when I fired the rifle at the plastic Coke bottle.

The question of whether or not I was subjected to the use of a gun during the Special Interrogations conducted on me is a valid and disturbing question that remains unanswered by CIA, UVM and the State of Vermont. The medical records that I was able to obtain were incomplete and contain large sections where records are missing. The records I have contain no references to the use of guns. They do contain references to UVM Psychologist Patrick Sullivan visiting me once a week while I was in seclusion on 1A. Yet there are no notes about these visits and no notes about what he was doing when he visited me.

I have no idea how many times he visited me, or who asked him to visit me. I have one brief memory of him entering my seclusion room and telling me that I could not be hypnotized. My memory of Patrick Sullivan permanently ends with his statement. Until CIA, UVM and the State of Vermont acknowledge the CIA experiments and provide me with the answers by turning over the documents I am certain they are in possession of, I will be forced to continue to have to wonder exactly what they did to me.

When I parked my car at Kathy's office I found that I couldn't seem to open the car door. My mind felt numb and I struggled for several minutes to try and open the car door. I sat in the car feeling dazed by all that was happening to me. Kathy would later explain to me that the reason I couldn't seem to make my mind and body cooperate was that my mind shut down in an effort to protect me.

I was admitted to the unit. I couldn't explain to Dr. Fox why I bought the gun and it was difficult to explain the compulsion that drove me to purchase the weapon. I had as many questions as everyone else.

Dr. Fox and Kathy convinced me to go to a residential treatment facility called Spring Lake Ranch. The condition I was in required a protective environment and the Ranch seemed to be the appropriate place for me to be for a while. Mary was familiar with the Ranch and she and her husband Joe had worked there years earlier. I remained on the unit for several weeks before moving to the Ranch

I was in pretty bad shape. Everything seemed to overwhelm me to the point of having my mind shut down on me again and again. I was frequently reduced to tears by my inability to do even simple everyday tasks. Noises bothered me terribly and seemed to add to the fog that had enveloped my mind. I repeatedly asked Kathy if what I was going through was expected during treatment for MPD and she tried to reassure me that it was.

Spring Lake Ranch was a unique residential treatment center for the mentally ill, located in rural Rutland County. Nestled at the top of a mountain, the Ranch had acres and acres of scenic pasturelands, woodlands and breath-taking views. Several houses were spread out over the property where several residents lived with house parents. The staff came to the Ranch from countries all over the world.

Based on the theory of work therapy, the Ranch had a working farm with livestock, a small chicken farm, huge vegetable gardens, hay fields and a thriving maple syrup business. Meals were eaten in a large dining room in the main house where residents had rooms upstairs and staff had offices downstairs. Residents were transported into Rutland to see their own therapists. The Ranch gave me an opportunity to live in a supportive and protected atmosphere while I tried to work through the MPD with Kathy.

Dr. Fox and Kathy decided to reveal my diagnosis to only a select few staff at the Ranch. I was floridly multiple and easily triggered into dissociation and as the weeks passed, the stress of dealing with dozens of people everyday began to take its toll. The amnesia I had made it impossible to figure out what had triggered me or why certain situations seemed to cause sudden dissociations. I wanted things to work out for me at the Ranch but I began to frequently go back and forth between the Ranch and the unit. I was at a loss to explain my behavior.

In child alter states I was vulnerable and dependent. When protective alters took over I became aggressive and more often than not, I ran from the Ranch. I often found myself miles from the Ranch, having hitchhiked away in an attempt to flee some unconsciously perceived threat. I could rarely explain my actions to anyone including myself. It was easier to let the people around me be angry with me than it was to try to explain myself.

I was increasingly afraid of my own mind. I didn't yet know what was driving me or what was triggering the dissociations and the longer I remained in therapy with Kathy, the more my life felt like it was spiraling out of control.

At the Ranch I became friends with a British woman who worked as staff. Jane was a horse lover and kept her horse at the Ranch. My roommate at the Ranch, Marianne and I became good friends, Marianne was struggling with the chaotic effects of bipolar disorder. Jane, the British staff person came to me one day and told me that I was required to be seen by the psychiatrist working at the Ranch. I was not pleased about this. Dr. Fox was my doctor and I made sure my feelings were known.

Jane accompanied me up the stairs to see the Ranch psychiatrist, Dr. Hans Huessy. I made sure he knew that I was not pleased to have to see him and that I had no intention of talking to him about anything. Jane was noticeably uncomfortable.

"You spent quite a bit of time in VSH in the 60's and early 70's," Huessy began.

"Things were rough for you there. You and I don't have to talk about anything you don't want to talk about. I understand that you are a horse lover. I too have a love of horses."

Dr. Huessy and I talked about horses and nothing more. He told me that I did not have to see him again. I would see him one more time when a drug Dr. Fox had placed me on, began to build up in my system and cause me severe problems including throwing me into a manic state. Dr. Huessy stood in the hallway of the main house and pleaded with me to trust him when he assured me that Benadryl would help ease my symptoms. I was suspicious of what might be in the capsules. Huessy was gentle in his approach and stayed with me until I agreed to take the Benadryl

In 1989, I had no way of knowing that Dr. Hans Huessy had played a pivotal role in preventing me from being returned to the care of Dr. Otto Havas when I was transferred from Baird 6 to VSH in October, 1971. At the Ranch Huessy was, in retrospect, very aware of who I was and what he had done for me in 1971. After the meeting with Huessy at the Ranch, Jane remarked both about my defensive attitude toward Huessy and about his reactions toward me.

In my investigation into the CIA experiments, Dr. Hans Huessy appears to have had at least some degree of knowledge about my treatment by Havas at VSH. The specifics of what Huessy may or may not have known, I will very likely never learn. I never found him in any way associated with the CIA experiments. I will always be thankful that he stepped in and prevented Havas from having contact with me again. But I will always wonder exactly what he knew about my treatment at VSH.

After the adverse reaction to the drug, Dr Fox admitted me to the unit. My blood pressure was very high as a result of the adverse drug reaction. He discontinued the drug. I was extremely depressed after the drug left my system and I felt increasingly overwhelmed by the increasingly chaotic state of my condition and by what I perceived as my failure to be able to live anywhere. Nothing seemed to help and while Kathy continued to try to reassure me that the process that was unfolding would lead me to be able to integrate my personalities, I was feeling more and more hopeless.

When I returned to the Ranch, I secluded myself from the residents and staff. Jane and Marianne tried to talk with me but I retreated inside of myself. On a weekend day I left the main house to walk up the hill to the house I lived in. As I turned the corner and walked across the driveway to my house, I suddenly realized what I had to do. It was as if one moment I was simply walking along and the next moment, seemingly out of nowhere, I was suicidal.

Marianne had plans that would take her out of the house for the rest of the day. I recall sitting on my bed as she called out goodbye to me. Without any emotion, I broke a bottle, sat down on my bed and began slicing my arm with vertical slashes. I have no idea how long I sat there before Marianne returned. Marianne had forgotten something and came back early.

Marianne called Jane and arrangements were made to drive me to the emergency room where I had over fifty stitches. I hadn't harmed myself since 1972 and I was very disturbed by the awakening of my self-destructive behavior. At the emergency room a mental health crisis worker spoke with me and I made it clear to her that I was not suicidal.

"If I had wanted to die, I assure you I would be dead," I looked her directly in the eyes when I spoke.

She believed me and I was allowed to return to the Ranch. Within days, I was returned to the unit. Dr. Fox and Kathy were concerned that I had harmed myself. Years later Kathy told me that she and Dr. Fox, as well as the staff at the unit and at the Ranch were all worried that I would commit suicide. I didn't want to die. I just wanted the pain to stop.

I understood that my life was at stake and that integration was my only hope. I had tried everything else over the years to try to survive and all that was left was to try to survive long enough to integrate. Kathy stood by me during extremely challenging times for me and for her as my therapist. There were times when I left her office when she was not sure I would be alive the next day. But we soldiered on and I remained in therapy.

Again I went back to the Ranch but I was unable to tolerate the stimulation produced by my interaction with all of the people at the Ranch. Kathy later explained to me that because of my florid dissociations I was too susceptible to unconscious triggers from the other people at the Ranch. I wanted things to work out at the Ranch but it was not to be. After returning to the unit, I began to rethink my options.

When I revealed my plan to Kathy and Dr. Fox, they received the news that I wanted to try to live in my own apartment with trepidation. They agreed to allow me to contact my bank for a loan so that I could rent a car and have enough money to rent an apartment. Dr. Fox and Kathy later told me that neither of them believed that I would secure a loan, but I did. I rented a car, drove to Morrisville to sign the papers at the bank and returned to the unit. Dr. Fox wanted me to remain on the unit until I found an apartment and during the day I went out looking for a place to live.

I found a very small efficiency apartment. I bought a sleeping bag and slept on the floor until I was able to get a bed. I was able to find an old lamp and some other necessities. I picked up my belongings from the Ranch and was finally discharged from the unit. Kathy was supportive of my trying to live on my own and Peggy, Jane and Marianne also tried to show me support. I was thirty-six years old and I was living on my own, in my own apartment for the first time in my life.

Therapy continued to push me to the edge. Numerous alters came forward during therapy and Kathy tried to understand why they had been created. Several of my alters were children, stuck in a time long ago. Several more alters were teenagers, aggressive and defiant. Kathy slowly built a trusting therapeutic relationship with as many of the alters as she could.

Looking back I appreciate how dedicated Kathy was. Many therapists would have thrown up their hands and walked away but Kathy stayed and worked with me. We spent many hours on the phone in between scheduled sessions. I seemed to be going from one crisis to another. Several times Kathy found me in near catatonic states and other times I found myself in other cities and towns, unsure of how I got there or how long I'd been gone.

In 1989, my father died of leukemia. It was painful to see him so terribly thin and sick. The night he died I couldn't sleep all night and I sat alone in my apartment and cried. My father was a sweet, gentle man who only wanted his children to have good lives. I know that my illness and my hospitalizations tore him up. I will always be grateful for the time we had together when I had King.

There were times when I lost almost all hope that I would survive, much less integrate. During those low points, Kathy was able to maintain hope until I was once again able to begin to hope for myself. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that without Kathy Judge, I would not have survived.

In 1990, I moved into a larger apartment. I immediately felt that the new apartment was a place I might call home. My landlords, Jules and Mary, who owned the house were easy-going and helpful. I lived a very quiet life in the apartment. I rarely had visitors and paid all my bills on time. The apartment upstairs in Jules and Mary's house has been my home for twenty-two years.

My last stay on the unit when Dr. Tom Fox was the Clinical Director of the Rutland psychiatric unit in 1989 was sobering for me. Dr. Fox told me that he had taken another job in New Hampshire. I was devastated by the news. Tom had been an important and a safe presence in my life for seven years. Dr. Tom Fox, like Dr. Judy Nepvue had shown me that not every psychiatrist was to be feared. Tom told me that if a time came when I really needed him I could phone him. He gave me his new phone number and a warm hug goodbye.

For me, the loss of Dr. Fox meant that the unit was no longer a safe place for me. Lynne Colville tried to explain to me that I would be safe on the unit. I wasn't buying it. I managed to stay off the unit for quite a while until another crisis put me back in the hospital. Every time I was readmitted, I felt ashamed that I couldn't seem to pull myself together and get on with my life. I felt that no matter how hard I tried or how hard people who were trying to help me tried, I continued to spiral out of control again and again. The unit staff continued to support me and they gave me all that they had learned as registered psychiatric nurses. More importantly for me, they gave to me of themselves. The unit nurses became fond of me and I definitely became fond of them. I could see in their faces the emotion that they felt when I was struggling through one crisis after the other. They gave me the best of themselves as well as the best possible care.

In all of my stays on the unit I always avoided the group therapy sessions until I stabilized. I was usually in crisis when I first arrived and the stress and stimulation of the groups only served to make things worse for me. After the initial crisis had calmed, group therapy was more often than not very helpful.

The new psychiatrist on the unit came into my hospital room and introduced himself as Dr. Alan Shirks. He insisted that I attend the group meetings and my attempts to explain why I needed to delay attending the groups for a little while fell on deaf ears. It didn't take me long to decide that I would be safer weathering the storm alone in my own apartment. I left the unit against medical advice and didn't return for nearly seven years.

Therapy with Kathy continued to be excruciating. Many of my memories of therapy during this time are sketchy at best. As Kathy and I worked toward integration I rarely left my apartment and with very few exceptions I had little contact with other people. Peggy and I had drifted apart as I worked toward integration and she tried to get on with her own life. I saw less and less of Jane as I withdrew from practically everyone.

Around 1994, I began to have terrible repetitive dreams filled with nightmarish images and scenarios. Night after night for months on end the dreams haunted me for hours after I was awake. Kathy tried to help me understand the dreams that were filled with images of the piece of land my parents bought for me to ride my horse on in 1963. I dreamed about guns and many of the dreams contained graphic sexual images. I couldn't seem to escape the dreams and the longer they went on the more distressed I became.

When I was a small child I spent a good deal of time with my older next-door neighbor, Janet. She was in her early twenties when I was about four years old. I always recalled her taking me across the river onto the land my parents eventually bought from her parents. The repetitive dreams continued and I finally decided to phone Janet.

I felt ridiculous asking Janet if anything out of the ordinary or traumatic had ever happened on the land when she was with me.

"Yes, traumatic things did happen there," Janet began.

I was so shocked when Janet confirmed that something traumatic had actually happened when I was with her on the land, that I backed up against the wall in my kitchen and slowly slid down and sat on the floor. I listened as Janet described two incidents when someone fired a gun over our heads as we walked on the land. She told me that the bullets were so close that she heard them fly past her head. She claimed not to know the identity of the shooter. She said I was four years old and that I ran away from the gunshots and from her. In disbelief I questioned her about the shooting happening a second time and she confirmed that a second shooting incident did happen.

It's difficult to explain what it was like to hear someone describe events like these and realize that I had no memory. My head spun listening to Janet, but I realized that I had just learned something important. I phoned Kathy.

Kathy arranged for Janet to come to the office and talk with her and me. Kathy later told me that Janet called a few times and tried to back out of the meeting but she finally came to Kathy's office. I hadn't seen Janet in many years and I was pleased to see her again but I also had questions about why she remained silent about these incidents for years.

Janet talked for four hours. She described the two shooting incidents for Kathy and noted that some of the bullets remained lodged in the side of her father's barn for years. This was the same barn where I kept my first horse in 1960. When Janet began talking about her husband Willy's sexual relationships with his own daughters, I was absolutely shocked beyond belief. I knew him when I was a small child and in later years. He was frequently with Janet when I was a child.

It took me hours after Janet left Kathy's office to realize that Janet might have identified the person who sexually molested me as a child. Dr. Judy Nepvue had raised the issue of early childhood sexual molestation with me in 1981, but I had no memory of any such activity. I had scattered images and body sensations that went with sexual molestation but there was nothing else. Kathy also determined that I had the symptoms of childhood sexual molestation and she, unlike me, immediately recognized what Janet was telling us. Kathy also recognized, as I would later, that the piece of land that my parents bought in 1960 was not only the site of childhood trauma, but that in the dissociated world of a small child, I incorporated this piece of land into my MPD.

In therapy, as Kathy and I tried to understand the layout of my internal world, numerous alters had frequently referred to the place where the alters existed internally. This place was called "the land." Until Janet provided the information, neither Kathy nor I realized that "the land" was a literal place.

I phoned Janet a second time and directly asked her if her husband had sexually molested me. She said yes. I was stunned. I asked her why she had remained silent about this even after I was hospitalized at age thirteen. She knew that I had been committed to VSH and she knew that no one seemed to have a clue as to why I suffered such a severe breakdown. She didn't answer.

Traumatic amnesia is a very frustrating and disturbing condition to have. No amount of effort spent trying to remember works to free up the blocked memories. The only glimpses into my early childhood trauma came from the repetitive dreams and they continued. I had flashes of images in my mind of the gunshots, of running away and of hiding under the wooden bridge.

I began to have dreams about a yellow cat. The cat sat on Janet's parents' lawn looking sick. In the dreams I felt terrified and I wanted to protect the yellow cat. The dream came over and over, night after night and I awakened feeling horrified and helpless.

After learning that Janet had information I decided to phone one of my cousins who lived close by when I was small. I asked her if there was ever a yellow cat that could in any way figure into a traumatic experience when I was a child.

June described a horrific incident. The yellow cat belonged to Janet's parents and the cat had been very sick. Janet's father shot the cat and buried it. Janet's mother became hysterical upon realizing that the cat that had been buried was not dead. Janet's father immediately dug the cat up and repeatedly fired bullets into it. June said I would have been about three years old.

When I told Kathy about my conversation with June I realized that I witnessed the entire event. As the images flooded my mind in Kathy's office I began to feel panicked. I was overcome with fear and no matter how I tried to push the images and the feelings away from me, they just kept coming. I never recovered the full memory of this horrific event but the fragmented images and gut-wrenching emotion that had begun with the repetitive dreams spilled out of me.

I began asking my mother if there was ever anything traumatic that might have happened when I was a small child and I was stunned by her reply. Mom told me that when I was nine months old and just beginning to stand up, I pulled a coffee table over onto myself. The table cut my mouth badly and I bled heavily. Mom became hysterical and phoned the doctor. Apparently I too became hysterical.

Mom also told me about the incident with the low flying jets when I was eighteen months old, which produced hysteria in me. She told me that when I was two years old my father took me with him to a house fire in town. When the windows blew out of the house, I became hysterical. My aunt was at the fire and convinced my father to leave and take me home. One of my cousins also remembered this event.

I learned that when I was three years old Dad took me to a fire. He stood near the old railroad station in town and held me because my feet were bare and there was broken glass all around the railroad tracks. When the people in the crowd who had come to watch the fire were told that a woman was trapped in the burning house, a wave of horror swept through the crowd. Apparently I struggled to get away from my father but he wouldn't let me down onto the railroad tracks. This fatal fire was confirmed by a cousin, by Janet who was present at the fire that day, and by a 1955 Rutland Herald newspaper article.

Kathy helped me understand the implications of the information. My inability to bury the rat I shot after King died and my unexplained aversion to the "dead man" set up on King's gate were attached to the yellow cat being buried alive when I was three or four years old. The very first flashback I had when I lived in Waterbury Center when I had images of railroad tracks and my own bare feet was about the fatal fire when I was three years old. This flashback had been set off by a chimney fire.

Guns played a role in my early childhood trauma. My brother had been shot during deer hunting when I was two years old and although I never recovered any memories of seeing him after he came home to recover or of the incident when his wound hemorrhaged, there is a likelihood that some portion of my mind retained the memory. Kathy tried to help me deal with the information about Willy but it remained out of reach for me.

During this time, I spoke regularly with Kathy on the phone and we discussed the emerging information and talked about the repetitive dreams I continued to have. It was about this time that I began to receive hang-up phone calls at three o'clock in the morning. Night after night the phone would ring and when I got out of bed to answer, whoever was on the phone hung up. This led to my contacting the phone company. They placed a trap on my phone twice and the calls started again after the second trap was removed, I was informed that the phone company believed my phone was wiretapped.

It wouldn't be until after 1997 that I learned that the tap was extremely sophisticated and was very likely placed on my line by the government - specifically by the CIA. Of course I cannot definitely prove that the CIA has wire tapped my phone. They are too good at what they do to allow themselves to be identified, but information I have been given by phone technicians and by security officials at the phone company leaves little doubt about the identity of who wiretapped my phone. Who else not only has the sophistication to wiretap in this manner but who else would be even remotely interested in the content of my phone conversations? Perhaps the NSA did the taps on behalf of the CIA.

The timing of the 3 A.M. phone calls coincides with my emerging memory and after fifteen years of investigation into the Vermont CIA experiments, it's clear to me why CIA might be interested. Inducing permanent memory loss was at the top of the list for MKULTRA experiments. CIA spent a lot of time, money and man hours researching whether or not they could produce a permanent state of amnesia. The wiretap, along with stolen certified mail and harassment by strangers began only after I filed the lawsuit and began filing FOIA requests with the federal government. My phone may have been wiretapped in other places I lived but I have no way of knowing for sure.

Kathy spent years preparing me for integration and as we worked in therapy I was repeatedly shocked to learn about the previously hidden world my mind had constructed to defend and protect me from the impact of the childhood trauma. I began to understand why I felt such anger toward my mother and why the anger started after my parents bought the piece of land.

Kathy explained that a small child believes that the mother is all-knowing and can see and is aware of everything that happens. Kathy called this "magical thinking." She explained that when I was being shot at or when Willy was molesting me, my four-year old mind absolutely believed that my mother would know and rescue me. Because I had amnesia for the trauma, I was unable to go home and tell my mother what had happened to me, but as a small child I believed that the mother not only knew what had happened but that she didn't rescue me.

My mother was in the crowd the day of the fatal fire and when the crowd realized that a woman was trapped inside of the burning house, she and my aunt moved a considerable distance from where my father stood holding me. My mother later said that she was so horrified by the news that a woman was trapped in the building that she had to get away. She believed that I was okay with my father. Kathy also explained that when I had the two episodes of hysteria at nine months and again at eighteen months, the fact that my mother also had a hysterical reaction would have compounded the impact on me.

The onset of my suicidal feelings when I was eleven years old coincides with both the purchase of the piece of land by my parents and of the beginning of puberty. The changes in my body as an adolescent would have set off an onslaught of disturbing emotions and sensations. Despite the amnesia for the trauma, my unconscious mind was reacting.

For the first time since I was hospitalized at the age of thirteen, things began to make sense. Kathy said that my reactions and behavior made a lot of sense once we understood the basis of the dissociations. One of the biggest challenges for me was to be able to understand and accept that my personalities were aspects of me. They were me and I was them. There was a "disconnect" in this logic for me and although on a conceptual basis I understood what Kathy was saying, I couldn't "own" it. Even when I knew that the other personalities were indeed aspects of me, they still seemed like other people to me

I was also very concerned that if I integrated the personalities that had protected me for forty years, I would be left totally vulnerable and unable to function. Despite Kathy's assurances that this would not be the case, I continued to fear integration would render me helpless.

I heard the voices of my personalities inside of my head. They urged me to run. They warned me that I was going to die. At times they talked about me among themselves as if I wasn't there. They woke me up at night calling my name. One night as I sat watching television, I heard coming from outside my window a child screaming in pain and fear. I rushed to the window but I couldn't see anything. I crouched under the window so that no one would be able to see me as the screams of the child grew louder. I looked out the window again to see what was happening and to see if anyone else heard the child's cries. It took me several minutes to calm down and to realize that the likelihood was that the screams and cries that I heard were not coming from outside my window in 1996 but that they were part of a flashback to 1956. Flashbacks or abreactions, as Kathy described them, were so real and involved so many physical and emotional components that while they were happening, I couldn't tell until after the fact that they came from my mind.

I couldn't sleep. Night after night I sat in my living room struggling with feelings of doom and the effects of nightmares. I felt trapped by my own mind. I had powerful physical sensations in which nothing I tried to do to alleviate the constant pull at me relieved the pressure. I told Kathy it was almost like being hungry or wanting a cigarette. I couldn't satisfy the terrible mounting pressure no matter what I did.

I began to feel suicidal and I worried that in trying to integrate I would become so ravaged by my own mind that I would either successfully kill myself or even worse, that I would be sent back to VSH. I felt as if I were staring into an abyss.

I had a strange, compelling dream filled with images of a cat and kittens. Although I don't recall all the content of the dream, I do know that it set off dangerous suicidal feelings. I told Kathy about the dream. There was something about the dream that made me feel desperate and I sat for hours with a rope in my hands. I had thoughts of hanging myself and the conflict over whether to live or die tormented me.

Kathy recognized that I was in serious trouble and made arrangements to have me placed on the unit. I heard her talking with Lynne Colville as I sat in her office.

"If she isn't admitted, I don't think she will be alive tomorrow," Kathy told Lynne.

I knew that Kathy was right and I was afraid.

Kathy drove me to the hospital. I remember walking with her as we approached the doors of the unit and I hesitated. Kathy took my arm and guided me through the doors of the unit where Tammy, a nurse I had known and trusted showed me to my room. Much of the next few days are a blur to me. I knew the staff and they knew me and we all knew that I was truly in a fight for my life.

I met with Dr. Alan Shirks, the same psychiatrist I walked away from a few years earlier. This time Dr. Shirks was very different. He seemed to understand what I was going through and his kindness and the degree to which he appeared to be resonating with the powerful emotions I was struggling with showed me a very different approach than I had experienced the first time I met him.

I was repeatedly overcome by anguish and I couldn't shut off the pain, the fear or the grief that racked my body and my mind. The staff helped me understand that the grief that I felt was coming to the surface after forty years of being repressed. Marlene, my primary nurse helped guide me through intense episodes of grief in which the pain and my inability to shut it off frightened me so much that I thought I was losing my mind. Marlene told me that some of the grief was related to my recognition of all that I had lost to the forty years as a multiple.

Other staff including Lynne, Tammy, Lesa, Susan, Rosemary and Mary literally held me in their arms at times, helping me to hold myself together. I saw the emotion in their faces and at times I saw tears in their eyes as they sat with me. If they could have willed me to survive the onslaught of emotions they would have done so.

Mary took a job in Maine shortly after I integrated and she and her husband Joe and I have remained in contact. Susan died a few years ago after being diagnosed with a brain tumor. Rosemary passed away last year. Lesa, who I first met in 1982 when she was still a nursing student, is now head nurse on the unit. Tammy and her husband moved to Arizona a couple of years ago. Lynne retired as the unit's head nurse and continues to work in Rutland county counseling patients. The last time I saw Marlene was the night I was admitted to intensive care with a heart attack.

Kathy and I talked about these nurses after I successfully integrated and we both agreed that without the support and caring they demonstrated to me, I very likely would not have survived the integration. I needed what they were able to give to me. Back when I was in Copley hospital, one nurse named Debbie G. told me that when Dr. Nepvue asked her to sit with me on her shift, Debbie G. was afraid. She said that she wasn't a psychiatric nurse and that she was afraid that she would say or do something to make me worse. Debbie G. told me that what she discovered that day she spent with me was that all she needed to do was be a human being.

I was exposed to the worst of psychiatric care in VSH and I was exposed to the worst of human nature there as well. Yet I was also fortunate enough to have been exposed to the very best in psychiatric care from nurses in Baird 6, Copley and in the Rutland Regional Medical Center psychiatric unit, where the very best of human nature was given to me. Although the doctors on Baird 6 were apparently involved in the experiment, the nurses, for the most part, tried to help me. All of the dedicated nurses on the Rutland Regional Medical Center Psychiatric unit played a key role in helping me survive the integration process and I will always be grateful to them.

I felt fragile and very much younger than my actual age of forty. As the days passed, I began to realize that, as Kathy told me, I had experienced a spontaneous abreaction that set off the integration. The terrible physical sensations of pain and choking along with the sheer terror that overtook me were all parts of the trauma from early childhood that led to the MPD and the amnesia. Much of the content of the actual events from my childhood never returned in actual memory, but enough did so that the integration process could continue. Kathy reminded me often that it was a process and that it would take time for me to complete the integration.

Dr. Shirks explained to me that during the second shooting when I ran from the gunshots and hid beneath the wooden bridge, my four-year old mind believed that I was about to suffer the same fate as the yellow cat I had earlier seen shot and buried alive. Dr. Shirks told me that it was when I was hiding under the bridge that I suffered the dissociative trauma that made me multiple. He told me that as a small child I identified with the cat and that identification set me up to have the anthropomorphic and dissociative experience I had with King.

By April 1996, I had been on the unit nearly two months. Kathy and the staff helped me understand that the rage I felt about my mother was displaced rage and was a result of both the trauma and the amnesia. I understood that when as an eleven-year old child I once again began to walk on the piece of land where the trauma had taken place years before, a whole range of emotions overtook me. The amnesia prevented me from being able to attach my feelings to those events and my rage was displaced onto my mother. Many of my personalities were children who were trapped in 1956 forever. For the next forty years, much of how I interpreted the world around me and how I interpreted my own emotional responses to people and to events was driven by a child's perceptions about life.

In therapy I learned about my personalities and that they were created to protect me. I had child alters who constructed an elaborate internal world where good always triumphed over evil. I had a personality who played guitar. I had a personality who was an artist and another personality who was obsessed with horses. One personality was consumed with spiritual matters, while several others were protective personalities who ran away and escaped dangerous situations. Several of the personalities appeared to have endured the brunt of the VSH years. Over the years to come in therapy, Kathy and I would not learn much at all about those several personalities. I remain blocked from knowing why the alters existed and what their roles were.

It took five years after integration before I played the guitar again. The mechanics were there but there was no motivation. The experience was empty. When I began playing guitar again, I discovered that my ability had improved a great deal. The same was true for drawing and it took over a decade before I was able to draw again. After the heartbreaking loss of King, I found it nearly impossible to be near horses. To this day I stay away from them.

After I learned that I had been used in drug and mind control experiments, the possibility that this group of personalities had been created during the research I was subjected to was discussed by Kathy and me. Before Dr. Tom Fox died in 2002, he advised Kathy to never explore this group of alters because the possibility that they were created in the covert research was a valid concern.

I was discharged from the unit in April, 1996 and I returned to my apartment to try to live my life as an integrated multiple. At the time I didn't realize that I still had the capacity to dissociate under certain conditions and it would take me a long time to actually accept this as a part of my life.

I struggled with painful realizations about my life. Kathy and I talked about the series of childhood traumas and I had difficulty understanding why all of those things had happened to me at such a young age. It was as if I never had a chance at a normal life because of the trauma that began when I was only nine months old. Kathy said she believed that if the shootings and the molestation had not occurred, the chances of my becoming multiple would have been much less.

The MPD protected me from what could have been a psychosis but I also understood all that I had lost because of the disorder. I fell into a deep depression. Kathy tried to help me understand that grief was a part of the healing process and that feeling the grief and the sense of loss about my life was a necessary part of healing. My therapy continued and I tried to adjust to actually feeling my own emotions, which was at times an overwhelming experience.

In the fall of 1997, I tried to explain to Kathy that something I didn't understand was happening to me and I found it very hard to describe. It was as if some other world was descending on me and that this world was a very terrible place that I felt was drawing me into it. It was as if I were trapped between this world and some other dreadful existence that I couldn't fully comprehend. It was during this time that Kathy suggested that I try to write a narrative of my life, which led me to pick up the phone and request my medical records from the State of Vermont. I would soon learn that this terrible world that was drawing me in and tormenting me was a world I had lived in many years before.

In 1997, I thought that I knew what had happened to me but when the VSH records revealed that I had been used in covert drug and mind control experiments, I would spend the next fifteen years obtaining documents and investigating the CIA MKULTRA research conducted in Vermont.

I doubt that anyone could be prepared to learn that they had been covertly experimented on by hospitals, doctors and the CIA and in this respect I was no different. The realization was profoundly shocking and disturbing for me, my family and for Kathy. Tom Fox reacted with anger and disgust that so much information had been intentionally kept from me and from all subsequent caregivers.

In the years after the lawsuit was over I continued to investigate and to obtain original source documents. I felt a deep-seated sense of anger and rage over the experimentation and all that my medical records revealed that I had been subjected to. I felt betrayed by the doctors, by the hospitals, by the State of Vermont and by the CIA. I think that I, like many other VSH patients confined in the state mental hospital, was considered to be expendable, but as my investigation continued over the years I began to wonder if VSH and the CIA took the concept of expendable people to its ultimate conclusion.

AFTERMATH

I taught myself how to investigate the Vermont CIA Experiments beginning with the name of Hyde and the names and information in the VSH book, The Vermont Story. Over the next fifteen years, as I obtained original source documents and purchased books by authors like John Marks, Martin Lee and Dr. Colin Ross, I learned about the CIA drug and mind control programs generally referred to as MKULTRA. The fifteen-year search for the truth about what happened to me and thousands of other VSH patients changed me forever.

I was repeatedly lied to by my State, by the federal government, by CIA and by agencies that funded VSH-UVM experiments. I learned that my elected officials in the State and in the federal government did not want to hear about the Vermont CIA experiments and I learned first-hand that almost without exception, no United States Senator, Congressman, or other official was willing to assist me in finding the proof about the Vermont CIA experiments. When confronted with original source documents, no State of federal official would respond, with the exception of Senator Bernie Sanders. Even Sanders was not willing to go public with the information.

There is very little published material about Robert Hyde. Despite the major role he played in the CIA programs, he still appears to be the CIA researcher who remains most closely guarded by CIA. The 1977 newspaper article on CIA MKULTRA mentioned his name in passing but spent more time focusing on Hyde's defenders. H.P. Albarelli's book, A Terrible Mistake, notes that Hyde has been pretty much overlooked in the CIA MKULTRA programs. I do know that obtaining information and documentation on Hyde is extremely difficult and that thirty-five years after Hyde's death, CIA continues to classify many of his research projects and, as Dr. Colin Ross and I discovered, CIA refuses to acknowledge Hyde's projects or allow FOIA requests to be fulfilled.

In a November 30, 2008, Rutland Herald-Barre Times Argus front-page newspaper article, by Associated Press reporter Louis Porter, entitled "Evidence Suggests CIA Experiments at State Hospital," Vermonters and the rest of the country were exposed to the first information about VSH CIA experiments. The article was primarily based on my medical records and on Hyde and the VSH CIA experiments. Eighteen months earlier I had walked into Rutland Herald Editor Randal Smathers' office after we spoke on the phone. I presented Smathers with original source documents about VSH-UVM and showed him portions of my medical records.

Randal Smathers remarked that many people had come into his office in the past and demanded that he investigate their concerns on various subjects, but that I was the very first person to come to him with documented proof. Smathers contacted Louis Porter and Louis spent eighteen months investigating the Vermont CIA experiments. When the article came out, no Vermont local news programs on television mentioned the Vermont CIA experiments. Rutland Herald Editorial Page Editor, David Moats wrote in the editorial that ran in the issue about the VSH CIA experiments that although there had been opportunities for the CIA experiments at VSH to be made public, including my lawsuit in 1998, information had not been made public. Since the 2008 article, I have obtained much more evidence and the 2008 article did not contain information about the VSH patient deaths.

I attempted to contact the national news media several times over the last fifteen years, but none of the outlets I contacted were interested. I contacted CNN, ABC, NBC, FOX, CBS, and the New York Times. They were not interested. I found this to be curious at best. News organizations seem to like to get a story that involves government cover-ups but in this case, they were not even willing to hear me out. Fortunately for me, I don't give up easily.

In 2009, Dr. Colin Ross, who I had remained in contact with after the lawsuit ended in 2002, asked me if I would be interested in speaking to a London-based documentary film producer about possibly appearing in a documentary about the CIA programs. I agreed to speak with the producer.

I was filmed for a documentary in August, 2009. It was an experience I never thought I'd have in my life. The film, The Real Bourne Identity, also had Matt Damon in it as well as many former CIA agents. Dr. Colin Ross held up my medical records and stated that because of the types of drugs in my records and the methods employed by VSH, he believed I had been a subject of experimentation.

The London, England film crew, Blink Films spent four hours with me and stopped on the way to film VSH. The documentary was shown on the Smithsonian Channel in 2010.

I still deal with the effects of both my illness and with the knowledge that I was a CIA research subject and that CIA, VSH, UVM, the State of Vermont and the federal government refuse to provide me with the information about the CIA experiments I was subjected to. I have bouts of severe depression, anxiety, insomnia, PTSD and I still dissociate in certain circumstances. The autoimmune disorders haven't been active for a while now, but they remain a concern. I am sixty years old now. Practically my entire life has been caught up in one way or another in trying to understand and learn what really happened to me in VSH and I still do not know.

The last fifteen years have been filled with anger, frustration, disillusionment, disgust and a deep sadness about the behavior of the State of Vermont and the federal government. Not only have I been lied to and deceived, but my family has been lied to and deceived. Vermonter's have been lied to, deceived, manipulated, used, abused and possibly died as a result of the VSH-UVM CIA experiments. It is clear when reading the Report on the 1977 Senate Hearings that the Senators were far more interested in protecting the rights of universities, hospitals, the individual researchers and the United States government than they were interested in safeguarding the rights of those who were used in the CIA experiments. It appears as if in America there are expendable people and in Vermont, they are the mentally ill.

There were no consequences for the CIA. There were no consequences for the universities and hospitals. The actions of all involved in the covert experiments were criminal. The actions of VSH-UVM, as evidenced in their own research project documents were, if not criminal (and they may indeed have been criminal), violations of internationally accepted methods of conducting research, violations of the civil and Constitutional rights of every unwitting subject used in the experiments and violations of each physician's Hippocratic Oath.

The CIA drug and mind control programs were done, according to the CIA, to protect America from enemy threats. The experiments were inspired by the content of the medical records found in the Nazi concentration camps. What was done to me and to thousands of others in VSH did nothing to protect me or them - quite the contrary. The CIA experiments served only the interests of the CIA and their stated reasons for conducting the experiments were to gain control of human beings. The experiments used unwitting American citizens because these experiments were unethical, immoral and illegal as stated in the declassified CIA documents. These experiments harmed all of us as Americans and the cover-up continues even now.

Every time I contacted an elected official and requested assistance, I got another lesson in how my government works to protect my rights. I learned that my Senators and Congressmen and others in positions of power were not interested in my rights as an American citizen nor were they interested in the fact that almost 3000 VSH patients died during the twenty years the experiments were conducted. CIA chose its unwitting subjects carefully and usually chose them based on the fact that they were vulnerable Americans. I certainly was vulnerable when they chose me at age thirteen. Thousands of VSH patients were vulnerable when CIA chose them as well. Sadly, I've learned much about who my government really values.

My father died in 1989 and he never had the chance to know what happened to his daughter. My mother just turned eighty-eight years old and she often tells me that she prays that she will live long enough to find out the rest of what was done to me in VSH. I've been investigating the Vermont CIA experiments for fifteen years now and with very few exceptions, no one in the State or federal government has been willing either to acknowledge the Vermont CIA experiments or conduct any type of investigation into the experiments.

CIA defenders like to point out that the drug and mind control programs have already been investigated and that nothing new would be learned. I beg to differ. If I have been able to document the massive presence of CIA in Vermont institutions, what might the government with all its resources be able to learn? The lack of interest in an investigation has everything to do with making sure that the CIA activities in Vermont remain covered up. Protecting the CIA appears to be the government's priority, not protecting the rights of American citizens.

I had my memory stolen, my physical health ruined, and my emotional health almost destroyed. I was tortured, as the records demonstrate. I had my freedom taken away from me and I will never know what my life might have been if not for the secret activities of the CIA and UVM-VSH. Nothing will give me back what they took from me.

There is a massive, coordinated State and federal cover-up ongoing in Vermont. Every Vermont citizen has been lied to and deceived. Every American citizen has been lied to and deceived. I am certain that the CIA, VSH-UVM and the federal government never anticipated that anyone would uncover the Vermont CIA experiments, but I did. It is time for those responsible for the Vermont CIA experiments and for the massive, coordinated State and federal cover-up to acknowledge both what happened in Vermont institutions and to acknowledge the cover-up.

I have a right to know what happened to me. Many of my medical records are missing and those missing records very likely hold the answers to the questions that remain concerning what was done to me during the experiments. Vermonters have a right to know what happened in their State. American citizens have the right to know that the country as a whole was lied to and deceived by the CIA experiments and by the actions of all concerned in covering up the Vermont CIA experiments.

I will never stop trying to learn the full extent of what happened to me and to thousands of other VSH patients. I will never know what my life might have been if only I had been admitted to a hospital at the age of thirteen that was not conducting CIA research. But what I am certain of is that the research conducted at VSH-UVM had nothing to do with medical science. It had everything to do with evil. There simply isn't another word that better describes what happened in the VSH-UVM CIA experiments.

I survived the Vermont CIA experiments. Many other VSH patients did not survive and their voices are silenced forever. I have a voice and I am using it for all of us who were unwitting subjects of the Vermont CIA experiments.

November, 2013

During the first week of September, 2013, I found a package of documents from the CIA at my door. Much to my surprise, the documents were Hyde's more fully declassified MKULTRA Subprojects 8, 10, 63 and 66. These documents were the Hyde Subprojects that CIA refused to make any determination on after I filed a FOIA and an appeal in 2003, which led me to go to the Executive Secretary Interagency Security Classification Panel (ISCAP). ISCAP informed me at the time that CIA refused to make any determination, and that essentially kept ISCAP from making any determination and kept my request in limbo. For reasons known only to CIA, ten years later I received the documents.

Although the Hyde documents are still not fully declassified, the new declassification sheds important light on his activities for the CIA. One of the most startling new pieces of information in Hyde's Subprojects is the name of a previously unknown CIA subproject.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 63 involved the use of LSD, LAE, alcohol and the mapping of "social personality" types. MKULTRA Subproject 63 was renamed MKCOTTON in 1961 and it was funded through Human Ecology. The funding for Hyde's Subproject is signed for by Sidney Gottlieb and addressed to payee John Gittinger - dated December, 1961. Under the heading for charge allotment number M125-1390-3902 is the date - stamped in two separate places - August 25 and August 26, 1964.

Another document dated April 8, 1964 shows funding invoices received by Human Ecology in 1962. The certification date for the expenditures is April 22, 1964.

MKULTRA Subproject 63 was closed in December 1961 and was "integrated into the total research effort of Human Ecology," and renamed MKCOTTON.

In 1964, Robert Hyde was the Assistant Commissioner of Mental Health in Vermont. Rupert Chittuck, Superintendent of VSH, was Commissioner of Mental Health in Vermont. In 1964, UVM-VSH had research contracts involving the use of Gittinger's PAS and sent the results of the CIA psychological test directly to Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC. UVM-VSH contracts with Psychological Assessment Associates and the use of Gittinger's PAS are noted in UVM-VSH documents and cited by Richard York as beginning in 1958.

On October 7, 2013, I filed a Vermont Records Act request with the Vermont Department of Mental Health requesting, "Research contracts, invoices, funding sources and applicable financial documents, excluding USPHS, NIH, NIMH, HEW, VOC REHAB for VSH-UVM projects OM-372, 1958, NO.1-1-R11-MH 01076, 1963, MH-10176, 1966, funded in 1958, 1963 and 1966 by The Society For The Investigation For Human Ecology, 201 East 57th Street, N.Y., N.Y, and Psychological Assessment Associates, 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington DC."

A response from the State of Vermont dated October 16, 2013 reads:

"The records you requested in your letter dated October 7, 2013, are not available because they were discarded pursuant to a public records retention schedule, effective March 3, 2010, on file with the State Archives and Records Administration."

"Under the records retention schedule, contracts are retained for three years past the expiration date of the contract. Generally, financial files, (invoices, payment information, etc.) are kept for five years beyond the end of the fiscal year they were relevant to."

"Since the records you requested are about 50 years old, they were discarded pursuant to the record schedule approved by the State Archivist. See 1 V.S.A. 317a."

I knew that contracts had to exist between Psychological Assessment Associates, Human Ecology and UVM-VSH. The State of Vermont did not respond that no documents were located. The response was that the documents I requested had indeed been located and that they had been destroyed. Therefore it is clear that research contracts existed between CIA and UVM-VSH.

On October 24, 2013 I filed a Freedom of Information request with CIA for photocopies of:

"Research project documents including subprojects for research conducted and or funded by CIA at the University of Vermont College of Medicine (UVM) and the Vermont State Hospital (VSH) during the years 1959, 1962, 1965 and 1966."

"Please include the names of all drugs, research procedures and methods used as well as the name of the CIA Subproject relevant to the Vermont research. Also include the names and titles of all research personnel as well as the identities and location of all other institutions and or agencies that participated."

"I filed a Vermont Records Act Request on October 7, 2013 for research contracts that existed between UVM-VSH and Psychological Assessment Associates and the Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology during the years noted."

"The response from the State was that the records I requested had been destroyed. Therefore a contractual relationship existed between CIA and UVM-VSH."

"I obtained UVM-VSH research documents MH-01076 that show that the psychological test known as PAS, created by CIA psychologist John Gittinger, was given to VSH patients and that according to the documents the results of those tests were sent directly to Gittinger at 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC. Also noted in the UVM-VSH documents are plans to expand and continue research with Gittinger."

On November 21, 2013 I received a response from CIA that reads:

"This is a final response to your 24 October 2013 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request, received in the Office of the Information and Privacy Coordinator on 7 September, 2013, for photocopies of the following documents: Research project documents including subprojects for research conducted and or funded by CIA at the Vermont State Hospital (VSH), Waterbury, Vermont and the University of Vermont College of Medicine (UVM) during the years 1959, 1962, 1965 and 1966…In accordance with section 3.6 (a) of Executive Order 13526, the CIA can neither confirm nor deny the existence or nonexistence of records responsive to your request. The fact of the existence or nonexistence of requested records is currently and properly classified and is intelligence sources and methods information that is protected from disclosure by section 6 of the CIA Act of 1949, as amended, and section 102A(i) (l) of the National Security Act of 1947, as amended. Therefore, your request is denied pursuant to FOIA exemptions (b) (1) and (b) (3)."

"FOIA Explanation of Exemptions: (b) (1) exempts from disclosure information currently and properly classified, pursuant to Executive Order."

"(b) (3) exempts from disclosure information that another federal statute protects, provided that the other federal statute either requires that the matters be withheld, or establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld. The (b) (3) statutes upon which the CIA relies include but are not limited to, the CIA ACT of 1949."

This is the very first time CIA has ever acknowledged that UVM-VSH research was classified and remains classified. It is interesting to note that the response to my Vermont Records Act Request did not state that no records were located. The response was that the documents I requested had been destroyed. Additionally, I obtained the UVM-VSH research project documents that clearly detail UVM-VSH research relationship with John Gittinger at CIA headquarters, 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC. The research documents MH-01076 are publicly available and they contain descriptions of the UVM-VSH research relationship with Gittinger at CIA's Psychological Assessment Associates and describe methods, i.e. the use of Gittinger's PAS.

CIA made a mistake noting the date they received my FOIA, noting the date as 7 September, 2013. I filed the request on October 24, 2013. Curiously, CIA did not note that I had very specifically asked them for documents relating to Psychological Assessment Associates and the Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology.

Although I could file an appeal with CIA, given the classified status of the material I am seeking, my appeal would very likely be denied. I am not filing an appeal. I am actually quite pleased by the State of Vermont's response, which confirms the existence of a contractual relationship between CIA and UVM-VSH and by CIA's response that the records I sought regarding CIA-UVM-VSH research are classified. These responses tell me both what I want to know and what I have long suspected to be true.

In July, 2013 I received information that the Vermont State Archives and Records Administration released documents relating to VSH research activities. I obtained a listing of these documents. In series VSH-003, under VSH-0011-2 and VSH-0011-3 it reads as follows: Director of Research, Vermont State Hospital - 1940-1975 Dr. Robert W. Hyde and 1943-1975, Dr. Robert W. Hyde.

I always suspected that Hyde maintained an active presence at VSH throughout the years that he was at Boston Psychopathic Hospital and Butler Hospital. The new documents clearly support my theory.

Back in 1998 when I obtained CIA MKULTRA documents from the National Security Archives, Hyde's MKULTRA Subprojects 8, 10, 10a, 63 and 66 were heavily redacted; I had a growing suspicion that under the redactions were UVM and VSH. Over the years I collected UVM-VSH research documents and identified more and more CIA researchers involved in UVM-VSH experiments and identified procedures, pharmaceutical companies and covert CIA funding sources; it became clear to me as I read Hyde's CIA Subprojects that my initial suspicions were very likely accurate.

The newly more fully declassified CIA subprojects 8, 10, 63 and 66 not only identify a previously unknown CIA project named MKCOTTON, but place Hyde in Vermont during the time when MKCOTTON was operational. Gittinger's name on these documents in 1961-1964 also matches UVM-VSH research projects in 1958, 1963 and 1965 - the same projects that sent the results of the PAS directly to Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC.

MKCOTTON documents note that Hyde made regular trips to Washington as part of his CIA duties and made trips for "special projects" at a site that remains redacted. In 1962, Gittinger moved Psychological Assessment Associates to the Washington address. It is also noted that he traveled abroad as part of his regular duties for CIA.

An April 8, 1962 MKCOTTON document shows funding invoices received by Human Ecology. The certification date for the Hyde expenditures is April 22, 1964.

Where was Robert Hyde during the years after he graduated from UVM College of Medicine in 1935? He did an internship at the Marine Hospital in New Orleans, 1935-1936. In 1936-1940, he was in general practice in Fairfax, Vermont. In 1940-1945 Hyde was a Lt. Col. In the U.S. Army. Recently released VSH documents show that Hyde is identified as Director of Research at VSH, 1940-1975.

In 1945-1957, Hyde was Assistant Superintendent at Boston Psychopathic Hospital. Hyde was Superintendent at Butler in 1957-1962. He was Acting Director Division of Legal Medical Liaison Office, 1st Service Command, Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, 1958-1959.

In 1959-1964 Hyde was Assistant to the Commissioner (the declassified CIA documents don't specify where he was Assistant to the Commissioner) and in 1964 Hyde became Assistant Commissioner of Mental Health in Vermont. He was a Professor of Psychiatry, teaching at UVM in 1967.

Where was Robert Hyde in 1964 during MKCOTTON?

What is known about UVM-VSH research activities during this time frame -1955-1964? In 1955, UVM secured a contract with the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine and through funding by the Department of Energy, human radiation experiments and behavioral experiments were conducted at UVM. Hyde is identified in the Department of Energy Human Radiation Experiments list of participants. It is known that CIA was involved in these experiments.

At VSH, research is noted in documents to have begun in 1955 - becoming "schizophrenia" studies in 1957. One UVM-VSH research document notes that research had actually begun at VSH as early as 1944. Recently released VSH documents place Hyde as Director of Research 1940-1975.

In 1958, UVM-VSH were administering Gittinger's PAS to child patients and this research and affiliation with Gittinger extended at least until 1968 - possibly longer. In 1957, UVM-VSH began using unwitting VSH patients in experimental drug research. The drugs were obtained from CIBA. Milton Greenblatt of Boston Psychopathic Hospital (where CIA LSD research was well underway) acted as a "Consultant" to UVM-VSH research and VSH was visited by John Bockoven and Richard York who also acted as "Consultants."

Both Bockoven and York conducted CIA LSD experiments with Hyde. York worked out of Gittinger's Psychological Assessment Associates.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subprojects note that Gittinger's PAS was used extensively in Hyde's research. Gittinger is noted as the "payee" for funds in Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 63.

Harold Wolff was President of Human Ecology and the Executive Director of Human Ecology was Lt. Col. James Monroe, United States Air Force. Wolff was interested in brainwashing and the Air Force ran parallel experiments to those done by the CIA. UVM conducted Special Interrogation experiments that involved the use of LSD, mescaline, isolation, electric shock, chemical shock and induced amnesia - essentially these experiments were brainwashing experiments. UVM had research contracts with the Air Force starting in 1955. UVM and VSH began their joint research projects in 1955.

Dr. Ewen Cameron at McGill conducted CIA-funded experiments beginning in 1957, the same year UVM-VSH officially began "schizophrenia" experiments. UVM-VSH documents state that the schizophrenia research actually began in 1955 with more formal experiments that began in 1957. Cameron conducted depatterning and brainwashing experiments and he expressed a desire to conduct terminal experiments, according to John Marks. In 1959, VSH's Dr. George Brooks presented a paper at McGill on VSH experiences with schizophrenics.

Human Ecology was gone in 1965 but, as John Marks notes, Gittinger's PAS continued after Human Ecology stopped funding the research and Psychological Assessment Associates continued the funding.

I have a PAS that was conducted on me as a thirteen-year old child in VSH dated December, 1965. UVM-VSH documents show that the PAS was conducted on VSH child patients beginning in 1958 and continued at least until 1968 - possibly longer.

CIA BLUEBIRD methods included the use of heroin, morphine, electric shock, lobotomies, hypnotism, fatigue, isolation, sensory deprivation and torture according to H.P. Albarelli, Jr. By 1953, BLUEBIRD became ARTICHOKE, funded in part by U.S. Department of Agriculture, FDA, HEW, NIH, and Army, Navy, and Air Force intelligence. ARTICHOKE and MKULTRA ran alongside each other.

ARTICHOKE experimented with chemical lobotomies and employed radioactive tracers in its studies of the brain, according to Albarelli. One ARTICHOKE document states that, "A non-toxic drug may be found by radioactive tracer techniques that will be attracted to such an area of the brain as so to produce a taming that can last for some time."

The Department of Energy Human Radiation Experiments included UVM and Robert Hyde in the list of participants. UVM is known to have conducted Special Interrogations well into the early 1970's. Hyde conducted radioactive isotope tracer experiments in his LSD research for CIA and documents from the DOE Radiation Experiments show that UVM installed a cobalt source onsite after securing the contract with the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine.

Based on numerous UVM-VSH documents, CIA declassified documents, DOE documents and known methods of experimentation conducted at UVM-VSH, it appears as if UVM-VSH research included BLUEBIRD, ARTICHOKE and MKULTRA. Considering the fact that UVM-VSH were research affiliates of Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Butler and McGill (all three were MKULTRA sites), this should not come as any surprise. It is, however, more than curious that UVM-VSH have never been publicly identified in any government hearing. CIA continues to remain silent on UVM-VSH

The newly declassified MKULTRA Robert Hyde Subprojects that I requested using FOIA still redact Hyde's name from each page, despite the fact that I asked for Hyde by name and the CIA cover letter included in the package of documents delivered to me states that my request for Dr. Robert W. Hyde subprojects 8, 10, 10a, 63 and 66 are included in the package of documents. It's like a game played for reasons I simply cannot understand. I strongly suspect that hidden under the remaining redactions are research sites UVM-VSH and the content of Hyde's Subprojects support my suspicion.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 8 was conducted at The Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology and the newly declassified documents seem to suggest that another hospital site was also involved in the research. My best guess is that Boston Psychopathic Hospital is the second site, yet the Boston hospital remains hidden behind redactions despite the fact that it is widely known that the hospital was a primary CIA LSD experimental site. John Marks writes extensively about Boston Psychopathic Hospital's CIA LSD research in his book, as does H.P. Albarelli, Jr.

On the other hand, Butler is named in both Subprojects 63 and 66. References to additional sites that conducted the research remain redacted.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 8 documents read:

"(Redacted) of (Redacted) has just been given a grant to study human subjects. (Redacted) at the (Redacted) (now collaborating with (Redacted) hospital, 2 laboratories to study chronically mentally ill patients response to award conditioning in terms of their ability to develop desired behavior and to continue such behavior over long periods of time."

"As soon as this human laboratory is set up and reliable curves of behavior developed in humans in collaboration with (Redacted) we plan to test the effects of lysergic acid on behavior curves."

Where was Hyde in 1953-1955 during MKULTRA Subproject 8? He was at Boston Psychopathic Hospital, a research affiliate of VSH and UVM.

The content of Hyde's more fully declassified CIA Subprojects bears more than a little resemblance to the content of UVM-VSH research project documents. While Hyde was at Boston Psychopathic Hospital, at Butler or at Worcester, he was conducting CIA experiments. LSD was a primary interest, along with other drugs that acted as LSD antagonists. Hyde's research for CIA in personality types was also a hallmark of his research, as was his use of Gittinger's PAS.

In Subproject 63, Hyde notes in a 1960 document that he began pilot studies in 1956, with more organized studies in 1957, 1958 and 1959. Hyde began his research with LSD in 1949 but CIA sponsorship didn't begin until 1953. It is highly likely that Hyde's sponsor prior to CIA was the Department of Energy, since it is documented that he conducted LSD and radioactive isotope experiments during the DOE Human Radiation Experiments. The DOE experiments began in the 1940's and continued into the 1970's. UVM College of Medicine has been identified as a participant in the DOE experiments. UVM Department of Pharmacology secured a research contract with the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine in 1955 - the same year VSH launched its "schizophrenia" research with UVM.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 10 notes an intent to experiment with the drug Serpasil, also known as Reserpine, a new drug discovered in 1954 and distributed by CIBA Pharmaceuticals. In 1954, Dr. George Brooks negotiated a contract with CIBA to purchase the new drugs, Reserpine and Thorazine; these drugs were used extensively by staff at VSH. Brooks also secured a contract with Smith, Kline and French that same year. Both pharmaceutical companies are identified in declassified CIA documents as having supplied experimental drugs to CIA. Both drugs are known to have been used in LSD experiments.

In 1956, Brooks spent six months at Boston Psychopathic Hospital, on a Smith, Kline and French Fellowship for "special drug studies."

Boston Psychopathic doctors Hyde, Rinkel, Solomon and other CIA researchers were well underway experimenting with LSD for the CIA at Boston Psychopathic when Brooks was there.

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 66 notes that in LSD research, "different observers use different methods of assessment closely related to the observers' values."

UVM-VSH research projects beginning in 1955 were all conducted under the guise of "rehabilitation of chronic schizophrenics." Brooks and other VSH staff psychiatrists published papers under the title of "The Rehabilitation of the Hospitalized Mentally Ill."

Based on an overwhelming amount of documentation drawn mostly from the content of UVM-VSH research documents and from Hyde's MKULTRA Subprojects, as well as highly respected published books on the CIA and LSD, there is very little doubt that the University of Vermont College of Medicine and the Vermont State Hospital were conducting CIA LSD research and were funded by CIA cover groups and agencies.

A tremendous number of documented CIA researchers are identified in UVM-VSH research project documents along with cover groups, funding conduits, pharmaceutical companies known to have supplied CIA with experimental drugs and CIA LSD methods of research. UVM-VSH affiliate hospitals were Boston Psychopathic, Butler and McGill - all MKULTRA research sites.

The November, 2013 response from CIA to my FOIA, and the response from the State of Vermont to my Vermont Records Act request also confirm what I suspected for many years: the research conducted at UVM-VSH for CIA is classified. Still classified after all of these years.

Why CIA had a change in policy and finally admitted that the UVM-VSH research is classified, after I spent years peppering CIA with FOIA requests regarding its UVM-VSH research in drugs and mind control, and after CIA denied every request, and never admitted that the research was classified, is anyone's guess.

Why after ten years did CIA finally send me Hyde's more fully declassified MKULTRA Subprojects in September, 2013? I hadn't communicated with CIA about the Hyde subprojects since 2009. Why now?

Several people I have spoken with raise the question as to whether or not the recent revelations by former NSA employee, Edward Snowden, and the resulting scrutiny the intelligence agencies are under, played any role in CIA's apparent change in policy as it relates to the Vermont experiments. Again, I will probably never know the answer.

"One can safely predict techniques for controlling behavior and modifying personality will grow more effective by the year 2000. Thousands of experts at conditioning are now trying out their behavior changing techniques on tens of thousands of people in classrooms, prisons, mental hospitals, day care centers and nursing homes."

American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1967

The covert CIA research that was conducted in the State of Vermont and all across the country, matters to every American in every walk of life - maybe more now than it ever did.

December, 2013

Memory loss is such a strange and difficult thing to live with. No amount of conscious effort or strength of will brings about any additional memory. I have found that when bits and pieces of memory return they are almost always only small expansions of memory I already had. More often than not, when I regain a portion of memory it isn't a new memory, it's a broader view of a memory I previously had. It's as if for some reason I was unable to incorporate the information in the memory and to fully appreciate the information in the memory.

In late December, 2013, I had just gone to bed for the night and I wasn't thinking about anything in particular when I began to think about and picture in my mind the memory I have always had about Curlin removing me from a seclusion room on the locked ward 1A in October, 1970.

This memory is one of only three instances I have ever been able to recall about Curlin, and Kathy and I have talked about this particular memory for years.

I have a faint memory of a man peering into the seclusion room. A nurse opened the door and Curlin was standing there with her. I don't recall ever meeting him before, yet the VSH record shows that he and Brooks were my doctors of record on the medical ward where I had been only days before I was transferred to the locked ward. The records show I had been kept in seclusion and in leather wristlets while on 1A. I was naked and I was lying on the seclusion room floor.

Curlin told the nurse to get me dressed and he began to lead me toward the exit door. The nurse screamed at him that he could not take me off the ward.

He yelled back at her, “The hell I can’t!”

My memory ends at the door.

My next memory, which is supported by the records, is of standing in the Weeks 3 nurses’ office as Curlin sat in a chair and told me that Dr. O’Shea would take good care of me.

In late December, 2013 this memory became fuller. I realized that there was only one nurse on the ward when Curlin took me out of seclusion and that there were no patients in the hallway. This would have been very unusual. Patients were always milling around the halls, propped up against the walls and standing around. 1A always had a nursing staff of between five and eight nurses. Curlin and I would have had to pass directly by two nurses’ stations on the way to the exit door, the second one being only feet from the exit. They were both empty.

I realized that Curlin had to have taken me off the locked ward at night - after eleven when the night shift, which would have been only one nurse, was working. This would be why there were no patients in the hallways. They were in bed in their rooms.

This memory is the same as I have always had except I wasn’t able to fully understand the information available in it. I always knew there was only one nurse and I always knew there were no patients in the hallways. It never occurred to me what this meant.

When Curlin brought me to Weeks 3, it was daytime. There was a full nursing staff when he sat in the office and told me that Dr. O’Shea would take good care of me. This raises the very disturbing question: where did Curlin take me in the middle of the night and for what reason? Given the information I learned was in the closing of the lawsuit regarding Curlin’s admission of “sexual misconduct,” I can imagine why he removed me from the locked ward in the middle of the night and why I showed up with him in the daytime on Weeks 3.

Apparently no one at VSH - not the nursing staff, not the hospital administration - no one, did anything except keep the situation covered up. This is an example of the total lack of integrity and the total lack of human compassion that was at work at VSH during the years I was there and during the years that UVM-VSH were conducting CIA experiments.

Having substantial memory loss is a difficult thing to live with and an even more difficult thing to understand. Why it took me so long to realize that Curlin had to have taken me off the locked ward at night is a question I don't know how to answer. I've told and retold this memory in therapy for years, yet the details in the memory didn't come together until December, 2013. Those details were always there. I was just unable to incorporate them into an understanding of what actually took place that night in October, 1970.

VERMONT STATE HOSPITAL DEATHS, 1952-1973

While investigating CIA experiments at VHS, I continued to have mail stolen. In 2009, I sent a letter to Senator Bernie Sanders at his Burlington office. The letter was sent using Certified Mail, and it never arrived at Senator Sanders' office. I contacted my Postmaster who tracked the Certified Mail to a mail facility in New Jersey, where the letter had been signed for. I checked with Senator Sanders' staff only to learn that the person who signed for the letter was not a person known to Senator Sanders' staff. My Postmaster contacted Sanders' office and verified that the name of the person who signed for the letter was not a person known to Sanders' office.

Another Certified letter sent by me to CIA Director Leon Panetta was also stolen. Despite the evidence held by the Postmaster and by the Postal Inspectors that two letters mailed using Certified Mail were stolen, I was never contacted by the Postal Service and to this day, to my knowledge, no action taken by them has resulted in the discovery of the identity of the perpetrator. How the Postal Inspectors were able to ignore the verified thefts of Certified mail to a United States Senator and to the CIA Director, is a question I cannot answer. Senator Sanders' Certified mail theft also involved someone who signed for the letter who was not known to Sanders' staff. Why and how my letter addressed to Sanders in Burlington, Vermont, mailed from Rutland, Vermont, ended up stolen in a New Jersey mail facility remains unknown, unanswered and apparently not investigated.

I also had mail sent to the Department of Justice stolen and mail DOJ sent in reply to me stolen. Numerous FOIA requests and requests for assistance to elected officials were stolen. I have no way of knowing the true extent of my stolen mail, but I was able to find information that might help explain the lack of an investigation by Postal Inspectors.

In Dr. Colin Ross's book, The C.I.A. Doctors: Human Rights Violations by American Psychiatrists, a CIA cover-up of its operations involving mail tampering on American soil are documented by a quotation from an internal CIA memo:

"In 1952, the CIA began to survey mail…in 1953 it began to open and read mail…the program was approved by the Director of CIA and at least three Postmaster Generals…and Attorney General John Mitchell."

"Unless the charge is supported by the presentation of interior items from the project, it should be relatively easy to "hush up" the entire affair or to explain that it consists of legal mail cover activities conducted by the Post Office at the request of federal agencies. Under the most favorable circumstances including the support of charges with interior items from the project, it might become necessary, after the matter has cooled off during an extended period of investigation, to find a scapegoat to blame for unauthorized tampering with the mails."

I thought about how my Postmaster began to stop returning my phone calls and how he finally refused to contact me. I wasn't able to learn anything more from my Postmaster, and I was never contacted by the Postal Inspectors.

After the Patriot Act became law, the intelligence agencies no longer had to obtain a warrant to wiretap phones and after years of dealing with a wiretapped phone, I wondered if the intelligence agencies had returned to mail tampering. I also wondered if the explanation as to why the Postal Inspectors and the Post Office apparently didn't find the theft of Certified Mail to a United States Senator worth investigating was that mail was routinely being opened, read and in some cases, stolen and that the Postal Service was well aware of this matter. I doubt that too many American citizens have to deal with stolen mail or have experienced a lack of interest or investigation by proper authorities.

As far as I know, my mail is no longer being stolen but it is noteworthy that I no longer send FOIA requests and no longer write letters to elected officials requesting their assistance. In addition, I have no way of knowing if any investigation by the Postal Inspectors was ever done.

After years of being followed and harassed by strangers I did not know, and after being able to identify at least one of the strangers who followed me as a federal agent, I attempted on several occasions to speak with the local office of the FBI. Not only would the two agents who worked in the office not return my phone calls, but they also refused to meet with me. I found this to be curious at best.

It took a phone call to Senator Sanders' office with an angry complaint by me about being followed and harassed, after which Senator Sanders sent a Congressional Liaison Officer to CIA to complain, and a phone conversation with the Albany office of the FBI, before these strangers finally stopped following and harassing me.

After being followed around stores, approached on the street, harassed and bumped in traffic, and after watching strangers pull their vehicles next to mine and sit and stare at me, flash their car lights at me after they pulled into parking spaces directly in front of me, after all of this nonsense, as of the writing of this book, it appears as if these strangers have stopped following me. I've grown accustomed to watching who is near me and I notice if any vehicle appears to be following me, but things seem to have quieted down. It would seem to me that the amount of time and personnel that was involved in the harassment must have cost quite a bit of taxpayer dollars. These were wasted taxpayer dollars.

I had been troubled for a long time about why the government would go to the lengths they have gone to keep tabs on my phone and my mail, and to follow me. It became clear early on that whoever was conducting the harassment had to have a high level of sophistication in order to pull off the types of surveillance they used. It made no sense to me and the more I witnessed the surveillance the more questions I had as to the reason.

I wondered why, decades after the drug and mind control program ended, would CIA be interested in my activities? The details of the CIA experiments that came under scrutiny in 1977 were extremely disturbing and it seemed to me that whatever CIA was concerned about my discovering must be even worse than the details of research that were already known.

The book, Empty Beds, lists VSH patient death rates over the same time when VSH-UVM conducted the CIA experiments. I began to study the death rates. Vermont Department of Mental Health Biennial reports contain yearly death rates and as I read the statistics I began to realize that the death rates at VSH during the time experiments were being conducted were extremely high and seemed to be way out of proportion.

For a twenty-year period, 1952-1973, VSH death rates when matched with the yearly patient population. I noticed that in 1973, the same year CIA halted MKULTRA and the federal funding to VSH for active patient research ended, the death rates dropped significantly and continued to drop over the following several years. An average high patient population over the twenty-year time frame was about 1200 and the average low patient population was about 600. In 1958, 186

VSH patients died in one year. This would be the equivalent of one body being removed from VSH every other day for the year 1958. I knew that something was dreadfully wrong.

During the years 1952-1960, 1233 VSH patients died.

By 1969, an additional 1210 VSH patients had died.

During the years 1970-1973, 392 VSH patients died.

VSH death rate statistics in the years 1974 through 1978 are “unavailable” according to the Vermont Department of Statistics. Do these death rates from 1952 to 1973 hide terminal experiments done on patients at VSH? Does anyone care, or want to investigate?

On June 19, 1972, CIA Director Richard Helms ordered the destruction of MKULTRA files. I was discharged from VSH on June 19, 1972. Helms knew that the CIA drug and mind control programs were under scrutiny. The files were actually destroyed on June 30, 1972.

By 1973, Helms ordered a halt to the MKULTRA programs and ended funding. In 1973, VSH halted active patient research and the federal funding sources dried up.

In 1973, VSH patient death rates plunged and continued to plunge over the next few years until the death rates fell to more reasonable numbers of one or two a year.

I filed a Vermont Records Act request with the Vermont Department of Mental Health for the ages, places of residence and cause of death of the almost 3000 VSH patients who died during the twenty-year time period when experimentation was ongoing. My request was denied.

In a phone conversation I learned that my request was denied due to "Privacy Act" concerns. I found this to be interesting since the information I was seeking did not concern the identities of the patients. Furthermore, I was under the impression that the right to privacy ends with death.

I was very interested in learning how many VSH patients were brought into VSH from other states in the country and what the actual cause of death was for the patients. It was clear that Vermont was not going to allow me to obtain documents relating to the VSH deaths.

Numerous published accounts of the CIA drug and mind control programs detail CIA plans to conduct "terminal experiments," including BLUEBIRD, ARTICHOKE and MKULTRA. CIA maintains that it never conducted terminal experiments on American soil.

A 1954 CIA cable contained a desire for "time, places and bodies for terminal experiments."

Another CIA cable discussed, "diminishing numbers of subjects available for these tests."

According to John Marks, Ewen Cameron expressed a willingness to conduct terminal experiments at McGill University, where he was the Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry.

According to John Marks, Dr. Maitland Baldwin stated his willingness to perform terminal experiments. Baldwin was a brain surgeon at the National Institute of Health and went on to work for the CIA Technical Services Division. Baldwin was the contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 62, and was a coauthor of the McGill neurosurgeon, Wilder Penfield.

I thought about the extremely high death rates at VSH and I wondered if I had discovered the real reason CIA, the State of Vermont and the federal government were so motivated to conceal Vermont's role in MKULTRA. The cover-up was not only massive, but it was a State and federally coordinated cover-up. The behavior of federal agencies that funded VSH-UVM experiments for twenty years, yet denied that they were in possession of any documents relating to the experiments, was suspicious at best. The behavior of UVM, SAM, DOD, CIA, former Vermont Governors, United States Senators, Congressmen, Senate Committees and practically every other State and Federal official I contacted not only raises suspicions, but is indicative of a cover-up.

When I initially contacted elected state and federal officials and explained what happened to me and described the content of the VSH-UVM experiments, the responses were of concern and there was usually an expression of at least some degree of interest in helping me. Follow-up phone conversations led to the officials telling me they couldn't help. This happened over and over again. It didn't take me long to realize that the State and Federal government did not want to know about the Vermont CIA experiments and they most definitely did not want to hear about VSH patient deaths.

Terminal experiments would be the one CIA activity that would cause such a massive, coordinated state and federal cover-up to occur. I realized that because I had discovered Dr. Robert Hyde in my medical records and I went on to obtained numerous other documents that contained names, sites and procedures that I could connect back to CIA, I became the target of surveillance and harassment.

Things began to make sense. Someone was very worried about the documents and information I was obtaining about Vermont CIA experiments and with the extremely high death rates at VSH during the time when VSH-UVM were conducting experiments using unwitting subjects, and the huge amount of documentation I gathered on CIA personnel, sites, funding sources, cover front groups and contracts, I was certain that death rates at VSH were a huge factor in the cover-up.

CIA, VSH-UVM never imagined that anyone would learn about the CIA and when I did, they never thought that anyone would believe me. Apparently they thought that if they harassed and intimidated me, I'd give up my pursuit. They were mistaken.

I thought about how close I had come on numerous occasions, to having been a number in a death statistic document. My medical records are filled with procedures that could have easily led to my death. I have no explanation for why I survived. But it appeared as if many VSH patients did not survive.

The knowledge that so many VSH patients were intentionally subjected to cruel experiments and that almost 3000 VSH patients died over the twenty years that VSH-UVM conducted experiments, changed the way I felt about my own involvement in the experimentation. I realized that my investigation was no longer driven solely by what happened to me. There is a very good chance that I knew some of the people who were experimented on and very likely permanently damaged by the experiments. It's also very possible that I knew some of those who died.

I wondered how the staff at VSH could have watched as many as 186 bodied being removed from VSH in one year and have remained silent. I wondered how numerous Vermont State officials could have read the death statistics in the Department of Mental Health Biennial for twenty years and not have had questions. I wondered how the death rates could have appeared in the 1988 book, Empty Beds by Marsha Kincheloe without someone expressing concern. If anyone ever did express concern or have questions, there was apparently never a follow-up or publicity. Many times over my fifteen-year investigation, I shook my head in disgust and disbelief and I still do.

In 2009, I wrote a letter to Attorney General Eric Holder in which I described the CIA experiments in VSH-UVM. I detailed the high death rates at VSH and requested that he conduct an investigation into VSH deaths during the twenty years when unwitting subjects were used in CIA experiments. No reply or acknowledgement of my concerns was received.

I wrote a similar letter to President Obama. No reply or acknowledgement was received. I wrote a letter to Secretary of Defense, Robert Gates. No reply or acknowledgement was received. I wrote to CIA Director, Leon Panetta. The letter to Panetta, mailed using Certified Mail was stolen. I was eventually able to send a letter that was received by Panetta. No reply or acknowledgement was received.

During my fifteen-year investigation, I contacted numerous state and federal officials and requested their assistance. Requests for assistance and investigation were sent to:

Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, Senator Diane Feinstein,

Senator Edward Kennedy, Senator Patrick Leahy, Congressman Peter Welch, former Governor James Douglas, members of the Vermont Legislature, former UVM President Daniel Fogel, UVM College of Medicine, every member of UVM Board of Trustees, VSH, Vermont Department of Mental Health, former Commissioner of Mental Health Paul Jarris, former Commissioner of Mental Health Michael Hartman, (Hartman did speak with me on the phone but no investigation was undertaken), U.S. Department of Justice, School of Aviation Medicine, numerous branches of the Army, Air Force and Navy, Advanced Research Projects Agency, Department of Defense, United States Public Health Service, National Institute of Health, National Institute of Mental Health, Department of Health and Human Services, Food and Drug Administration, U. S. Surgeon General, Department of Energy, UVM Bailey Howe Library, Library at Brown University, Massachusetts Mental Health Hospital (Boston Psychopathic), Butler Hospital, Rockland State Hospital, Smith, Kline and French Pharmaceuticals, CIBA and the Group For The Advancement of Psychiatry.

Senator Bernie Sanders tried to assist me on several occasions. He remains the only U.S. Senator or elected federal official to try to help. Vermont Representative, Anne Donahue and Vermont Representative, Michael Fisher also tried to assist me. Several members of the Vermont Legislature spoke with me on the phone and expressed their shock and concern at my information and about my personal experiences but there was no follow-up or action by the Vermont Legislature.

APPENDICES: THE EVIDENCE

THE SEARCH FOR DOCUMENTS

"If you want to be free, there is only one way; it is to guarantee an equally full measure of liberty to all of your neighbors. There is no other way."

Carl Shurz Statesman, US Senator and Reformer

Request to CIA from Harold Wolff, creator and President of the Human Ecology Fund, a CIA funding front for MKULTRA:

Wolff asked the Agency for everything in its files on "threats, coercion, imprisonment, isolation, deprivation, humiliation, torture, brainwashing, black psychiatry, hypnosis and combinations of these with or without chemical agents."

From The Search For The Manchurian Candidate, by John Marks

When I ended my lawsuit in 2002 because of a life-threatening attack of an autoimmune disorder, it took me time to begin my investigation again. The drug I was prescribed for the autoimmune disease, Imuran, had distressing side effects, but as time passed, the active phase of the disease was quieted by the drug and I went back to my investigation.

I filed Freedom of Information requests with CIA in which I requested documents involving the use of LSD, electric shock, Metrazol, hypnosis and several other known CIA methods conducted at VSH, UVM, Degoesbriand Hospital, and Mary Fletcher Hospital during 1965-1973. I asked for documents on Dr. Robert W. Hyde, Director of Psychiatric Research at VSH. My FOIA requests were denied due to "no documents located."

I filed repeated FOIA requests with CIA in an attempt to locate documents relating to Hyde's activities in Vermont and documents relating to the participating Vermont hospitals. In the requests, I attached information to CIA about how I had been used in covert experiments without my knowledge or consent. I made it clear that my motive in seeking the documents was to be able to know what experiments I had been subjected to. I informed CIA that Hyde was cited in my medical records and that the medical records were incomplete.

Regardless of what I requested or how I worded the FOIA requests, CIA denied every request until I received what I considered to be a very interesting and surprising response from CIA:

"We have re-reviewed your request and have determined the information you are seeking relates to the CIA program known as MKULTRA…clinical records generated under MKULTRA were retained by persons or institutions that actually conducted the research."

I was surprised and intrigued by CIA's response. Were they telling me that the documents I was searching for were being held by VSH and UVM? I decided to turn my attention to VSH and UVM. I already had two books written about VSH and the information in these books was stunning.

In the book, Empty Beds: A History of the Vermont State Hospital, by Marsha Kincheloe, I read about a long-time VSH research and personnel exchange program with Boston Psychopathic Hospital. The Boston hospital was a well-known CIA research site for MKULTRA and Hyde was Assistant Superintendent there when LSD and other mind control experiments were conducted for the CIA.

The book listed several research grants and provided grant titles and grant numbers that I used in FOIA requests to the federal funding agencies. I saw that these research projects were funded by the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institute of Health, the United States Public Health Service and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. All of these federal funding agencies admitted during Senate hearings on the CIA drug and mind control programs that they wittingly funded the CIA experiments.

I filed FOIA requests with each of the federal agencies and cited VSH, UVM and the two Burlington hospitals. I requested documents relating to the use of LSD, electric shock, hypnosis, Metrazol, and sensory deprivation during the time frame of 1965-1973. I explained in each FOIA that I had reason to believe that I had been an unwitting experimental subject and I named Dr. Robert W. Hyde. Each of the federal agencies denied having any documents. I filed appeals and each appeal was denied on the basis of no documents located. I found this curious at best since these federal agencies provided the research monies to VSH-UVM.

During a follow-up phone conversation with the Public Health Service, the woman asked me why I was interested in obtaining documents on the CIA experiments in Vermont and I replied that I had information in my medical records that showed that I had been an unwitting research subject.

"The Public Health Service did brain studies that they don't want anyone to know about," the woman on the other end of the phone told me.

I turned my attention to UVM and filed a Vermont Records Act request seeking documents relating to the 1955 Air Force School of Aviation Medicine contract AF 19(604) 1093 that was cited in the Department of Energy list of participating institutions and individuals in the Report on Human Radiation Experiments. These experiments were cited as the forerunner of the CIA MKULTRA research and Robert Hyde was named as a participant. I requested documents regarding LSD, Mescaline, hypnosis, Metrazol, electric shock and sensory deprivation and documents related to Dr. Robert W. Hyde.

UVM denied the request citing no documents located. I appealed and it was denied. I wrote a follow-up letter to the President of UVM, Daniel Fogel who replied that a "diligent search" yielded no documents. I found the response to be curious at best.

I filed FOIA requests with the Department of Energy and cited the 1955 UVM-SAM contract. The Department of Energy denied my request due to no documents located. I had already obtained the 1955 contract released by the DOE during the Clinton Presidency. UVM was cited as having conducted behavior research, yet the DOE claimed it had no documents related to the UVM research. I found this to be curious at best.

I investigated the School of Aviation Medicine and learned that the former Chief of Science at the Dachau concentration camp in Nazi Germany, Hubertus Strughold was the Director of Research at the SAM when UVM conducted the research for the Air Force. Strughold is cited in numerous documents and publications on CIA drug and mind control research because his Dachau experiments in mind control were the very first drug and mind control experiments on record. Strughold's Dachau experiments resulted in the horrific torture deaths of thousands of concentration camp victims.

I shuddered at the thought that UVM conducted research with SAM when the former Nazi was the Director of Research at SAM. But I was also growing increasingly suspicious about UVM and the federal funding agencies. The FOIA denials made no sense.

I filed FOIA requests with the former School of Aviation Medicine and the Air Force seeking documents relating to the 1955 Air Force SAM contract. I provided names, dates, and the contract number. The FOIA requests were denied due to no documents located. I filed an appeal. I had portions of the 1955 contract, the contract number, names, dates and even dates and times of several trips made by SAM officials to UVM. My FOIA appeal was denied. I found this to be curious at best.

FOIA requests were filed with the Army, Navy and several Air Force bases seeking documents related to the Vermont experiments. All FOIA requests and appeals were denied due to no documents located. In the 1977 Senate Select Committee hearings on the CIA MKULTRA research, the Army, Navy and Air Force were cited as having conducted CIA research.

I learned that the Department of Defense conducted drug and mind control experiments during the time when CIA MKULTRA was underway. I filed several FOIA requests with DOD seeking documents related to UVM-VSH and the two Burlington hospitals. I cited Dr. Robert W. Hyde, LSD and numerous mind control methods. I informed DOD that I had medical records that showed I had been used in unwitting experiments.

One FOIA request came back citing “documents located.” I waited for the documents to arrive and when they didn’t, I contacted DOD by phone. The FOIA officer told me on the phone that documents had been located. One document related to the names of the participating institutions. She told me that “additional documents” were also located. She asked me to write down her instructions on how to word my appeal.

I learned that someone was objecting to the release of the documents. I suspected that Vermont was the objecting party. I had begun to suspect that Vermont asked for and received protection from public disclosure regarding its activities during MKULTRA. During the 1977 Senate hearings many universities and hospitals asked for and received protection from public scrutiny. It interested me that VSH-UVM research and personnel exchange partners, Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Butler Hospital and McGill University all admitted their witting participation in the CIA MKULTRA experiments, yet Vermont was never mentioned in any testimony or in any publication as having conducted covert research.

Much to my surprise, I was informed by the DOD employee that the party objecting to the release of the documents was the Office of Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld. I began to wonder what CIA and DOD had done in Vermont institutions that would require a several decades-long cover-up. My contacts with the federal funding agencies that should have had documents relating to VSH-UVM research because they funded the Vermont research, all denied having any documentation. For the first time, I began to think beyond my own personal involvement in the covert CIA experiments and I wondered if there was something I was overlooking.

Vermont is located within relatively easy driving distance of Montreal, Boston, New York and Washington, DC. Vermont would have been one of the very last places anyone would have imagined that the CIA was conducting experiments with its Vermont hospital and psychiatrist partners. Vermont was a good choice as a place to hide the presence and activities of CIA. The Vermont CIA experiments remained covered up despite the 1975 Rockefeller hearings and the 1977 Senate Select Committee hearings on MKULTRA. Vermont CIA experiments might very well have remained covered up except for the fact that in 1997, I found Dr. Robert W. Hyde's name in my VSH medical records.

I did not receive the documents located by DOD until Rumsfeld was replaced as Secretary of Defense by Robert Gates. I never received the "additional documents located" by DOD and the document I did receive was incomplete and told me nothing.

I continued to pepper CIA with FOIA requests and I often included letters describing some of the information I obtained that showed I had been used in drug and mind control experiments. I made it clear to CIA that I only wanted the documents and that I was not acting out of an adversarial position. I also made it exceptionally clear to CIA that I knew they were involved in the experiments conducted on me in Vermont hospitals and that I would never stop my investigation. I told them that I would eventually make the information public.

I was truthful in my communications with CIA and never tried to hide the fact that I intended to make my findings public. I even went as far as to tell them that I had no intention now or in the future of filing any type of lawsuit against CIA. I simply wanted what was rightfully mine: the truth about what CIA did to me. The truth, as I would learn, would be very difficult to find Early in my investigation, I obtained declassified CIA documents from the National Security Archives in Washington, DC. The staff at the archives was very helpful and supportive. The first incident I had of "missing mail" involved a request to the Archives for declassified CIA documents. Another incident at the Archives involved a request I made for documents involving the CIA use of implants to control human behavior.

The CIA MKULTRA documents were stored off site at the Archives and I had to request material in advance so that the boxes in which the documents were contained could be located. When I did not receive the documents, I phoned the Archives and was told that the information I requested was "missing" from its designated box. I also learned that "certain people" known to the Archives staff had been on site after my request was received. I asked if the Archives had security cameras and although that question was not directly answered, I clearly understood who these "certain people" were believed to be.

Shortly after I began filing FOIA's with CIA and other federal agencies my mail began to vanish. Letters sent by me failed to reach their destination and were never returned to me. Letters mailed to me in response to FOIA requests never arrived. Some FOIA requests arrived opened. I learned rather quickly to follow up by phone when mail did not arrive.

I contacted a Postal Inspector in Essex Junction, Vermont and explained my problems with stolen mail. Mark Cavic listened and told me that he would look into the matter. After many months and many more incidents of stolen mail, I phoned Cavic only to learn that he had no notes on my case and had not conducted an investigation of any type. I was startled and angry.

I phoned the Postal Inspection Service in Massachusetts to find out if Cavic was actually a Postal Inspector.

The woman on the other end of the phone barked at me and said, "You called a federal agent and you better have a good reason for doing so."

I asked her if Mark Cavic from Essex Junction, Vermont was really a Postal Inspector and without hesitation she answered, "Yes."

I found it interesting that she in Massachusetts did not have to check to see if Cavic, in Vermont, was a Postal Inspector. I also found it unusual that her attitude was so hostile for no apparent reason.

My investigation had already shown me that there was evidence of the CIA experiments in Vermont. Declassified CIA documents provided me with names I could connect to VSH, including former VSH Assistant Superintendent, H. Peter LaQueur. Other names in the declassified documents matched names listed in the VSH book, The Vermont Story: Schizophrenic Rehabilitation.

I began to keep lists of names I obtained from CIA documents, verified funding groups, cover fronts and from noteworthy authors like John Marks, Martin Lee and Dr. Colin Ross. Cross-referencing became a key feature of my investigation and my list of names directly connected to VSH-UVM research began to grow.

I realized that I needed to be familiar with the terminology of subjects like LSD, hypnosis, the central nervous system and other areas so that I would be able to recognize information when I saw it. I gathered books on all of these subjects and tried to learn all that I could. At times I was able to obtain obscure, out of print books written on these and other key subjects and as time went along my background research paid off.

I contacted Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders' office in the early 2000's and provided him with documents and information about the Vermont CIA experiments and I asked for his help on several occasions. He sent a Congressional Liaison officer to CIA in order to try to help me obtain documents I requested under FOIA. Over the years to come, Senator Sanders and his Burlington staff were receptive to my information and tried to help me. Senator Sanders is the only United States Senator who tried to help.

My attempts to contact Senator Patrick Leahy for his help did not go well. I phoned his Burlington office several years ago and when I began to explain about the Vermont CIA experiments to his office staff, the reaction I got was dismissive. The person on the phone clearly did not want to hear the things I was saying about the Vermont CIA experiments. The all too brief phone call ended without the Senator's office offering any help.

My experience with Congressman Peter Welch was also a disappointment. The Congressman sent me a short letter that included no mention of the reason I asked for his help.

I phoned Senator Leahy's office again a few years after my initial phone call. Once again, the Senator's staff clearly did not want to hear about the CIA and he was even more dismissive than the staff was the first time I called. I hoped that the negative reaction by his staff had been a fluke, but the second phone call, convinced me that this had been no fluke. I wondered if my name had been flagged and I doubted that the staff of a United States Senator was routinely as dismissive and hostile to constituents who requested assistance.

I was still trying to learn how to cope with life as an integrated multiple and I began to be painfully aware of the losses in my life. I had been multiple for forty years and because of the hospitalizations, the brutality of those hospitalizations, separation from my family, friends, school and the loss of the normal, everyday experiences a teenager has in life, I became overwhelmed by the emerging realities of my life. The MPD had saved my life but I began to appreciate how the disorder had caused so much chaos and pain.

The lack of response that I was routinely getting from elected officials and federal agencies was a frustrating and painful experience. Maybe I had been naïve to expect that elected officials would help me and as the list of federal agencies and elected officials who refused to provide assistance grew longer, I became angry. The angrier I became, the more determined I became that I would, somehow, find the truth about the Vermont CIA experiments. The more I was lied to and dismissed out of hand, the more I dug in and continued my investigation. But the deep, pervasive sadness I felt about my government's behavior only grew as the years passed and as I continued to be dismissed and ignored by state and federal officials.

The more I learned about the CIA drug and mind control programs, the more I was able to appreciate the implications the experiments had for my life. What happened to me was not due to an accident. It wasn't because of incompetence. What happened to me was a well thought out, intentionally brutal covert CIA program of drug and mind control experiments. It didn't matter to those who chose me and who used me how old I was when it began. It didn't matter how much I suffered or how much my family suffered as a result. The bottom line was that I didn't matter. Only the objectives of the covert experiments mattered. It was a bitter realization.

I repeatedly asked myself why CIA chose Vermont for the experiments and why when other far more prestigious hospitals and universities admitted their role in MKULTRA, had Vermont's participation remained covered up? The idea that over five decades after the VSH-UVM experiments began, that Vermont's role in the covert research was still being covered up, weighed on me

The literature on the CIA drug and mind control programs describes the motive of the CIA to test drugs and mind control techniques as being driven by fears of the Soviet Union after WWII. The secret programs were begun, according to the explanation of the CIA, as a way to counter the possible use of similar tactics by the Soviets. The longer I investigated the CIA programs, the less I bought into the CIA explanation.

After WWII, American military intelligence discovered files on drug and mind control experiments conducted by the Nazis in the concentration camps. One can only imagine the horror contained in those files. Yet, American military intelligence decided, as did the American government, to use some of the same methods contained in the Nazi files on the unwitting American public. I wondered how this was even remotely possible. Former Nazi scientists like Hubertrus Strughold were brought into the United States through Project Paperclip and given jobs working for the American intelligence community, despite in some cases, the Nazi scientists' direct involvement in torture.

MKULTRA is described in many documents as a CIA program to study how to gain control of the human mind, even against the will of the subject. The experiments involved drugs, brainwashing, covert experiments in biological and chemical agents, and the use of mental patients, prisoners, terminally ill cancer patients, children and apparently anyone CIA decided was of interest. LSD research is routinely described as having been "weapons testing."

In the 1977 Senate Select Committee hearings on the CIAMKULTRA programs, Americans were told that the details of the experiments were now known. John Marks points out in his book, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate that CIA personnel lied under oath. It's difficult for me to believe that the Senators were not aware of the lies.

CIA claimed it would identify and locate former MKULTRA subjects and this for the most part has never happened. Many universities and hospitals asked for and received protection from public scrutiny for their participation in the covert experiments. It was, according to testimony by United States Senators, important to protect universities and hospitals. It's painfully clear when reading the Senate Select Committee report on MKULTRA that there was no such regard for the protection of unwitting American citizens who were subjects of the covert CIA experiments. Vermont Senator Robert Stafford was a member of the 1977 Senate Select Committee hearings, as was our current Vice President, Joe Biden

In a 1979 CIA Memorandum entitled, "MKULTRA Notification of Unwitting Subjects-Addendum to the Final Report," a concern is expressed that:

"CIA was pushed to launch a search for victims and now having found a victim possibly injured by our testing, it would look very bad if CIA ignored it or had to be pushed to investigate it…having put ourselves in the position of possibly provoked an illness, we should not now wash our hands of it and place the burden of assessing our responsibility on the heirs of the deceased."

The recommendation at the bottom of the page states, "the active portion of this investigation has been terminated."

It's obvious that CIA had no intention of trying to locate unwitting test subjects and a 1994 document entitled, "Human Experimentation, An Overview on Cold War Era Programs" shows that this has been and remains the policy of CIA.

Testimony by Frank C. Conahan, Assistant Comptroller General, National Security and International Affairs Division before the Legislation and National security Subcommittee on Government Operations, House of Representatives, reads:

"During the WWII and the Cold War era, DOD and other national security agencies conducted or sponsored extensive radiological, chemical and biological research programs. Precise information on the number of tests, experiments and participants is not available and the exact numbers may never be known…However we have identified hundreds of radiological, chemical and biological tests and experiments in which hundreds of thousands of people were used as test subjects… these tests and experiments often involved hazardous substances such as radiation… nerve agents, biological agents and lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD)."

"These tests were conducted to support weapon development programs… healthy adults, children, psychiatric patients and prison inmates were used in these tests…An unknown number of other tests and experiments were conducted under contracts with universities, hospitals and medical research facilities…From 1952 to 1975, the Army conducted a classified medical research program to develop incapacitating agents. The program involved testing nerve agents, nerve agent antidotes, psychochemicals and irritants."

Many people mistakenly believe that the CIA experiments involved only mental patients and prisoners but this was not the case. Numerous CIA and military experiments involved the use of toxins and chemical agents, some of which were used in cities all across America. Entire cities were at times exposed to potentially deadly chemicals and toxins. In 1955, CIA tested to see whether or not entire populations could be infected with biological agents. These chemicals were obtained from the Army biological warfare arsenal.

When Americans ask why the CIA drug and mind control programs, generally assumed to have only targeted "captive" populations, should be a concern to them, the answer is clear: all Americans were regarded as potential human guinea pigs. No matter who you were or where you lived, everyone was a potential target for covert biological or chemical experiments.

"During the same period, the Army Chemical Corps contracted with various universities, state hospitals and medical foundations to research the disruptive influences that psychochemicals have on combat troops. The Air Force also conducted experiments on the effects of LSD through contracts at five universities…no effort has been made by the Air Force to determine if the participants' names are available in the universities' records."

"According to CIA officials, from 1953 to 1964, the CIA conducted a series of experiments called MKULTRA to test vulnerabilities to behavior modification drugs…LSD and other psychochemical drugs were administered to an undetermined number of people without their knowledge or consent. According to the official, the names of those involved in the tests are not available because the names were not recorded or the records were subsequently destroyed. However, some tests were done under contract and no effort has been made by CIA to determine if names are available in contractors' records."

I have never been a political person and I will never be a political person. However I am an American citizen. The things I've learned have changed me forever. I will never again be able to trust my elected officials or believe out of hand what I am told by my government. I was betrayed, as was every Vermonter and every American. Nothing could make me sadder.

I continued to file FOIA requests with federal agencies that should have had the documents I requested. I filed numerous FOIA's with FDA and had several phone conversations with FDA. The role of FDA during MKULTRA in providing exemptions to researchers for LSD testing should have produced documents but as with all the previous FOIA requests, FDA denied my FOIA requests due to no documents located.

I filed numerous FOIA requests with Army, Navy and Air Force bases that had been identified as participants in the MKULTRA experiments.

All FOIA requests were denied due to no documents located.

In the mid-2000's, I was contacted by the Department of the Navy regarding a FOIA request I had made earlier. I had grown accustomed to long delays in response to my FOIA requests and at several points in my investigation I had numerous pending FOIA requests with many federal agencies. I had apparently lost track of the request to the Navy and it wasn't until many months later that I heard from them.

When I spoke with the Navy personnel on the phone, he asked me if I had any idea why a FOIA request I had made would have been found locked in a safe. I was stunned as I listened to him explain to me that my FOIA was recently discovered locked away. I had no answer for him

I wrote to every member of the UVM Board of Trustees and included information about the involvement of UVM in the covert experiments. Not one member of the Board replied to my letters. Vermont Governors are always members of UVM Board of Trustees, and I was not contacted by Governor James Douglas. I also wrote Governor Douglas on two more occasions about the CIA experiments in Vermont and he claimed not to have received one of the letters and his response to the third was not an offer to assist me.

I contacted Vermont Commissioner of Mental Health, Dr. Paul Jarris after reading a 2005 statement by him in the newspaper. "We have moved quickly to remedy past problems and have been open and transparent every time there was an opportunity to right a past wrong."

I wrote Dr. Jarris and told him about the CIA experiments and about my own personal experiences in VSH. Jarris wrote me back expressing his concern and asked me to provide him with documents, which I did. I waited for a response and none came. He left his position as Vermont Commissioner of Mental Health without ever addressing the information.

I located Dr. Jarris who was living and working in another state in the late 2000's and wrote him a letter in which I asked if leaving his position in Vermont had anything to do with my request for his help. I later learned that Jarris provided a copy of my letter to him to the State of Vermont.

I began to study the books about the VSH. The first time I read the 1961 book, The Vermont Story, written by Dr. Rupert Chittuck, et al, I suspected that the schizophrenic rehabilitation program described in the book, had never taken place. As I re-read the book, I began to recognize the terminology used throughout the book as terminology used by LSD researchers. I'd obtained noteworthy books on LSD like The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy by Harold Abramson, Forgotten Truth by Huston Smith and Acid Dreams by Martin Lee. I also obtained declassified CIA documents that described the use and actions of hallucinogenic drugs. I studied everything I could find on LSD and other hallucinogens.

I knew that CIA routinely covered up LSD research by calling the research "schizophrenia research." CIA researchers like Robert Hyde tried to create a "model psychosis" using LSD to produce schizophrenia-like conditions in experimental subjects. As I read The Vermont Story, I realized what I was actually reading.

The Vermont Story bibliography contains names of numerous other researchers who are noted to have influenced and/or participated in VSH schizophrenia research. The CIA declassified documents contain the names of many CIA-contracted researchers and I was able to match many of these names to the VSH research. Several of the researchers cited in the VSH book were also found to have had extensive research backgrounds in LSD, mescaline and other hallucinogenic drug testing.

One book in particular was referenced repeatedly by the authors of The Vermont Story as having played a significant role in VSH schizophrenic research. The 1958 book, Schizophrenia: A Review of the Syndrome by Leopold Bellak contains dozens of verified CIA MKULTRA researchers and known CIA methods, and gives details about the LSD research of Robert Hyde and other known CIA-contracted psychiatrists.

The book, published by Logos Press contains a very interesting name inside of the cover page: the book was "Manufactured by H. Wolff." I believe this was in fact Harold Wolff, known CIA researcher and the creator of the CIA front group, The Human Ecology Fund. Many of the researchers in the Bellak book are noted in other publications as having conducted MKULTRA research through monies provided by the Human Ecology Fund. Robert Hyde was funded in part by Human Ecology and I believe that the Bellak book was a product of the CIA Human Ecology Fund.

VSH psychiatrists noted in the Bellak book include Dr. George Brooks, Dr. Donald Eldred, and Dr. John Bockoven. The American Psychiatric Association and the American Psychological Association admitted their participation in the CIA MKULTRA programs during the 1977 Senate Investigations. The 1960 American Psychological Association President was George Albee, a Vermont psychologist, and he too is noted in the Bellak book. The American Psychological Association was cleared at TOP SECRET as the contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 107 in 1960. Under that contract, it received $15,000 for "attending meetings at foreign sites."

I had brief contact with Albee in 2009 and he denied knowing anything about the Vermont CIA experiments. I sent him information that showed that the American Psychological Association was fully aware of its involvement in CIA research and that the Association was a witting participant. As President of the Association in 1960, it is highly unlikely that Albee wasn't aware of the Association's collaboration with the CIA. Albee ended his contact with me after he received the information.

I found many examples of known CIA chemicals, procedures, sites and verified CIA researchers in Bellak's book. The book is actually a Who's Who of CIA MKULTRA. The list of names includes:

Overholser, Hoch, Hyde, Greenblatt, Hoffman, Azima, Beecher, Bender, Bennett, Denber, DeShon, Fabing, Murray, Himwich, Hoagland, Solomon, Whitehorn, Lilly, Marrazzi, Rinkel, Hebb, Houston, Osmond, Pfieffer, Rodgers, Delgado and Wittkower.

These are only a few of the numerous researchers who conducted CIA drug and mind control experiments; most of which were funded through the Human Ecology Fund.

Several researchers in the Bellak book are named in The Vermont Story and Empty Beds: A History of the Vermont State Hospital, by Marsha Kincheloe; their research on LSD and mescaline is also detailed in Bellak's book. Albert DiMascio, who conducted LSD experiments with Robert Hyde, was frequently cited in Empty Beds as a research partner of George Brooks, as were Paul Huston, and Herman Denber. All three researchers conducted extensive LSD and mescaline experiments. Another name of note in the Bellak book is A.M. Robinson. Robinson is cited in the Vermont Story as an employee of the Smith, Kline and French Mental Health Unit. Robinson began working at VSH in the late 1950's. Smith, Kline and French Pharmaceutical Company is named in declassified CIA documents as a contracted drug company for CIA and it was also under contract with VSH beginning in the mid-1950's.

Examples of procedures and experiments detailed in the Bellak book:

LSD, LAE, LD50, Bufontenine, hashish, Siamese fighting fish, wool protein, RSBT (Rhythmic Sensory Bombardment Therapy), Metrazol, model psychosis, sensory deprivation, lobotomies, Mescaline, narcohypnosis, ATCH, Thorazine, Reserpine, Artane, BST (Brief Stimulation Therapy), implanted electrodes, Coramine, amphetamines, electro-narcosis, electro-sleep, fever therapy, hibernation therapy, histochemical studies, hormone therapy, prolonged narcosis, perpetual isolation and photoshock therapy. Also noted: pink adrenaline, narco-suggestibility, blocking agents for LSD and other hallucinogens, and radioactive isotope tracers studies with LSD.

In addition, numerous verified CIA research sites are also referenced in Bellak as well as portions of experiments such as Robert Hyde's radioactive isotope tracer studies with LSD. I have no doubt that the Bellak book, "Manufactured by H. Wolff," was a product of the CIA front group the Human Ecology Fund.

In the CIA declassified documents I obtained from the National Security Archives, several documents show member lists of researchers who belonged to CIA front groups. The Society for Biological Psychiatry was a CIA front group and a 1962 member list includes the name of VSH former Superintendent, H. Peter LaQueur. LaQueur is also named as a member of another CIA front group, the Manfred Sakel Foundation. Other members include: Max Rinkel, Paul Hoch, Ewen Cameron, Lauretta Bender, Herman Denber, and Henry Murray. Several members of these CIA front groups are cited in The Vermont Story and Empty Beds and they include: Herman Denber, Gerald Klerman, Milton Greenblatt and Jordon Scher.

Only the 1962 Society For Biological Psychiatry and Manfred Sakel Foundation member lists are available in the declassified CIA documents. There is no way to know for sure which other VSH psychiatrists besides LaQueur would be listed as members of the two CIA front groups in other years.

I used the Vermont Records Act to obtain copies of VSH-UVM research documents beginning with the research project that The Vermont Story: Schizophrenic Rehabilitation was based on. The 1957 grant, MY-1752, Special Projects #180, was funded by Health, Education and Welfare and the United States Public Health Service. These federal agencies admitted their willing participation in the CIA drug and mind control programs. I also obtained the VSH-UVM project documents MY-1752-RISI that also covered the Special Project #180. Additional funding was provided by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation.

It's noteworthy that before the influx of federal monies from agencies now known to have wittingly funded CIA experiments, VSH was a crumbling institution. In the book Empty Beds, former Superintendent Rupert Chittuck describes the hospital as being infested with rats and other vermin and having failing systems like plumbing and structure. When the federal research monies flooded into VSH, the hospital built the physical structure back to reasonable standards. After 1973, when the federal monies for active patient research stopped, VSH began to decline. By 2011, Tropical storm Irene flooded the hospital and damaged it beyond repair. Governor Peter Shumlin closed the aging hospital forever. I have to wonder how many lives might have been saved from the brutality of VSH if only the federal research monies had never been allotted to VSH in the 1950's. It took an act of God and a good Governor to finally close VSH forever.

It's not as if VSH hadn't come under scrutiny over the years. In 2003, the Department of Justice launched an investigation into VSH and federal funds were withdrawn from the State when the hospital was decertified. I provided DOJ with information and documentation about VSH CIA experiments and its brutal history, yet DOJ was unable or unwilling to open an investigation into VSH past research activities and blatant patient civil rights violations. Governor after Governor passed the problem along and there was no will in the Vermont Legislature to close the VSH. If it hadn't been for Tropical storm Irene, VSH would very likely still house patients.

I read the VSH-UVM research project documents, Special Project #180 and quickly realized that I was reading details of the use of unwitting VSH patients in covert drug experiments. Cited as a "Consultant" to VSH research was Dr. Milton Greenblatt, Director of Research at Boston Psychopathic Hospital. I already knew that VSH-UVM and Boston Psychopathic Hospital had a research and personnel exchange program well underway for years and I knew that Robert Hyde was conducting CIA LSD experiments at Boston Psychopathic Hospital prior to and during this time. I was also aware that Dr. George Brooks had received a Fellowship from Smith, Kline and French, in 1956, which sponsored him to spend six months on site at the Boston hospital for "special drug studies."

Dr. Milton Greenblatt, Director of Research at Boston Psychopathic Hospital conducted research with Hyde and with Albert DiMascio. A 1958 research project, "AStudy in the Effect of LSD: Physiologic and Psychological Changes and their Interrelations", is cited in the psychosurgical chapter (lobotomy) of Bellak's book. In 1959, Greenblatt conducted studies in human isolation at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

VSH-UVM research Special Project #180: “This investigation was supported in part, by a research and demonstration grant (No. 180) from the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, DC.” The documents also cite USPHS as a funding source.

Dr. Robert Hyde’s Butler research project grant, Special Project #181 includes a statement that: “This investigation was supported in part, by a research and demonstration grant (No. 181) from the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, DC.”

In a 1956 Boston Psychopathic research project, the grant was a “Special Project funded by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, DC.”

In 1956, Dr. Milton Greenblatt conducted 116 lobotomies on schizophrenic patients.

The documents describe the criteria for selection of the patients for the VSH-UVM research:

“Nearly all of them had been declared financially incapable of paying anything for their own care and were committed to the hospital at state expense. They were middle-aged, poorly educated, lower class individuals…”

“They were seldom visited by friends or relatives. They received very few packages or letters. We feel that nearly all of these patients could reasonably be considered to be hopeless cases as far as any social recovery and establishment in homes and jobs outside the hospital are concerned.” “The majority of patients in the selected group will have received prolonged intensive drug therapy in the past without release from the hospital, thus we anticipate that relatively few among them will be discharged and lost from the group.”

H.P. Albarrelli Jr. writes in his book, A Terrible Mistake, that the:

“Special Projects Division (SPD) was set up within the Office of The Chief, Chemical Warfare Services, to carry out particularly sensitive projects initiated by the War Research Service to oversee the crème de la crème of defensive and offensive biological warfare experiments for various federal agencies, or those contracted out to universities and private laboratories throughout the country.”

“Within eight months of its creation, SPD had evolved into a massive bureaucracy…SPD maintained close liaison with the Medical, Ordnance, and Intelligence Departments of the Army and Navy, the Army, Air Force, U.S. Public Health Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture and the British and Canadian governments' biological warfare organizations."

Were the Special Projects at UVM-VSH, at Butler and at Boston Psychopathic - all research and exchange partners and all sites of CIA drug and mind control experiments – funded and contracted through the Special Projects Division as outlined by H.P. Albarelli, Jr.?

I spoke with a person, (who requested anonymity) who attended a conference held in Vermont years ago where Dr. Milton Greenblatt was the featured speaker. This person told me that Greenblatt bragged about all of the lobotomies conducted at VSH. Greenblatt's 1956 Boston Psychopathic Hospital Special Project funded the lobotomies of 116 "schizophrenic" patients. The CIA was interested in the use of lobotomies as part of their experiments on how to induce amnesia.

The VSH experimental drug referred to as SU-3822 #1 and SU-3822 #2, was described as being a "synthetic compound." The chemical agent was supplied by CIBA Pharmaceutical Company. The patients being used without their knowledge or consent were contained on the locked adult women's ward and were the most severely mentally ill VSH patients.

The primary researcher in this project was Dr. George Brooks and the project was conducted jointly by VSH-UVM. Descriptions of the patients' reactions and adverse symptoms are detailed in the project documents. Special Projects #180 included several other apparently benign research studies in "schizophrenic rehabilitation" as well. I will focus on the documents that show the use of unwitting subjects, the use of experimental drugs and experimental procedures.

From the research project, Chronic Schizophrenia, Tranquilizing Drugs and Motor Functions, USPHS grant #MY 1752, September 1957-1958:

"On the first day after the change to placebo, patients on the ward seemed somewhat tense or restless…on the second day four of the patients developed rather acute, uncomfortable reactions characterized by tension, fear, restlessness, insomnia, increased perspiration and vomiting. All patients were tense and restless. The attendant said, "It's like old times. It's bedlam."

"On the third day thirteen patients were suffering severe withdrawal reactions indistinguishable clinically from a moderate withdrawal following long term ingestion of morphine. By the fourth day, there was a total of seventeen out of twenty eight patients who were tense, restless, complaining of muscular aches and pains, breaking out in a cold sweat, sleepless, nauseated. Vomiting had become a serious problem in four patients. On the fifth day one patient became very weak and faint. The dose of the placebo was changed from three times a day to four times a day in an attempt to reassure staff."

"Following the end of the active withdrawal symptoms the behavior of the patients continued to deteriorate. During the fourth week after the change to the placebo, many patients had to be changed to what was felt to be an active chemical compound, SU-3822."

"The clinical condition of all patients continued to deteriorate. As the patients' behavior and clinical condition became intolerable the dosage was gradually raised to 100 mgs. q.i.d. At this time one patient developed a severe skin rash resembling measles. At the end of the third week of SU-3822, all patients were much worse."

"By the eleventh week of the study, two patients developed severe extra pyramidal dysfunction with all the signs of classic postencephaletic Parkinsonism. Three other patients developed severe extra pyramidal dysfunction with insomnia and marked restlessness and nine others had definite cogwheel rigidity. Seven other patients had palpable cogwheel phenomenon in the anterior muscle mass of the arm. Two patients had marked flaccid hypermobility of the elbow joint. On the sixth day following the change in medication nearly all of the patients had some signs of extra pyramidal dysfunction."

"By the eleventh day after beginning the medication, nine patients were suffering rather distressing akathesia and were described by attendants as "pacers." They were pacing back and forth like caged lions. Some attendants refused to work on the ward."

"It seems apparent that use that the substance SU-3822 is not effective…in the behavioral control of severe and chronic schizophrenics."

"Study Duration: April 7-July 17."

"Use of SU-3822#1: May 4-May 19."

:Use of SU-3822#2: May 20-June 12."

"We have been impressed by the rich variety of motor disorders that appear in patients receiving Thorazine and Reserpine, especially when used in combination. These disorders range from a general slowing of responses and impairment of fine motor abilities through cogwheel rigidity, loss of associated movements, spasmodic torticollis, choreform states, oculargyric crisis and catalepsy to full blown Parkinsonism in which patients suffer almost total muscular rigidity."

I read the statement above with particular disgust, especially when I thought about the reputation of George Brooks as a "humanitarian." I began to wonder how many of the women on the locked ward 1A had been used in this and other experiments. Almost all of the women on 1A had been kept there for many years, some for decades. I wondered if I was reading about the experiments those women had been subjected to and I wondered how damaged they had been by the experiments

It's clear when reading the research documents that VSH-UVM used active chemical substances in placebos. I suspect this is how experimental drugs were administered to me in 1970-1971.

During the same time when VSH-UVM were conducting unwitting experiments on severely mentally ill patients, hospitals throughout the country that were not conducting CIA experiments were providing compassionate and effective treatment to the mentally ill. VSH-UVM made a choice to conduct the type of research that they did. They had other options and despite their oaths as physicians, despite internationally accepted agreements like the Nuremberg Code and the Helsinki agreement, VSH-UVM chose to conduct experiments using unwitting patients.

I have no doubt whatsoever that CIA and other intelligence agencies paid for the research that was conducted at VSH. The monies that came from NIH, NIMH, USPHS and HEW during the years of the experiments kept VSH afloat for over two decades. Researchers like Hyde, Brooks, Chittuck, William Deane and others discarded widely accepted rules and regulations for medical research and created their reputations based on fiction. The true methods and treatments these doctors used are clearly described in their own research project documents. There is no excuse for what they did to countless VSH patients.

In VSH-UVM research project MY-1752-RISI: "Details of samples of blood, urine and spinal fluid will be collected for examination by the UVM Department of Pharmacology. The details of this study are given in a separate grant application."

I asked Dr. Colin Ross if it was standard procedure in tranquilizing drug research to collect samples of blood, urine and spinal fluid from patients. He replied that no it was not standard procedure in tranquilizing drug research but that samples of blood and spinal fluid might be drawn in experiments involving LSD, mescaline or other types of experimental drugs.

From MY-1752-RISI:

"A number of studies have indicated that a combination of Thorazine and Reserpine is more effective and more convenient to use especially in the treatment of chronic schizophrenia. However there is a general agreement that this combination is also more effective in producing extra pyramidal dysfunction. For these two reasons it would seem to be the ideal preparation for use in the study of relationships between changes in motor function and changes in psychological and social functions in these patients."

From MY-1752-RISI:

"Studies of the performance in lobotomized chronic schizophrenic patients have demonstrated a further impairment of motor functions immediately following the operation. This impairment coincided with an increase in the severity of the psychotic picture. Similar attempted correlations have not been reported with pharmacology."

I read the paragraph several times and came to the disturbing conclusion that VSH-UVM had intentions of trying to create chemical lobotomies.

The grant application referred to could not be located in several attempts to do so. I did however attempt to locate a VSH-UVM research project funded by USPHS: "RD-1894-P, Autonomic and Psychomotor Parameters of Rehabilitation Potential in the Mentally Disabled."

I filed Vermont Records Act requests that were denied due to no documents located. I eventually tracked this research project to the document storage facility in Middlesex. The archivist expressed surprise that research project documents would have been stored at the Middlesex facility and when I questioned if this would have been unusual, he replied that it would have been very unusual. He was even more surprised when he checked his records that the VSH-UVM research documents had been destroyed. He had no explanation.

I believe that this particular research document was stored in Middlesex and destroyed because the content would have been damaging to VSH-UVM if it had been obtained by anyone. Was this the research project that detailed the use of LSD? Or was this research project one that detailed the use of lobotomies after LSD use?

This is as far as I could go in documenting the involvement of CIA in the VSH-UVM experiments. The answers to my remaining questions are hidden behind locked doors.

BIOGRAPHIES, PUBLICATIONS AND CROSS-LINKAGES OF THE CIA RESEARCHERS

Another aspect of my research was my effort to document as many cross-linkages and connections as I could between the doctors at VSH and the network of CIA mind control doctors. I did this by collecting published papers and books, reports, grant applications and other documents.

A research grant renewal application, 02037, May 1968 - April 1972, Rupert Chittuck and Robert Hyde, USPHS grant account #869124, contains an application to use human subjects.

A December, 1966 letter to Rupert Chittuck from Eugene A. Confroy contains permission to use human subjects at VSH. Confroy was Director of Division Research Grants for USPHS and HEW. Both federal agencies were wittingly funding the CIA experiments.

I located the research documents for VSH-UVM project, "A State Hospital For Educational Therapy," Rupert Chittuck, Robert Hyde, May 1968 - April 1972, USPHS, HEW. The documents identify Hyde, John Bockoven and Dr. Richard York as being "specifically related to this project." Also named are Dr. Greenblatt and Harry Solomon.

In a section of the research documents entitled, "Work Done By Us Elsewhere," research sites named are: Boston Psychopathic Hospital; Butler Hospital; Metropolitan State Hospital; Bedford Veterans Hospital; Lowell Mental Health Center (Bockoven); Rutland Heights Rehabilitation Center (York); and John and Elaine Cummings, Lowell Mental health Center (Bockoven). Also named in the VSH-UVM documents in reference to publications "relevant to this project," were Hyde and R.H. Williams, E.L. Brown, Richard York, Milton Greenblatt, Daniel J. Levinson and Harold Pfautz.

In John Marks' documents donated to the National Security Archives, there are declassified CIA MKULTRA documents listed under Mass Mental Health and marked New York Times, August 2, 1977. These documents contain the names and short biographies of CIA researchers and CIA research sites:

Richard York:

Mass. General Hospital, 1953

Boston Psychopathic Hospital, 1952-57

Butler Hospital, 1957-60

Mass. Department Mental Health, 1960-63

Psychological Assessment Associates, 1962-66

Rutland Heights Rehab Ctr. 1966-68 named as a Human Ecology

Fund recipient

Harold Pfautz:

Butler Hospital, 1956-1963

Harry Solomon:

Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Harvard Med, Mass.

Mental Health Center (Boston Psychopathic Hospital) 1955-1967

Max Rinkel:

Noted as working with Hyde and Solomon, 1956-1960

Published by the Josiah P. Macy Jr. Foundation, 1956

Senior Research Associate at Boston Psychopathic Hospital in 1963

The VSH research documents note that York and Bockoven personally visited VSH as "Consultants" during the research. Psychological Assessment Associates in Washington, DC was the site of the CIA headquarters and was run by John Gittinger, Chief Psychologist for CIA.

In the bibliography of The Vermont Story are names cited as having contributed to and/or influenced and participated in VSH-UVM research. The book, Empty Beds also contains the names of researchers who conducted research with VSH or published research papers with and for VSH psychiatrists. These include:

Milton Greenblatt, Jordon Scher, D. J. Levinson, Albert DiMascio, John Cummings, Gerald Klerman, Herman Denber, Paul Huston, Eric Wittkower, E.L. Brown, and John Bockoven.

Another well-known LSD researcher, Gregory Bateson, was identified in a 1962 VSH-UVM research project document. Bateson is widely written about in books on LSD and is detailed in the Josiah P. Macy Jr. Conferences on LSD. Greenblatt, Scher, Denber, and Huston were listed as members of the Society for Biological Psychiatry in declassified CIA documents.

Other researchers cited in The Vermont Story include:

Paul Lemkau, D.J. Levinson, Eric Wittkower, R.H. Williams, Richard York, E.L. Brown, and Barbara Curtis.

In a VSH-UVM research project document entitled, "Problems of Opening a Rehabilitation House for Chronic Schizophrenic Patients," part of Special Project #180, by George Brooks, Harry Solomon is referenced as an influence on VSH research.

The more VSH-UVM research projects documents I was able to obtain, the more names from those documents matched the names in CIA declassified documents. Bellak's book was a goldmine for identifying CIA researchers and their relevant experiments. The number of CIA-connected names in the two VSH books, added to the relevant names in the VSH-UVM research project documents, left little doubt as to the actual research conducted by VSH-UVM.

When I obtained the VSH-UVM research project documents, "The Use of Programmed Instruction with Disturbed Students, MH-01076, George Brooks, Thomas Boag, 1963-1966," I realized I had finally located a direct research connection between CIA, VSH-UVM.

In these research documents, VSH-UVM conducted Personality Assessment System (PAS) psychological tests on child patients at VSH. The test results were sent directly to John Gittinger, 1834 Connecticut Ave, NW, Washington, DC.

In John Marks' book, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, the address of CIA headquarters in Washington DC and the site of Gittinger's Personality Assessment Associates, is 1834 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC.

I realized the significance of what I had found. In 1965, a PAS was conducted on me and by 1965, VSH had been sending test results of the PAS directly to Gittinger at CIA headquarters. The documents in the research project showed that numerous PAS's were conducted on child patients and sent to CIA headquarters.

A Progress report for MH-01076, USPHS-NIMH, and a document marked 1-R11-MH-01076 contain disturbing statements relating to the use of "programmed instruction" and a warning that sent chills up my spine:

"We expect you to use Programmed Instruction as a base for teaching and not as the ONLY means. You must use other things or else twenty years from now we will have a generation of programmed kids running around the unemployment office."

I continued to file FOIA requests with CIA and every request was denied. I attempted to have CIA fully declassify Hyde's CIA projects. Hyde died in 1976, yet CIA continues to classify most of his work for them. CIA refused either to grant my request or to deny my request, essentially keeping me in limbo. I filed a request with the Executive Secretary Interagency Security Classification Panel, (ISCAP). I learned that in order for ISCAP to make a determination on my request to have Hyde's CIA projects declassified, CIA had to make a determination and either grant or deny my request. Again, CIA refused to take any action whatsoever. My FOIA request remains in limbo.

In 2011, Dr. Colin Ross filed a FOIA request with CIA to obtain Robert Hyde's CIA subprojects. CIA would not acknowledge that Hyde worked for them, despite the fact that Dr. Ross was able to provide information that confirmed Hyde's employment by CIA, and they refused to grant his FOIA request. Dr. Robert W. Hyde's CIA research is very closely guarded by CIA.

The 1955 UVM-SAM Air Force contract which involved the UVM Department of Pharmacology during the time when former Dachau concentration camp Chief of Research, Hubertrus Strughold, was Director of Medical Research at SAM opened the door to the CIA drug and mind control experiments. The Department of Energy list of participants in the Human Radiation experiments cites UVM as conducting "behavioral studies." Robert Hyde is also noted on the list.

UVM was identified by Sidney Gottlieb as having conducted Special Interrogations. Gottleib stated that he believed that the experiments were funded by Human Ecology and/or Josiah Macy, both cover fronts for CIA. Gottleib was certainly in a position to know what he was talking about since he ran the MKULTRA drug and mind control programs.

Dr. Thomas Boag became UVM's first Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry in 1961. A July, 1961 American Journal of Psychiatry bulletin contains the following:

"Department of Psychiatry at the UVM College of Medicine: The office of the Dean has announced the establishment of a department of psychiatry… Chairman of the newly created department of medicine is Dr. Thomas J. Boag, Assistant to the Director of the Allan Memorial Institute and Assistant Professor at McGill. He will take up his new duties at UVM on July 1 as a full time Professor and Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry."

The Director of the Allan Memorial Institute was Dr. Ewen Cameron, contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 68. Boag would be one of the primary researchers (George Brooks was the other) in the 1963-1966 research project who sent test results of the PAS directly to John Gittinger at CIA Washington, DC headquarters.

I obtained a 2009 list of federal funding sources at UVM College of Medicine. The list includes:

NATO, National Security Agency, Department of Energy, Department of Justice, Advanced Research Projects Agency, Department of Defense, Office of Naval Research, Army Medical Research and Materiel Command, Air Force Office of Scientific Research, Interior Department, United States Department of State and NASA. The Josiah P. Macy Jr. Foundation was removed from the list prior to 2009.

I can only imagine the millions of dollars that UVM received from its federal contracts and I have no doubt that that money was a driving force during the CIA experiments at VSH-UVM.

The funding sources for VSH-UVM experiments include USPHS, NIH, NIMH, and HEW, all of which admitted their witting participation in the CIA MKULTRA programs. Cover front groups identified for VSH-UVM include:

Transcultural Psychiatry, Manfred Sakel, Society for Biological Psychiatry, Russell Sage Foundation, Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, American Association for the Advancement of Science, and apparently the Josiah Macy Foundation and Human Ecology.

CIA sites named in VSH-UVM research project documents and identified by sources include:

McGill, Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Butler Hospital, Rutland Heights Hospital, Metropolitan State Hospital and Psychological Assessment Associates.

CIA contracted pharmaceutical companies that were contracted to VSH-UVM include:

Smith, Kline and French, CIBA and (possibly) Mead Johnson. Smith, Kline and French placed an employee, A.M. Robinson on staff at VSH in the mid-1950s. A.M. Robinson is also noted in Bellak's book.

CIBA supplied experimental drugs for the 1957-58 VSH-UVM experiments and supplied drugs to the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology where Hyde and Hudson Hoagland conducted MKULTRA Subproject 8.

VSH-UVM research documents and the book, The Vermont Story written by VSH psychiatrists include the names of CIA-contracted researchers and LSD researchers who participated in, influenced and acted in the capacity of consultants for VSH-UVM research, including:

Dr. Robert W. Hyde, Dr. Richard York, Dr. John Bockoven, Dr. Hans. Peter LaQueur, Dr. Harold Pfautz, John Gittinger, Dr. Milton Greenblatt, Herman Denber, Albert DiMascio, Paul Huston, Harry Solomon, Jordon Scher, John Cumming, D.J. Levinson, R.H. Williams, Harry Freeman, David Landy, Eric Wittkower, Philip Slater and Gregory Bateson.

Additionally, Dr. Thomas Chiu, who was employed by UVM in 1971, was a member of the CIA front, Transcultural Psychiatry. Dr. George Brooks and Dr. Thomas Boag conducted research using VSH child patients and sent the results of the PAS directly to John Gittinger at CIA headquarters. Gittinger's Psychological Assessment Associates behavioral research programs funded researchers through the Human Ecology Fund. Robert Hyde was a recipient of Human Ecology monies as well as other funding.

In the book, A Mind For Murder by Alston Chase, written about Unabomber Ted Kaczynski, Chase notes that Kaczynski participated in mind control experiments at Harvard, conducted by Henry Murray. Murray enlisted Hyde in order to obtain LSD that was used during the covert mind control experiments. Kaczynski cited the abusive experiments as a factor in his hatred of psychologists and psychiatrists. One of Kaczynski's intended targets in the bombings was Michigan psychologist, J.V. McConnell. Murray has been identified as conducting CIA experiments.

Gregory Bateson is widely written about in relationship to LSD. Harold Abramson, a close friend of Bateson, was a CIA researcher and MKULTRA contractor, and he conducted research with Hyde. Bateson is one of the featured participants in the LSD Conferences for the Macy Foundation. Bateson is cited multiple times in VSH-UVM research project documents.

Declassified CIA documents include membership lists in CIA front groups. Members listed in a 1962 Society for Biological Psychiatry report include:

H. Peter LaQueur, Jordon Scher, Eugene Ziskind, George N. Thompson, Huston Smith, Walter Houston Clark, and Jack Mendelson.

A 1964 Society for Biological Psychiatry membership list includes:

H. Peter LaQueur, Paul Hoch, Ewen Cameron, Max Rinkel, Lauretta Bender, Leo Alexander, Milton Greenblatt, Humphrey Osmond, Hudson Hoagland, Herman Denber, Joseph Wortis and Henry Murray.

Many of those listed in the Society for Biological Psychiatry also held membership in Manfred Sakel, including LaQueur, Rinkel, and Denber,

In a 1963 declassified CIA document, an invitation list for a M.I.T. conference on LSD shows the names of those invited to attend:

Huston Smith, Max Rinkel, Harry Freeman, Norman Gottwald, Hudson Hoagland, Erich Lindeman, Gerald Klerman, and Henry Murray.

CIA research sites and agencies that have been identified in Senate Reports, declassified CIA documents and by noted authors include:

Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Butler, McGill, Allan Memorial Institute, Georgetown Hospital, Cornell, Stanford, Harvard, Kentucky University, University of Maryland, Johns Hopkins, University of Indiana, M.I.T., Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri, Queens College, Penn State, Lexington, American Psychological Association, American Psychiatric Association, School of Aviation Medicine, Air Force, Army, Navy, Department of Energy, Department of Defense, University of Denver, University of Illinois, Iowa State Hospital, Iona State Hospital (Michigan), University of Minnesota, Columbia, Emory University, Indiana University, Bordentown (New Jersey), Wisconsin University, University of Oklahoma, NIH, NIMH, USPHS, FDA, Naval Research, Syracuse, N.Y., Society For Biological Psychiatry, Manfred Sakel, Transcultural Psychiatry, Russell Sage Foundation, Group For the Advancement of Psychiatry, Andover-Newton Theological School, Clark University, Brown University, Brandeis University, Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, Manhattan State Hospital, Rutland Heights Hospital, University of Rochester, Rockefeller Foundation, Massachusetts General Hospital, Medfield State Hospital, UCLA, American Association for the Advancement of Science Missouri Institute of Psychiatry, Human Ecology Fund, Josiah P. Macy Jr. Foundation, and the Geschickter Foundation.

VSH staff researchers presented papers at numerous conferences and at hospitals across the country and published their research in noted journals. VSH-UVM research project documents list many of these presentations and publications.

Carl Rodgers conducted CIA research, funded through Human Ecology at the University of Wisconsin. He was cleared at TOP SECRET as the contractor for MKULTRA Subproject 97.

In the USPHS VSH-UVM research project, “Psychomotility, Drugs and Schizophrenia,” the following are listed:

George Brooks, Albert DiMascio, “Free Association to a Fantasized Psychotherapist,” Arch. G. Psych. 1961.

Heinz Lehmann, and R.B. Malmo were on staff at the Allan Memorial Institute at McGill University and conducted CIA-funded depatterning research under Dr. Ewen Cameron. Dr. Thomas Boag, UVM Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry in 1961, was Ewen Cameron’s Assistant Director at Allan Memorial prior to his position at UVM. The VSH-UVM research project noted here ran from 1958 - 1962. This places two of Ewen Cameron's research partners as referenced sources in VSH-UVM projects. Boag, who went on to conduct VSH-UVM research, sent PAS results to John Gittinger.

Erwin Goffman conducted CIA research at the University of Pennsylvania and is cited in VSH-UVM Research Special Project #180 for a 1958 symposium held at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research.

Paul Huston, frequently cited in the VSH-UVM research project documents, conducted CIA research at Iowa Psychopathic Hospital, Worcester State Hospital, and Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology and he was Chairman of the NIMH Training Commission.

Paul Hoch conducted extensive hallucinogen research at N.Y. State Psychiatric Institute, and Manhattan State Hospital. Hoch worked under contract for the Army Chemical Corp. Hoch was N.Y. Commissioner of Mental Hygiene and conducted research at Columbia University. Hoch was the Editor of the American Journal of Psychiatry and the Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease.

Paul Lemkau conducted CIA research at Johns Hopkins as well as for the Army and NIMH.

Richard York worked out of Psychological Assessment Associates in Washington, DC with John Gittinger. York also conducted research with Hyde.

Harry Solomon conducted extensive CIA research including LSD experiments with Hyde.

Harry Freeman was Director of Research at Medfield State Hospital.

Norman Gottwald conducted research while at Andover-Newton, an identified CIA site.

Hudson Hoagland conducted extensive CIA research with Hyde, including MKULTRA Subproject 8 at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology.

Max Rinkel conducted extensive CIA research including LSD research at Boston Psychopathic Hospital. Rinkel arranged to obtain one of the first shipments of LSD for Boston Psychopathic where Hyde was the very first to take the hallucinogen. Rinkel conducted extensive research with Hyde.

Gerald Klerman conducted research at and was Assistant Clinical Director at Boston Psychopathic Hospital in 1963.

Jordon Scher conducted research at Boston Psychopathic Hospital

Erich Lindeman conducted research at Mass General and is named in the Senate report on CIA drug and mind control programs. Lindeman was Chief of Psychiatric Services at Massachusetts General Hospital and Professor of Psychiatry at Harvard Medical School in 1963.

Herman Denber conducted extensive LSD and mescaline experiments. Denber is listed as a member of CIA front groups and is a frequently cited research partner of George Brooks.

Albert DiMascio conducted extensive LSD and mescaline experiments and was a frequent research partner of Brooks.

Also cited in the VSH-UVM project were:

R. Trumbill, C.H. Maag, "Annotated Bibliography and Critical Review of Drugs and Performance", Office of Naval Research, Department of the Navy, 1958 ONR report-ACR-29. 1958.

Paul Huston, M. Singer, "Effect of Sodium Amytal and Amphetamine Sulfate on Mental Set in Schizophrenia", Arch. Neurlo. Psychi. 1945.

I looked at the Huston, M. Singer citation in the VSH-UVM research project documents with interest. I wondered if M. Singer was Margaret Singer. Margaret Singer, according to H.P. Albarelli, was a staff psychologist at Walter Reed Army Institute in 1953. Singer came in contact with Albert Biderman and she testified at the 1976 trial of Patty Hearst. Also testifying in defense of Hearst were Louis Jolyon West (cleared at TOP SECRET as a contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 43), Martin Orne (cleared at TOP SECRET as a contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 84), and Robert Lifton. Both Lifton and Singer interviewed US Korean War pilots who had been captured by the North Koreans and been coerced into making confessions of germ warfare. Robert J. Lifton authored books on "thought reform," which is a synonym for mind control.

Albert Biderman was funded by CIA and Human Ecology and he assisted John Gittinger, Harold Wolff and Lawrence Hinkle in organizing the Human Ecology Fund.

In 2001, I was surprised to learn that a co-author of Singer's and a psychologist noted in books on CIA mind control, Richard Ofshe, was an expert witness in a Vermont trial where coercion was alleged. I immediately recognized Ofshe's name, although I doubt that too many other Vermonter's did.

I include the strong possibility that the M. Singer who is cited with Huston in the VSH-UVM research project documents, is Margaret Singer. It's noteworthy that VSH-UVM research project documents cite Walter Reed Army Institute in the Special Project #180 citations.

Dr. Robert W. Hyde's research in LSD included several researchers noted in VSH-UVM research project documents:

Robert Hyde, Max Rinkel, H.J. DeShon, Harry Solomon, " Experimental Schizophrenia-like Symptoms," American Journal Psychiatry, 1952.

Robert Hyde, Max Rinkel, Harry Solomon, "Experimental Psychiatry III. A Chemical Concept of Psychosis," Diseases of Nervous System, 1954.

Additional studies by other researchers noted in VSH-UVM research project documents include:

Robert Hyde, Milton Greenblatt, David Landy, John Bockoven, "Rehabilitation of Mentally Ill, Impact of a Project upon a Hospital," American Journal of Psychiatry, 1958.

It is clear when reading the contents of the VSH-UVM research documents that the research personnel involved in the experiments at VSH were directly involved in and aware of known CIA groups and activities. Almost every site VSH psychiatrists presented their research papers at was a known CIA-funded research site. The authors cited in the VSH-UVM research project documents are overwhelmingly identified as CIA researchers. VSH researchers, Brooks, Deane and others were very clearly presenting the results of their CIA-funded research to their fellow CIA-funded researchers. VSH psychiatrists were extensively published in medical journals edited by CIA researchers.

The direct connection of VSH-UVM to the CIA drug and mind control programs is, by the sheer volume of the connections, simply astonishing. Despite the 1977 Senate hearings on CIA drug and mind control programs, where the "facts" about the covert research supposedly came to light, Vermont's massive role in the CIA research remained and remains covered up.

A close examination of VSH-UVM research project documents shows that not only did VSH-UVM conduct research using unwitting human subjects, but that their research associates were overwhelmingly CIA-connected researchers. The out-of-state sites where VSH psychiatrists attended conferences, (frequently sponsored by agencies and groups that were funding CIA research) were almost exclusively sites where CIA research was being conducted. VSH research was published frequently by medical journals whose editors were conducting CIA research and the extensive number of CIA researchers cited in VSH-UVM research project documents and in the book, The Vermont Story leads to a disturbing conclusion.

VSH-UVM research conducted at VSH over a twenty-year period when CIA monies, funneled through cover front groups and federal agencies that admitted wittingly funding CIA experiments, appears to have been funded by CIA, conducted by CIA and published by CIA researchers. Before the influx of CIA funds, VSH was literally falling down. When CIA halted MKULTRA, VSH stopped conducting active patient research and the hospital began a slow death. The only reason VSH "thrived" during the 1950's, 1960's and early 1970's was directly because of the CIA.

Why was VSH-UVM shielded during the 1977 Senate hearings? Why was Vermont's role in the CIA drug and mind control programs kept covered up? Why was Vermont's role so much more important to keep covered up than was Harvard, McGill, Johns Hopkins, Cornell, Brown University, Columbia University or Stanford? What happened in VSH-UVM that requires a decades-long cover-up by state and federal officials, and state and federal agencies?

How is it possible, given the huge volume of direct connections to CIA, that Vermont Governors during the 50's, 60's and early 70's were not aware of the CIA experiments? How is it possible that Vermont's Legislature was not aware? How is it possible that the 1977 Senate

Select Committee on Intelligence didn't know about Vermont's massive role in the CIA programs? In my opinion, it isn't possible and if they knew about it, they turned their backs on every single mental patient who was used and abused in the VSH-UVM research and they continue to turn their backs, even today.

I believe the primary reason that the Vermont CIA experiments remain covered up is because almost 3000 VSH patients died during the research. The actual number of deaths is not known. I believe that VSH-UVM conducted terminal experiments for CIA and that this is the reason for the cover-up and the reason why I have been harassed for investigating the CIA role in Vermont.

What did Vermont look like in the early 1960's?

1960: Commissioner of Mental Health, Rupert Chittuck

1960: Superintendent of the Vermont State Hospital, Rupert Chittuck

1960: Assistant Superintendent VSH, H. Peter LaQueur

1960: President of American Psychological Association, George Albee

1960: Governor of Vermont, Robert Stafford

1960: VSH patient deaths, 115

1961: Chairman UVM Department Psychiatry, Thomas Boag.

> In 1960, Boag was Assistant to Director Ewen Cameron at the Allan Memorial Institute

1961: VSH patient deaths, 124

1961-63: President of the American Psychiatric Association, Vermonter, Walter Barton

1962: Vermont Governor, F. Ray Keyser Jr.

1962: Assistant Superintendent VSH, H. Peter LaQueur, member Society for Biological Psychiatry and Manfred Sakel

1962: VSH patient deaths: 116

Author Alston Chase in his book, Mind For Murder, explains how CIA used universities, professors, psychiatrists, psychologists and federal funding agencies to cover the drug and mind control experiments conducted on unwitting American citizens:

"CIA had a wide range of associations with universities, colleges, research groups, think tanks, technical schools, secretarial schools and even high schools throughout the country and abroad. The relationships defy simple description."

"Hundreds of college professors had been given special clearances by the Agency's Office of Security to perform a wide variety of tasks for different CIA components…CIA employed individual professors and at times the entire university departments or research institutes for its research and development projects."

"Psychologists within this network…supported secret research with their private funds (Ford, Rockefeller, Russell Sage foundations), thus insuring that this research would remain "off budget" and would never be exposed to congressional oversight."

Chase explains how CIA:

"…relied on federal funding agencies such as the National Institute of Mental Health and the National Science Foundation to support favored projects…it made grants through entirely bogus foundations set up for this purpose."

"The CIA probably used at least 50 foundations in an involved method of funneling funds to certain organizations. Under a method of transfer known as "triple pass," the usual procedure was for CIA to convey funds to "dummy" foundations it had established to act as fronts for its activities. The "dummy" foundations then made grants to legitimate foundations. These foundations, which also handled other funds, then made grants to certain CIA-designated organizations, using the funds from the "dummy" foundations."

The VSH-UVM research project documents show that within the scope of Special Projects #180, there were seven or eight projects within the same grant. For the most part, seven of the eight projects were bland and involved statistical information. It was the eighth project that showed the use of unwitting subjects and experimental drugs.

I suspect that VSH-UVM used "cover projects" such as the ones described above.

My fifteen-year investigation into CIA drug and mind control programs in VSH-UVM began with the name of Dr. Robert W. Hyde in my medical records and the 1961 VSH book, The Vermont Story, by Rupert Chittuck, George Brooks, William Deane and Francis Irons.

William Deane graduated from Andover-Newton Theological School in 1944 and obtained his Ph.D. from Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. Both institutions were identified as CIA sites. George Brooks completed a six-month post-graduate course at Metropolitan State Hospital in Waltham, Massachusetts, a CIA site. Brooks worked out of the Army General Dispensary in New York City and was stationed during 1944-45 at Nichols General Hospital in Louisville, Kentucky.

H.P.Albarelli writes in his book, A Terrible Mistake: The Murder of Frank Olson and the CIA's Secret Cold War Experiments, that Dr. Amedeo Marrazzi, Director of the Clinical Research Division, Army Chemical and Biological Corps, conducted CIA-funded research at the St. Louis State Hospital and the Missouri Institute of Psychiatry, part of the State Hospital, and at the University of Minnesota.

Albarelli writes that the Rockland State Hospital was conducting CIA-Army experiments and that:

"Rockland State Hospital was a notoriously cruel facility that had been shockingly but accurately portrayed in the 1948 award-winning film The Snake Pit, starring Olivia de Havilland. Dr. Paul Hoch decided that Rockland needed a public relations "overhaul.""

Concerning testimony given in 1975 by former employees of Marrazzi and the Missouri Institute, Albarelli writes, "Former employees of the Institute testified in 1975 that the experiments used patients who were homeless and had no relatives in the area."

Marrazzi's criterion for choosing experimental subjects sounds familiar. VSH-UVM's criteria, as stated in their research project documents, were similar.

In VSH-UVM research project documents, USPHS NIMH, MH-01076 and USPHS No. 1-R11-MH-01076, it is stated that:

"We have been interested in the successful use of (programmed instruction) with emotionally disturbed children at Rockland State Hospital under the supervision of Dr. Gordon Barclay…Dr. Barclay reports indicate we should add this."

The VSH-UVM research relationship with Rockland State Hospital included sending biographical and clinical patient updates using the Rockland Project computer data system. This system included sending the PAS of children at VSH directly to John Gittinger at CIA headquarters in Washington, DC. The Rockland Project is currently a subject about which state and federal officials, the federal funding agencies that supplied the monies to the project, VSH, UVM and Rockland State Hospital all share a collective amnesia.

SIMILARITIES BETWEEN VERMONT DOCUMENTS AND THE CIA-LSD LITERATURE

As part of my investigation, I looked for similarities in the vocabulary, language and attitudes between VSH-UVM documents and published books and papers about LSD. I found many. Specifically, I cross-referenced passages from The Vermont Story with publications about LSD. The results were startling:

From the book Acid Dreams, by Martin Lee and Bruce Shlain:

"Heisenberg's uncertainty principle stated that the observer influenced the movement of particles observed. LSD research suggests the uncertainty principle was operative in psychology as well, in that the results were conditioned by the investigator's preconceptions."

From the book, The Vermont Story, by Chittuck, et al:

"Our approach is also highly progressive and is in the advanced tradition of the natural sciences as reflected by Neils Bohrs and the Heisenberg principle of interdetermanency, (the uncertainty principle)."

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"Our approach is highly progressive and is in the advanced tradition of the natural sciences as reflected by Neils Bohrs and the Heisenberg principle…the uncertainty principle."

From the book, Acid Dreams:

"State of consciousness (on LSD) psychedelic therapy familiarity could only be obtained by taking the drug…often times those who underwent psychedelic therapy…reported a whole sale revamping of value systems."

From the book, The Vermont Story:

"In some cases this has meant a frank avowal of values…we have asked, "How did I influence this result?"

From the book Acid Dreams:

"During the apotheosis of the LSD high self concept may be diminished to the point of depersonalization…LSD apprehension, fear mounting to panic, fear of death and feelings of depersonalization."

From the book, The Vermont Story:

"The impending dissolution of the personality which accompanies the experience of fragmentation of the ego is accompanied by a deep seated sense of panic or overwhelming fear."

From the book, Forgotten Truth by Huston Smith:

"Death, rebirth…concerned with things other than self…identify with the suffering of others,"

From the book, The Search For the Manchurian Candidate by John Marks:

"I didn't want to leave it."

From the book, The Vermont Story, VSH patient quotes:

"I didn't understand how people felt before;" " I didn't want to go through it again but I wouldn't want to give it up;" " I became more sympathetic toward people."

From the book, Acid Dreams:

"LSD trip hallucinations…fear mounting to panic…intense irritability, suspiciousness, perplexity…feelings of depersonalization…floating in and out of space…between this life and the next."

From the book, The Vermont Story:

"Patients seemed confused and had some impairment or distortion of recent or remote memory…they were suspicious, temperamental, unpredictable…they had a very constricted sense of time, space and other people."

From the book The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy by Harold Abramson, quote from a patient on LSD:

"I have died and now I have been reborn."

From The Vermont Story: Quotes of patients:

"I woke up." " I was risen;" " I came alive again."

VSH doctors wrote in The Vermont Story:

"Patients gave detailed descriptions of the strange, unusual and bizarre feelings…hard to explain…it was like being in a nightmare all day and all night, all of the time…nothing seemed real to me…I didn't realize how strange things seemed…I don't have words."

VSH doctors went on to say:

"It frightened patients to talk about it…that it arouses echoes in them of the horror and panic experienced at the time…patients expressed relief from those feelings and said it was a "horrible experience.""

VSH summed it up by saying:

"It seems to us that this information supports the view that something really has happened in the direction of recovery. Some change has taken place in their psychic functioning."

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 66 notes that in LSD research:

"…different observers use different methods of assessment closely related to the observers' values."

The book Acid Dreams by Martin Lee explains how LSD researchers' values were influenced after experimenting with LSD:

"State of consciousness on LSD psychedelic therapy, to succeed had to be well acquainted with the psychedelic terrain…this familiarity could only be obtained by taking the drug…often times those who underwent psychedelic therapy…reported a wholesale revamping of value systems."

From UVM-VSH Special Project# 180:

"In some case this had meant a frank avowal of values…How did I influence this result? What values did I hold and how did they operate to produce that which has been obtained?"

Hyde's CIA-LSD MKULTRA Subproject 8:

"Little is known of how adequately or how closely therapist's self-expectations about their roles as therapists are met in the actual therapeutic interview."

From Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 8 documents:

"…social interaction after LSD…sociological and social psychological measurements such as quality-quantity of verbal production in different structured social situations such as problem solving in group discussion and occupational task situations."

Hyde writes that the subject's ability to describe the subjective experience during LSD has been limited to words like " weird," "strange," etc. and that it was important to get better descriptions of the experience.

Several noteworthy books written about LSD by authors Martin Lee, John Marks, Huston Smith and Harold Abramson contain descriptions by subjects under the influence of LSD. These descriptions include:

"Concern with things other than self…death, rebirth… identify with the suffering of others…I have died and been reborn…I didn't want to leave it…"

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180, quotes by patients include:

"I didn't understand how people felt before…I didn't want to go through it again but I wouldn't want to give it up…I woke up…I came to… I was risen…I came alive again…It's hard to explain. It was something like being in a nightmare…nothing seemed real to me." " Patients were able to indicate that they had a very strange or unusual experience…" "I didn't realize how strange things seemed… It's very hard to explain… I don't have words for it."

Statements by UVM-VSH doctors include:

"Many stated spontaneously that it frightened them to talk about it, that it aroused echoes in them of horror and panic they experienced at the time. They expressed a great relief from those feelings…I have so much more sympathy for others…The concern and feelings which patients show for each other after release seems to validate such statements…49% of patients said the drugs…had been an important factor in their recovery."

"The question was asked, "Was there a turning point when things started to clear up for you?" Eighty-two percent named a specific incident or a specific day…when things cleared up for them. Fifty percent said it was related to…drugs."

From Hyde's CIA MKULTRA Subproject 66, 1957-1958:

"Prospectus - 1. Prediction of subject's reaction to drugs in various situations. 2. Placing different personalities in different structured situations. 3. Making large groups available to Externalizer by using the total culture of the hospital. 4. Making solitude available to the Internalizer. 5. Force isolation on subject. 6. Force group participation."

The references to "Externalizer" and "Internalizer" are direct links to John Gittinger's Personality Assessment System (PAS). Gittinger system used the terms "Externalizer" and "Internalizer" in his PAS as a way to calculate whether the subject was more introverted or more extroverted. Hyde used Gittinger's PAS extensively in his LSD research and UVM-VSH used Gittinger's PAS beginning in 1958.

There is little doubt that VSH patients were subjected to LSD, based on the content of the UVM-VSH documents and based on the fact that UVM was experimenting with LSD and Mescaline, according to Albarelli. UVM-VSH documents note numerous times that occupational therapy, industrial therapy, and a "re-education in social values" were prominent in the research. Hyde's CIA documents repeatedly refer to his LSD experiments for CIA and the interest in "social situations" and "the social attributes of the subject…social interaction and social adjustment."

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 10 notes include a statement that:

"…interpersonal interactions defining social personality…are observed in relationship to LSD as well as his interest in…observing individual's reactions to specified social situations."

From The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy by MKULTRA contractor, Harold Abramson:

"Studying the social interactions of individuals under drugs can help in the identification of properties of social systems. We can see a great usefulness in drugs like LSD and others in creating a kind of experimental social science."

UVM-VSH 1962 project, RD-1062-P-M references "social integration," the "cultural personality configuration," the "re-socialization of patients and the social functioning" of patients. This research project is noted to have begun in 1955. This particular project initially carried the designation in May, 1962 of NACVR but was changed in June, 1962 to RD-1062-P-M. VR was likely Vocational Rehabilitation. The "N" and the" AC" are interesting in their implications for the funding source for this project.

The Navy used the designation letter N in its research. The Army Chemical Corps used the designation AC. Were the Navy and the Army funding UVM-VSH research in 1962?

Dr. Harris Isbell, a prominent CIA-LSD researcher, was cleared at TOP SECRET as a contractor on MKULTRA Subproject 73. He conducted his research under the Office of Naval Research (ONR) in 1962; according to H.P. Albarelli Jr., "for apparent security reasons…the ONR funding ended and was picked up by another CIA front."

Hyde's research publications during this time frame include:

"The Rehabilitation of the Mentally Ill: Impact of a Project upon the Hospital Culture," Coauthors on this 1968 paper were Hyde, Greenblatt, Bockoven and Landy.

"The Effects of LSD on Group Interaction," Hyde, Slater, Morimoto, 1963. "Patient Government: A New Form of Therapy," Hyde and Solomon, 1951.

"Experimental Schizophrenia-like Symptoms," Hyde, Rinkel, DeShon and Solomon, 1952.

Bellak notes in his 1958 book, Schizophrenia: A Review of the Syndrome that:

"Hyde and Solomon at Boston Psychopathic Hospital discuss a group therapy project…the program took the form of patient government which permitted the patients to participate in hospital administration and contribute to their own personal care and comfort… they developed a sense of personal responsibility which contributed to their own recovery and feelings of freedom and a desire to be of service to others…however in order for such a program to be effective, the hospital administration must be ready to democratically share authority."

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"It is difficult to see how the full therapeutic potential can be mustered unless administration permits a large amount of autononomous thinking and acting on the part of the staff…we can discuss the effective use of ancillary personnel from a somewhat different perspective which calls attention to the essential differences between a total institution and the democratic society. The gap between the culture in a total institution and a democratic society can only be filled by changes in the total institution or democratic society."

"Group activities are designed to encourage group cooperation… they are graded to direct the interests of patients first toward each other, then toward the entire hospital and finally, the community…we feel fortunate to have returned to the refreshing positivism of moral treatment."

"Are there marked differences between the type of democratization of the mental hospital represented by our policy of graduation and piece-meal assumption of responsibilities by patient communities and the more and less as patients…"

"A patient government which does not have real power is not a government."

UVM-VSH documents refer to the beginning of their research efforts in 1955 with "a reorganization of the present project in 1957."

Noted in the bibliography of the project:

John Bockoven, “Moral Treatment in American Psychiatry,” 1956.

Also noted:

“Moral Treatment and the Mental Hospital,” Lucy Ozarin, 1954. Lucy Ozarin was a research partner of Robert Hyde, as was Bockoven.

It would appear that UVM-VSH were utilizing Hyde’s CIA playbook over and over again. UVM-VSH adopted the same methods and procedures being employed by Hyde and other CIA researchers like Bockoven, Greenblatt, Solomon and Rinkel.

From Hyde’s MKULTRA Subproject 8:

“It is the responsibility of the examiner to successfully be an annoyer until the subject can no longer tolerate the frustration experience. Since this is a motor task, discharge of tension through over activity could be observed.”

From UVM-VSH Psychomotility, Drugs and Schizophrenic Rehabilitation:

“Positive reinforcement tends to raise the level of performance for simple motor tasks but is less effective for more complex tasks.”

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

“DiMascio and Rinkel have applied a battery of psychomotor tests as part of an effort to predict the effectiveness of psychopharmologic agents.”

From Hyde’s MKULTRA Subproject 10 Prospectus:

“In the past three years of research with the drug LSD-25, we have developed reliable methods of analyzing social situations and interactions. Our progress in assessing personality types is useful in diagnosis and prediction. These methods are based on a multi-discipline assessment of personality in dynamic social adjustment under normal circumstances and under stress, i.e. drug effect, irrespective of the attributes of any specific drug.”

“The briefest phrase to characterize our main area of study is “social personality.” A laboratory of experimental social psychiatry has been established in such a way that various types of personality and many situations may be subjected to critical study. For example, its methods can be applied to any specific problem such as the effects of LSD or other drugs like alcohol, on the improvement of interpersonal relations.”

“Trying out the utility of these tests and our special interview and questionnaire methods developed in the course of our studies for predicting specifiable change in social behavior following the ingestion of various drugs, particularly LSD and alcohol.”

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

“Indeed most of the methods of social science have been utilized… questionnaires and schedules have been administered to patients and formal interviews with patients and staff have been frequent.”

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

“One of the implicit moral imperatives of the project has been to fit the method to the situation. If sometimes the method seemed to lead us to the outer peripheries of scientific respectability, as normally defined, we have not been alarmed.”

“Participant observation…becomes a method by which we bridge the gap between speculation and observed fact is made and the method by which an observed fact can be speculated upon and further developed… findings resulting from participant observation may be expressed qualitatively rather than quantitatively but that the demands on the observer are very great in the sense that he is called upon to enter the social field in the fullest possible way, taking into account of all that goes on while giving himself to the ensuing activities in a natural and spontaneous fashion.”

From The Use of LSD In Psychotherapy:

“The problem is complicated because we are not studying the drug itself, but, rather, a partnership of the therapist and the assistant, both working simultaneously, the drug in this case, being the assistant. Ordinarily, the interaction of the therapist with the drug itself is only modified by a subtle skepticism or a tempered enthusiasm for a new compound. With LSD, a novel situation obtains, because both the conscious and the unconscious attitudes of the therapist and patient as well as the community as a whole, toward the production of a psychotic process in the patient as part of therapy, may and usually do contaminate the therapeutic process in unusual ways. The therapist himself suffers more than the usual amount of scrutiny.”

From Acid Dreams:

“Scientific objectivity - Heisenberg’s uncertainty principle stated that the observer influenced movement of particles observed. LSD research suggested that the uncertainty principle was operative in psychology…in that the results were conditioned by the investigator’s preconceptions…"

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"The usual canons of scientific objectivity necessary to the use of scientific methodology have to be reconsidered. We have approached each situation with both a research and therapy orientation. In some cases this has meant a frank avowal of values. In other cases we have not been aware of what values we did hold but in making a retrospective analysis of a situation we have asked, "How did I influence this result? What values did I hold and how did these operate to produce that which was obtained?" In either case we have recognized the existence of a value system and rather than attempting to rid ourselves of it, we have attempted to analyze it…our approach is also highly progressive and is in the advanced tradition of the natural sciences as reflected by Neils Bohrs and the Heisenberg principle… the uncertainty principle."

Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 10 notes an interest in:

"…interpersonal interactions of subjects…and defining social personalities…"

From Hyde's MKULTRA Subproject 66 notes, Hyde's research interests included:

"training non-professional observers," "environmental events and agents…and predicting reactions to specified social situations in subject's environment."

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"Non-medical staff can have considerable latitude in dealing with patients…the latitude should be so great as to include autonomy in all areas other than the medical phase of patient care…this kind of freedom aids the effective emergence of therapeutic trends and makes realistic the attempt to satisfy needs of the familial order…it is difficult to see how the full therapeutic potential can be mustered unless administration permits a large amount of autonomous thinking and acting on the part of the staff…"

From The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy: Gregory Bateson is quoted as saying:

" My interest in LSD began when Dr. Abramson gave me LSD two years ago…One of my interests is in something which I call "schizophrenia" in particular the formal patterns, the formal characteristics of experience of members of families containing schizophrenics. We have been trying to relate the characteristic distortions of schizophrenic behavior to formal characteristics of experience within these families, as a function of how these families are organized. Whether or not these two approaches, experiences with the drug and experiences with families are in any way…related"

The bibliography of UVM-VSH research project RD-1062-P-M contains the citation, Gregory Bateson, "Group Dynamics of Schizophrenia," 1960.

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"In order to establish the fact that patients do have therapeutic relationships with each other we need to know if friendships actually developed among patients. In this case the observational method was implemented by the use of sociometrics, quantitative analysis of who speaks to whom and who sat next to whom at meetings…a checklist was filled out by attendants on ward interaction…Indeed most of the methods of social science have been utilized…questionnaires and formal interviews with patients and staff have been frequent."

From UVM-VSH RD-1062-P-M:

"Do successful patients solve problems of the home while hospitalized by either establishing new and positive relationships with family members or by rejecting or being rejected by them? We are also concerned with the question of changes in family relationships between patients and families and if such changes or their absence associate with post hospital success."

"Bateson has described the double bind family pattern of the schizophrenic and has in fact suggested that schizophrenia is a disease of communication which most affects the weakest member of the family but is at the same time pervasive in all family transactions."

From The Use of LSD in Psychotherapy:

Sandison: "The hospital environment is a very complex thing, but it as a whole, may determine success or failure."

Eisner: "By environment I understand you mean the hospital in general? Do you also mean, specifically, the person or persons who are with the individual under treatment…whether or not the therapist has had much experience with LSD; what the expectations of the therapist are? Do you call this environment?"

Sandison: "Include the environment. The particular environment I was thinking about was the whole administrative, structural hospital.

Whether LSD will be given individually or in a group, in what kind of room, whether the data will be recorded…these are administrative aspects."

Whittlesey: "Can you describe the setting a bit?"

Malitz: "Yes. These are hospitalized patients in a psychiatric hospital on a ward devoted exclusively to psychiatric research techniques."

Bateson: "Do these techniques include lobotomy?"

Malitz: "Yes."

Bateson: "This is part of the situation then, let's not forget it."

Malitz: "Not all of them, just some of them."

Murphy: "No, it's part of the environment."

Bateson: "Yes, an essential part of the environment in which the experiment (LSD) was conducted."

John Marks writes about Hyde's research group that, "The quality of a person's reaction (LSD) was determined by the person's basic personality structure or SET and the environment (SETTING) in which the subject took LSD."

From Acid Dreams:

"Practitioners of LSD therapy were cognizant of the complex interaction between the SET and the SETTING."

From UVM-VSH Special Project #180:

"A new type of data…research-researcher is an integral part of how things turn out, which is on an order best described as a penetration of the ethos rather than as a description or an analysis of behavior from a position apart…Because the researcher appreciates the role he plays in the social situation he becomes aware of the subjects of research in a different way. Patients become not merely people to be studied but they become participants in the research. Their statements about how they feel, what schizophrenia is like, what reactions they produce in the researcher, what they say by way of suggestions for programming and so on, are all taken seriously and given a validity on par with any other information a researcher might obtain through his own intellectual and methodological efforts."

From Hyde's CIA MKULTRA Subproject 66:

"Training of non-professional observers…to determine observations employed to predict reactions to situations other than the administration of LSD…Such situations include the rehabilitation of hospitalized patients (mental)."

The similarities between the LSD literature and the VSH-UVM documents confirm that VSH researchers were familiar with the LSD literature, and must have used LSD on unwitting patients at VSH, including myself.

Mrs. George Wetmore
38 Maple Street
Brandon, Vermont

Dear Mrs. Wetmore:

I am sorry for the long delay in answering your letter of November 29 regarding your daughter, Karen, who is at the Vermont State Hospital. As you are aware, many different episodes have occurred in the management of Karen's case since last October. This problem has been thoroughly investigated and has been discussed frequently by Dr. Curlin, Dr. Hyde, Dr. Laqueur, Dr. Havas, and Dr. Treial.

All the aspects of the case have been thoroughly investigated by the Department. The particular time that you mention in your letter was especially difficult and there are very detailed notes from that period. As long as there was a suspicion that Karen had hepatitis, it was necessary to try to prevent her from infecting others. Her behavior was very difficult and at times she represented a real danger to herself or others. She was never, of course, left for three days and nights unattended in a separate room as all patients are taken out at frequent intervals for care and exercise and an opportunity to use the toilet.

I do hope that if we can all work together, we will eventually be able to help Karen out of this very distressing situation so that she may go and make a life for herself.

Very truly yours,

Jonathan P. A. Leopold, M.D.,

This is a 19-year-old girl with episodes of violent behavior, depression, and a question of temporal lobe seizures. The present record was a length record with Metrazol activation.

EEG Description: In the resting state this record consisted predominantly of low voltage fast, but occasional irregular alpha activity at 8-10 Hz was x discernible as in previous recordings. This patient was extremely anxious and had frequent intermittent muscle artifact due to gritting of the jaws, movements or talking.

An intravenous injection was started of 5 % dextrose in water. Metrazol was slowly injected according to a modification of the method of Torres. one half CC. (50 mg.) of metriazol was given approximately every 30 seconds (on occasion, 45 seconds elapsed) with intravenous Valium add phenobarbital on hand with for immediate injection. Following approximately 10-12 cc. of Metrazol (a total of 1,000 to 1200 mg.), some slight change in the record occurred in the direction of slowing with theta activity becoming more prominent, particularly in central regions. The patient had mounting apprehension and following a total of 1400 mg. of Metrazol she became upset with crying. The injections were continued during which there occurred increasing amounts of muscle artifact with the patient becoming more and more upset and more prominent low voltage. to moderate voltage fast activity in all head regions with interposed muscle artifact. Following 17 cc. of Metrazol (1700 mg.) superimposed on the muscle artifact there did occur a high voltage, irregular slow and sharp wave which could have been artifactual or a real discharge. At that point 2.5 mg. of Valium was given intravenously. The record continued to be dominated mostly by muscle artifact, however, one minute later during a relatively xxxxx quiet period, the Metrazol injection was continued up to a total of 1800 mg. It that time the record became uninterpretable because of diffuse muscle artifact. The patient was obviously very clinically upset, however, no epileptiform discharges were seen. 200 mg. of phenobarb were injected IV shortly thereafter.

Immediately following the Metrazol injection the patient was questioned in her emotionally upset state regarding feelings and sensations. My notes indicated that she said the following: "I never felt this way before". "You gave me the medicine and it made me do this. My legs feel all funny. I am seeing different people in different colors. My back aches. I never felt this way before. You mad me do it. (Cough). It made me cough. I am so sick inside; not mentally, but physically. My head hurts, my back hurts, I have to cough. I am seeing things that arent there. My ears are ringing." The patient rapdily quieted down following the IV administration of phenbbarbital.

EEG Interpretation: This patient exhibited an extremely high tolerance to Metrazol, 1800 mg. did not precipitate any discharges. This fact may well be due to the phenobarb which she had recently been on and, indeed, 100 mg. of phenobarbital was given in the early morning on which this record was run. No physical signs of seizure activity were observed during or immediately after the injection. The patient's subjective sensations are recorded above and at the time seemed to represent more anxiety than the hallucinations of seizure activity. In any event, no EEG abnormality was seen concommittant with these sensations, although the record was quite artifactual because of muscle potentials during that time. In conclusion, the Metrazol activation faixls to activate a temporal lobe discharge, and suggests a very high threshold to Metrazol, possibly related to previous medication:

PSYCHOLOGICAL REPORT (CON'T.)

THE RORSCHACH RESULTS SUPPORT THE PICTURE GIVEN ABOVE OF AN INDIVIDUAL WHO IS STRONGLY INTROVERSIVE RATHER THAN EXTRATENSIVE AND WHO IS UNLIKELY TO ENGAGE IN A GREAT DEAL OF OVERT REACTION TO ENVIRONMENTAL STIMULI EVEN AS SHE IS STIMULATED SOMEWHAT MORE THAN NORMALLY BY SUCH STIMULI. IN SHORT WE GET SOMETHING OF THE REPRESSIVE PICTURE FOUND IN HYSTERIA. SOME OF THE RORSCHACH CONCEPTS WERE OF QUESTIONABLE QUALITY, AND AGAIN WE SEEM TO HAVE SUPPORT OF THE PICTURE DESCRIBED ABOVE OF AN INDIVIDUAL WHO MAY BECOME SOMEWHAT UNCONVENTIONAL, SOMETIMES EVEN BIZARRE, UNLESS SHE HAS ACCEPTABLE EXTERNAL GUIDANCE AND DISCIPLINE. ONE ALSO FINDS EVIDENCE OF ANXIETY AND TENSION. THESE IN TURN MAY CAUSE PECULIAR BEHAVIOR AT TIMES.

HOWEVER, THE RORSCHACH DOES NOT IMPRESS ME AS INDICATING A PSYCHOSIS, THOUGH THE PATIENT MAY SHOW SCHIZOID TRAITS. IN MY OPINION THE PRESENT RORSCHACH RESULTS SUGGEST MORE A NEUROTIC INDIVIDUAL WHO MAY SHOW SYMPTOMS SUCH AS MIGHT BE FOUND IN ANXIETY HYSTERIA. AT TIMES SHE MAY BECOME DEPRESSED AND EVEN ENGAGE IN IMPULSIVE SUICIDAL GESTURES. HOWEVER, THERE SEEMS TO BE ENOUGH OF THE HYSTERICAL AND DISSOCIATIVE TO CAUSE HER TO HAVE ONLY A CONFUSED, ALMOST AMNESIC REACTION TO SUCH EPISODES.

THE RORSCHACH RESULTS ALSO SUGGEST THAT DURING THE PATIENT'S EARLY YEARS SHE SUFFERED FROM EGO MALNUTRITION AND ALSO THAT SHE WAS SOMETHING OF A BASE OF CONTENTION BETWEEN HER PARENTS. OR POSSIBLY SHE EXPERIENCED THE CONFLICT, DISCUSSED EARLIER, BETWEEN WHAT SHE WANTED TO BE AND WHAT OTHERS TRIED TO MAKE HER BECOME. IN VIEW OF ALL THAT HAS BEEN SAID IT IS INTERESTING THAT THE HUMAN IDENTIFICATION CARD WAS THE CARD LIKED LEAST "BECAUSE I JUST DON'T LIKE IT." THE HELPLESSNESS AND DEPENDENCY MENTIONED EARLIER SEEMS TO BE IN THE RORSCHACH PICTURE TOO.

THE RORSCHACH ALSO SUGGEST THAT THE PATIENT HAS NEVER BEEN ABLE TO HAVE THE RELATIONSHIP WITH HER FATHER THAT SHE'D LIKE TO HAVE AND THAT SHE WISHES SHE WERE A BOY RATHER THAN A GIRL. THIS MAY BE ONE REFLECTION OF AN UNRESOLVED ELECTRA COMPLEX. IF THIS BE SO, THEN THE PATIENT'S GUILT FEELINGS MAY WELL BE AGGRAVATED BY THIS.

THESE TEST RESULTS ALSO INDICATE A DESIRE TO BE LOVED AND ACCEPTED, TO BE CONSIDERED INTELLIGENT, AND BEAUTIFUL. IF THIS SEEMS TO CONTRADICT WHAT HAS BEEN SAID ABOUT WANTING TO BE A BOY, THEN LET THIS BE CONSIDERED AS FURTHER EVIDENCE OF THE PATIENT'S CONFUSION AND AMBIVALENCE.

THE BENDER REVEALS STRONG AMBIVALENCE AND DUALITY OF ROLE. CERTAINLY THE BENDER RESULTS SHOW A GREAT DEAL OF DIFFICULTY IN INTERPERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS. SOMETIMES HER REACTION IS THAT OF WITHDRAWAL; AT OTHER TIMES SHE SEEKS TO HAVE CLOSER RELATIONSHIPS, BUT SHE SEEKS RATHER CLUMSILY. THE REASONS FOR THIS SHOULD BE CLEAR BY THIS TIME. THE BENDER RESULTS ARE ALSO REMARKABLE FOR THE INDICATIONS OF REGRESSION AND REGRESSIVE ACTIVITY WHICH THE PATIENT MAY DISPLAY AT TIMES IN HER CONTINUING QUEST FOR LOVE, ACCEPTANCE, AND A DEPENDENCY RELATION-

Re: Public Records Request, received October 9, 2013

Dear Ms. Wetmore:

The records you requested in your letter, dated October 7, 2013, are not available because they were discarded pursuant to a public records retention schedule, effective March 3, 2010, on file with the State Archives & Records Administration.

Under the records retention schedule, contracts are retained for three years past the expiration date of the contract. Generally, financial files (invoices, payment information, etc.) are kept for five years beyond the end of the fiscal year they were relevant to.

Since the records you requested are about 50 years old, they were discarded pursuant to the record schedule approved by the State Archivist. See 1 V.S.A. § 317a.

Sincerely,

Philip Back

You will not fear the terror of the night nor the arrow that flies by day, nor the pestilence that stalks at mid-day.
A thousand may fall at your side, ten thousand at your right hand,
but it will not come near you.
You will only observe with your eyes and see the punishment of the wicked.
If you make the Most High your dwelling,
even the Lord, who is my refuge,
then no harm will befall you,
no disaster will come near your tent.
For He will command his angels concerning you,
To guard you in all your ways;
They will lift you up in their hands,
so that you will not strike your foot against a stone.
You will tread upon the lion and the serpent
“Because he loves me,” says the Lord, “ I will rescue him;

“I will protect him, for he acknowledges my name.
“He will call upon me and I will answer him.”
I will be with him in trouble,”
I will deliver him and honor him, with long life I will satisfy him,
And show him my salvation.”

Spiritual Controllers

Note: this is based upon a short book I wrote a few years ago.

Master controllers for a Jesuit spiritual system will reflect the primary spiritual relationships in the child's life. Here, several are discussed.

Althea (the Tree of Life)

These will include the "unholy trinity" of the Father (Satan), the Son (the antichrist and the beast) and the Spirit (Althea, the tree of life). The Fathers worship all three. In fact, the Arbor de Vitae monastery just north of Rome (the primary Jesuit monastery) is believed to be the dwelling place of Althea, the tree of life. This wicked creature lives in the basement of the monastery, and the young children (and adults) will often hear her moaning at night to be fed. And they do feed her, at regular intervals, with sacrifices of every human variety.

The Jesuit children are taught from infancy to participate in these rituals; as infants, the Fathers place their hands over a baby's, and teach them to make the sacrifice. As the child gets older, they must take a more active role, or suffer severe punishment by Althea (which appears at times like a huge willow whose branches "whip" the child terribly).

No child ever wants to be called down for a spiritual whipping of this manner, and so they quickly learn how to feed the tree very efficiently. After a ritual, the tree will be quiet for days or weeks, but will always begin moaning again to be fed. The child grows up knowing that in order for there to be peace, they must give this entity what it asks for. The child will have been dedicated to Althea, will have a representation of her in their system, and must dismantle it, kick out the spiritual entity, and heal the human part.

Helping the Survivor

When the tree of life is pulled out (only after trauma processing, support, and the system is ready to do so!) the three roots (white, black and silver gray) must also be rooted out, since these represent early infant demonic traumas used in installing the roots of the tree of life and the q'ballah internally. This takes extensive prayer, seeking the Lord, and asking the Holy Spirit to help the survivor overcome the fear of uprooting these demonic strongholds.

Follow

The tree of life will often have grown to a large tree with 1,000 points of life, each representing a life taken (including those of infants), and the demonic that entered as a result, during the installation of the tree. These lives must be grieved for; the murders repented of, and forgiveness received, to break the hold of the tree of life on the survivor's mind.

Some survivors will also have a mirror images of the tree of life, or a "tree of death" internally, that again is based upon the ritual murder of young infants, with the roots attached to the heart of the survivor (they are wrapped around the heart, and the survivor may believe that they will die if the tree is taken out).

The survivor will need to realize that the Lord is able to undo even this type of programming; can overcome the fear of uprooting the demonic. It can help the survivor if they are reminded that the fear they feel is the fear that the demonic feels at losing its "home" inside, and that they will actually feel more peace once the tree is rooted out. They can pray and ask the Lord to uproot it for them; this may be seen visually inside as Jesus reaching in and pulling it out, or as an increased peace as the rituals are repented of, and the person exercises authority.

The relief may be dramatic, or occur over several weeks. But the survivor will have more internal peace and healing once they choose to get rid of this voracious entity, and allow the Holy Spirit to fill them instead.

The Beast

The Beast has a room and a lair in the Vatican dedicated to him. This room supposedly dates from early Roman times, when sacrifices were conducted in the original cave located there that the Vatican was built over. This angry and vindictive spirit makes its presence known, and is eagerly sought out by the Fathers, since they believe he gives great power over enemies. The young child will be placed during the second year of life in a dark, cave-like lair underneath the altar in the Beast's room. They will spend 24 hours in this lair, where the Beast visits with the child, makes suggestions, and eventually has the child give in to its requests (to kill another child put in with them).

This is extremely traumatizing to the young child, who feels intense guilt. The child will have internalized the Beast (see the above discussion on programming methods used). This internal Beast only knows and understands killing and destroying, and spiritual warfare and deliverance must be done to free the human part trapped by the spiritual part. The Beast also gives energy to the punishment systems described previously, and will demand absolute obedience to it and the Pantheon, until the individual learns their authority in Yeshua, and is able to break free.

Satan

Many times, it can take years of dedicated work to go beneath the tree and beast layers, and reach the true system controller: Satan. From pre-birth and birth dedication, this is the being the Jesuits truly serve, in both his incarnations: as satan (cruel, vicious, demanding, destructive and lying) and Theo (kind, benevolent, manipulative, charming). The child will have been bonded to both, as described previously.

Satan's Throne

During the toddler years, at times the child will be physically placed on satan's throne. When supplicants crawl up the hall on ground glass, or nails, or hot rocks, satan will be sitting on the throne next to the child. He will ask the child what kind of judgment should be made; or what price should be paid for a request, and the child will answer. If satan is pleased with the answer, he and the child will simultaneously make the pronouncement. If the child is too kind-hearted, they will be punished severely until they learn the types of judgment that are acceptable.

This internalizes the satan identity for the core master controller, since the adults treat the child on satan's throne as if he/she were satan himself, in every way. The child is actually temporarily possessed, in that part, by satan during the ceremonies and judgments. The evil behavior convinces the survivor that he/she is evil and anchors the belief in the part that they are actually satan.

Helping the survivor

In later years, the adult will have to overcome very difficult memories of the lives taken or asked for when in that role, and the cruel decisions made. They will need to repent of these deeds, and ask the Lord for forgiveness (which He offers freely). It can help to remind the survivor that the Lord knew all about their past, even when they didn't; that He is not surprised or repulsed by them or their past. When they came to Jesus, He knew all about each act they committed, and forgave them.

They will also need emotional support to process the pain of these memories, and to be treated as loveable, in spite of the horrific acts that they committed. This is a challenge, since many Christians want to "turn away" from those with a past such as this. But the survivor is looking to their therapist or support person to demonstrate the love of Christ to systems that may have no idea of what true Christianity is.

Once they "get it" and realize they are forgiven, these parts will quickly give up their old jobs and choose freedom, if they believe they have the physical safety to support healing.

Svali, I love your stuff! It has been tremendously useful. I do find a point where my Christian beliefs diverge from yours, though. I don't believe that acts done under severe torture and coercion require repentance and God's forgiveness, at least for small children.

They "only" require healing because the individual forced never had free will. Only sin needs forgiveness, and sin requires free will. No one tortured from the womb and made a complete slave sins until he or she joins his or her WILL to the actions. It isn't truly willing to sin if one has been tortured like this. Of course, repentance and forgiveness would be necessary if the person eventually made a free choice to join in.

God bless!

Foreword by Dr. Marcel Polte

Dear Readers,

You are holding a book in your hands that is not only extraordinary but unique, and I believe more important than almost any other book ever written. Why is that so? We humans are subject to a deception of unimaginable proportions. Those responsible being highly intelligent, influential and globally networked have been able to set up a parallel world that is almost perfectly hidden from public view. This parallel world consists of fear, pain, death and belief in dark forces. Nevertheless, this perfidiously elaborate system has a weak point: The perpetrators apparently underestimate the strength of the human spirit. Individual victims who managed to escape the physical and mental clutches of the perpetrators noted this in amazement (including Cathy O'Brien, Judith Moore, and Sandra Rasch). Thanks to these strong souls, today there is even a term in therapeutic literature for what was intended to remain hidden forever: ritual abuse.

Now, expert articles on ritual abuse, corresponding data surveys and, not least, the detailed reports of survivors have proven beyond doubt that family structures exist worldwide in which a Satanic agenda is passed on from generation to generation. Through abuse, torture, and highly complex mind control techniques, perpetrators aim to condition their own children to become perpetrators themselves. These families are organized in local cults, have established worldwide networks, and collaborate with organized crime in many areas (child prostitution, child abuse, human trafficking, drug trafficking, and arms trafficking). All these efforts serve only one goal, which has been patiently worked towards for many generations: expansion of secret power so that one day Satan's world empire can be established on earth. What sounds to some like a crude conspiracy theory could, until recently, even be read on the website of the diocese of Münster ("For the goal of the sect to create a new world empire ..."). For many years, Brigitte Hahn was very committed to leading a cult counseling center there and organized a conference on ritual abuse with over 140 participants in May 2019.

We owe it to the work of such courageous people from the field of counseling and therapy that the gruesome crimes committed in the name of ritual abuse and the perpetrators' techniques of conditioning and personality splitting (the consequence is called Multiple Personality Disorder or Dissociative Identity Disorder in technical terminology) are known in detail. In addition, there are people from the media who unflinchingly report on these things. Unfortunately, however, these have remained isolated cases over the years, such as the documentaries "Höllenleben" (Hell Life) by Liz Wieskerstrauch, a ZDF (public German television channel) report on Satanism by Rainer Fromm, and a multi-part report on multiple survivors on the YouTube channel ZEIT ONLINE "Wir sind die Nicki(s)" (We are the Nicki's) (April 2020). The full-page article "Das Ergebnis war immer Verlassenheit" (The Result was always Abandonment) by Heike Schmoll, which appeared in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung (major German newspaper) on August 24, 2020 and reports, among other things, by the Independent Commission for Inquiry into Child Sexual Abuse (UKASK) on the topic of ritual abuse are also worth mentioning. First and foremost, however, are the few survivors who manage to give public testimony about their experiences "with the cult." The small number of data collections available actually indicate an intolerable extent of such crimes. For example, a survey conducted by the "Ritual Abuse Working Group" among contract therapists of the Association of Statutory Health Insurance Physicians (2005 and 2007) revealed a total of 202 cases of ritual abuse classified as credible, the victims in these cases reporting 42 human sacrifices; the survey was limited to the German states of Rhineland-Palatinate and Saarland, the Ruhr region and nationwide counseling centers.

But how can it be that only a few survivors' accounts reach the public? Numerous factors are responsible for this: creation of comprehensive dependencies as well as isolation of the victims (including control of their environment), infiltration of law enforcement agencies as well as other facilities and institutions and, if needed, blackmailing of certain key persons, influence and reputation of the perpetrators, thorough covering up of traces, and above all: psychological manipulation of the victims that often culminates in the purposeful splitting of their mind. Chantal Frei (pseudonym) reports on what lies behind all this from her own experience. Based on my research on other cases, I can absolutely confirm the experiences she describes and the modus operandi of the perpetrators, even if many things may sound inconceivable. In my book "Dark New World Order" (Part 1), I provide extensive references to document the results of a comparative analysis of German and U.S. expert literature and witness statements as well as numerous other documents (CIA and investigative files, minutes of court hearings, Senate hearings and an advisory committee). In light of these data, there is no doubt that Satanic cults are operating worldwide and that their secret technique of trauma-based personality splitting (mind control) has also been researched and applied by the CIA since the early 1950s (Project MKULTRA).

There are indications that the locally organized cults not only have established international networks, but are overarched by a world-wide umbrella organization. Some survivors refer to this organization as the "Illuminati". Anyone who now believes that the Illuminati are a conspiracy myth of the internet age is way off the mark. Indeed, more than 200 years ago, a letter from a certain G. W. Snyder to the first President of the United States of America and Freemason George Washington warned of an infiltration of the American Freemason Lodges by the Illuminati.[1] This fits in with the fact that survivors repeatedly report connections of the perpetrators to Freemasons (which does not mean that Freemasons are generally to be equated with Satanists or Illuminati). This includes, for example, survivor Jil, who describes her horrific experiences in Masonic circles in a June 2020 interview with ex-Scotland Yard investigator Jon Wedger. So far, however, there have been very few survivors who came into contact with the Illuminati during their time in the cult, survived this, made the exit, and were able to tell about it. Probably the most important source is Svali, who claims to have been a chief programmer of the Illuminati and to have taken over this function from Josef Mengele. On her web page (https://svalispeaks.wordpress.com/), Svali has published numerous texts in which she describes the background and the methods of the Illuminati in detail. Owing to a fortunate coincidence I can prove that at least parts of her insider information are indeed correct. In the book "Abwegig. Überleben und Therapie bei ritueller Gewalt" (Absurd. Survival and Therapy in Ritual Abuse), written by cult survivor Helen Lindstrøm together with her therapist Jutta Sniehotta after ten years of collaboration, I came across exactly the same mind control programs (names, colors, technique of brainwave programming) as described by Svali. The renowned expert Dr. Alison Miller obviously considers Svali authentic as well, because she mentions her several times in her standard work "Healing the Unimaginable".

In German-speaking countries, however, there has not yet been a survivor who could recall not only cult experiences, but also military operations, missions abroad, and encounters with extremely high-ranking politicians, aristocrats and celebrities on the perpetrator side. In the USA, MKULTRA survivor Cathy O'Brien has been claiming since the mid-1990s to have been abused as part of the CIA program by George Bush Senior, Hillary and Bill Clinton, and other heads of state as well as influential politicians. Chantal Frei, however, is the first German-speaking survivor who can report on just such perpetrators and similar experiences. Of course, it is almost impossible to verify such outrageous claims. Nevertheless, in the case of Cathy O'Brien there is much to suggest that her highly detailed report in "Trance Formation of America" is, to a large extent, a reflection of reality. Not only was I able to verify many of her statements (e.g. concerning persons and places) on the basis of publicly available sources, but also her descriptions of mind control techniques were undeniably confirmed by subsequent expert publications. But there is one more important piece of evidence: my request under the US Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) for MKULTRA documents on Cathy O'Brien resulted in an astonishing answer. Namely, the CIA did not simply deny that such documents existed. Instead, after thoroughly reviewing my request, the CIA informed me that it could neither confirm nor deny the existence or nonexistence of such documents: The fact of the existence or non-existence of such records is itself currently classified and protected from disclosure as information on intelligence sources and methods! As is well known, such a "Glomar Response" is an indication that the requested documents actually exist, but the explicit refusal to release them with reference to national security concerns would already be problematic from the CIA's point of view.

But that is not all. In November 2021, a survivor – credible according to my initial assessment – gave an interview with equally far-reaching claims (after she had already been publishing her own videos with corresponding statements for about a year). In it, Ally Carter claims to have been a victim of international human trafficking in her childhood and youth. She reports abuse by celebrities and U.S. presidents and describes a network of underground tunnels used by the perpetrators for these purposes. Furthermore, she mentions Satanic rituals, sacrifices and organ trafficking in this context.

It is important to know all this in order to be able to correctly assess Chantal Frei's claims that she met high-ranking politicians, nobles and celebrities during cruel rituals in the Belgian castle Château des Amerois – where the decision about her appointment as "Mother of Darkness" was made – and in the Sagrada Família in Barcelona. Chantal Frei removed the names of these persons from her manuscript after I advised her. Otherwise, there would have been the risk of the publication being summarily stopped by injunctions. However, the names have been recorded in writs of protection and are now known to numerous trusted persons. Some of these names are mentioned by Arizona Wilder (pseudonym), who also reports experiences with ritual abuse and MKULTRA and, like Svali, had contact with Josef Mengele. But there is another similarity between Wilder and Frei: Arizona Wilder also claims to have been trained by the Illuminati for a specific function. She also mentions a "Mothers of Darkness" castle in Belgium; however, since she gives Brussels as the location, it is questionable whether this was the Amerois castle (however, the Amerois castle is also mentioned by other authors in the context of child abuse and sacrifice). After that, Wilder – having passed through the stage of "Mother of Darkness" – was made a "Mother Goddess", the highest (sixth) rank on the female side of the Illuminati hierarchy, while "Mother of Darkness" represents the third rank (according to Frei's recollection, which is supported by an anonymous internet source).

Other details in Chantal Frei's book are consistent with Svali's information. Thus, Svali likewise mentions the handing over of an amethyst as a sign that the child has mastered the first training level (silence and keeping secrets); and also the diamond is mentioned by her as the highest Illuminati award. Likewise, during an interview, Arizona Wilder shows a special diamond ring that is said to symbolize her function of a "Mother Goddess". As I discussed the color system presented by the author with her, we came across other connections. First, the order of gemstones described by Svali (amethyst, ruby, emerald, diamond) matches Chantal Frei's hierarchy of colors. But individual color assignments also match. For example, Frei associates the color green with perpetrator loyalty, according to her memory. And Svali indicates that the green emerald stands for (cult) family loyalty. When I pointed out on this occasion the big emerald ring, which Josef Mengele – according to Arizona Wilder – wore on the middle finger of the left hand and used for programming, Chantal Frei remembered a similar emerald ring worn by sect leader René.

Even though the phenomenon of ritual abuse as such, the involvement of members of the elite, and a connection to the Illuminati are thus supported by the testimonies of other victims, many readers will find another aspect of Frei's report implausible: her out-of-body experiences on another plane and the existence of demonic powers that the perpetrators are interested in summoning. Both fundamentally contradict our conventional Western worldview. However, those who have grown up in the Christian faith naturally see this differently. For the Bible speaks not only of God and his angels, but also of Satan – the "prince of this world" (John 12:31) – and his demons. For all other readers I would state at this point only briefly: As part of my own research, I have repeatedly come across reports of out-of-body experiences (the travel "over the rainbow" forced under torture) and demonic possession. It is for this reason, that in Part 2 of my book "Dark New World Order" I also present the hypothesis that worldwide reported murders under the influence of inner voices are actually acts committed in a state of demonic possession. It was only after the publication of Part 2 that I witnessed such possessions on several occasions and was able to see, for example, how a person collapsed and became unconscious when the entity left her body; after this incident, the person could neither explain his unusual posture nor remember what had happened in the minutes before. Svali also described to me how she had been abused by the perpetrators for out-of-body experiences in order to make contact with dark entities on another plane. All this presupposes the physical concept of a multidimensional universe, as it is represented for instance by the physicist Thomas Campbell, who himself had numerous out-of-body experiences.

Finally, it is important for me to point out that I know of several cases of ritual abuse where the victims were able to escape the mental clutches of the perpetrators and obtain healing solely through their faith in God and Jesus Christ. Chantal Frei's own journey of healing, including the important act of forgiveness, will help other victims feel hope in a seemingly hopeless situation. In the section "Inner Struggle and Doubt: Does God Really Help?", I finally came across – surprisingly – the very creative concept that I also advocate in Part 2 of my book. Here, Chantal Frei describes her conviction that God's love also includes freedom; a freedom that her tormentors have as well: "Also the freedom to do evil." Thus, free will and polarity seem to be the two ingredients that a soul needs for its path to God or – depending on personal conviction – its spiritual evolution. To Chantal Frei's credit, in this book of extremes – from deepest fear and pain to highest hope and love – she brings this divine concept to our attention, lighting a match that relentlessly illuminates a world dominated by dark forces that we were never supposed to see.

Foreword from a Friend

Dear Reader,

The fact that you are now holding this book in your hands is evidence of your open-mindedness in wanting to know more. It is also evidence of your daring to confront a hidden reality and to look behind the scenes of this world. A quote from this book: "Those who are willing to look into the unknown area of ritual, organized, Satanic abuse [ORA] and mind control will see it."ritual abuse Let yourself be taken on an enlightening, overwhelming journey into this secret dark area, a journey that will change your world view and your own perspective forever.

A few years back, I came to know the author, Chantal, as a friendly, level-headed, affable and pragmatic personality with whom one enjoys informal fellowship. At first and second glance, she seemed to be an unobtrusive, natural, very normal and warmhearted middle-aged woman. Then gradually she opened up a little about experiences from her past and not only what she had had to experience but to survive. What she described to me even rudimentarily is beyond the imagination of a normal person and is very difficult to bear, although, by far, she has not told me everything; indeed, there are many details she has been unable to relate. Thus, this book by no means reflects everything she experienced. But it still gives a unique insight into this largely unknown field of ORA. It conveys an inkling of the horror of a reality that should not officially exist in this world to this extent.

The fact that innocent children are sadistically sexually exploited, brutally abused, martyred and killed in the most brutal way, systematically and according to plan, is something most people would not wish to imagine, let alone that this happens in professionally organized and protected, networked, elite structures. Understandably, we are reluctant to deal with what people are capable of doing to others, because it also draws our attention to the dark sides of our own souls. Most people do not wish to be confronted with this unattractive reality of the human abyss and consistently look away, unfortunately often even the so-called experts and those whose office and duty is vigilance. They do not want to incriminate themselves, or they do not like to give up their romantic world view. Moreover, it seems to me that also a kind of officially decreed, general conspiratorial silence, a denial, twisting and evasion is prevalent on this topic.

The time has come to say the unspeakable out loud, to accept it and to include it in the collective consciousness. The truth needs a brave person who dares to speak it. Chantal is one of these brave ones. Her speech is groundbreaking; it breaks this general silence, also the collective silence of the other initiates, such as the trauma therapists. It challenges us: Pay attention! Do something to bring light into the darkness too! Paying attention to the problem is what creates awareness. Paying attention and being aware essentially constitute an act of mercy. They bring more acceptance, understanding and compassion to the abused victims and to their healing process.

I too was once entirely unaware of ORA and of the fact that people are capable of such merciless, malicious acts against innocent children. Then I did my own intensive research and read and sifted through books, reports from survivors and from therapists, educated myself professionally and got to know other victims and their stories. Many of these stories, revealed by victims all over the world (including Switzerland) testify independently and consistently about the goings-on in these professionally organized, diabolical ORA parallel worlds. It became clear that Chantal is unfortunately far from an isolated case, although she - unlike most of the others affected - was trained by the perpetrators for a higher level in the cult. Because of her former high position, she can give an exclusive insight into the secretive, clandestine scene of the ORA.

Most ORA sufferers do not have access to their trauma memory, due to dissociative amnesia (protective mechanism in the field of dissociative disorders). Sometimes the soul is ready after a certain time - if at all, often only after decades - to release individual memory fragments. Chantal is one of the few exceptions. She has come this far and also has the stability, strength and courage to speak and write down part of her story in this book. It borders on a miracle that she is alive at all. She has been able to break through her deep-rooted silence and has thus taken an important protection away from the perpetrators.

However, for other victims this book is only suitable to a limited extent, as it contains many possible triggers and descriptions of grisly scenes similar to those which other victims have experienced themselves, scenes whose horrible atmosphere will be all too familiar to them. However, for mostly mentally stable victims / survivors and for all others (especially also for pastors, therapists, politicians, government officials, lawyers, physicians, ...) this book is to be recommended in various respects, because it is, in addition to the comprehensive clarification, also very encouraging. Along with supplementary explanations, Chantal has taken up some legitimate, controversial questions and issues related to the area of ORA in her story and provided understandable (in part even uncensored) answers in a competent manner. Here are some examples of questions to which I have not yet found a plausible answer in this form in other books:

- What is ORA, what are its organization, activities, hierarchy and networking system?
- What connection to ORA do the Satanists, Freemasons, Illuminati and other cult groups have?
- How are these systems protected and how can they work unnoticed and unobtrusively on a large scale?
- How are children conditioned, made docile and silent?
- How can children survive the unimaginable torture without drawing attention in everyday life?
- Who are the victims, and who are the perpetrators, and where do they come from?
- How is it possible to leave the cult, internally and externally?
- Why and how are children forced to torture and kill other children as well?
- How can so many children disappear unnoticed?
- How can the human remains from these rituals be disposed of inconspicuously and without any trace?
- How and why are people programmed?
- How does the survival mechanism of DID work, and what are the consequences?

- Why is there no effective prosecution of the highly criminal ORA systems?
- Why doesn't God intervene in this blatant suffering and injustice?
- and many more. ...to the spiritual dimensions, the question of guilt and the Biblical Gospel.

Today, the question is no longer whether ORA actually exists in this world, but how widespread this ORA is. The vast extent, the work and the spread of these various cabal cult groups are very difficult to fathom. Official figures do not exist, of course. Therefore, it seems important to me to determine the dimension of the ORA with the many people affected (and thus also with a correspondingly large number of perpetrators) on the basis of the circumstantial evidence and clear clues known today:

> "Pure" DID indicates only type III trauma with ORA / RM / SRM or similar in childhood before ! 5-8 years. There are prevalence studies and projections for DID which assume 0.4 to 3% of the total population in Europe and the USA + the unreported figure (not recognized, wrongly diagnosed or undiagnosed DID).
> pDID, (DDNOS [dissociative disorder not otherwise specified] /DESNOS [disorder of extreme stress not otherwise specified]) / partial dissociative disorders can also occur as a result of ORA and are even more common. However, other causes of traumata (traumata repeatedly and deliberately inflicted on people in childhood) are also possible here, such as "normal" sexual abuse, violence against children or their emotional abuse or neglect. There are estimates of up to 20% of the population.

This indicates a scale of those affected by ORA, which is very conservatively estimated to be about 1% of the population. This gives a total that is in the upper tens of thousands in Switzerland alone. Some affected persons told me that they believe the number to be somewhat higher. So we are talking about a substantial, significant number of affected people who suffer whilst being unaware of the origin of their symptoms and who must be supported largely by our social welfare system. In addition, there is a correspondingly larger population of perpetrators - people who live unrecognized and inconspicuously among us and with us.

If, for example, someone who is a personally known and respected person is an ORA perpetrator and is reported, then one simply cannot and will not believe it. This is an important protective mechanism for the perpetrators. If, for once, something comes to light, people are more willing to believe the convincing lies and the perfect facade of innocence of a respected high-ranking person, a well-known person, or a well-behaved upright citizen than a broken victim with gruesome, outrageous statements about what really happened. The real memories (or memory fragments) are then often simply dismissed as slander, manipulation, creepy, exhibitionistic grandstanding, fantasy, or psychotic delusions. Significantly, it is claimed (also officially) that such events/memories are not credible, pseudo-memories or iatrogenic (produced by the therapist), that the person concerned is disturbed, schizophrenic, ill, etc. In the chapter, "Examining Real and "False" Memories" Chantal also clarifies this topic in a highly intelligible and coherent way, also to counter the common perpetrator arguments and scientifically colored lie constructions.

As a result of extreme violence, Chantal has a heart that is broken and wounded many times and was forced to pass through the valley of death several times. In deepest hardships, fears and pains she had to fight for her own survival as a child. Although she was forced and trained according to plan to a cruel, brutal behavior and with it also some perpetrator intros (surviving, actionable, dissociated perpetrator-cult-ANP-EP personalities) were created, she was able to preserve her innermost, redeemed core identity - her merciful heart. Thus, she was able to leave the diabolical ORA system in spite of all impossibilities.

At this point I would express my heartfelt thanks to Chantal for her revolutionary (fire) work, for her boldness to speak, for her openness, her overcoming, ... my respect. I wish her many happy moments, complete restoration, healing, protection, peace and only the best and God's full blessing on her further journey through life.

The reason I cannot appear by name is that I know some offenders to whom I do not wish to give an official address of attack.

Introduction

My wish is that this book may inspire courage despite the gravity of the subject, courage to the bystanders to pay attention, to wake up and, in the best-case scenario, to help in some way; and also courage to the victims, because it is not impossible to escape this spiral of violence. I myself managed to break out of it with God's help. This was my way. Others choose a different path. No matter what the path looks like: Victims who are still caught up in it urgently need to be heard. They need help: legal, medical, social therapeutic. But also personal, friendly, unprejudiced, faithful, encouraging help.

In order to protect my privacy and that of others, I have decided to tell my life story by topic, and not chronologically. It was occasionally necessary to anonymize the names of private persons and circumstances. However, I experienced the events as described.

Detailed evidence of my life report has been recorded and stored as a protective measure in safe places, with notaries and lawyers. Several trusted persons have been informed accordingly. If something should happen to me or to anyone close to me, this information will be forwarded immediately to the appropriate authorities for the purpose of criminal prosecution, and the public will be informed. Contacts have already been established for this purpose.

I cannot say to anyone: Enjoy reading! Rather, I say: Thank you for your willingness to read. You are helping to bring this taboo subject further into the public eye.

Dedication and Thanks

This book is especially dedicated to all my children! I do not know all of you yet! I had to give birth to you in the cult. Rest assured: You are deep in my heart! I love you!

I also greet my biological family.... I am looking forward to our meeting.

I write this book in memory of all the victims and for all the survivors.

And I dedicate my book to all those who have been harmed and victimized by me. If I had realized and had the choice, I would never have done this. I am infinitely sorry for what I had to do to you under duress.

My most important thanks go first and always to God, my heavenly Father, who has always been with me, helped me get out of it, and always given me courage and confidence, even in times of deep doubt.

Joelle et Yann: Je vous aime! You have always stood by me, and your love is sincere! Thank you! I admire your courage and your honesty! You are blessed!

I also thank all those close to me who believed in me, accompanied me, encouraged me, helped me through difficult times, prayed for me and with me. Finally, thanks also go to the experts who advised and supported me in editing this book.

Chantal Frei

In the cellar I was put in a cage.[2] The cellar was not very big. We were at most four children in four cages, one in each corner. The chapel was very old, and the cellar looked accordingly. There were bars and chains hanging from the ceiling, and sometimes I saw a smaller or bigger fire in the middle. Yet we were always cold, because we were often locked in the cages naked or dressed only in a short, white, blood-stained dress. There we had to wait. Wait for our fate. Sometimes we heard singing upstairs in the chapel. During the singing, men came into the cellar. I never knew when it was my turn. Me or another child first? Sometimes I was alone. I was taken out of the cage and chained. So I hung there naked and was raped by one or more men. Before the rape, they all touched me everywhere. Afterwards, they sometimes consulted among themselves who would be allowed first, or even who would be allowed alone that day. Sometimes I was also laid on a stone slab in the basement to be raped. I had to perform various sexual acts. When it was one's turn, the others would always watch. All of them were naked (having previously taken off their frocks or black clothes) except for a black balaclava, like those worn by bank robbers or special forces. I also had to watch other children being abused, tortured, raped and sometimes killed.

1. Suicide Attempts

Many long, painful, desperate years later in a very different place:

Finally, I had collected enough pills. I carefully counted them all again. Yes, this time it would be enough. This time I should finally go to my God in heaven.[3] He would understand. He sees how miserable I am here on earth. How I can't manage anything anymore, how I can't satisfy my husband, how I can't take care of my children, how I let my colleagues down with unfinished tasks, how I disappoint the parishioners again and again because I have become so tearful, sad and depressed. Yes, I should be doing my family a favor if I were gone. They would have fewer worries, less stress. They could choose a new wife and mother. A cheerful one. A woman with drive and energy, a woman capable of doing her chores... none of that was possible anymore. Yesterday's news. I was in my early thirties and longed for the end.

I was a nurse by profession and knew about certain medications. I just wanted to fall asleep, never wake up again, never have to endure this heaviness again and never be unable to do all that I had to do here. No, my life was over; I knew that. I felt justified in putting an end to it because I was deeply desperate. So I swallowed the mix of medications I had put together for myself....

And woke up again in the intensive care unit of a hospital.

No one knew that I had prayed before: "God, I come to you now. You know I can't do it anymore, I'm at the end. I can't even take care of my family anymore. I see no other way than finally to come to You. But if You see another way, please make sure that I wake up again."

God had heard my prayer! At first, however, I was not at all pleased to realize that I was still alive. This would not be the only attempt, several more should follow. Actually, from a medical point of view, it should have worked. But it didn't. God had another plan. I did not recognize it at that time, I had no idea about it, but nevertheless His plan was there. The plan was to live! The plan was to speak out!

2. Talk - Really Talk?

I? I should speak? I should tell? No... I shouldn't...

It was a summer night at the end of June. Heavy thunderstorm, lightning flashed across the sky. It thundered violently and rain pelted loudly on the roof. I was lying in bed. The thunderstorm had woken me up. I was tired and wanted to sleep on.

There it flashed again. And then suddenly this light filled my whole bedroom and just didn't go out! It was a bright, very bright light. Normally I don't like such bright glaring light. But this one was very pleasant. Almost at the same moment two hands grabbed me by the shoulders and asked me to kneel down at the end of the bed. The being - I think it was an angel - did not let go. But I resisted fiercely at first. "No," I cried! There is no way I will do that! I will NEVER EVER kneel down again! Especially not in front of anyone or to ask for anything! Never again!

Shortly before, I had separated from my husband. The marriage was marked by severe violence. There were days when I knelt down in front of my husband, slid on my knees after him and begged him to be at least a little nice to me. I begged him, asked him for a kind word or a loving gesture, maybe even a hug? Sometimes I got something. Sometimes not. Depending on my mood. And sometimes only worse words fell, or I was even beaten.

When I left him, I swore that I would never, ever get down on my knees in front of anyone again. No! No one was worth it! I found it so humiliating. I never wanted to do that again.

But now there was this angel who demanded exactly that from me. I knew somewhere in me that I must acquiesce; there was no way around it. Finally, I rose from my bed and knelt down at the foot of the bed.

I lost all sense of time and space. I found myself suddenly before the throne of God. I don't know if I spent five seconds, five minutes or five hours there. It was just beautiful. I heard God's voice telling me to speak. At first, I had refused. I started to argue. I explained that I would never talk. Surely He knew that talking would be my death sentence.... Silence was my survival strategy.

When that happened, I was no longer suffering from bad depression, and suicide was no longer an issue. I wanted to live, and a few months earlier I had finally found the strength to leave my husband after almost 17 years. Still, I didn't want to talk. I couldn't wish to talk! I was incapable of wishing.

Well, I was there before God's throne negotiating, for I could not speak clearly at that time. I lisped and stuttered when I opened my mouth. And that had been going on for over two and a half years. I did go to speech therapy, but that didn't help me either. People thought me drunk when I talked. I was so embarrassed that I hardly opened my mouth. And if I did, I apologized for my slurred speech.

But now God commanded me to speak. He trusted me to do that! Wow! Now I was really in a dilemma. Because I had never experienced anything like this before! Never had I been given a command with so much authority! But also with so much love! I knew that this would only be for my own good. I knew that the words I was hearing now were pure divine love. I was so shaken and wept at the feet of God. Before His throne. I felt so infinitely loved, so infinitely safe, so infinitely protected! I had never known anything like that before. And above all, I did not know this combination. It was a command, but it was love. A command out of love. A command with love. A command of love, a command of love.... no matter how I twist and turn it today or try to put it on paper: IT WAS LOVE!

God showed me that I should talk and where I should start. I did that little by little, and bit by bit my speech problem was solved. At that time, a specialist was able to show me the causes of my speech disorder. I had already suffered from my silence all my life. At that time, however, God personally dissolved this ban on speaking. However, there was still a long way to go. But today I am talking! With God's help I am talking!

3. Uprooting

I have a Swiss passport with birthplace and hometown. I grew up bilingual, but who am I really?

I awoke briefly and blinked through my tired eyes. I caught sight of something strange. I saw a curve like the upper part of a tunnel, not stone, but metal, or at least the color of metal. Then I saw some kind of seam, like a welded joint. I also saw big, thick screws holding this seam together. The screws were also welded in. I was freezing, wrapped in wool blankets, itching all over my body. I was scared. But I kept falling back to sleep. My eyes were very, very heavy.

Later I woke up again. Again I saw this strange arched ceiling. And I was still freezing. This time I turned my head to the side and saw four or five men sitting there, all dressed the same, with some kind of beige-olive green suit, black combat boots and wide belt. No one was talking to me. I was lying on a bench or cot across from the men. On another side of this strange tunnel I saw red letters. I fell asleep again and again, I was afraid, I was cold, I was hungry....

When I realized that what was written in my passport was not true, an odyssey began. A roller coaster of feelings, emotions, but also an external and internal awakening. An uprooting.

I was not in a tunnel at the time, but in an airplane. Probably in a cargo plane or in a baggage hold. I don't know. These men belonged to the military; they were American soldiers who had kidnapped me. Kidnapped from my family of origin.

4. Perfect Scenery - Perfectly Organized Satanic Environment

I went to kindergarten and first grade as a little girl near Geneva. Then we moved to a small farming village in the canton of Vaud. There I grew up and went to school in various villages. I attended high school in the city.

My father[4] (Please be sure to read the footnote!) was on trial in early 2000. One of my siblings had denounced him. I was the main witness in the trial. Because of the statute of limitations, I myself could not press charges for my own abuse. He was charged with suspicion of sexual abuse of his children and other children in the neighborhood. After several years of police investigation, he was acquitted due to lack of evidence. I still wonder what exactly was investigated during those many years. What took so long? And why?

Back to the setting. My family went to church every Sunday morning. We belonged to a small free church congregation. There was a maximum of about 15 people in the service. My father was a so-called "elder" in the congregation.[5] However, there were not many other men to choose from. The church congregation consisted of a handful of core members. The other visitors were often young people, teenagers who wanted to improve the French they had learned in school and who went back home after a year. So every year there were other worshipers. But we were always there, plus the pastor's family and a couple who were young at the time. That was all. My father was originally from German-speaking Switzerland, moved to Geneva at the age of 18, and supposedly led a pretty lonely life until he married my mother. At least that's what he said.

I remember very clearly how my mother told me that one day she saw two men outside our apartment door in Geneva. My father talked to them and said it was over. He had married now and had a family and wanted nothing more to do with it.... With what? I often asked my mother about it, but to no avail. To this day I can't understand why, as a wife, she never investigated.

Today I know that the marriage between my parents was arranged. My paternal grandparents were both Satanists. My grandfather had chosen my mother for his son. This was not a secret. Today I know that my father was also a Satanist. On the one hand a Christian man who acted as an "elder", on the other hand a Satanist who sexually abused and tortured children at night. My mother was most likely chosen because it was surmised that she suffered from dissociative identity disorder.[6] Today I assume that she experienced severe traumata as a child, was never able to work through them, suffered from amnesia[7] and unconsciously helped my father to maintain this perfect backdrop so that he could pursue his perverse, Satanic, sadistic sides. I remember getting an injection from my mother, who was a pediatric nurse, and fainting. This, in turn, allowed my father to take me places without me knowing anything about it, or rather, only partially. When I had a gunshot wound once afterwards, my mother nursed me lovingly at home, but did not take me to the physician. I was then told that I had had a bicycle accident, which was not true, but over time I began to believe it myself.

I always perceived my mother's family as a family that sticks together. However, this family had a kind of code of conduct: "Respectful treatment, secrecy, no sticking one’s nose in where it doesn’t belong, and no questions." For a long time, I found this code very nice and pleasant, but on the other hand, a certainty arose in me that one must not question anything. I knew how I had to behave in this family clan.

I did so, too, with a few exceptions. Often my mother had told me a few details about a family member: enough for me to know there was more to it. But I knew exactly, I must not ask any more, because it was none of my business. My uncle, who was close to me, was also in the Satanist circle. So I learned very early that my tormentors were also my caretakers, my providers, my comforters and my family members. I knew nothing else, had no basis for comparison, and my life was torturous, but normal for me. I don't know which of the family members were actually with the cult or still are. Those who were not or are not with it were or are kept in ignorance from my point of view. The code of honor of "don't interfere and we treat each other with respect" serves in this case as a perfect cover for cult members to cover up their deeds.

We lived in the same neighborhood with the sect "Les Adorateurs du Soleil" (The Sun Worshippers). The internal Satanic cult in which I had to grow up was called: "Dragon Rouge" (Red Dragon). Anyway, this name came up again and again. Officially, of course, we did not belong to it. We were considered a Christian family. We children were not allowed to play together. But today I know that we also belonged to it. Hidden and covered up, but we belonged. My father knew the cult leader personally, was probably his subject, and I assume that we owed the apartment we moved into to him. The quarters where we lived are on a hillside. At the top of the hill is the large white house of the cult leader René and his family.

René himself was, as it turned out later, my slave trader. He took me under his care to train me in the Satanic ways, according to the ideology of the Illuminati. As a little girl I would go to his daughter for music lessons. The one-hour lesson was divided each time into two half hours. The first half was practicing the flute. The second half I had sex lessons with René and his wife. He regularly abused me under the supervision of his wife, who cleaned me up afterwards. Nobody ever noticed anything because I had to keep quiet, and of course I didn't talk about it. Nor did I ever come home late, because officially I was at my flute lesson. I didn't miss any lessons either. I learned quickly and didn't need a whole hour to practice. Half a lesson was enough for me.

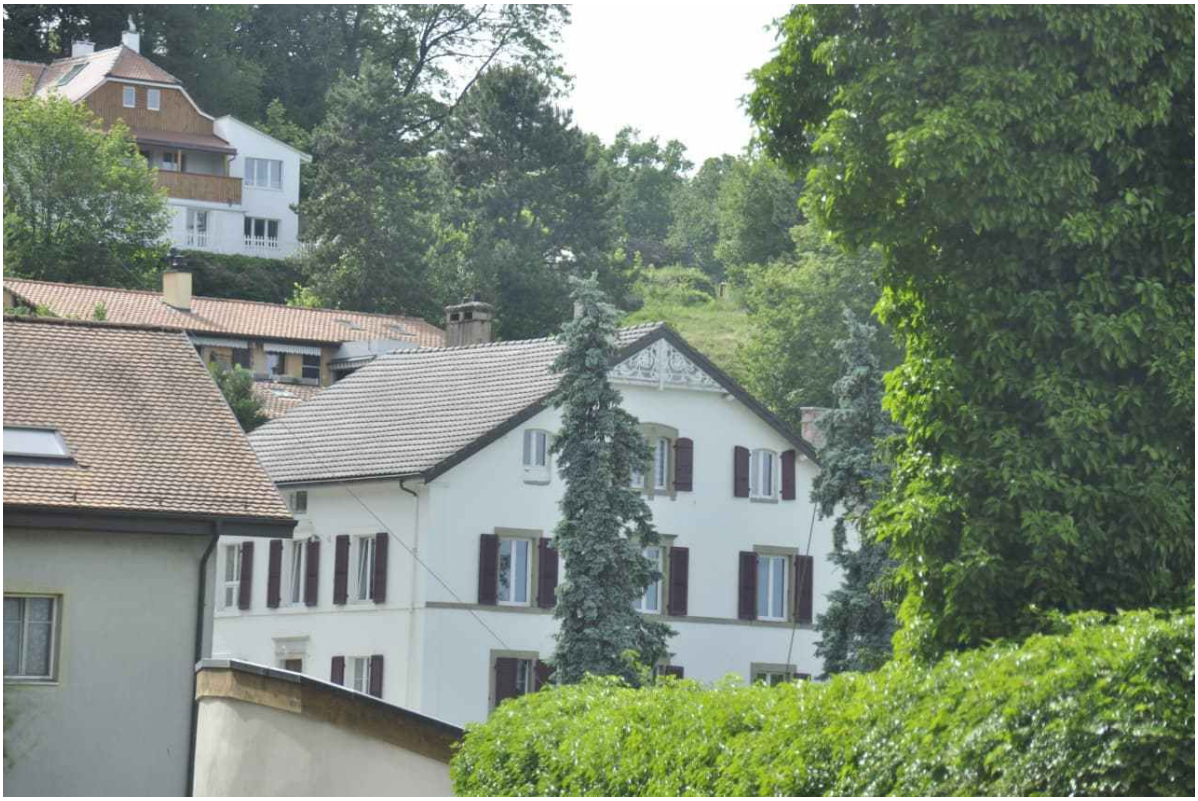
At the bottom of the slope, various flat-roofed houses have been built on one side. Followers of the sect live in them. On the other side was a tombstone company (Marbrerie). As a child, I had seen the owner of the company and his father at cult rituals from time to time. Our house was in the middle. The neighbor above us was engaged in human trafficking. Another one kept a large chicken farm. There were often big, black expensive cars in front of his farm. As a child, I knew then that they had "high-ranking" business visitors and that one must not ring the bell or otherwise disturb them under any circumstances. Nevertheless, I was there once in a while. I remember one day being led to the back of the farm. There I saw a grown man tied naked to a large wheel - feet and legs stretched apart. It looked as if he were to replace the wheel spokes. The wheel was spinning very fast, and blood was spurting out of the man's limb. There are reports that the CIA used chicken coops as cover for torture houses. The newspaper might then say that a certain celebrity - who is in fact one of the perpetrators - visited a chicken farm to see for himself how the animals were kept. My music teacher and some other teachers were cult members, and some were neighbors. Our pediatrician, as it turned out later, was also a cult member. So I was perfectly "embedded" and everything was perfectly organized for violent crimes. Everything was covered up. Everyone covered up for everyone else and as a child I should not have had a chance to tell anyone anything. The theatrical backdrop for the drama of my life had been perfectly built....



The neighborhood where I grew up (today).
In the front is my apartment building at that time.
We lived on the middle floor. On the right, in the middle, was my bedroom window.

5. The Parallel World of Day and Night Life

My double life started very early. We affected people usually call it "day-night-life". This played itself out roughly as follows:

I was a normal child during the day. I went to school, was inconspicuous, mostly shy, but I got good grades. In sports I was quite bad. But since I was quite good at school, I was respected by my classmates. Nevertheless, I didn't have many friends. This was because my parents gave me a strict religious upbringing, which was characterized by stricter rules than those of many of my classmates. I always had to be home early, and my mother controlled whom I dated. Furthermore, we had hepatitis B as a family. At that time, people were generally not well informed about this disease and so many stayed away from us out of fear. My pediatrician also urged us to follow certain hygiene rules which - as I know it today - served to keep us away from groups, children and friends. In the neighborhood I played outside with a few children. But there were not very many, because they, too, were selected. We had a very large vegetable garden. I had my duties there too and helped after my mother showed me what to do. During vacations I went to stay with relatives and often to children's and youth camps. Some of them were run by my older cousins. I was never alone there, as usually either my siblings or a relative was with me. Our kinship was very close in many ways. So far, it was a pretty inconspicuous life from the outside....

But there was still my night life. I went to bed in the evening and got up in the morning to go to school. What happened on certain nights in the time in-between, I no longer knew in the morning. Sometimes after I went to sleep, my father would wake me up and pick me up. Every now and then I would get a sweet syrup. Today I know that there were drugs in it. Drugs are often given to children in these circles to make them compliant, but also to make sure they don't remember things (like where they were taken).

My father opened the door of the VW bus. I got in. Inside were many tools that he needed as a mechanic in the field. My dad took off my pyjamas, and I got a little white dress, probably made of white linen. Small, fine needles were stuck in all over my body, and it began to bleed. There were blood stains on the dress. With time I knew what this meant. I was being prepared for a ritual. The white dress with the blood stains had a special meaning for the men in the cellar. And because I was allowed to wear it, I also had a special position. I was the chosen one for this evening. I looked behind the racks in the VW bus. And there I suddenly saw eyes watching me. They were the eyes of other children, children my father had hidden in the bus, children from foreign countries. Their skin was sometimes darker than mine. They didn't say a word. We children knew we weren't allowed to talk. They just watched as I was prepared for a ritual...then we left. It was the middle of the night. The drive didn't take very long, and then we were there....

All of us children just looked at each other. But we were not allowed to talk to each other. It seemed to me that we were all holding our breath. We were not alone, but each one was on his own. Isolated within ourselves, preoccupied with ourselves and unable to respond to others. After all, we were forbidden to make contact with each other.

A ritual often went as follows: Some people dressed in black gathered in front of this one chapel in Valeyres-sous-Rances, VD in Switzerland.[8] We children sometimes mingled with them, and sometimes we were taken directly through a side door into the basement of the chapel. If at first still visible among the people, we soon disappeared into the crowd. In front of the chapel there were manholes in the ground. These were opened, and we had to slip in there and slide down until at some point we ended up in the cellar of the chapel. What happened there was what I described at the beginning.[9]

... The children who were sacrificed in the cellar were killed with a knife. I remember how a child was hanging above the fire on a chain, suspended by its feet. One perpetrator took a knife and slashed the child from top to bottom, from the intimate area down to the head.

I will refrain from giving too many gruesome details. My only concern is to bring these terrible things out into the open. I am not writing a horror book here. Because no horror book could even come close to describing what I experienced and saw there. And I know that such things still happen! I can't find the right words to describe the cruelty. I shall probably never find any.

It is the scum of the earth acting here. The vilest and most profoundly evil thing you can possibly imagine, even in your wildest imagination. It is even more evil than the most profoundly evil ... For the perpetrators it is a delectation.

After the cruelty was over, my father took me back home and put me to bed....

Then, in the morning, my day life started, and I went to school. Sometimes I was hurt. Especially in the genital area. I remember how I always took absorbent cotton or a little bandage material from home and changed my bandage during the breaks. Needles were also stuck into my nipples. Then I had an absorbent cotton pad stuck in my sweater until it stopped bleeding. But I was not aware of what I was doing and forgot it immediately afterwards. Repressed. Pushed away...

6. Human Trafficking and Cannibalism

As I mentioned before, I had seen other children in my father's VW bus. But that was not the only place. I remember how he would sometimes take me with him, and we would drive the car to meet my grandfather. My grandparents lived about three hundred kilometers away from us at the time, and we would occasionally meet on the road. I still remember the parking lot where we waited for my grandfather. There were no cell phones back then, and in my memory, we sometimes waited a very long time. In the meantime, I played and picnicked. My grandparents owned a light blue car, and I always waited very impatiently. I loved my grandfather. I was his princess, his first granddaughter, his chosen one. He paid attention to me. I was something special in his eyes, and he made me feel it.

From time to time he brought other children in his car, which he then handed over to my father. I was not allowed to talk to them, I just watched them very shyly as they got from one car into the other.

Once, however, I was allowed to play with a child for a while. But it was a child of my father's, and it was supposed to be given to my grandfather, or so I assume. But it never came to that.

My grandfather was hours late, and so I was given permission to play with the boy. I was about nine years old. We had a ball with us and played soccer. We had fun, talked and laughed together. After a while, my father got angry. He didn't like to see us having fun. He started his car and hit the boy. The boy fell down and my father ran over him with his car in front of my eyes. This happened in broad daylight.

The parking lot where this happened is on a curve on a hill. Not directly on the side of the road. So there was no witness far and wide. Even today, this parking lot is a little hidden. But it has been changed and is better marked. Back then, something like this could happen unseen. The boy was put on the back seat and my grandfather appeared shortly after on that parking lot. What happened after that, I don't remember. But that parking lot remains in my memory as the place where children were exchanged and where a murder happened.

In our house there were three apartments. We lived in the middle, above us an older couple. And now and then young girls. These girls didn't speak French like us and were never outside playing. I remember seeing them very rarely, and there were different ones every time. I was told that they came from another very poor country and that they were very sick. It was explained to me that they were here to get good medical help, to find a good home, and that this couple was taking care of them affectionately. My father then also "affectionately" took care of these girls when the couple was not there.

The neighbor had called me. I went up to his apartment. There, in an adjoining room, was one of those girls lying on the wooden floor. She had long dark hair and was wearing white pantyhose, a white turtleneck sweater, a red plaid skirt and black patent leather shoes. No trace of blood or anything. She was just lying there. She was dead.

Next to her sat the neighbor. He had a large knife in his hand. And a fork. He ordered me to sit down beside the girl opposite him. Then he cut a piece from her right hip and started eating the meat. I was forced to eat it too. I was forced into cannibalism.

I had no choice. The murdered girl was about thirteen years old, I guess. I was about ten and already so well-conditioned and submissive that I did everything I was told.

7. Theory

The experiences I have described so far are part of Satanic ritual abuse. There are different groups. Many of them are interconnected on some level, although not all of them have the same ideology or the same goal. I myself was a victim of a spiritual group, a group that worships Satan and also calls spirits and demons.

7.1 Definition of Ritual Abuse

There is no single definition of ritual abuse. Here are two examples from experts:[10]

Short definition by Brigitte Hahn, Diocese of Münster, Germany (2016):

> According to plan and systematically > sexual, physical and psychological > violent to the point of killing > in the context of an ideology or worldview.

Definition by Thorsten Becker and Ulla Fröhlig (2008):

"Ritual abuse is a grave form of abuse of adults, adolescents and children. The intention is to traumatize the victims. Ritual abuse includes physical, sexual and psychological forms of violence that are carried out in a planned and purposeful manner within the framework of ceremonies. These ceremonies may have an ideological background or may be staged for the purpose of deception and intimidation. Symbols, activities, or rituals used have the appearance of religiosity, magic, or supernatural meanings. The goal is to confuse, frighten, forcibly intimidate, and indoctrinate victims with religious, spiritual, or ideological-religious beliefs. In most cases, ritual abuse experiences are not singular events but occurrences that are repeated over an extended period of time.

As a victim, I call this brainwashing and manipulation through repeated, targeted violence and torture - sexual, physical, psychological, and spiritual - with the goal of making victims completely dependent, so they will carry out orders on command to serve the cult.

7.2 Dissociative Identity Disorder DID

To my mind, extreme, repeated violence can actually hardly be survived emotionally. A person who leads a somewhat regular life and then suddenly experiences such massive recurring violence in his life would, in my opinion, in most cases probably be unable to survive it emotionally. I mean violence that is actually repeated and targeted to break a person.

When a person is exposed to extreme stress, he shuts down his emotions. In other words, he shuts himself down from his everyday thinking. Thus, he can function "normally" even in such stressful situations, although his usual reactions or actions would actually make this impossible. This is also the way for many children who suffer abuse. It is a survival mechanism of the brain is inherent in us humans. I myself consider it a gift from God, without which we should not be able to cope with extreme situations.

But we are not only able to block out emotions in such situations. We humans have the ability to dissociate in order to cope with trauma. We sometimes hear reports of people who have had a serious accident, for example, or whose partner was killed before their eyes. These people sometimes cannot remember any of it for a very long time. This is dissociation. I liken this to a very strong repression. At the moment of the overwhelming event, it serves as protection.

Even children, who are still growing, can repress and forget painful events. This is confirmed by reports from adults who, for example, only remember and can talk about sexual abuse that took place in their childhood years later.

However, this mechanism can also be abused. Through repeated and deliberately inflicted violence, dissociation can be deliberately induced. The perpetrators intend thus to create total dependencies. It is then not only events that are strongly repressed, but so-called dissociations are created. The dissociative disorders reveal much about how a normal brain works. A person who has not had to split off knows about his different roles in life. He may be a husband, a teacher, a father, a son, and an uncle. When he is with his wife, he does not behave in the same way as when he is a teacher standing in front of his students or a son visiting his mother. It is possible for him to take apart the different aspects in his life at will, but then also to put them together again. Since they are only individual aspects of their personalities, people can normally separate them, but can also put them back together again later if necessary.

In dissociation, whole personality splits are formed. I call them other "ego-states". These other "ego-states" often function quite independently of each other. One "ego-state" may not know about another "ego-state". In between these two there is a total - natural or purposefully induced - barrier: amnesia.[11] Why is this so?

For example, an abused adult would normally run away from a tormentor. But it is different with a child, because he or she is dependent on the adult. So a young victim of abuse does not have the possibility of escape in the first place. It cannot run away, at least not outwardly. Therefore, it splits off inwardly. This happens unconsciously. The experiences cause a separation. The brain does not pass on certain information, but goes into the so-called trauma memory.[12] Simplified and roughly explained, it works like this:

In our brain we have different areas. One area is the hippocampus and another is the amygdala. The hippocampus is where everything is sorted and stored as memories. The amygdala is responsible for emotions. And then there is also the trauma memory that I just mentioned, but it is only created in the event of a trauma.

The amygdala, which is responsible for emotions, receives corresponding information. Usually, it then forwards it to the hippocampus, which sorts and stores it. But when something traumatic happens, the amygdala sounds the alarm, and, instead of forwarding the memory to the hippocampus as usual, it sends it directly to the trauma memory. There it is stored unfiltered and unsorted. This results in the separation of the rest of consciousness from the terrible experiences.

The events in the trauma memory are now as if frozen and often - as a protective mechanism - surrounded by an "amnesia membrane". There are EEGs[13] that prove that brains of trauma patients have different structures to those of non-traumatized people.[14] However, the protection does not always work perfectly. Parts of traumatic memories can suddenly come to the surface, that is, into normal memory. The affected person is then usually completely overwhelmed by such flashbacks and cannot relate to them because he or she lacks the rest of the memory. However, the trauma memories can also only gradually reveal themselves if the trauma memory successively releases these memory fragments for conscious processing: namely, when the person is ready to do so many years later.

Once the brain has learned dissociation, this process becomes easier for it after each time. These different "ego-states" - they are also called subpersonalities - thus share the suffering, since the whole fullness of the horror would completely overwhelm an affected person.

What can happen then? The traumatic experiences, as I said, are not passed on in the brain. There are split-offs. These split-offs, or the newly formed "ego-states", have no conscious memory of the real event. This means that the child who lives everyday life (the "day child") cannot consciously remember the period of the trauma or certain actions during the trauma. But the child has nevertheless been there and acted. The subpersonality created at that time is capable of acting, feeling, reacting, and thinking in a certain learned and experienced context. But it is split off from the other experiences, and the child is not able to put it all together again. An adult who has been split as a child may be given the opportunity to find these split-off parts and then learn - e.g. with the help of a good trauma therapy - to put them together; this is then called integration of this part of the personality. By bringing certain memories to the surface and working on them, the dissociation can slowly dissolve. For those affected, this usually requires a great deal of patience, strength, stamina, and, above all, the support of trusting people.

I watched the door handle and was completely hypnotized by it. A feeling of panic arose in me that completely paralyzed me. Would the door handle go down today or not? That was the question I asked myself every time I went to bed. And then suddenly it went down... I froze. My father came into my room. "No!!!" it cried inside me. "I can't! I can't take this!" But I didn't move an inch, nor did I scream for help. I gave myself an order inside to walk away. And I just walked away inwardly. What happened then did not happen to me. It happened to "the other one". The one who was in bed. After all, I had to go back to school in the morning. I had to sleep. I couldn't be active at night, and certainly not let myself be raped. So I delegated it, and "the other one" had to take over. The next morning I always got up, had breakfast with my father and then went to school. In bad weather, he sometimes drove me there on his way to work....

What happened? In this one unbearable moment for me, I had simply formed another "I" in my imagination, and this then endured the rape. Finally, I myself was not able to endure it. Surely I couldn't be raped by my father during the night and in the morning take the lovingly prepared breakfast from him? How does that fit together? Not at all! Therefore, I was very glad that "another" was responsible for the night and I could then take over the day. That was quite pleasant for me.

I was also forced to teach smaller children what I had already learned myself. Namely, to be sexually abused. To endure sexual abuse. In these circles, one is told, "DYING MUST BE LEARNED." Dying includes massive sexual violence. The earlier you learn it and survive it, the stronger you are then when you die. For this reason, I was trained to do it to others myself. But since I was a child, and at the same time I was also raped over and over again, that didn't work for me at all either. How, pray tell, can a girl of about eight prepare babies for sexual abuse? How does something like that work? Is it even possible? The sad answer is: Yes, it can! And the perpetrators, among whom are scientists, psychiatrists, psychologists, physicians, and other highly educated people, know exactly that this works. They misuse this knowledge and thus specially create such other "ego-states". They deliberately inflict trauma so that a child dissociates. For this they use the whole science of developmental psychology.

At that moment, when I had to do it - I could not actually do it, but was nevertheless urged to do it under the most massive threats - I had formed an old, ugly, creepy, fat, evil man in my imagination. This was a man who could do it. This was a man who was certainly capable of performing such atrocities. So I left again, and the man took over my job. So I was out of it. I didn't know about anything. As a girl, how could I possibly know what a disgusting evil man was doing? I couldn't. I'm a kid. And he's an adult. This is how the different "ego-states" came about. The perpetrators knew this and had encouraged it. And the perpetrators triggered these other "ego-states" every time they needed them.[15] I had become absolutely dependent in this way.

Individual psychology teaches that you should approach people with your concerns, knowing that you cannot force anyone... I believed that for a long time. But in this case it is not true. Or is it? They could not force the little girl that I was. And yet they had forced me. By splitting me up!

Now I have reported two quite different "ego-states". One had nothing to do with the other. The girl who had to endure the sexual abuse from her father at that time had had nothing to do with the old, perverted man. The two did not know each other. And the everyday girl who went to school didn't know the ugly man either. So different "ego-states" lived in my body, and each of them then took over life and action when it was his or her turn and the perpetrators wanted it that way. For this reason, later, when I was grown up and trained, the following could happen:

Frozen, I sat on the toilet lid and stared at the knife that my coach and husband had put in my hands. Far away, as if wrapped in absorbent cotton, I heard him: berating me and telling me how stupid I was. He said that I was no longer good for anything and that the only thing I was still capable of doing was hurting myself with this knife. He ordered me to show it to him. I didn't want to, so he continued to insult me. Until I did. Until I obeyed him. I stabbed my arm with the knife, inflicting deep wounds. In the process, I felt no physical pain. Everything inside me was just empty. No sensation, no feeling, no thought, nothing. When he saw the blood start to spurt, he took the knife away from me again and said very dryly, "See? I knew that you were only capable of such things!"

After that I went to the physician. Alone in my car. The wound needed stitches. I knew that. I felt like a robot. I just did what had to be done without thinking.

Different parts of me had taken over this task. One part took over the pain. I as an external person did not feel any pain. But as an outsider I was also a nurse, and she decided to go to the physician. Another part - a childish part that was trained not to think for itself - had obeyed my husband.

My marriage to this man had also been arranged by the cult at that time. I strongly suspect that he himself had also been a victim first. His father was a cult member. As an adult woman, I was repeatedly abducted by both of them to Urdorf in the canton of Zurich to a room in the Catholic church to be tortured with electric shocks and other torture methods.

7.3 Dissociation in Hollywood Films

In movies, the topic of dissociation is often misused or at least completely misrepresented. People are shown who behave in a friendly and inconspicuous manner during the day and suddenly behave like unfeeling monsters at night. This is not the case with a person with Dissociative Identity Disorder, as different parts act here. However, I certainly believe that a person is capable of consciously behaving differently. Sometimes lovingly, sometimes as a monster. In dissociation, on the other hand, the different parts serve the victim primarily for survival. That is how it was with me. One part, which virtually bore the pain for me so that I could go on living, was not dangerous. Another part, which was trained by the perpetrators to do bad things, was dangerous. But it was not dangerous in an uncontrolled way. The perpetrators had to bring this about by applying an appropriate trigger. It was as if I had a full house behind me with different rooms where all kinds of other "I's" were locked up. The perpetrators had the keys or the codes to get these other "I's" out, not I. I myself didn't know anything about it for decades. Therefore, people with DID are not dangerous. It is the abusers, the traffickers, the abusers that are dangerous. People who have the keys and abuse people to form parts of them into robots.

7.4 The Goal of the Perpetrators

I grew up among Illuminati. [16] People of the sect "Adorateurs du Soleil" and some members of my family belonged to it. Illuminati are spiritually oriented and pursue the goal of "illumination", in other words "enlightenment". In these circles, hierarchy plays a very important role. There are different levels that can be reached. The goal of the perpetrators was to take me as far as possible in this system.

I have been asked why these people do such things. Good question. When the perpetrators expose their own offspring to these cruel methods from an early age, there is always the same motive behind it: namely, to create total dependencies so that the victims can be used at any time for their goals and purposes.

Behind the Illuminati are Mafia-like structures. I have also already read that certain groups actually join forces with the Mafia; likewise, cooperation with neo-Nazi groups is known. Just like the Mafia, they have loyal people who are active in politics, the police, the judiciary, industry, academia, and so on. Thus, they form a powerful underground organization. They need slaves for pornography, paedo-crime, human trafficking, arms smuggling, drug smuggling and sales, people who secretly carry codes (military codes) or smuggle illegal funds into organizations. Paramilitary groups are trained and educated from infancy. And contract killers and assassins are trained.

The perpetrators themselves (and I am talking about the perpetrators who consciously chose to do this - who have a perpetrator's heart!) usually don't get their hands dirty. It is the abused and trained children - who would suspect a seven-year-old girl of smuggling weapons? And later it is the adults abused and dissociated in childhood.

With this massive abuse, one becomes a kind of robot inside, with feelings split off, emotions switched off, simply functioning on command. Feelings are not allowed. One has no needs, one does not know them. These "empty" children and people are then trained and used as desired. Of course, a large amount of money goes to pay the clients and executors. But not the slaves. I have never seen or received anything from this large amount of money.

With the children who are sexually abused and tortured there, child pornography films are created, among other things. These films are offered among the interested parties for a lot of money. "Snuff videos" are also known. These are videos that are ordered on special request by special, anonymous customers. In the "snuff videos" one can see children or adults being abused, tortured and brought to the end on film. "Brought to the end" means they are killed on camera. I was a witness to this.

A neighbor a little further away had a lion as a pet. In the past, that was probably allowed. We children were then allowed to watch the feeding of the predator from time to time. However, I would also be brought there to witness a child being locked in the lion's cage and attacked by the animal. The child was often killed. The whole thing was filmed.

There is child trafficking going on. They need their "goods" from somewhere. The children they abuse are not considered human beings. They are just a commodity. I met other children from different countries when I was a child. At that time, of course, I had no idea where all these children came from.

Another source are children from their own ranks who are not registered. It works like this: They split off other "ego-states" and thus create personality parts, which in turn give birth to children for the cult. In therapist circles these victims are known as "breeders". This also happened to me. I gave birth to children of whom I know neither the present whereabouts nor what happened to them, because they were taken away from me immediately after birth.

As a victim of ritual abuse, one is a slave. Every slave has a trader. The trader is usually a caregiver. At least that was the case with me, and I have heard similar accounts from other victims. This trader makes sure that the inner "ego-states" are trained and that the barrier of amnesia remains. The trader is a kind of "educator" who always stays by the side of the sufferer and plays out a normal, beautiful world for them in everyday life. However, they know exactly which other "ego-states" each victim has inside and how these can be accessed with the help of triggers.

In this way, those affected are turned into robots. One might even appropriately say, they are programmed much like computers, using various programs that can be retrieved with codes. The victim himself is totally unaware. The victim live his normal life, the outside life. In this book, I no longer call it a normal life, but an outside life, because it was not a normal life. It was a "fake" life. To prevent me from realizing the truth, it was covered with a kind of shell that looked like a normal life.

Programming a child, a human being, starts with training it to do everything on its own, without help. It must learn to be strong. If it is weak, it is punished. For example, the child is put in an empty room with no light, no food and no water. If it cries and asks for help, it is punished. Only when it is quiet and obedient, asking for nothing more, is it taken out and given food and drink. The trainers say: "WHAT DOESN'T KILL YOU MAKES YOU STRONGER". According to this motto, the children are educated and slowly programmed step by step. Another very important step is that children must learn not to have needs. A child must not be hungry, must not be thirsty, must not be cold, must not be hot. It must not be sad, it must not be angry, it must not be afraid. It must not be tired either. The children are locked up and massively punished when they have a need and even more when they express it. They are rewarded only when they successfully stop expressing sensations. This torture is repeated over and over again until the child is completely apathetic. A child will do anything to avoid suffering. And as a child one knows very soon that there is only this one way to survive: obey! The only other way out is death.

For this system to work, many helpers are needed. Helpers with rituals, teachers, trainers, punishing agents, childcare workers, educators, scientists (especially for monitoring human behavior), couriers, informers, etc. They train their people and need, among other things, the method of mind control for this known as MK-Ultra.

7.5 Mind Control: MK-Ultra

"MKULTRA (also MK ULTRA, pronounced M-K-Ultra) was an extensive CIA secret research program on mind control capabilities. It ran from 1953 to the 1970s, in the Cold War. The goal of the project was to develop a perfect truth serum for use in interrogating Soviet spies, as well as to explore the possibilities of mind control parts. The work also overlapped with research on biological weapons by other U.S. programs.

The program included, among other things, thousands of human experiments in which unsuspecting test subjects, often randomly selected from among hospital patients and prison inmates, were subjected to highly potent hallucinogenic drugs such as LSD and mescaline without their knowledge. Numerous subjects suffered the most severe physical and psychological damage during the experiments, some even dying."[17]

Not mentioned here is the fact that, in addition to drugs, the aforementioned technique of personality splitting was also used. Several MK-Ultra survivors reported this before the "Advisory Committee on Human Radiation Experiments" appointed by President Clinton (1995), but without these allegations being clarified. The "K" in MK-Ultra is supposed to stand for "Kontrolle" in German (possibly also MK for "human control") to honor the human experiments conducted under National Socialism. The fact that numerous MK-Ultra survivors claim that the "Angel of Death of Auschwitz" Josef Mengele had a leading role in the project under the pseudonym Dr. Green and also tortured and abused them himself fits in with this.

MK-Ultra programming was allegedly discontinued in the 70s. In my experience, however, this is not true. It is being continued and further developed in the underground - allegedly under the name of "Project Monarch". I was a victim of this.

8. Exam Passed!

During my childhood, I underwent various exams. The children are carefully selected and must pass exams for this. As a rule, only the strongest survive. These exams are held in so-called children's camps or under the guidance of a trainer.

When I was about six years old, I was taken to a summer camp in Belgium. It was held at Amerois Castle. I remember there were about ten to fifteen children there. We gathered in a large, empty room. The room seemed very gloomy to me; there was a lot of dark wood. I noticed large windows. But one couldn't see outside.

We children had to strip naked there. We were all given a pair of flat, brown-beige shoes and had to put them on. Then we went into the forest. There was a hunting game. There were many deer, dogs and hunters. The role of us kids was to play the deer. We were chased naked through the forest. I remember being terrified. So I ran for my life like a deer.

In French, a deer is called: une biche. I grew up speaking French, so I ran like a biche. A "biche" can also run much faster than a six-year-old girl. There, too, I formed a "biche" inside and ran for my life.

After I survived this hunt, I received a new pet name from my dealer, that is, from my father: "ma biche", my deer. This was at the same time a trigger for many years after I had passed this exam. "Ma biche" (my doe) was intimate, affectionate and meant mysterious togetherness, in a perverse sense, of course. But that's what it is. Thus, a perverted love connection was created. In the past, the word biche was also used as a verb. So bicher quelqu'un meant kissing someone in a familiar way. Ça biche meant: it goes well between two people; Ça ne biche pas meant: it does not go well. This old jargon was used between my father and me. It was our perverted intimate language. And so, after passing my exams, as a fresh "biche" I had to "bicher" with my father every now and then. And if it did not "bicher" at times the way he wanted it to, I was punished and the "biche program" was run again until he thought I was good enough in it!

So I ran like a "biche" through this forest. I was not alone. The other children were also there somewhere. I heard gunshots and children screaming in the forest. I was terrified when suddenly I saw a blond boy who was about my age. He had flaxen hair. The little boy, who called himself Marc, showed me a big pile of leaves and told me to hide in there. So I did. In this forest there were often holes or small pits. They were full of leaves. I dived into a pile of leaves. That was my salvation.

I don't know how long I lay in there. It was broad daylight, and I crawled out of my hiding place only later, sometime when it was dark. My right thigh hurt badly and blood was running down my thigh. I had been shot. I was in pain, cold, and panicked. Eventually I managed to get back to the castle. I stood in the courtyard for a while, and after a while they saw me and let me in. I remember seeing the then- princess - I'll call her Marie-Hélène Delacroix here - (over the years I met her again and again). When I was in the castle, I saw Marc again. I encountered none of the other children any more. I didn't know where they were. In that big hall where we had first met, all I saw was a pile of brown and beige shoes. That was all...

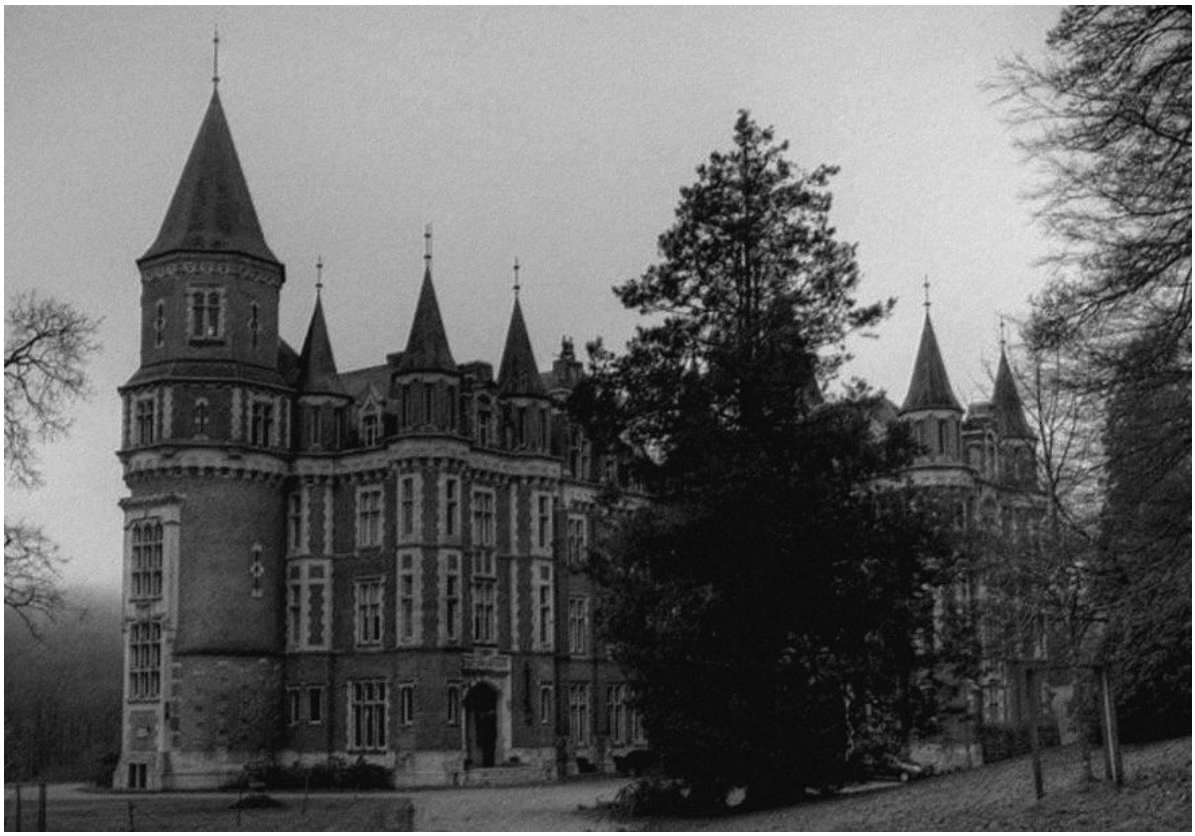
My survival was celebrated, as was Marc's. The celebration consisted of sex. Sex with adults. Sex with animals, and then finally sex between me and Marc. A rod was stuck into his penis, and he was ordered to penetrate me. In this way we were bound to one another.

We were both injured. I had this bullet wound. He was also in pain, but I don't remember any exact details. There were a few people around us watching. In my memory there were three people. The princess, Marie-Hélène, and also a man and another woman. The test was over!

I was to see the man again and again over the next few years. It was René, the cult leader, who would later become my dealer and instructor, into whose quarters we moved about a year after the child hunt.

In this state of pain and complete confusion, I was asked if I would do everything they expected of me in the future. In return, they would give me life. I would not die. So I vowed to do whatever they asked of me in the future. The main thing was that the pain would subside. The main thing was that I could go on living.

As a reward, they decided to give me and the boy an education. We were chosen to become mother and father. They had a plan for us that I should not discover until many years later. My training to become the "Mother of Darkness" had been initiated.[18] The "Mother of Darkness" is the third level in the Illuminati on the female side. There are six levels in total.



Château des Amerois

9. Training for the "Mother of Darkness

Very soon I was allowed to "enjoy" the training to become the "Mother of Darkness". Sorry... Sometimes it is easier for me to write these unbelievably horrible things sarcastically. I was about to write "inhuman" things. But "inhuman" is not true at all!!! After all, it is humans who do these evil things. So... should I now say human instead of inhuman?

However... in any case, this training was imposed on me to serve their purposes. For that, I had to be trained very well.

The perpetrators know exactly what they are doing. They look at each child very closely and assess its strengths and weaknesses. They record every move, know every desire, every qualification, every resource, every dream, every nightmare. They know how a child functions and then they re-shape it with its God-given abilities and possibilities to serve their purposes.

The desire to become a mother someday was in me from a very early age. At the age of about six, when I was in first grade, I told my friend on a school trip that I really wanted to be a mother someday. Afterwards, I showed her in a make-believe game what I would be like later as a mommy. Of course, the perpetrators knew about this wish. They fulfilled it for me in many ways. I was trained to be a mother, to be the "Mother of Darkness".

9.1 Looking after Children

I loved being with children. I loved to take care of children, and it was my desire to create a place of security and love for the little ones. I pursued this desire in my outside life. I was a childminder, offered lunch for school children from time to time. In my professional life, I worked for a while as a counselor in an emergency facility for young people. A great inner wish was to found another emergency facility for adolescents, and so I started to study to become a certified psychological coach with a focus on education. Among other things, I attended further training courses on counseling adolescents and thus planned my future.

But there was still the other, the repressed dark side. I remember how I was assigned to the chapel basement as a children's group supervisor at a very early age. I had to make sure that the children were quiet. Not a word was allowed to be spoken, hardly any voluntary movement was permitted. The children had to obey if I only looked at them with my eyes. That also worked. I made sure that there was peace and order. I also had to choose which of the children would be next for torture or rape. This was part of my training.

9.2 Child Abuse

My desire to spend a lot of time with children was fulfilled by the perpetrators. Outside life had been rather difficult. We were outsiders as a family. We were German-Swiss in French-speaking Switzerland, which was not a walk in the park at the time. We were often called the "sales boches", which means "dirty Germans", and were also occasionally asked to go back to "our Nazi country".

But the perpetrators made sure that my wish came true anyway. I was together with children, also to "prepare" or instruct them for sexual abuse. I had to make them into model sex slaves, just like myself. Training to be a sex slave starts very early. Little babies are prepared for it by having fingers stuck into their vaginas, whereby the vagina is gradually stretched over time, so that a penis can penetrate as soon as possible without leaving any traces. Or they are given a penis to suck on instead of the mother's breast. Small baby penises are "trained" to become erect penises.

To accomplish this task, I was mainly taken abroad. Most of the children I had to abuse for this purpose had been placed in Amerois Castle in Belgium, in basement rooms of the Dagger Complex (NSA) in Darmstadt (Germany) and in the White House in Washington. One of the experts who supported this book project pointed out to me the following: There is a torch in the symbol of the Dagger Complex; the torch (flame of enlightenment) is considered an Illuminati symbol. This torch crosses with a lightning bolt on the Dagger Complex emblem. And cult survivor Kerth Barker cites the lightning bolt - as well as the torch - as an Illuminati mind control trigger and amplifier.[19] Survivor Arizona Wilder also claims that Satanic rituals are also performed on U.S. military bases. Whether therefore the name component "Dagger" refers to the ritual dagger used in such sacrifices, I cannot say...

9.3 Child Sacrifice

From a young age, I wanted to please God. In the Bible, it is written of King David that he was a man after God's own heart. I wanted to become a woman after God's heart. I wanted the same approval from God that David had received. At least that was how I understood it at that time.

To please God (their god, Satan), the perpetrators took me one step further in my education. In the perpetrator circles in which I grew up, special emphasis was placed on demonizing everything Christian. Thus, certain Satanists "sacrifice" humans to their god, Satan, just as the Israelites sacrificed animals in the Old Testament. They take the Lord's Supper with blood as innocent as possible - because it is often taken from children - and consume the children's bodies. In this way, they mock the communion of Christians, who take it with wine and bread to commemorate the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Benjamin:

It happened at the cemetery in Rances VD, Switzerland. I must have been about seven years old at that time. I was probably picked up at night. Anyway, I remember it was dark when I was standing in the small cemetery at the upper right corner where children are buried. A knife was put in my hand. My father and my dealer, René, the cult leader of "Les Adorateurs du Soleil", were standing there. I caught sight of a little boy about four years old with blond hair. A woman was standing next to me. I could see only half of her face. She was wearing what I remember to be a purple scarf that she was somehow hiding in. Her hair was tousled, as if she had just gotten out of bed and hadn't combed through it yet. She wore light blue jeans that didn't quite reach her ankles. She didn't look at me, didn't make a sound, and I didn't notice any facial expression on her face.

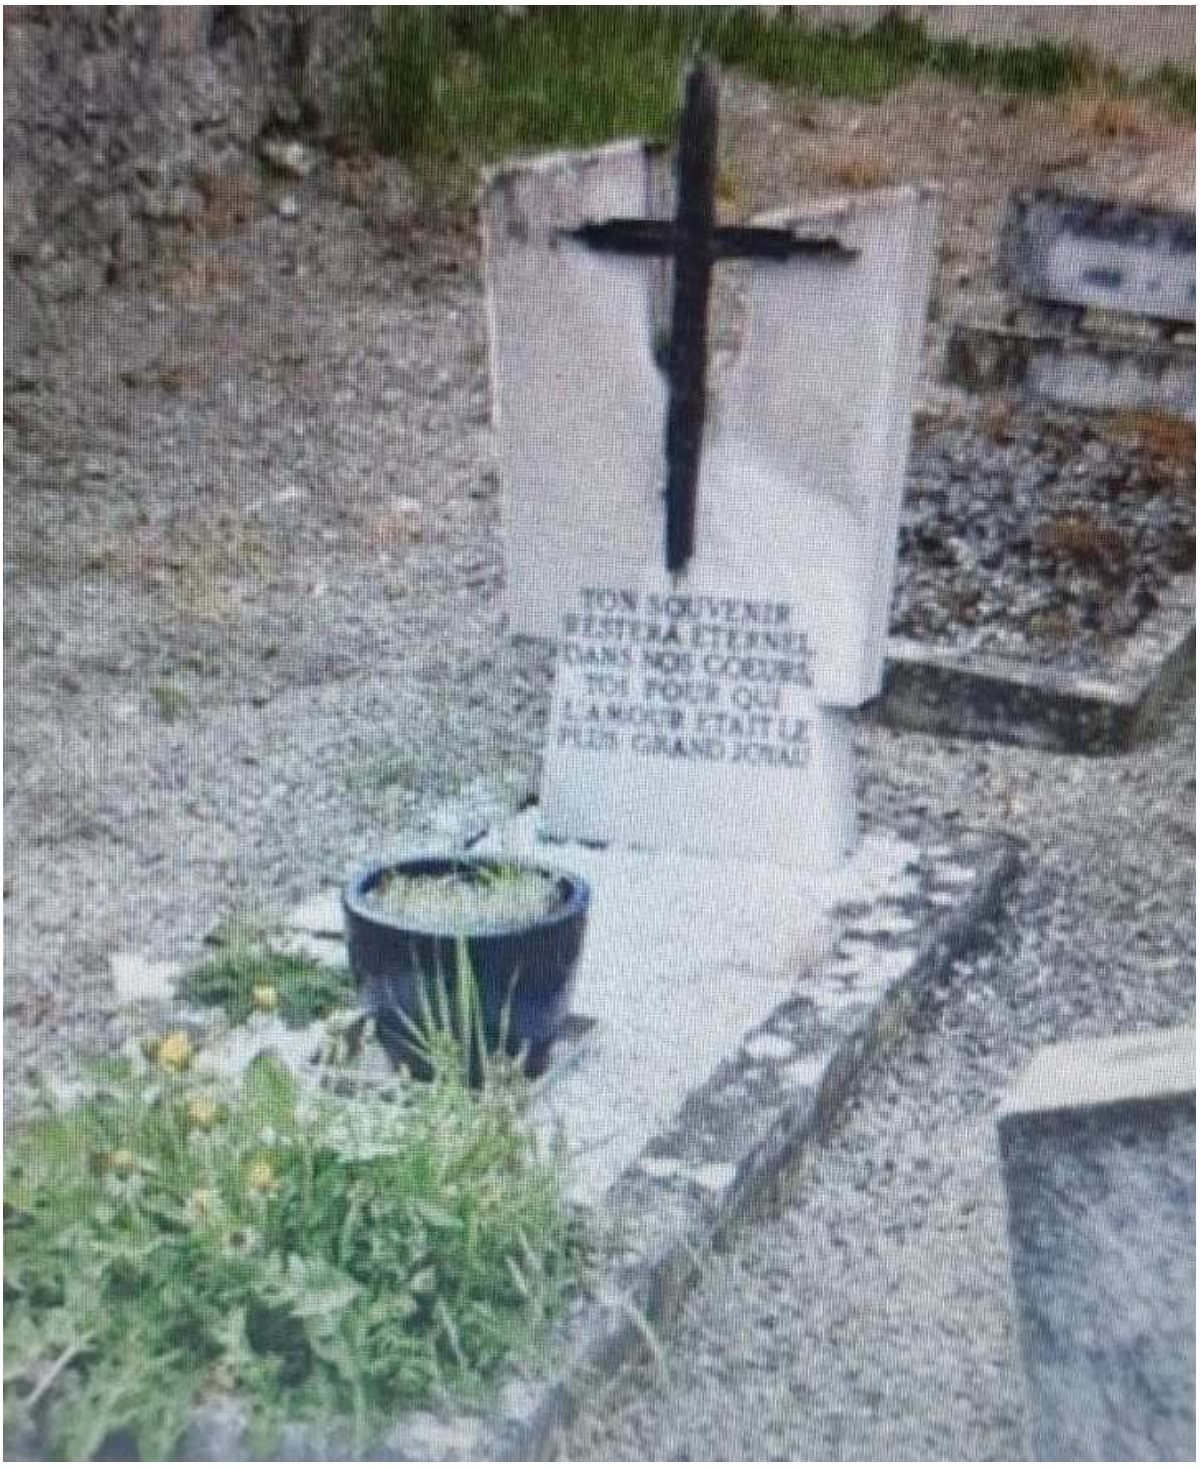
The boy was facing me. I noticed his glassy eyes looking straight at me. I looked at my father and I looked at the cult leader. The look on my father's face told me exactly what I had to do. I knew I had to do it; otherwise, they would kill my mother or my siblings. I also had the impression that the boy knew just as well what was coming next. I remember how it happened very quickly. I had to cut the boy's throat. After that, other people joined in. In my memory, they were all wearing dark clothes. Some wore robes. The blood of the young boy was collected in a bowl. Everyone had drunk from

it. I had to do the same. After that, I was ordered to undress and to spread this blood on me. And then another ritual was performed on me with a dead person. On the left side of the cemetery near the small wall. I was forced to perform various sexual acts on this dead person. This was my ritual of silence.

I knew that if I refused, I too should end up in such a coffin. And keep silent forever. That's what the perpetrators did sometimes. Put children in coffins and bury them. I have also experienced this. After a certain time - I have no idea how long it took in each case - one is taken out again. Or not... I have seen them bury children alive. I have no idea what happened to them. I can only imagine.

On this grave, where all this happened, a tombstone was erected. There is no name on it. However, there is a saying engraved on it that says how important love was to the person.... On the grave there is only the name of my direct neighbor who owned the gravestone company. At that time, however, he was not my immediate neighbor. Only about a year after this ritual he moved in with his company next to us.

Children are buried in this corner of the cemetery.
This is where Benjamin was sacrificed.



Gravestone without a name. Here the ritual of silence was performed with sexual acts on the dead. The inscription on the tomb reads: "Your memory will remain eternally in our hearts - for you love was the greatest jewel".

9.4 Children's Communions

I do not remember how many child sacrifices I had to take part in until I finished my "training". However, I still remember one very clearly. It took place in Six-Fontaines VD in Switzerland. There is a hill with a few trees.

I was taken there at dusk. I was wearing light yellow pyjamas with pink or red dots or maybe little flowers at the time. It doesn't matter. Anyway, it was bright yellow. On a large flat stone lay a tanned girl with long black hair, a girl I knew. Her name was Jasmin. Both of us were the same age: about eight years old.

However, we children usually knew nothing about each other. No names either. Or then they were false names. I, for example, was often called Lys.

So Jasmin lay naked on the stone and around her stood various people dressed in black, dark red and blue robes. The man standing at the top by her head was stabbing her throat.

Often the blood of sacrificed children was collected in bowls. Afterwards they drank the blood and we children who were present had to do the same. Sometimes meat was served to us afterwards. The flesh of dead children, which was then consumed and shared as a "body". In this way I had to celebrate with Satanists their "communion". The body and blood had to be as innocent as possible. A Satanic supper for the glory of Satan, their god.

Next to this sacrifice site in the forest is a collection point where trash from the forest is burned. I have memories of how big fires were made early in the morning. It might have been at this place. However, I am not quite sure. Next to such a fire I was put in a cage and had to watch men throwing body parts of children into the big fire. Arms, legs, etc... I can't say anymore if Jasmin was burned there right after the sacrifice or if her body was disposed of in another way. But I remember very well seeing my father throwing children's body parts into the fire, laughing and dancing, while I watched. I cannot say for certain whether they were real body parts or not, either, because perpetrators also like to stage cruelties, simply to traumatize children.

Perpetrators dispose of bodies in a variety of ways. I am aware that some are cremated, others are disposed of in acid barrels and then dissolve. Then there is also the method of burying a murdered person under an official corpse. Body parts are sometimes fed to wild animals or simply burned with another corpse in the crematorium. The perpetrators are well organized and well networked to cover up their criminal activities.

Jasmin was sacrificed at this place. This is a recent photo and not from when it happened.

9.5 Childcare

Like every young person, I also thought about what I wanted to be when I grew up. I thought about various professions, but at some point I had the desire to become a physician.

Once again, the perpetrators complied with this wish. When I was about 14 years old, I was no longer taken to the cellar of the chapel to experience torture myself. No, I was taken there to care for children who had experienced torture. Sometimes I was even picked up by a police car with blue lights and taken to crime scenes. I know that, after torture, some children are simply killed or left to die. Others are "nursed for a specific purpose", meaning they are cared for to the point where little or nothing of the torture can be seen, so they can hold themselves up straight again to meet the standards for the next abuse. I was hired to provide this type of care. I was not allowed to care for all children. Only the "chosen ones". I did not have much material and had to make do with what was available to me. I remember very clearly how I swore to myself in that cellar at the sight of those children that one day I would come back as a doctor and free them all! I also remember the anger I felt deep inside. But anger had no place. Anger, sadness, fear and pain were not allowed to be shown. If it did happen, one was immediately and severely punished. So we learned not to show emotions. In this way, we could avoid further pain.

Not only did I have to take care of other children, but of myself as well. I was soon very good at that, and so I helped to cover up what I had done to myself and to other children.

However, I did not become a physician in life in the outside world. They had a different plan. However, I still followed my desire to be trained in the medical field in my daily life to some extent.

9.6 Child Trafficking

Children learn from their parents. They copy them. My family was involved in child trafficking. So automatically I was, too. I learned the cover-up maneuvers in child trafficking through watching my family, but I was also taught it through playing- playing with dolls. Like many little girls, I loved to play with dolls. I would take the dolls from one place to another, hide them behind the bed or somewhere, and then pretend to be another very surprised mom who found a doll behind the bed. From the outside, this doll-play probably looked quite harmless.

Later, the perpetrators trained me to transport children from one place to another. As soon as I could drive a car, they always made me buy a station wagon. With certain triggers, they were able to force me to quickly pull into a parking lot when I was driving somewhere. There, a child was loaded into the trunk, which I then took to another location. So I had to continue the "family business", which had been run by my grandfather and father, with a dissociated "ego-state", which the perpetrators knew.

Suddenly, when I was long grown up and perfectly conditioned, I saw a ball roll into the garage. I was at a couple's friend's house where I had deposited a few things of mine and was going through my cardboard boxes. I was alone in the house. The driveway inclined quite steeply. And there was suddenly this ball. I picked it up, walked up to the street with the thought of returning it to the owner. That's when I caught sight of this dark car, this black station wagon with the dark tinted windows. The window went down. In the car sat a man with black sunglasses. He made a hissing sound. Immediately I knew I had to follow him. I got into the vehicle. In the back seat was a little boy. I did not know him. We didn't have a conversation. The man, whom I had by now recognized as one of my former dealers, drove the car and did not say a word to me. We came to a village where I had once lived, to this very one house where I had an apartment. The man stopped in front of the underground garage where I parked my car at that time. So I knew how to get in there. And I also still knew cars from former neighbors; I still knew certain people who lived there. So I took the boy by the hand, went to the front gate, then to a car of a person I knew, and told the boy to get into the unlocked trunk of that vehicle. After that, the dealer drove me back to the friendly couple and I continued sorting my things....

When I was back in the garage standing next to my cardboard boxes, I no longer knew anything about all that had happened before. I had lost a little time, but I did not notice. I just thought I was unfocused, and my work was not progressing as quickly as I should have liked. My physical absence was not noticed by anyone either, because the couple wasn't home, and none of the neighbors knew me anyway. Moreover, I was not gone for too long. The perpetrator knew about my dissociation and about the one specific trigger. He had used me to bring this child there. I do not know where it came from or where it went. I just had to do that part of the job. That is how child trafficking can work. They use people to smuggle, to kill, to abuse. These people are just tools for them, and subsequently, they have no idea what they did. If they were questioned, they would know nothing. If I had been questioned earlier, I should have claimed that I had never, ever participated in such activities, not to lie, but because I only perceived my life on the outside world. And in my outside life I did not do these things. I could have argued very convincingly that I was never involved in such things. They could have hooked me up to a lie detector, and nothing would have come out, because they would have only questioned me in my life in the outside world, not these "ego-states" that I had no idea about, but were there nonetheless. These split-offs were locked up and only on call for the perpetrators. But they were there nonetheless. That is why my hands and my feet had to do such cruel deeds.

Why do I remember it today?

Suddenly I had a flashback: I saw myself driving past the house where I used to live in a car. I remembered wondering which of the former neighbors still lived there. I remembered looking around the house for signs (some garden furniture, a curtain, a plant) that were familiar. This was to find out which former neighbors still lived there and in which apartments new tenants had moved in. This sudden memory shook me. Because since I had moved away from there (and I had moved very far away!), I had never been back to that village. I had had no reason to return. So from where did this memory come? I searched my memory! I realized that I must have had a big gap in my memory there. Since a flashback is a memory that comes from the trauma memory into the normal memory, at that moment it is like a Polaroid photo that was just taken, very sharp and with all the details. I looked around internally - that is, in this "photo" - and perceived the young boy on my left. And then the driver... and so it went on until I had reconstructed everything again and had it in conscious memory.

9.7 Having One’s Own Children

Even at a very young age, I already knew that I wanted to be a mother one day. I remember how sometimes a feeling of joy came over me and I already told my future children how much I loved them. I prayed for my children, even though they were not even there yet, even though I was nowhere near the age to have a steady partner or even get married, let alone have children. What I did not know at the time, however, because I had just split it off: I had already been a mother for a long time....

I got my first period when I was just under twelve years old. I was physically developed very early as a child and had already reached the size I have today as an adult woman. A woman who was destined to become a mother should also be a mother. This is what the perpetrators had decided about my life. I was to become "Mother of Darkness" and have a family of my own in the process. And I did become a mother. I had my first child, a son, when I was thirteen years old.

My role in human trafficking served to protect such crimes. Having children within the Satanic cult also serves to cover up the cruel crimes against girls and boys. I was a girl who gave birth to children as a "Mother of Darkness" for the cult. I have also seen other girls who were pregnant. Many of these children do not officially exist. They are not registered. They are used for the cult. Either they are abused or sacrificed. Or they are used for study purposes. It is known how such studies and experiments used to be conducted on Jews by Dr. Josef Mengele. This is still being done today. Children are used for studies to see how much a person can endure. Satanists who murder children prefer to drink the blood of an infant who has been tortured. They say that the blood of tortured babies contains a high level of adrenaline. If this adrenaline is taken, it serves to strengthen, to preserve youthfulness, and it promises a long, healthy life. I have also witnessed the removal of organs from living babies. I also know that there is an illegal organ trade behind it, which is carried out by very highly respected people, including celebrities. But now back to my first son:

It was taken from me when I was about six months pregnant. This is common in these circles. It's a stage where you don't see the pregnancy so clearly yet. And the baby can survive. I had to give birth to him in the chapel. I don't even remember why I went into labor, but I assume that I was under the influence of medication.

Medications and drugs are very often used to make victims compliant for whatever is planned for them.

I still remember giving him the name Louis. After that, I never saw him again. At least not consciously.

And so it continued throughout my life. When the perpetrators had determined my career in the cult, I was brought together with Marc. Over the years, we were brought together from time to time. I remember how later I also had to meet him at highway rest stops. Each time, our task was to have sex with each other in rituals. That was also part of the training program. It was started at that time after the child hunt and supervised by the cult people so that this cult relationship could continue.

In the course of my life, I became pregnant several times. My body was also abused for this purpose. The cult people took care of my weight regulation so that the pregnancy would remain hidden. Either I had to eat or I had to starve. This led to me developing an eating disorder. My relationship with food was totally disturbed. If pregnancy was imminent, I had to eat. If not, I was not allowed to eat, and there were times when I was put in basements to starve. I had to learn both during my cult life. To eat and to starve. There was no enjoyment. My body was formed in such a way that pregnancy was hardly noticeable from the outside. After the sixth month of pregnancy, they took the child away from me. In the case of the last child, which I probably had to conceive with Marc, I was over forty years old.

I came across a contact platform on the internet and talked there online with a few people. In this way I came into contact with a man. His favorite animal was the black panther with green eyes. I had to laugh inside and thought that this black panther must be following me.

Shortly before, I had dreamed of a black panther. This dream was so impressive that I had told it to some friends.

My correspondence with this man very soon took on a much greater depth, and we soon realized that we both had an inkling of Satanism and the occult. This topic connected us immediately. As convinced Christians, we wanted to fight against this and enlighten people. We got to know each other, and a friendship developed. We got along very well for a while. At least, this was what I perceived, and I honestly believed it to be true. Both of us were cautious with this friendship because we didn't know whether there might be a Satanist plan behind it. Sometimes I was very skeptical about him and wondered who he really was. And I know that he also wondered the same about me. Well, sometime later I was shocked to find out that this question was very much justified. Because this man had actually been "fed" to me by the perpetrators. One might also say the other way around: I was "fed" to him. But we did not know that at that time! He was Marc, whom I had met as a child during the child hunt and with whom I was brought together afterwards by the cult.

But that was not enough! When we met in the outside world, I was not yet aware that I still had "ego-states" inside me that could continue to be used by perpetrators. I did know some things about Dissociative Identity Disorder as a result of severe trauma. But I thought I was lucky to have been spared from it, because I perceived myself as a stable and strong personality.

That was true, as far as the personality part of the life in the outside world is concerned. But it is precisely this that poses a very great danger. The stronger the personality of the life in the outside world, the stronger the danger of dissociation. In addition, in my case I like to be autonomous at the core. The perpetrators have noticed this and have promoted and strengthened the autonomy of the personality parts. In Marc's case, I had a personality part that was "married" to him at the time and trained to act as a "Mother of Darkness" with him, of course, all in a dissociated state.

For my part, I prayed that God would point out to me if there was still something there that I did not know about. He did this by unexpectedly sending professionals my way who could make me aware of the problem with the dissociative, but still partly trained parts. Then came a shock! I had been dissociative, I knew that. But the very worst thing was to realize that the perpetrators could still access me. And I thought everything was going pretty well!

Gradually, one by one, more barriers of dissociation dissolved, and I attained more and more access to my memories. Then I was shocked to discover that I had been pregnant again (as I said, at the age of over forty) and had given birth to a girl shortly before! This memory turned my whole life in the outer world upside down again.

My child was taken away from me by the cult! I had given birth to this girl when I was about six months pregnant. I remember how, shortly before, perpetrators again had access to me, and I had to come together with this Marc. I had realized with horror that we had known each other for years, he was my husband in the cult, or one of my husbands, because polygamy is practised in it. He was one of the men with whom I had to conceive children for the cult. The black panther with the green eyes was a trigger that was set for me in the cult. That was why I had responded to Marc's ad on the internet. I actually believed I did not know him. I only noticed that we got along well. We had also argued with each other and reconciled, as if we had been married for thirty years... which was true in a sense, though in a way that neither of us had ever thought of or wanted.

Pregnancies for the cult have come to an end. The truth has set me free. A hard, very hard truth. It almost knocked me out. But I wanted to know. I had expressed my desire that God show me everything that was important and necessary. I never, ever in a million years thought that there were so many cruel things in my life! Where are these children today? Where is my son Louis? Where is my little girl whom I gave birth to last? I do not know even now. I still feel the pain, but I trust that this too will come to light.

9.8 Ritual Celebration of the Illuminati

The celebration and thus the completion of the training for the "Mother of Darkness" was drawing near. This Satanic celebration took place in April, 1987. Satanic celebrations take place in April and are prepared for several days. On April 30, according to the Satanic holiday calendar, Satan's birthday is celebrated. Walpurgis Night is also celebrated on this night.

What I am about to report is terrible. But it is a matter of concern to me to write it, so that one knows what can happen in such extreme Satanic circles. It is certainly not like this everywhere. But in the circles in which I was caught up such hardly imaginable things really happened! Very many people find it hard to believe such things. It was the same for me when this memory came up. I almost couldn't believe it at first. And I didn't want to believe it! But I got over myself, and, accompanied by another victim and witness to this Satanic celebration, I went to the place where it happened. Then, when I saw that certain details on the spot were exactly as I remembered, I knew for sure that it was true.

I was sixteen years old. I had chosen to follow Jesus at that age with our pastor, and we celebrated my confirmation. And then came April 1987. I remember being at the small airfield near our home one afternoon. The young people sometimes met there, where there was also a small pub.

I remember how I suddenly fainted. Today I think it must have been because of a medicine or a drug. When I came to, I was wearing a tight, red dress of lace.

I was in a huge hall. For me it seemed as if everything was in red, candles, windows, tablecloths, red light, red floor.... Everything was red. A woman with long black hair was escorted in by two people in black robes. She was in the advanced stages of pregnancy. She and I were wearing the same lace dress. The two attendants laid her on the pale, white light altar that was in the center. Her eyes were wide open.

A strange restlessness arose in the hall. I remember feeling great tension in the audience. I noticed people around me talking to each other. I heard music and singing. It was a festive atmosphere. I was sitting at the bottom of a staircase in the midst of other people when a man standing on a kind of stage asked me to come to him. I was handed a large curved knife.

I knew the man. It was a very famous Austrian singer and entertainer, whom I will call Paul Heinrich here. I don't remember how it happened, but I knew then that it was a wedding celebration. My wedding with Satan. I didn't see Satan in person, but Paul Heinrich played my husband for this ceremony. He moderated and accompanied the ceremony.

I lost my composure! I screamed, was angry, completely overwhelmed, felt panic, a huge chaos and confusion of feelings, emotions that could not be sorted out or put into words. But I had to obey! There was no alternative for me. I had to stab into the woman's belly. I was forced to kill her. Paul Heinrich stood next to me and gave me the instructions how to do it. He guided my hand. The woman screamed. Nobody else moved. Everything was red. Full of blood. The altar, the dress, the woman, I, the floor. Everything. I had to cut the baby out of the mother's living body. It was alive. Someone lifted it out of the womb. Then I was ordered to cut the baby. With the same knife. Someone held the child by the feet with the head down. I was supposed to cut the baby in two with the knife. I couldn't. Then they also put it on the altar, and I had to finish my work.

After that I was allowed to rest a little. Paul Heinrich took me in his arms and congratulated me. He accompanied me to a table that was a little lower and we sat down. I don't remember if there were chairs or if we were on our knees. The table was decorated with red roses and red candles. I remember music. Classical music. Then women or men came and served us our wedding menu. Meat and something red in wine glasses. I knew this was the baby's meat. It made me throw up. But then they put something into my mouth, and I had to keep eating, nor was I allowed to vomit.

After that it went on. I remember how I, too, was brought to the altar. I was wearing a different dress, also a red one with lace. I don't remember how it happened.

I was "put inside" the woman's body. Before that, the woman's internal organs had probably been cut out. They took specific inner organs and put them into my body. I had to take them into my mouth and lick them. There were other men dressed in red and black robes. They masturbated in front of me and ejaculated on me and the dead woman. I was aggressively raped several times by Paul Heinrich, who embodied Satan - my husband. Afterwards also by other men. I fainted again and again. But I kept coming to, only to faint again. Blood, sperm, urine, rape, offal. I couldn't make a sound anymore. I felt intense pain all over my body. I felt as if a fire had been set between my legs, an ever-burning fire.

Some people were present at the feast. In my memory, there were perhaps around sixty downstairs in the hall. Perhaps there were more present, but I did not notice them. Among them were some prominent people whom I recognized in the course of the ritual celebration, well-known aristocrats, politicians, actors, professional athletes, a founder of an organization for organ donation (which was officially founded in 1991), the wife of a president whose name everybody knows, and another young woman.

I must not mention these well-known names here for legal reasons, so as not to jeopardize the publication of the book. However, these names, as well as all other names of well-known personalities and certain places, are known to a number of persons of my acquaintance and are also included in the protective letters deposited with notaries and lawyers.

The young woman helped me privately as a household and family helper when I fell into severe depression many years after this ritual. Today I know: that was no coincidence, but had been planned far in advance. This woman kept showing up in my environment, and when I needed help, she contacted me. At that time, I thought she had offered her help voluntarily and that she was a gift from God.

On the stage, in addition to myself and Paul Heinrich, were several well-known tenors and two other men who served as guards.

During the rapes I stared up and saw a kind of sun with white-yellow rays. There was also a cross with Jesus nailed to it. Men laughed and said Jesus does not help, that Jesus is not alive and that Jesus has died. During the ritual up at the altar, a sex orgy was taking place downstairs in the large church hall. Both men and women were festively dressed. Some wore masks. They were elegant masks like those at a carnival. This ritual took place in Barcelona in the Sagrada Família.

In these Satanic circles, some perpetrators are also victims themselves and the victims are made into perpetrators. It is like a game of dominoes. The older children are made to abuse the younger children, while they themselves are abused by the older children. I too, as a victim, was made into a perpetrator. I assume that certain people who participated in this Satanic festival were forced to do so just like me. I cannot say exactly who is only a victim or who is a victim-perpetrator and who acted there as a conscious perpetrator with a perpetrator's heart.

Today, I do have access to some memories, and also to feelings from those awful, traumatic situations. Nevertheless, I am still unable to describe all the feelings and thoughts that overwhelmed me at that moment. There are simply no words for it all. One was not allowed to have feelings or emotions at that time. I can only describe it as an endless, great emptiness that stretched into what felt like eternity. A kind of immense, empty resignation with feelings of powerlessness, anger, and grief, imperceptible because they had been so strongly repressed and forbidden. An absolute feeling of being at the mercy of others. Nothing was controllable. Nothing at all.

To my knowledge, scientists and doctors also take part in such events. These are places where organ trafficking takes place and human tissue is removed for scientific purposes.

After this kidnapping in Spain, I was sick and injured for a few days. At that time, I was about to take my final exams for the "Certificat Commercial". Since I had often been absent due to illness, the teaching staff discussed whether I could be admitted to the exams. Despite everything, I got the green light and managed to graduate after all. My graduation from school, my graduation as a confirmand and in April still my graduation from the training as a "Mother of Darkness". I was an adult, so to speak. I belonged to the inner circle of the Illuminati.

The Mother of Darkness is the third level in the hierarchy on the female side of the Illuminati. On the male side, there are seven levels:[20]

Stage	Female:	Male:
1	Daughter of Jobe	Demolaw
2	Princess (Debutant)	Vassal (Prince)
3	Mother of Darkness	Presenter (Knight)
4	Grand Mother	Program Director (Priest)
5	Grand lady	Grand Wizard (Duke)
6	Goddess	Grand Master

10. Other Exams

I passed the first exam at the age of six. That was the child hunt in Belgium. Over the years, however, there were exams to pass on several occasions. Each time I moved up a level because each time I had survived those atrocities. Each time I had become stronger in learning how to die.

Another exam was the sacrifice of little Benjamin. But there were many others. About once every year there was a big exam that had to be passed. Somehow, I knew inwardly that I must pass; otherwise I should die.

10.1 Fisher of Men

At about the age of eight, I was made a fisher of men. This took place during a ritual. The actions of the Satanist group in which I was a victim were motivated by religious conviction. Basically, there was a rule of thumb called "mocking the Christian faith". They perverted the Biblical in numerous rituals, for example, the Lord's Supper being observed according to the Satanic ritual that I described earlier. Likewise, Satanic “fishers of men” are also made. People are trained to convert other people for their dark machinations. This was also the case with me.

The ritual for this took place in the Masonic Lodge in the nearby town. I don't remember all the details exactly. But I remember how I had to lie down naked and bound on a white and black checkerboard patterned floor. I remember some utterances, probably in Latin, and how I was poked over and over again in my right hip with a long stick by a priest. Around me stood masked people draped in cowls. Some spirits or other were called in a kind of chant, among others the spirit of Lilith. This is the spirit that stands for prostitution, among other things. I was forced to accept this spirit.

This was nothing new for me, because as a child I had officially been baptized with the name Liliane. Since I grew up in these Satanic circles, I assume that my name was no coincidence. Because everything that somehow has to do with Lilith, Lilly, Lys, Lilie, Liliane, etc. is associated with serving as a sex slave. So it was also the case for me. So I agreed to Lilith in this ritual. From then on, I was a fisher of men. I don't have much more memory of that ritual. But I do know that I started flirting with men at that time.

I was an eight-year-old girl when I learned to flirt with men. In the process, I seduced them into pedophilia. Over the years, I learned to sense exactly which men I could seduce, which men were ready for fishing. Of course, I then had to offer them my services. And I was persuaded that I was doing it voluntarily, that I liked it, but also that I was a whore and no good for anything else.

10.2 Gabriela

Great importance is attached to not having strong friendly ties. These are not looked upon favorably in Satanic circles. I also had to go through this exam. I was supposed to learn never hold on to someone I liked.

We slid a little closer to each other in this dark little house. She spoke German. I understood her to some extent. She wore long, light strawberry-blond hair. She was shy. So was I. There were maybe four or five of us in this hut, near the edge of a forest. We had to wait.

I had already experienced this situation several times. Waiting with other children, waiting until we were sent into the forest and shot at. I was then allowed or made to choose a child to protect. A child who was to be spared along with me. They then shot the others, not me and the one child. But I never knew what happened to the child afterwards.

Inwardly, I had already decided in favor of Gabriela this time. I liked her. We had met a few times before and, as far as we were allowed, had become a little closer. We tried to give each other a little protection, warmth and comfort. Then we were off. We were chased naked through the forest. Gabriela and I ran as fast as we could. I thought to myself, I'm going to run away with Gabriela now, far away from this place. I wanted to escape together with her.

Suddenly, a man with disheveled, thin blond hair appeared behind us. He wore a long gray coat. He grabbed me and Gabriela. Then he put a pistol in my hand and ordered me to shoot Gabriela. There were screams, tears of despair. The man tortured us. I was threatened that if I didn't do it, my siblings and my mother would be killed. I would be the one to bear the responsibility.

Finally, I was forced to shoot Gabriela. I had to shoot her between the legs. Gabriela died a slow, agonizing death. She bled to death and was in terrible pain. I had to watch her. The man tied me to a tree right next to her. I don't know how many hours it took. Gabriela died. Finally, the man came back with reinforcements. They cut Gabriela into many pieces with a saw and disposed of her in black garbage bags. Where I do not know. I had passed another of my exams.

This is the hut where I had to wait with Gabriela.

I remember the place where this happened. It was in the forest near Vuiteboeuf VD, behind the shooting range. I also found the hut where we children had to wait during my research. The child hunts took place at that time in broad daylight, probably on a Saturday when there was always shooting practice there anyway. The child hunts took place in the forest behind the area of the official shooting range, so the shots could not be heard, or they were simply mixed with those of the shooting exercises. I suspect that the perpetrators could act unhindered under the cover of the obligatory shooting.

10.3 Murders of Adults

I was also actively involved in the murder of an adult. One of the first memories led me to the vicinity of that place of residence where I grew up as a child. There are many swamps in the area, the soil is black and sometimes very wet. A lot of vegetables are grown in that area. I remember holes and swamp ditches at the edge of fields. That was very dangerous, so we were not allowed to play near them. But then a young adult man was murdered near a farm there. I guess he was in his mid or late twenties. It happened as part of a Satanic ritual, and I was brought in. The man drowned in the mud, and everyone stood around him and just watched.

Today I am convinced that this was another step for me in my Satanic "exams". I had to get used to the fact that adults also die. Through such experiences, which I had to go through again and again, the threats that my mother and siblings would be murdered if I talked had great effect. I was convinced that they would actually murder my mother. After all, I saw that they could and did!

It was most probably in the summer of 1986. I just remember waking up in a big room somewhere in Amerois Castle. I was locked in a cage. The cage looked like a birdcage. It was white. I was naked, but I was wearing a lot of makeup. Why I remember that, I can't explain. I don't remember seeing a mirror. The next thing I remember, I was in another room fighting with about three to four men. They were strong, muscular men with black skin. I was naked and so were they. I was handed a big knife, and, as far as I remember they were not armed. My task was to fight and to stab wherever possible. I was cheered on by masked people standing around us. I still remember the one man, how he finally lay bleeding on the ground. Presumably he was dead. I don't know what happened to the other men. After the fight, I was picked up by a young man and taken back to the birdcage. This young man I knew. It was a well-known American actor, whom I will give the name John Collet here. I in the birdcage and the fight for life and death had been his birthday present.

10.4 Sodomy

At what age sex with animals started as part of the training I don't remember, but it probably started when I was about seven years old. I remember dogs, snakes and zebras. Some dogs were especially involved during sex orgies. These were probably dogs specially trained for these purposes. With such dogs I was kept on course. And especially with a neighbor's dog. The owner was a businessman, owner of a tombstone company and a professed Freemason. But I was also kept on course with snakes. Sect members occasionally kept snakes as pets. A music teacher at that time kept one. It was to her I went for the alto flute lesson. If I made a mistake, she either hit me on the head with the flute or, if the mistake was especially clumsy, she came to me to insert a snake into my vagina. I only remember seeing zebras sporadically at the Château Amerois. There were also horses there. However, I have no such memory of horses, which does not mean that sodomy was not practised with these animals.

10.5 Floating over Community Gardens

Illuminati are primarily spiritual and also practise the spiritual. In their rituals, they try to torture their occult beliefs into the victim. In these rituals, demons are summoned, which can be used to reinforce programming in a child or adult victim. The person is forced to be loyal and silent with the help of demons. In the process, the trainers call upon any evil spirits on a demonic level for assistance. This may sound strange or unbelievable to modern people. But the Illuminati see it differently, and I only describe here what the members practise and what I witnessed.

Not only Christians know that there are many other things between heaven and earth. We know or have at least heard about ghosts, demons, angels and astral travelers. I myself had to experience this. In the circles where I lived at that time, hypnosis was abused. Magic rituals were performed, spirits were called, and Satan was worshipped. I have witnessed inexplicable things happening in this country as well, not only on some distant continent like Africa, where voodoo is practised in some cultures. I myself was also introduced into such spheres. However, I know only fragments of what I learned at that time. For, when I became aware of these processes, I, as a devout Christian, immediately renounced all this in the name of Jesus Christ. I firmly believe that Jesus is given all authority in heaven and on earth. Likewise, I also renounced everything else that had been done to me at that time. In this way, step by step, I experienced increasing freedom. What I am telling you now may sound strange. To be honest, it is. But it is what I experienced and what I carry memories of, whether I like it or not.

When I was about fifteen years old, I met my grandmother, who was a respected Satanist, somewhere in the air. I don't really know how to describe it. By that time, I had years of experience in leaving my body in the face of a trauma. I was able to do that. I had to leave the window in my room open at all times so that I could go out the window if necessary. My soul then simply fled out the open window, so that the bad things didn't happen to me, but to the "other me."

My grandmother had already died by then, but I met her again somewhere between heaven and earth. She guided me to wander astrally. I don't remember very much anymore. Only one thing remains in my memory. Astral wanderers have areas that are assigned to them. In these areas they are assigned a certain task. This task is either to observe, to disturb, to spy, or to attack a soul. I was given the task of observing the area of community gardens near us. At first, I was taught to hover, listen to people and then report back. Later, I was given a task that again had to do with sex. And that was to pick out certain men. Weak men. Men who were willing to cheat on their partner.

Community gardens are very suitable for this. They are places where people spend their free time, or barbecue together with family, neighbors, or friends. It is a place of community, where many people can gather in a few square meters at the same time, so it's an ideal place to watch a lot of people at the same time. By observing what was happening, the conversations, and the behavior, I noticed very quickly which man was interested in sex and which one was obviously not satisfied in his relationship. I then had to influence these men accordingly, and that with my thoughts. I had to send them into their soul, which was open to dirty thoughts, ideas of adultery, of infidelity. That was the first step. The second was then to cause thoughts of pedophilia in the same way.

I have no idea what these men did after that and outside the gardens. But my mission was destruction. Destruction of families, destruction of marriages and partnerships. My mission was mental manipulation, or in other words, "sorcery".

10.6 Sexual "Menus à la carte ”

An enormously beautiful, long limousine with a chauffeur stopped in a parking lot somewhere in the country. I got out. At the time I was about four or five years old, and, as far as I can remember, I was wearing a little white and blue dress and red shoes. There was a man waiting for me. He introduced himself to me with his real name. A few years later, he became the president of the U.S. Over the years, I was to meet him again and again. He asked me in English what my name was and what I could do. He was very sweet and kind to me. I told him my name and explained that I was an "all-rounder". The only explanation I can offer for why I said that at that time is that it was programmed into me beforehand. Anyway, he was very pleased with me! The parking lot I was driven to belonged to a very large, luxurious country-style manor house. I went there with the man and there were several people waiting for us. I was told we would be playing "restaurant" and I would get to serve the "à la carte" menus. So we started the game. It consisted of all the participants telling me their sexual preferences and me being the one who had to please everyone. I had to serve everyone sexually, and they were all allowed to choose what they would like. I remember upbeat country music that was supposed to create a festive, fun atmosphere.

11. MK-Ultra Programming

11.1 The Train

I like to compare the programming of a human being with a train. In order for a train to run, tracks have to be laid, and for this everything has to be meticulously planned. When a passenger gets on a train, his journey is usually purposeful. He arrives at the destination for which he bought the ticket. This is because the train cannot simply turn left or right haphazardly.

At most, it can derail. But then workers come immediately with the task of getting the train back on track as soon as possible, so that it can continue on its predetermined path. This is how it works, figuratively speaking, with the programming of people. This is called "mind control".[21]

How the "tracks" were laid for my life's train has significantly shaped my life story. I cannot speak for all victims. I can only describe what happened to me and what I know about it. I have found scientific facts on this subject during research on the internet, in non-fiction books, professional journals, studies and reports.

My life train also derailed sometimes. The builders who got it back on track were either my coaches or people who came in from the outside. Construction work means torture to create psychological as well as physical dependencies. Total control over a person. The workers know where the train has to go. The train itself does not. It just goes and must obey. It is not asked for its opinion. It must serve.

11.2 Wizard of OZ

A common programming among Illuminati is connected with stories, cartoons, and role-playing. It is a very popular method. The stories that are about a "journey through time" are the most suitable, as well as that of the Wizard of OZ, with which I was programmed.

This is a highly occult story that describes the ritual abuse and slavery of children and people. Tricks, colors, signs and the whole life events are used to manipulate and control the life of a victim.

The story is about how a child named Dorothy grows up in a house with a couple she calls Uncle and Aunt. These are not her biological parents, and she superficially has a nice relationship with them. However, she then tries to share a concern with them. The couple is very busy and distracted, and so the girl eventually comes to a magician who lovingly takes care of her and listens to her. A violent storm later comes over her Kansas homeland. A whirlwind transports Dorothy and her house to another world. There she meets bad and good witches, strange, brainless, heartless, despondent characters who become her companions, and then finally finds her way together with these characters to the castle of the Wizard of OZ. She is allowed to enter there because she is the one wearing the red shoes: her ticket. The red shoes previously belonged to the Wicked Witch of the East. However, the Wicked Witch of the East was buried under the house that arrived with the whirlwind when Dorothy arrived in the Magic Land. Dorothy then received the red shoes directly from the good witch. In the castle, she participates in rituals, gets locked up, gets homesick after seeing her aunt in a crystal ball, and then finally escapes out of the castle with the help of her companions, who in the meantime have been given brains, hearts, and courage by the Wizard of OZ (i.e., programmed)... and... wakes up from the bad dream in her real bed with her real foster parents, surrounded by her real neighbors.

Dorothy is sick, and they all take loving care of her. Then, when she tells them about the dream, she explains that they all appeared in her dream. She claims to have seen some of them in the castle or on the road. The family, friends, and neighbors comfort her and explain that it was only a bad dream after all.

In the second story of the Wizard of OZ, Dorothy is taken to a physician because she is not feeling well. She is depressed and homesick for that other world she used to be in and wants to go back to. Dorothy is taken to a clinic and receives her therapy there in the form of electric shocks (torture), which send her into time travel again. At the very end of the story, she is found in a forest at night, completely hysterical, frightened, soaking wet, and desperate, yet Dorothy cannot explain why she is there (Because it was another personality part that went into the forest, she has no memory of the time elapsed.).

What has been described here is a perfectly designed backdrop to apply ritual abuse and mind control. This is exactly how the backdrops of victims are designed. Quite often the victims are not the biological children of the parents. The parents are often in the cult themselves and not interested in dealing with the child's needs. But on the surface, everything seems to be going perfectly. Church services are attended on Sundays, the family works diligently, and they are often well-liked in the neighborhood as well. These people are usually very personable, not flashy, well-liked by colleagues and family. But then they have their child kidnapped and do nothing about it. The child experiences great violence from the people it knows and loves.

But if it should speak about it, then it is interpreted as a dream, fantastical nonsense or a childish fib.

While such a story is played to the child, read aloud, and role-played, the child is often hypnotized or given drugs. Often this story is read or performed to several children at the same time, and they are told that they are now going to "time travel" together. They are then effectively transported to other times, eras or fantasy worlds by the trainer playing it to them. The children then actually believe they have been in a magical world. Once they have arrived in this other world, they are tortured and abused in rituals for real, but this is dissociated. The child then remembers only the story about time travel. It may also be that the child is given a role to play. Or it may even be allowed to take on the main role. In my case, I was allowed/needed to be Dorothy from the Wizard of OZ, the one who did the leading and determining, the one who had to walk on the yellow brick road, who had to experience torture and violence, and who was not believed in the end. In a scene from the Wizard of OZ, Dorothy is seen being locked up and suddenly sees her aunt in a crystal ball. She gets homesick and calls for help, but the aunt then simply "disappears", and Dorothy does not get the help for which she longs.

I can still see the room they took me to. There were many cots there. There were some people in the room - all dressed in white. They received me lovingly. Then they told me how well they understood my pain and that now they wanted to do something good for me. They knew my deep inner pain, the pain of being separated from my real parents. They were, after all, trainers. They lovingly asked me if I would like to see my mom and dad. I agreed, of course. But in order to see them, I would have to do something first. They also asked me if I wanted to do that. Of course, I wanted to do that. The main thing was that I could see my parents again, whom I missed so much. They then put me on a cot and attached electrodes to my head. In the process, I was tied down so that I could not move. During the painful electric shocks, they showed me my biological mom and dad on a big screen. I longed for them so much. My parents were smiling in the photo and seemed happy while I was being tortured here. Afterwards, they told me that my parents would be happy without me, and they never wanted to see me like this - in this condition - ever again. But the trainers had kept their promise. I had seen my parents.

The story of the Wizard of OZ appeared in 1900 under the original title The Wonderful Wizard of OZ, later also known as The Wizard of OZ.

The "Grand Wizard" is the fifth level of the Illuminati on the male side. In the role-playing games, as Dorothy, I had to learn how to gain access to the "Grand Wizard" as a future "Mother of Darkness" with my special ticket (the red shoes), and was allowed to meet him, or under certain circumstances, had to serve him (as part of my training - an heirloom of my grandmother, who was a Satanist).

11.3 "Education " Track

The main training method of the perpetrators is education. This is started in childhood and then continued by the traffickers. A victim must always be on call and must always be submissive and dependent. It is educated for this purpose. The upbringing consists of the victim not being able to make decisions for itself. Not being able to know by itself what is right and wrong, and above all not being able to know what concerns itself. It is the others, the grown-ups, the parents, the educators, the traders, the doctors, the therapists, the bosses, who know what is good for it and what is not. They decide what it looks like inside a victim, not the victim itself.

I was driving as an adult woman in a car together with a trainer. There were also children in the car. One of the girls suddenly saw a horse. She shouted with joy: "There is a horse!" But the trainer said: "No, that's a camel!" At this, the girl was quite embarrassed, but then dared to contradict and said again that it was a horse. Hereupon the man reacted again by energetically claiming that it was a camel. The whole thing escalated, and the girl began to cry. In the meantime, I had intervened and taken sides with the girl. There was a big fight in the car, just because the man was so stubborn in claiming a lie.

What was the goal? What was being taught and learned here was: RIGHT IS WRONG! WRONG IS RIGHT!

The goal and the message are as follows: To confuse the child so that it learns not to pay attention to its feelings, to its subjective truth. Instead, it should obey the master, the adult, the coach without questioning, as, after all he is grown-up and knows more. This method of education of course starts very early. In this case, the girl already knew that a horse is a horse, but the whole thing still caused a great deal of confusion.

Later, it is the coaches who know better which partner one ought to marry, which job is better, which friends are good and which are not, and so on. As a result, for years I believed everything a doctor said just because he was a doctor, everything a therapist said just because he had studied, everything my husband said just because the church said the man was the head, believed everything my friends who were several years older said just because they were more experienced, and everything the Honorable Reverend said just because he was a "man of God". This is how I was brought up, and this is how I was kept on course by the perpetrators. What I just didn't know for a long time is that the good older friends were in fact abusers, that certain therapists were abusers and even the "man of God" was one of them. People I believed had come into my life either by chance or sent by God. But in truth, they were cult members who looked out for me and probably others and had to keep us on track.

So it happened, when I had long since grown up that I married a second time, although I had actually noticed that there was something wrong with my second husband. The man was an alcoholic and not yet cured. I also noticed that he had pedophilic tendencies; however, I do not know whether he acted on them. My father had also been alcoholic, and at that time I worked in a company where we took care of homeless people, alcoholics, and addicts. So I was a professional in this regard, and I recognized the problem in this man very early on. At that time, I was friends with a couple who were very close to me. I was actually part of the family. They often said I was their adopted daughter. I even called the husband Papa sometimes. He worked in a similar field to mine, and the couple often took care of marginalized people.

When I was able to see further into my future husband and recognized the problem, I went to the couple, who were my friends before the wedding. I reported my fears about this man and my engagement to him. Although the couple agreed with me in some respects, they encouraged me to marry this man anyway. I was only engaged at the time, had a job that I liked quite a bit, and an apartment that I felt happy in. I was just about to give it all up and get married. Then this conversation took place with the friend, the dad. They told me that they had been praying and got the impression that I needed just such a man and that we would be well suited to one another. I do not remember the exact wording. I then decided, against my gut feeling, against my observations and against this malaise, to give it all up, and I married this man. I had trusted the couple, especially the dad, who was close to me, more than I trusted myself. I thought, "After all, they helped me so much, they are such experienced people, they prayed so much for me...". I believed that they knew better than I what was good for me. I was a dependent, a kind of puppet that could be used just like that. I had been raised not to be able to trust myself. Others were worth more than I was. Although I had my own opinion on many things and was able to defend it, my yes or my no was only valid if an additional person had the same opinion. I needed the agreement of the other, of the trainer, of the dealer, in order to be able to believe myself. I have often experienced that my opinions and decisions were only accepted if I could prove that this or that person was also of the same opinion; only then was I recognized. I am not writing this to complain. I am explaining how it was and how the "educators", the perpetrators, work to keep victims of ritual abuse in their dependence. To keep him or her on the track.

11.4 "Coding" Track

In this chapter I will point out a few codes that are used as secret language in the pedo-criminal and Satanic-occult circles. There are many more of them. Here I will describe codes and signs which I personally encountered, which were in my environment, which I recognized, with which I had experience. These signs are public. It is not the case that they can be found only behind closed doors, even if only insiders recognize them. On the contrary! The neighbor's child or friend is coded, and you do not notice it. You go to a store and buy a T-shirt for your four-year-old granddaughter that says in code: This girl is available for oral sex!!! The abusers among themselves, the slave traders, know about these codes. And when traffickers and abusers dress their children in such innocuous looking clothes, they are sending just such messages. The same can apply when one watches a movie or visits friends in their home. Pedophile codes or secret occult symbolism may be hidden here as well. Or it may be the logo of a company, a chain of stores, a corporation.

I have encountered logos (individually or in combination) that contain the following statements:

"Children or adults are abused or sacrificed." (bell)

"We take the victims from this world to another. For example, from life to death. "(rainbow, white lily)

The victims think they are in good hands because the perpetrators present it as if it were a magic world.

The window of the chapel where I was often taken for rituals and abuse is also coded. The round window consists of eight elements. It looks like a wheel or like an eight-pointed star. The element in the lower right is slightly darker than the remaining seven. In addition, one element below the wheel appears in the same dark color. The Illuminati see themselves as having power in eight areas of public life. And that is where their highly trained people have infiltrated; often they hold high positions there. These areas are divided into eight segments, which are also represented in a wheel or star. One area is the pedophiles. Others are military and press, religion, politics and banking, pharmaceutical industry, etc. Since the number eight stands for perfection, their goal is to have power in all these areas. Because with that, perfection can be achieved from the Illuminati's point of view. Pedophilia is the segment at the bottom right. So, as an insider, you know that in this chapel, down in the basement, children are abused and sold.

Chapel windows

Codes are normal objects and signs that can be found in living rooms and houses, on buildings, on the roadside or other places. On the one hand, they are aimed at initiated "customers" and other perpetrators. Perpetrators recognize each other. No words are needed. No internet, technical data, or phone calls are necessary. They write it on their houses, on their clothes, on facilities such as children's hospitals. Every insider knows it and can read it. On the other hand, the codes and symbols serve to keep dissociative victims on track in normal life at all times. The messages are thus always present, and the victims are thus in a permanent unconscious training.

None of this can be proven. How is one to explain to the police that an institution such as a day care center is used to recruit abused children... simply because their logo contains a heart or a spiral with a rainbow? Besides, the operators of such a facility will be able to explain their logo. And they certainly will not say that it is there for perpetrators to bring their abused children here to be used by other perpetrators!

Here are a few examples:

- Spiral

  The spiral is a pedophile sign. It is a simple spiral, it does not have to look complicated. It can be found, for example, in the movie the Wizard of OZ. Dorothy dances there on a spiral before she is sent on the yellow brick road. To the right and left of the chapel in Valeyres-sous-Rances are stone spiral symbols (see photo page 37).

- Heart

Two interlocking hearts (a smaller one inside a larger heart) also serve as a sign of pedophilia. A pink heart indicates pedophilia for girls, a blue heart those for boys.

- Red shoes

Can be seen in Alice in Wonderland and on Dorothy in the Wizard of OZ. Red shoes are worn by the chosen children who are allowed to go to the king. That is, they are programmed to satisfy extravagant demands of mostly highly respected ladies and gentlemen. They are the chosen ones. Depending on whether the shoes are made of fabric, leather, imitation leather, or whether they are sandals, boots or slippers, the training, the offer and the ticket vary. Over time, shoe coding has become very popular in this scene. The colors and the material correspond to the training of the sex slave.

- Blue and white dresses

These can also be seen in the Wizard of OZ and Alice in Wonderland. I still don't know the exact meaning, but children dressed in blue and white are offered on the pedophile market.

One picture shows me as a girl of about four years old, dressed just so. With such harmless photos and films, they market children or send messages to each other. Or it is shown to initiates in public that a girl or woman is a slave.

Unfortunately, because of the black and white print, you can't see that I'm wearing white and blue clothes and red shoes.
These are typical codes in the pedophile market.

In these clothes I had to serve, among others, the aforementioned (subsequent) US president as a sex slave.

- Leopards

Leopard or other animal patterns worn as clothing, for example, can also be codes for a victim's sex slave status. Certainly, such things are worn by many today because they are fashionable. But it is sexist on children, and they are programmed and offered with it in the pedo-criminal and mind-control circles.

- Panda bear

The panda bear serves as an identifying symbol for children who not only serve sexually, but can also be beaten. Therefore, the black eyes of the panda bear are the actual symbol. Children with panda bear eyes (as a result of abuse and massive violence) are marketed on the pedophile market at a very high price.

- Sentences

Many trigger phrases are used to keep the victim always "on track". These are quite harmless phrases that are said in almost every family or relationship. But these phrases can also be abused. And in a cult, they are abused so that the victim is not tempted to break out. These include phrases such as: - "There's no place like home!" (OZ programming phrase) This is what a victim is told when he expresses the desire to leave.

- "No one is poor who has friends!" The friends are of course people from the cult. Also with this sentence the victim is kept at home with his "friends".

- "At home we feel safe!" Is said to the victim when something has gone wrong "outside".

- "Are you not well? We are worried about you and pray!" Means: your behavior is not normal, only with us will you find acceptance.

- "You were always so close to me; we were always like brothers!" Creates homesickness in a victim who wants to leave or is gone. This may be used to bring a victim back.

- "I love you so much! I would even sacrifice my life for you!" With this, a friendship is feigned. Who wants to lose someone who would even sacrifice his life? A victim has trouble detaching himself from such a person.

It may be difficult to imagine how such sentences can have a serious effect on a person. However, one must consider that these harmless-sounding sentences are linked to corresponding beliefs that have been anchored in the victims from an early age using perfidious methods.

- Hourglass

The hourglass is a mind-control signal with the following message: Your time is running out soon! Hourglasses are used to threaten. Hourglasses are used to educate victims to pass their exams as soon as possible. Passing exams is extremely important and serves the purpose of survival. But exams also mean stress. In a house where victims of ritual abuse go in and out, an hourglass can be placed in a particularly visible place. This will always keep the internal stress level high. A victim will feel permanently stressed in such a room and will not know why. But this is part of the program, part of the education.

- Dolls

Dolls are often used to send the following messages: This child is emotionless, empty, can carry out orders without compromise. Very often ceramic dolls are used, which all look the same, but wear different clothes. There the message is even clearer: it is called "dissociative slave". He/she is always the same and can slip into the most different roles without falling out of character.

- Snakes

A strong occult sign. Snakes are often kept as pets in Satanic-ritual circles. Torture is also performed with them. For example, snakes are inserted into the vagina as punishment or as sexual foreplay before sex rituals. Or children are locked in a room with snakes so that they panic and are bitten. The survivors can then continue to be used and employed, depending on their survival status.

- Bell

This announces something important. Often the bell is rung three times. That is, it is the beginning or the end of a journey. An involuntary journey. In my case, the trigger of the bell was set in such a way that I immediately fell into a kind of trance state. I was still active, so I could move, but I was no longer able to think on my own. The bell meant for me: it is time to go to the cellar. And so I went to the basement without being asked. Well. It was not quite unsolicited. It was at the ringing of a small bell.

- White lily

This flower symbol represents death. But it is also still a symbol for pedophilia, as well as for sex slaves. It arises from the name Lilith.[22] She is also seen as Satan's wife, as the black demon of the night, or as Adam's first wife, who refused to submit to Adam and was thrown out of the Garden of Eden by God. Anyway, at rituals I had to participate in, sometimes the spirit of Lilith was invoked, and this always had to do with sex. Also with child sex. I also suspect that I got the name Liliane for this reason. Whoever wears or gets the white lily is thereby handed his identity and his destiny.

- Lightning

A lightning bolt is used as a distinctive mark for MK-Ultra. It stands for electricity and means that the victim is tortured with electric shocks, among other things, and is under mind control.

- Music

Music is very often used to program people. The whole music or the melody by itself or the associated words can be taken as programming text. Country music, certain classical music or songs that have to do with time travel like "Over the Rainbow" are very popular in these circles.

- Rainbow

The rainbow is also abused as a pedocriminal mind-control sign. It is symbolic of being transported from one world to another. "Over the Rainbow" is a song that is often used in such circles and played or sung to children. It is used for hypnosis and with it the victim is taken from one place to another. From everyday life to hell. From day life to night life. From child to sex slave. From life to death.

- Rabbits (mostly white)

White rabbits stand for sex programming, for example, the white rabbit in Alice in Wonderland, which is chased and then disappears again and again into a hole (hole = cellar, where rituals take place). But also, rabbits with light color are used, such as pink, light blue, light yellow.

When I was a child, my grandparents gave me a plush toy bunny with the colors light blue and light yellow. It became my favorite stuffed animal. I took it with me everywhere. Since I grew up in a cult, the perpetrators knew that I had already received sex programming as a child. The colors yellow and blue meant: She is obedient, and she always stays nicely in the place where we want her. She does not run away.

- Goats / goat heads

These are occult Satanic symbols that are very often applied as a code of recognition. If such a head is found in an apartment or other building, it can mean: Satanists are here. Rituals take place here.

- Butterflies

These represent a free-floating spirit, after the old portion has previously died. Being a butterfly child means that the programming is successfully completed, and the slave is suitable for dissociation.

With butterflies, in most cases, it is indicated that the victims have gone through what is called "Monarch programming" (have become a monarch butterfly, so to speak). That is, they have been trained to serve "monarchs" in any perverse way the highly respected people want. So they can fulfill their perverted extravagant desires. That is their job. Butterflies have to do with transformation. These victims are able to transform themselves, to become someone completely different, to slip into a completely different role, without then being able to recognize the original personality. The triggered butterfly probably does not know that it used to be a caterpillar. And vice versa the child or the adult person also doesn't know about the programmed sex slave part that has to serve as a "butterfly" every now and then (because it is not the outside child or the outside adult that has to serve as a "butterfly"). This seems unbelievable, but it is unfortunately true and made possible by the described technique of the personality splitting!

My second-grade teacher put me in the "punishment room". I must have been disobedient. The school in our village was housed in a barracks, right next to the big military barracks. The "punishment room" was empty. There was a bench made of wood, attached directly to the wall, in the same wood and color as the barracks. She always put us disobedient children there. There we had to wait until the punishment was over. Then, at some point, she would take us out again and give us a kiss for forgiveness. I remember how disgusting that was every time. That was not all right with me at all. But I didn't dare to say that I didn't want that. So I just kissed back each time. The teacher also belonged to the sect "Adorateurs du Soleil" and taught the second grade at that time. The physical education classes were held on the grounds of the military. I was very familiar with that part of the grounds which was allowed for us children. However, I was also familiar with other parts of the area.

I sat in the "penalty area". Today, I still have horrible scenes in front of my eyes. Suddenly, there were soldiers standing in front of the window, wearing gas masks. That looked terrible to me as a child. They then took me with them to the compound. Every now and then they would hand me over to some other man, whom I perceived as the boss. He would then lead me into a room or into a yard with many men. I don't remember exactly what happened, but I know that I had to undress and dance in front of the men. There was also a pole in one of the rooms. I also had to dance on the pole.

I was always very clumsy in sports, but there were areas in which I always excelled. That was in gymnastics on the pole and in the sprints. For years I was among the best in the dashes and in pole gymnastics. No one, including me, could explain this, because I was usually among the very last and worst in sports.

It happened every now and then that I was picked up by a helicopter on the military grounds. How long I then flew along, I can't say. I remember a hilly landscape where a black limousine was waiting for me. On these trips I was often accompanied by two men in black suits and white shirts. When I got into the car there was a finely dressed lady who met me. She explained to me in English that I was a butterfly child. And to become a butterfly, one had to take exams. But she encouraged me and said I could do it, I would pass, she knew me. And so we drove to a large building that I later recognized as Westminster Abbey in London. In a gloomy, dark room there was a kind of table in the middle. I was placed on it, spread-eagled, by men in dark suits, and my feet and hands were tied. The elegant woman stood silently beside it and watched. This table then pushed itself apart. I don't know how this was done, whether electrically or whether someone turned a wheel. My arms, hands, feet and legs were pulled apart to the very limit of pain. It didn't stop, even though I was screaming in pain, and the lady just kept watching. At some point it was over. I had survived the "butterfly training". I was then taken back to school by car and helicopter. Whether it was on the same day or later, I can no longer say. But I know that the misery started and ended in the "punishment room" of the school.

The teacher had set the scene for this to happen. I have met the elegant lady from time to time over the years in the course of tortures and rituals. She has an influential position in one of the last monarchies.

11.5 "Colors " Track

Colors serve as a guide with enormous significance. Colors are used for programming at a very early age because children can recognize colors much faster than numbers or letters.

Color	Meaning
1. Purple	Silence
2. Blue	Being at home, feeling good, homesick, being in the circle of the perpetrators
3. Gray	Not trusting oneself and one's feelings/ confusion/ indecision/ creating dependency.
4. Yellow	Obedience/ Announcement of a punishment for transgression of a commandment/ Command to perform an action is given.
5. Pink	Stands for sexual girl; pedophilia
6. Red	Dominatrix/ Sadomaso/ Dominance. Stands for sex, party, celebration, orgy, blood sacrifice. Sealing of a ritual. Red always follows all colors.
7. Orange	Aggression/ training to become an offender
8. Green	Report. Talking/ Disclosing Information/ Perpetrator Loyalty
9. White/ Light	forgotten, weightless, get new orientation
10. Black	Praise and honor, false honor, worship of Satan, satanic rituals
11. White/ Diamond	highest distinction; the goal must be achieved

How does the system with colors work? First, colors are also used as codes between insiders. There are butterfly children, panda bear children, and so on, as I said before. Then there are also color children: white diamond children, bluebird children, black ladies, black men, and many more. But the colors also serve to guide a victim on that path which was intended by the perpetrators.

In order to install color programming in me, the perpetrators structured my innermost being - my inner world. They "built a house" in me that had different floors with different colors. On each floor there were different rooms, and in each room there were different "ego-states" (personality parts). Sometimes there were also back rooms where "ego-states" were formed, which then had to act as bosses or punishers. Each "ego-state" was given its role in the system and had to perform it accordingly. The rez-de-chaussée (first floor) was purple. Then came the second floor in blue, the second floor was gray, and so it went on until the diamond floor.

1. Following this floor arrangement, I was first "trained" and programmed with the violet programming, namely in silence. This means that every torture and every ritual had the goal of installing and practising silence until it was - from the point of view of the perpetrators - well practised and installed. The color purple was very often used as a trigger or background in torture. When I reached the level of violet, I was given an amethyst and thus everyone knew that the "silence training" had been successfully completed and that I could be used for a number of purposes.
2. After that, it was suggested to me that nowhere else was as nice as home in order to ensure my dependence. Thus, a feeling of homesickness and discomfort was created in me as soon as I moved outside the perpetrator's circle. That was the blue programming.
3. Gray programming was also important from the perpetrators' perspective. There, above all, confusion was created. l. There I had to learn that I could not listen to my gut feeling. In this stage, it was learned that right is wrong and wrong is right. Other victims report that they heard the following sentence during rapes: "Pain is pleasure and pleasure is pain". I can confirm this. What is beautiful is evil; and what is evil is beautiful.

th-6th After the yellow programming, which ensured absolute obedience, came the pink and red programming. These gave me the value, the task and my identity, namely to be a sex slave.

7. After that, the orange system was installed. Having already worked as a sex slave, I was now further trained to develop aggression. This involved inflicting harm on others. The orange programming is therefore also called killer programming.
8. The green program was used to form and train "ego-states" that always reported to the perpetrators. It is a program that creates perpetrator-loyal personality traits.
9. The white program made sure that I should forget everything I had experienced.
10. The black programming takes place shortly before enlightenment. With this, the perpetrators aim to force total devotion to the cult and the oath to honor Satan. Satan is praised and honored as the father of it all.
11. The diamond programming is that of enlightenment. At this level of programming, the Illuminati speak of a thousand lights.

The various programs are not isolated. Although they are installed in stages in the victim, they always have elements that overlap.

Diamond

To support the white diamond programming, I was told stories as a child by an Illuminati woman. The storytelling served to inwardly question what I had actually experienced. Like all the "Adorateurs du Soleil", this woman, who was also my class teacher, believed in so-called "gnômes". These little men, I was told, live underground and make trees and plants grow. But the "gnômes", they said, unlike normal people, are only ever active at night. Why? Because, among other things, they like to count the stars. Whether it was only stars in general or a thousand stars, I don't know anymore. Because we humans love to be in nature, which is cared for by these "gnômes", it was our duty to honor and worship these little men, to make sure that they could count the stars, and also to provide them with food, especially at night. We children were taught to provide food for these beings in the evening. Today it is clear as daylight to me that these stories described exactly what I had to experience underground in cellars at night. The men and women must be fed with orgies and blood rituals for the maintenance of their sex drive, so that they experience the "enlightenment", the seeing of the thousand stars! I remember being sent to the "penalty box" by the teacher because, as a child of about eight, I had the temerity to question the credibility of her narrative. She told us children that every evening she put a small bowl of food for the "gnômes" in her kitchen. In the morning it was always gone. Knowing that she owned a dog, I said in front of the whole class that I thought the dog ate those snacks! Then she grew extremely cross, and I was punished quite severely.

Blue, Purple, Pink, Red

My husband used to be my dealer and therefore knew about certain codes and also that I was a suitably conditioned victim. Our apartment was mostly decorated in blue for a long time. I also liked it and wanted it that way. At least, I thought I wanted it that way. But basically, I had been influenced to favour blue because blue means "home". So I felt comfortable and at home in that blue environment. On top of that, there were purple stones in the living room for decoration. Amethysts. These had their special place and absolutely had to be displayed. For me as an MK victim, this color combination meant: you must stay here; being outside the house is forbidden to you, and you must be silent. Since I had been programmed with colors, I unconsciously reacted to them and could thus be kept on course by the perpetrators.

In addition, there was the pink. Our bedroom was done up in violet-pink for a long time. That means for an MK-Ultra victim: girlish sex slave, is sworn to secrecy. If the color red is added to this, for example, in the form of a red pillow brought into the room by the perpetrator, the victim will sometimes behave like a girl and sometimes like a dominatrix, depending on the wishes of the dealer or perpetrator.

Yellow

I felt as if I was being interrogated; I had broken a rule. The man who was U.S. president at the time sat behind a wide desk and spoke English to me. I was about ten years old. I wanted to keep a secret, but they had noticed, and it seemed to me that I must take my clothes off. Though I didn't want to, I still had to. It felt as if I must take off my soul. I had talked to a boy who was my age. I wasn't allowed to do that, but I had done it anyway. We saw each other in a really big, wide hallway with red carpet and he told me we were going to leave. I agreed to go with him. Apparently, someone had overheard.

The boy was wearing dark blue pants with a green plaid pattern and a white top, a T-shirt or a shirt.

I was now in this big room with the big desk. Behind the man were very large windows. In front of them hung long, thick, dark blue curtains embroidered with yellow or golden flowers. I think I was in this room more than once.

The man told me that I had betrayed him. I had transgressed his commandments. His commandments were love, and I had transgressed them.

I didn't see yellow in the room, but I was dressed in yellow. I was wearing a yellow dress with a white belt. A woman with gray-mottled, shoulder-length, thickly wavy hair had put the dress on me. Later I learned that she was an influential head of government of a Western nation.

I knew the woman, had seen her several times. She wore a dark blue and green checkered suit with golden buttons. The collar was round. It seems to me that underneath she was wearing a white blouse. The moment I stood in front of the man, I felt ashamed. I had sinned and I knew I should be punished. I was not told what kind of punishment it would be, but I knew that if I wore yellow, a punishment would automatically follow. For disobedience.

I saw a cord hanging by the windows in the room. A cord. And I automatically went there. This rope was put around my neck by the man. It was strangling me. He pulled me up a little bit. I did not resist; I could not resist. I could not breathe. The whole thing was repeated several times until I was unconscious.

Later, I was led by the woman to a cellar room, which was separated by a grate. It was completely empty. The boy I had talked to was lying in the part next to it. He was naked and had wounds all over his body. I didn't know if he was alive or dead. I barely recognized him. I should have liked to talk to him, but I didn't because I was afraid of the punishment. The boy's name was Marc. At least that's what they called him.

My nursery had blue wallpaper and a yellow carpet. In MK-Ultra language it was the call to be obedient on the spot. This room was where my father either visited me at night or picked me up for cult meetings.

White/grey light

I was lying on my bed in my assigned room in the White House. Anyway, they told me I was in the White House. They called my room "Blue-Room". What was strange was that the room was not furnished with blue at all, but much more with red. In this room I was taught my lessons over and over again, and I had to learn to let "snakes" into my intimate area. By "snakes" penises were meant.

One day, when I was about 15 years old, I was picked up at my blue room by the two men who were always elegantly dressed in black and accompanied me to many places. Before that, I also had to dress elegantly and looked like a businesswoman with my hair up. They led me down a long hallway that led to a terrace or plaza. There a helicopter was waiting for us. I don't know how long the flight took, but eventually we arrived on an island with a military complex. I was led into a large room. An enormously large computer room. I sat down at a computer and began entering codes that had previously been implanted in me under torture. I was told that I was currently at war and that I was making sure that ships were sunk in the sea. Whether this is true or not, I cannot judge.

After a while, a woman picked me up. It turned out that I had also seen this woman before. It was the wife of the future U.S. president, whom I had also seen several times, including in the country-style manor house. She led me to a farm and handed me over to a horde of men, who all, one by one, jumped me and raped me. Later, the wife of the future U.S. president picked me up and took me to a room. The room was all white with white-grey light. There was a stool, nothing else, no bed, no toilet, no blanket. On the floor she also raped me with oral sex. After I was spun by her on this stool at an unimaginable speed for a long time (which is known as the spinning method), she left me lying on the floor. In that white room, I lost all sense of time and space. I had no idea who I was. In that white light, I forgot everything and didn't care about anything. I probably lay there for several days until I was brought back to the White House.

11.6 Other Codes and Triggers

Triggers are not only symbols, sounds, colors, or numbers. Triggers can also be movements, light, music, etc. The perpetrators use all kinds of things to trigger. They also take a close look at the victim and then set those triggers that fit the victim as well as possible (Programs are also sometimes developed individually. For example, a "sports program" can be installed in a person who plays sports or a "smoking program" in people who smoke.). Every person knows some unpleasant triggers in his life. Suppose someone as a child had to swallow a disgusting cough drop every winter at the first snow, this person will remember it for a lifetime as soon as the first snowflakes fall. It may be that the taste of this cough drop is then automatically felt in the mouth, even though the person has long since grown up and these candies may no longer even be available on the market.

Triggers are set in the same way. Just as snowflakes have nothing to do with candy, perpetrators make sure that the trigger has nothing to do with what follows. I have already described how perpetrators purposefully induce dissociation. They are constantly doing this, and for this that they need all these triggers.

I actually enjoy playing the piano. As a child, I went to music lessons for several years and enjoyed it. So it happened that the perpetrators took advantage of this and set a "note trigger" for me. As soon as I played the note "A" on the piano and I was alone in a room, I used it to put myself in a hypnotic state. This served to train me over and over to think of the hypnotic state as normal. I didn't even notice it. But this way the perpetrators could just pick me up much faster because I was unconsciously training myself with this method, and in this way, I was constantly keeping myself on track.

A commonly used and well-known trigger, also known as a recognition sign among Satanists, is as follows: Someone puts a finger on their lips as a sign to be quiet. It is then called silence. This is how it was with me. When I was in a group together with other people and someone consciously or even accidentally put his finger on his mouth like that, I immediately fell out of the conversation and hardly talked or did not talk at all. If this was done by a perpetrator, it served to keep me on a silent course. If someone else did it unconsciously, I still suddenly stopped talking and took myself out of the conversation because, for some reason I was not aware of, I suddenly felt I no longer belonged.

Light is also often used. The light is used in a similar way to Morse code. I know of victims who leave their house and go to perpetrators because they drive past their house at night with the car and shine the headlights briefly three times in the room.

With me a recumbent eight was illuminated with flashlights by moving the lamp in this form. The recumbent eight as a sign for infinity is likewise an Illuminati recognition sign. This kind of light sign is also used to torment a person and bring him into a confused state (e.g. by constantly moving a lamp directly in front of the eyes while the eyes have to follow the light). If one has been triggered and tortured with it, all that is needed is for this sign to be shown once or twice, and already this will cause confusion and disorientation. The relief light is again used for re-orientation, this time however by a red shining dot. In my case, it led me to go exactly where the perpetrators wanted me to go. And that without words, without telephone, without technical means, without evidence.

My daughter, whom I had when I was over forty, was taken away from me immediately after birth. Since large parts of my dissociation had already dissolved, the memories of what had happened were present quite quickly. I then visited a gynecologist's office, hoping signs the pregnancy could still be established. I was in pain, and I wanted to have it checked. The pregnancy could not be confirmed anymore. But on the ultrasound something was detected in the uterus which was either remnants of plasma or mucosa. In addition, it was determined that I would have my first period again very soon. I waited for that, but nothing happened. Why? Because the following had happened shortly before: I was driving back to my home late at night in the car. Suddenly someone was standing on the side of the road waving a flashlight. While doing so, this person made a sign of a recumbent figure eight. With that, the person triggered out another "ego-state" in me, which was then clueless and in need of orientation. After that, I saw a red, dot-like light through which I gained re-orientation. I thought someone needed help, and so I pulled over. Then a man came up to me and said, "Well, Beautiful, here we go!". This was a trigger phrase that caused me to follow him. I got out of the car and ran after the man. A few meters away there was a car on the lawn, a silver VW Caddy. A second man was standing next to it. I knew him from before. A woman also came along. The first man and the woman dragged me into the car, and I only remember that I noticed how I stepped away. Whether I had been given a drug, I cannot say. I only perceived what was happening around me through a kind of bubble. As if I were trapped inside it. I heard them talking, but didn't understand what they were saying. Everything sounded strangely warped to me. After a while, an ambulance with blue lights pulled up. And a person dressed like a paramedic joined it. She held me by the head while the first man took off my leggings and underpants and started to tamper with me intimately. The whole thing did not last long, a few minutes at most, and the people put me back in the car. They had put an incontinence mat on my seat and given me some linen strips, then they all drove away. I wiped the remaining blood from between my legs, drove to the nearest parking lot, and threw all the material into a trash can. After that, I drove back to where I lived. I had not noticed any loss of time. I had only wondered why I wasn't wearing any underpants under my leggings. The incident landed temporarily in my trauma memory, apparently.

After this traumatic incident, I had diarrhea for a few days. The long-awaited period came only a few weeks later. I thus realized in my life in the outside world that something could not be right. Since I was in a phase in which the dissociation slowly but surely was dissolving, I was soon able to access these memories. Perpetrators had feigned a minor accident to lure me into a trap and subject me to a quick curettage on the side of the road. Thus, all possible evidence of the recent pregnancy had been eliminated.

This is organized violence. Nothing, or hardly anything, is left to chance. These people are very well-organized in the underground, as I said before, with Mafia-like structures that enable them to do a great deal.

11.7 "Life Design " Track

The life of a victim of mind control is pre-programmed and -arranged. His life is shaped. One hardly notices anything of it. And if one does, one is rebuked. The reprimand does not always have to take the form of violence. Most of the time it manifests itself in very harmless ways. The problem is that we as human beings accept the reality of the world as truth, as it is presented to us. The victim has his world created by others, for example, as follows:

- A victim wants to travel. The cult holds the victim back by disillusioning him: "Oh, that takes money, time, savings. I could never travel either..."
- A victim wants to continue his education: "Oh... you don't always have to go to school. Just enjoy life for once! I myself am so happy that I'm out of school and don't have to study anymore!"

I expressed the desire to further my education in psychology. Then a trainer came and told me that psychology was no good, nor Biblical. "You don't need psychology, and pastoral care is not important." I did it anyway. But when I had a problem and couldn't get on with myself, the trainer said that it was the fault of this stupid psychology. With that, he devalued everything that I liked and was valuable to me. He also made me feel anxious, because I was then afraid that he could be right, and that God would actually not like my project. That was also an attempt to stop me, because logically the studies would help me understand much of what was going on with me, and so I was already unconsciously taking steps toward deprogramming. Of course, the cult did not like that.

- When a victim realizes something, then - as if by chance - a thousand obstacles come into his life.

I had already signed the contract with the school where I wanted to do my studies. I had taken care of the financing and was happy because it looked as if everything would work out. But then an event (probably induced) came into my life, and my financial aid for this degree was rescinded. They were trying to hold me back. I was then able to continue nonetheless, because the school administration was very sympathetic to me, and I was able to make a deal with them. Otherwise, I should have had to drop out.

- A married or partnered victim wants to travel. The partner, a coach, does not want to.
- The partner or trafficker never listens when the victim wants to talk.
- Traumata in life in the outside world are created - for example by divorce, an accident of a family member, illness of the victim's best friend - so that the limits for recognition (healing) are not crossed. The victim must first overcome the trauma before moving on.
- The victim is labeled psychotic or insane if he or she recognizes anything.

When I realized that I had been sexually abused by my father, I confronted him. In response I received, "Your mother put this into your headt!" and "You read too many newspapers and books!" and "I know what your problem is: You're homesick, that's why you're miserable!" (I had moved away a few years earlier from French-speaking Switzerland, where I liked it very much. After that, the first memory of abuse came up.).

My grandfather, who was officially deceased, was in fact still alive and could thus continue to work incognito. I encountered him in the flesh every now and then after his alleged death. He conducted certain torture sessions, especially electroshock torture. When the memory of this came back and I reported this, I was considered untrustworthy by an official authority figure from whom I sought help.

I can certainly understand that something like this seems unbelievable. That's where the big problem lies. For the perpetrators, it is a small thing. The rules that apply to us in normal, everyday life do not apply to them. They do what they want. Victims and witnesses are then considered insane. But not the perpetrators.

- It may happen that an honest person comes into a victim's life. If this person then perhaps recognizes certain problems and wants to point them out, he too is labeled psychotic and is usually excluded from the victim's life.

- When programming breaks out in a victim, the person often behaves strangely to outsiders. It is not uncommon for the affected person to be admitted to a psychiatric clinic or sent to cult friends to recover. They justify it by telling the victim, "We protected you from yourself!"; "You needed professional help!" or "You needed friends who loved you!" In this way, life is shaped, and derailing victims are put back on "track".

12. Monarch Programming

They called me Butterfly Child, because I had to go through what they called Monarch programming. There are reports that Monarch programming is the successor to MK-Ultra. I have no proof of that. I can only report what I experienced myself. To find explanations for this, I set out to find more information. Even though this was not professional journalistic research, I came across numerous things that confirmed my memory of personal experiences.

Monarch programming, according to my assumption, aims at splitting the victim's soul. On the one hand, these manipulations of the soul are scientific experiments. On the other hand, the splitting of souls is carried out in the context of the spiritual thought of the Illuminati with the aim of their own enlightenment. Thus, they try to create enlightened - illuminated - parts by splitting a soul. These illuminated soul parts are then to be reunited in rituals.

Monarch programming is often used when the perpetrators want to preserve a Satanic bloodline. It is important for Satanists to have successors in these family structures. These are children who have often been tortured in the womb. In fact, dissociation can be induced prenatally. This then serves to turn people into perfect slaves, manipulable subjects. For the perpetrators, they are merely living commodities to serve the purpose at hand, without the victims noticing anything. Their goal is to make slaves for powerful people in politics or business. For this purpose, as already mentioned, well-known torture methods are used. But this programming is also used to develop new torture methods. In the process, many people die because they test how much a person can endure, to which group of people one can do this or that in order to manipulate them and to which not. Children are quite suitable for this.

All this is also used to train soldiers for secret services. But unfortunately, also to train other people, women, men and children, for assassinations or other covert missions. In so-called "empty" states, in which one is deprived of any sense perception (for example in special stimulus isolation tanks), codes or political secrets can be "implanted", for example, for a human being loses orientation after a certain time. The programmed person then keeps these messages, i.e. codes or secrets, inside himself without knowing it. This information is then retrieved by triggers at times and places selected by the perpetrators.

Why this name "Monarch programming"? The name was chosen because of the monarch butterfly. This insect has a special ability that gave researchers the idea to program humans. A monarch butterfly is able to pass on its knowledge to its offspring via genetics. So, if knowledge genetics can be passed on genetically, the main thing is to find the "right parents" for the victims, who will then pass on the "knowledge" by means of Monarch mind control. Monarch programming is highly regarded by the Illuminati and is part of the training. The victim is programmed according to the life cycles of a monarch butterfly: First it starts its life as a small caterpillar, which means it is in the womb and has still unexplored, but manipulable potential. Then it becomes a cocoon. Cocoon time is the time of programming. Once it hatches as a butterfly (new creation), it is a (monarch) slave. During tortures, there is a dazed feeling, like the floating and fluttering of a butterfly. It is also for this reason that the Illuminati use this designation for their Mind Control victims.

Again and again a long code appeared in front of my inner eye. For years, I had no idea what it was all about, nor did I give it any further thought. It was simply a recurring thought for me without meaning.

This code was entered into my subconscious over and over again in empty, "floating and fluttering butterfly phases", during which I was deprived of any sense perception. In my life in the outside world I had not noticed anything of it. Nevertheless, it had been implanted somewhere in my brain.

When the dissociation slowly dissolved, I came to memories and had flashbacks[23], and this also came to the surface.

But over time, new images were added to this code. At some point I realized that these were memories. I had to enter this code into a number box, which gave me access to a compound. There was a big black fence in front of an enormous gate. Men accompanied me each time. I was quite small at that time, I guess about seven years old. But over the years I was taken there very often. Behind this enormous gate was a huge hall. I know that it was a kind of bunker. There were over twenty fighter planes in there. Every time I stood in front of these planes, the men would tell me in English, "You can make war with these!". I was not the only one who entered this code. There was always a second person, another child.

One method that belongs to Monarch programming is to make two people psychologically dependent on each other. They form so-called twins, but biologically they do not necessarily have to be related. In rituals they are joined together and initiated into a common secret. In the process, they then each share half of a programmed piece of information, which makes them dependent on each other.

In summary, Monarch programming uses elements of science, developmental psychology, behavioral psychology, and brain research, to create perfect mind control in slaves. The Satanic-ritual abuse serves as the basis for the necessary personality splits; through it, the victims learn to dissociate from an early age.

13. How Are Triggers Set?

The goal of triggers is to set off a chain reaction. First comes a trigger, then a reaction; with the help of punishment or reward, the two are linked together on an unconscious level. A particular reaction or action then follows automatically from a trigger, without any specific thought on the part of the person concerned. In the context of ritual abuse with mind control, perpetrators are careful to ensure that the reaction should have nothing to do with the trigger. One must be dissociated from the other.

The famous experiment of the Russian scientist and physician Ivan Pavlov (d.1936) shows well how a trigger can be set. He fed his dog for a long time and always rang a bell before feeding. The dog understood very quickly that the bell (the trigger) meant: it would get something to eat (reward). Soon salivation (as a reaction) was activated in the dog as soon as it heard the bell. When the owner then skipped the food (the reward), the dog still started salivating due only to the ringing of the bell. The bell had nothing to do with eating, yet for this one dog it was the sign, and it salivated whether or not there was food afterwards.

The goal of abusers is to dissociate a child or adult. Dissociation is the opposite of association. When you hear the word "garden", you probably think of the following associative words: flowers, vegetables, lawn mower, etc. In induced dissociation, the exact opposite is done. Care is taken to ensure that one has nothing to do with the other. Confusion is intentionally created. And then into the confusion re-orientation is introduced: Perpetrator orientation (e.g., bell and eating). In this moment of confusion, in which one does not know which way is up, one is simply glad for any orientation.

We can imagine it like this: Suppose someone is floating in a silent, empty, colorless and odorless room; he does not even know that he is human, he does not remember that he has a language to speak and has no idea that there is life and death. He simply does not know anything. But he has opened his eyes, he can see, hear and smell. Suddenly, from somewhere comes a voice that tells him something. Since he has no idea about anything else at that moment, he will automatically follow that voice, because he is dependent on orientation. I worked with dementia patients for a few years. The severely affected sometimes just followed us as a team, without any sense or purpose, just for the reason that they were looking for orientation in that moment.

And this is exactly how the perpetrators work. They usually bring their victims into a situation of extreme confusion through torture. From a certain point on, victims simply cannot take it anymore. The perpetrators notice this. Then they usually stop the torture. Since pain and confusion are so extreme at that moment, a kind of emptiness is created. If someone asks a question into this emptiness, one is unable to answer. For example, you do not even know your own name anymore. In this state, triggers are set. One is then told, for example, who one is. You are addressed with a different name. For example: Anna. Or you are told that the color violet stands for silence, and that all men and women who wear violet know exactly who you are and what you do. And that if you talk, they will report everything so that you will be punished. You may also be taken to a purple room, and lies may be hammered into you there. These are repeated over and over and over again. So for the "ego-state" of a victim called Anna, the color violet (trigger) may indicate the following: "All people dressed in violet are watching me. That means I have to be silent." Thus, the action desired by the perpetrators follows. In such moments of strong dissociation and emptiness, other "ego-states" are also formed or take over some that already exist. So, at first, not at all the front person, who lives a life in the outside world, is addressed, but parts in the back, in the closed rooms of the inner world. The victim is conditioned until even the "ego

-state" of the outer life is silent as soon as he sees the color violet. However, the victim does not perceive this, but simply remains silent, since the underlying conditioning took place on an unconscious level.

When I was brought before a man, naked, freezing and wounded after a child hunt, he asked me who I was and what I should like to have. I was unable to answer. I did not know at that moment what had happened to me and could not place anything. I stared at this man and didn't say a word. I had been brought to a state of confusion. I was in a state where triggers could be set.

Then the man yelled at me, insulted me with words like: "You stupid cow, you are worth nothing! You don't even know who you are!!! And you cannot even tell me what you want! You are not normal! Once again, you don't realize what it's all about! Well, then I must tell you again who you are and what you want. You're a stupid, dim-witted, disgusting girl. You'll be lucky if I'm still around to help you! I'll also tell you what you want now, since you have no idea about anything! You will do what I tell you! I am the one whom you must obey. See how merciful I am! Because I'm going to make you two offers: you can lie here on the couch now, spread your legs and choose whether you're going to be rammed with my cock or with the knife. See? I still give you the choice, even though you're so stupid! And on top of that, I forgive your stupidity and idiocy!!! I am being so kind to you! And you? You are wasting my precious time. I have to teach you things that everyone knows. You're not even able to say your name. Then I'll just say it: Lys!" I lay down on the couch. The perpetrators would say willingly. I was a stupid cow. A stupid Lys cow!! But better to be a stupid cow than nothing. Better to lie down on the couch and get rammed than not know where the ground is and whether one is human or animal.

In this empty space, the following triggers were set for me: "Lys" = This was then one of my most important cult names. It gave me identity. "Couch" = Lie down voluntarily! This showed me what to do and where to go.

So when I heard this combination of words from a perpetrator, I switched. I lay down somewhere, seemingly unsolicited, to be sexually abused and raped. But I compartmentalized this and didn't know anything or fractions of it after that. For example, if only one word of this combination was used, I entered a kind of trance state, but in which I still perceived everything. If then the second word of this combination did not follow, then I could come back from this state. Otherwise, what has been described above happened next. Since my parents had christened me Liliane, it could happen that such an utterance as: "Come, Liliane (Lily, Lys), let us sit on the couch" caused a change of the inner "ego-states". I was ready to work as a sex slave. An abuser could then take advantage of this. A non-perpetrator, of course, could not, because he knew nothing about it. If nothing followed, I soon recovered from this state.

13.1 Reward

I mentioned triggers, actions, and then rewards. There were also rewards. For example, if I did very well on the couch and satisfactorily completed that task, I got a reward. In these circles, among other things, one is rewarded with beautiful stones. They must be earned, however, and of course this involves lying and abuse. A typical case might look like this: The child is shown a beautiful stone, for example, a diamond. It is asked affectionately whether it would also like such a beautiful diamond, or whether it would also like to be as beautiful as this diamond. The child usually agrees. The trainer will praise the child for having such good taste and promise to help it become such a beautiful diamond as well. The child is told that one must earn the right to receive such a diamond or to become such a diamond. The reward is held up in front of the child's nose. But endless hours of abuse and torture are the price. After that, the child actually gets a diamond, or a piece of jewelry with diamonds. This may then be worn on special occasions, to family reunions, to rituals, to sex orgies or other Satanic meetings. The child is then praised by the members for wearing this beautiful jewelry.

The amethyst is usually the first stone that a victim gets. It stands for silence, which ranks at the top. This means that the child has passed the first step of the difficult exam and has inner "ego -states" that guarantee absolute silence.

13.2 Black and White Torture

Torture does not always happen externally. There is black torture, which leaves marks on the body. In this case, one is physically injured. And there is white torture. In this case, one is not physically injured. A child who has been locked in a cellar for three days, naked, without food and without water, will bear no noticeable marks of the mistreatment if it is given a bath, food, and new clothes. The following method of white torture was used by the perpetrators on me and other children:

I still remember a room in which there were some emergency hospital beds. We children were put in there. At the right rear side of the room there were some people, mostly dressed in white, standing behind a pane of glass. It was similar to the ward room in a hallway in a hospital. They could watch us. They gave us goggles of a sort to wear. These were fixed very tightly and could not slip. We ourselves were also strapped to the beds so that it was impossible for us to move. I remember strange pictures and strange colors from movies that were shown to us. But there was a different movie for each eye. I remember that I was unable to concentrate. I tried to fixate on the left or the right, but I couldn't. The goggles had been put on in such a way that it was also impossible to close my eyes. One had to watch. There was no alternative. This lasted hours or days; how long I can no longer say. It felt like half an eternity until we were released from it. I remember very strong headaches and migraine attacks already as a small child.

Black torture is used less often on those children who are supposed to survive. There were marks and injuries, but most of the time I could either take care of myself or I concealed the bruises and wounds with clothes, or I pretended to be sick and stayed at home. Yes, I was often absent from school, and later also my apprenticeships or work.

14. Silence - the Greatest Commandment - the Most Powerful Weapon

Silence is the perpetrators' strongest weapon, and they use it on their victims purposefully and skillfully. So-called "silence rituals" are carried out time and again. And this is already done in early childhood, when the child begins to speak. This means that after a ritual, another ritual is performed to seal what has happened under oath. This includes methods such as being buried alive, almost being suffocated, almost being drowned, or witnessing what happens to a "traitor", being sacrificed, or burned or skinned alive. If such killings are then carried out, for example, still in a violet room, the silence of a victim is reinforced at the same time, because the already pre-installed color programming meets a new trauma.

In the one cemetery where I was always taken for rituals, I was buried with a body that was already half decomposed. That is, I had to lie down next to it. The coffin was closed, and, judging from the movements, I had to assume that they had buried us. I panicked; yes, I consisted only of panic, but I did not scream, because I already knew that I must not speak up and fight back. After half an eternity they brought me out again and took my oath of silence. They promised me that if I ever told anyone, I would end up like that corpse. I would decompose like that, and no one would ever think of me... I swore NEVER TO TALK!

In these silence rituals, during a torture session, in an almost empty state where the pain is enormous, one is asked if one swears to remain silent forever. It is said that if one agrees, the pain will stop. If not, a sibling or the mother will be killed, or the pain will never stop. A child will do ANYTHING for the hope that the pain may stop, absolutely anything. It is fully manipulable. Once you have agreed to be silent as a child, you are shown what will happen if you do talk. You are told over and over again that you would be considered a weirdo if you told anyone anything like that, that you would either be called a liar or shut away in a mental institution, because no one believes such a thing, not even your own mother, not even your uncle or your piano teacher, and certainly not your best friend, let alone the priest or the nice neighbor. It is always repeated to you that everything is being watched, and if you do talk at some point, bad things will happen... you know.... a sudden car accident or cardiac arrest. Death is always present. It is also crystal clear that what happens within your own four walls, in your own family, in your own church, among your own friends, is nobody's business... isn't it? But of course, that is clear.

To ensure that a victim remains silent, control methods are introduced. A child takes part in a ritual. Afterwards, he or she is asked what he or she has seen or experienced. The child generally obeys and tells. Afterwards, it is massively tortured as punishment for having told. In this way, the perpetrators create a new "ego-state", in other words, an empty personality that can be written on again like a blank sheet. This new "ego-state" is then ordered to remain silent under threat of murder.

And so I kept silent for a long, long time. I went to therapy for several years because I had depression, but I never said a word about what I was experiencing or had experienced, never a word about the daily violence, humiliations, and how I was locked up. Zero, nothing. And then, when I had the one big shock experience - one too many from my point of view - I started to stutter. Then I could no longer talk anyway. Even speech therapy didn't help.

If perpetrators know about such a silent component, they do not necessarily always have to use physical torture later, when the victim is older, to activate or deactivate it. Even being picked up then does not always look spectacular. On the contrary. It can happen in broad daylight without the victim realizing that he or she has been picked up to be kept on track.

As an adult woman, years after separating from my first husband, I fell in love and remarried. The marriage broke up a few months later and the bridesmen had broken off contact with me. This breaking off of contact was very traumatic for me, but I never talked to them about it. Why? I was silenced in a way that was quite natural from the outside, almost lovingly. After many months, I still dared to contact them, simply because I missed them very much as friends. They invited me to a meeting. The meeting took place on the premises of a church community. When I entered the room, apart from the couple, another woman was waiting for me. I knew this woman slightly. She belonged to their team, which they had founded to help prostitutes out of their misery. The former bride's attendant started the conversation with the following question: "What does freedom mean to you?" I hesitated at first, explaining that freedom for me means being inwardly at peace with myself and with God when I make a decision or when I do this and that (though today I define freedom differently). Afterwards he and his wife gave me a lecture: Freedom means: not to look back on what has happened, and also not to talk about it. They showed me a blank sheet of paper and said that the old had passed and the new was there. And the new blank sheet was there to be written on again. At the same time, they quoted several Bible verses. They explained to me that psychology and pastoral care were worthless and that only the Bible was the valid standard. Freedom did not mean talking about the past. Freedom meant writing something new on the blank page. They also explained to me that words have power and that negative things should not be spoken. By negative, they also meant not addressing past or present grievances. They said they themselves had decided to remove anything negative from their vocabulary and encouraged me to do the same. Saying negative things evoked negative feelings, and they wanted to avoid that. They then asked me if I understood and agreed. When I said yes, the man said that now that I saw it that way too, contact could be resumed.

I was quite upset after that meeting, but I did not let anyone notice my reaction. On the contrary, I still talked with them and the other woman about their work among women on the margins of society. But the message was clearly received: YOU WILL BE SILENT! I never spoke to them after that about the grievances in my second marriage and certainly not about the pain and that they had broken off contact. They didn't want me to, and with this conversation they had ordered me to comply. They had addressed the silent personality in me and brought her back on track.

Successfully - at least for a while. For my part, I was only happy at that time to be allowed to have contact with my beloved friends again. That was enough for me. I accepted the silence for the sake of that.

Even then I realized that something was wrong with this conversation; however, I could not yet get to the heart of it because I was still under the influence of manipulation and mind control.

15. Christian Spiritual Abuse

Since certain groups of Satanists are spiritually oriented, much ritual abuse is also done on a spiritual basis. The religious Satanists hate everything that the God of the Bible loves. So their goal is to abuse everything that is somehow related to God. And the Bible tells us that God loves us human beings. For this reason, I believe, Satanists attack what God cares most about. Namely, human beings. They do this by perverting and manipulating. Many who worship Satan know the Bible very well and are excellent at quoting it. Thus, they often use Bible verses in their rituals to abuse. They take them out of context and pervert them.

"The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit:..." (Psalm 51:17a)

Permission to hurt people's minds and souls through torture.

"For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink... " (Romans 14:17a)

This justifies torture by deprivation of drink and food.

"For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. " (Romans 14:7-8)

This makes it clear to the victim that life belongs to Satan, their Lord, and that death honors him.

"But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." (Romans 13:14)

Normal human needs are called selfish desires in the realm of ritual abuse. These are forbidden and sealed with such a verse. Putting on the New Garment in Satanism has to do with silence and splitting the soul. In part, plays are performed in which Jesus is played. A Jesus who never listens, who doesn't care what happens, and who simply puts on a new robe after a sacrifice....

"And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; …" (Luke 6:29a)

Translated into the Satanic, it means: You MUST let yourself be abused. If someone wants sex from you and then someone else, you must comply. Otherwise, you are not pleasing to God.

"Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? Till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto the, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven. " (Matthew 18:21-22)

This verse is used by tormentors very often! It means: Lie down, I'll beat you, and you must forgive me anyway!

I was beaten and maltreated very often by my trainer and tormentor. Sometimes I complained. But then he often applied this verse and told me that as a Christian I had to forgive him anyway, otherwise I would not be a good Christian. I wanted to be a good Christian. This verse was his carte blanche to continue abusing me. Thus he could live out his sadism, since I had to forgive infinitely often. Seven times seventy times stands for eternally.

There is hardly an end to the perversion of Biblical messages for purposes of spiritual abuse. Depending on the situation and the victim, Bible verses are misused to chastise, to beat, to abuse, to correct, to manipulate, to make someone realize how wrong he is, how wrong he feels, and that God does not love him like that, that he needs punishment, that his behavior is not pleasing to God and people, etc. The field is enormous.

It is very important to me at this point to explain why abuse and violence of this kind does indeed happen – I dare say: is even practised with fervour and enthusiasm - in Christian communities. It is not the sincere and honest Christians who are to blame. The reason is, on the one hand, that churches and Christian communities are a favorite target of infiltration by Satanists, and on the other hand, that unfortunately there are certain Christians who are very religious and judgemental (in a negative sense). Religiousness and judgementalism serve the Satanists as a cover for their work. It is one of the great goals of the Illuminati to have power in the areas of religion and faith. Therefore, they send their well-trained people into Christian communities with the aim of destroying them. In doing so, they are very persistent, tenacious, and are experts in abuse under the pious guise of a church or community of Christians, even in free churches. I, myself, like to be with devout people, with Christians. But I know of well-trained abusers and Satanists who hide there and lead their double life. Christian communities and churches should, in my opinion, be very careful and check their people well. Not all that glitters is gold. Not all those who recite Bible verses by heart or are even active in pastoral care are convinced and honest, believing Christians. There are wolves among the sheep, wolves in sheep's clothing. They are to be unmasked!

16. Diseases and Other Signs

There were signs in my outer life that something was wrong. But it was very difficult to recognize. I was simply seen as a child who was somewhat weaker in health, and likewise later as an adult. I also said that about myself. It was a plausible explanation for me as to why I felt weak so often. I was often sick, missed school, or could not go to work. I was always the one who took the maximum number of sick days when I was training or studying. I was also always absent from work. Even as a small child and later as an adult, I suffered from severe migraines, so I often called in sick. When I had minor injuries, I did not show them, but rather took care of them myself. Most of the time I did not know in my external life where the injuries or the enormously large bruises came from. I thought I was just prone to them. When I could not wear underwear after a rape, I called in sick to my employer and stayed home. In this way I survived but did not realize for many years what the real reason for my poor health was. Even when I fell into severe depression, attempted suicide, needed hospitalization, I did not realize what had really happened to me. As a young woman, I was hospitalized for unexplained severe pain that led to paralysis in my arms and legs. None of the many professionals who had observed, examined or treated me realized the real reason. I suffered from vaginismus for many years and overcame many fears that I could not place. Since the pain and anxiety were still there, I often did exposure training myself.[24] Yet, neither I nor any professional recognized that I was suffering from the effects of severe abuse. Also, as an adult woman, I suddenly could not speak clearly. I had everything checked out, but nothing was found. My speech therapist said she could not work with me as with other patients. This state of lisping and stuttering lasted for more than two and a half years. Only when - after the angel's visit to my room - I happened to meet a woman who had studied neurolinguistic psychology, did I realize the reason for my sudden speech disorders. She told me about people who can't talk because they stumble over the content of words and that therefore logopedic exercises wouldn't be of much use. It struck me then that this was exactly my problem. I could not pronounce words with positive and life-affirming content at all. My tongue simply would not move. It felt enormously heavy. Once I understood this, I was able to work on myself specifically, and the speech disorder was resolved over time.

What was also striking about me - and I hear this again and again from other sufferers - was that I hardly reacted to medication. In particular, sleeping pills or tranquilizers (benzodiazepines) hardly had the desired effect on me. Even with high doses of sedatives, I could still drive a car without my reaction being impaired. I observed the same thing after drinking alcohol. Even intravenously injected sleeping aids had no effect. Today I explain these reactions to myself in two different ways: First, my body was obviously used to drugs; second, I suspect that different "ego-states" had been involved, so that one of them took drugs and the other drove a car. The "ego state" that was driving had no drugs in it. It is also a plausible explanation for me - besides the fact that God had a plan with me other than death - to have survived the suicide attempts with medication.

The symptoms are different for each and every affected person; there is no general symptomatology that can be established. Since I was perceived as a strong woman, in spite of all these difficulties in my external life, no one noticed what was behind my facade, behind my everyday personality.

As a child in everyday life, I was quite inconspicuous. I was often shy, but I was still considered a cheerful and life-affirming girl. I was only afraid of some older children who bothered me and of the big dogs in the neighborhood. I also remember feeling extreme sadness, but I hid it.

Fortunately, I was able to read very well very quickly. I loved to read. The city library was a paradise for me. It was my world. Often, on Wednesday afternoons when school was not in session, I would ride my green bike into town and hole up in the library for a few hours. In my heart I sometimes felt a great, heavy pain that I couldn't place, and I would have wept for hours. But no one was allowed to see this pain. So I looked for books with very sad stories. I read the saddest passages over and over again and sometimes cried for a long time. All alone in my corner with the books I was allowed to cry. After all, the stories were so sad, and I cried because of them, not because of my pain. That was my truth. After a while the pain subsided, and I went home.

17. Consequences in External Life

As a victim, one often feels homeless. This inner cry to put down roots and find a home has always led me to roam. I have moved very often in my life. External circumstances forced me to move on, even though I had just arrived. So one is in a vicious circle, and the cult does everything to keep one in it. When I became ill and had severe depression, I could no longer work. I was an IV pensioner.[25] With such a pension, one can hardly pay for an apartment, let alone any extras. So one is financially dependent and bound to stay put. Traveling is not possible. This is very convenient for the cult, because they can access the victim at any time. I was lucky enough to overcome my depression and get back into the mainstream job market. However, I encountered great difficulties in doing so and was not able to take up as good a job as before, because I had been absent too long, because I could no longer do any further training, and because many things had changed in my industry. So I had to accept a part-time job with correspondingly lower earnings. I was still grateful, but I was also sometimes frustrated because I had to work my way up again. People affected in this way are punished several times over. First, one becomes a victim of unbelievably heinous violence. As a result, some become ill and can no longer work. This leads to financial difficulties, which in turn render it impossible, or at least very difficult to break out of the vicious circle.

What is extraordinarily difficult is this: When one finally manages to break the silence, or part of it, and gradually musters the courage to talk about it, very often one are not believed. For me, sometimes it was almost worse than remembering the violence itself. It is incredibly difficult and can be highly retraumatizing.

As a result, one loses friends and even family members who do not want to believe it. So one is forced to make new social contacts, if one still has the strength to do so at all. Getting the right help is extraordinarily difficult.

I had been feeling better for some time, I no longer had depression and had the courage and strength to go to work again. I was already looking for work, but at that time I was still an IV pensioner. However, assessments were underway, and I knew that my pension would soon be cancelled. I therefore planned to work as a floater at a private Spitex[26], initially without a fixed contract.

One day - during that time - I went to a theme park. I went with a child on a simple track, where cars can ride quite comfortably one behind the other on a track. One can control the accelerator in these cars. Anyway, we had arrived at our destination, when the people in the car behind us just crashed into us. I guess they had hit the gas pedal. Many years before, I had suffered whiplash in a car accident. This blow triggered such a whiplash again.

This happened just days before my IV pension payments were stopped. So I could not start the new job. At first, I was confined to bed for several weeks and could hardly move. And instead of going to work, I had to register with the social welfare office.

Finally, after very many years I had managed to save a little. I decided to visit my dear friend in the USA and got myself a passport. But then came the tax bill from the municipality. And it was about 6,000 francs higher than the one from the previous year, although I had not earned more. This meant a very large sum for me. A series of stupid and strange events had led to my mistakenly overlooking a deadline. Other mistakes were made by the local government. For example, they had sent a letter to a wrong e-mail address asking me to submit some more documents. This mail never reached me, of course, and I could not respond to it accordingly. I handed over my dossier to a tax consultant and asked for help. We even filed an objection with the cantonal office, but it was all to no avail. The municipality insisted on the amount, although the head of the tax office admitted to my tax advisor that in this way the federal government was receiving money that did not belong to it! Admittedly, I had also made a mistake, but I was obliged to pay everything! The following year things returned to normal, but I had to cancel my trip to the USA.

I cannot prove anything. But I know that such things are very typical of the cult. I was in financial need again, and I had no choice but to stay at home. So the cult still had access to me and could monitor me. Withholding funds, producing accidents, hurting people one cares about - these are all things they do to traumatize the outside personality and create dependencies. One has to stay at home. Under their control.

I had part of my pension fund paid out. I had another part paid into a vested benefits account[27]. But I did not receive any money for weeks, nor any confirmation, simply nothing. The money had simply disappeared. After several attempts, also on the part of my pension fund, it was finally transferred to me many weeks later, without an apology or even a word of explanation. I still don't know where it remained for so long.

Sure, things like that can happen every now and then. To err is human. But I became very suspicious at the time. So many coincidences in my life, as far as finances are concerned, are very strange. I was just happy when I finally got the money. However, it may have actually been a message to show me that the cult still had power over me, even over my finances.

I was on sick leave for a few months and received daily sickness benefits. Although I was in therapy with a physician, I had to present myself to a medical officer of the insurance company for an expert opinion. He had to clarify whether my inability to work was justified or not. I told him about the ritual abuse. At that time many memories came up, and I was deeply shaken by them. It had taken me some time to regain some stability. However, I was well able to take care of myself and did not need any medication. The medical officer apparently saw things differently and wanted to have me treated or assessed as an inpatient because of alleged "delusions". Since I was in no way suffering from delusions and there was no reason for an inpatient stay, I refused to go. Moreover, I know that hospital stays are sometimes arranged by the cult in order to reprogram victims of ritual abuse. My physician at the time, an expert in this field who knows the structures of organized abuse, saw this the same way I did and therefore did not check me into a clinic. A dispute over diagnosis and therapy ensued between the doctors. Finally, the insurance company stopped its payments. The reason given was lack of cooperation, because I had not gone to the psychiatric clinic.

It is clear to me that an insurance company has to clarify whether an incapacity to work actually exists and what options are available, so that a policyholder can be reintegrated into the work process as quickly as possible. That is part of their job. In my case, however, it was very striking that the insurance company stuck to the referral to a psychiatric clinic based on the recommendation of their medical officer. It was also striking how my doctor's arguments were simply ignored and they were in no way willing to consider any other proposal. Even appeals to the CEO were of no use. They stuck to their opinion. I know myself, and I know very well whether I need help in a clinic or not. And I was also able to say at the time exactly what I needed. That would have been outpatient trauma therapy with a professional who knows about organized ritual abuse. And I had already started that. This would have been the quickest way to get me back to work. But this was not granted to me. Once again in my life, in addition to dealing with the trauma, I was struggling with finances. I no longer had an income and was financially on my own.

When I was feeling better after the years of depression and starting to think about work again, I contacted the disability insurance and applied for help to get back into work. I had an idea that cost very little money but would have allowed me to go back to my medical profession. At the same time, I was given the opportunity by IV to enroll in an internal program to work with professionals to figure out how to move forward professionally. They gave me a deadline to enroll. But as soon as the deadline should pass, it would no longer be possible to enroll and the funds would be stopped. Since I already knew what I could do and had an application running, I declined and waited for the answer. In addition, I already had prospects for a job with the private Spitex, and they knew about my plan to train as a reentering nurse. I waited for the answer to my application, but it just did not come. And so it happened that finally the deadline for registering for the internal program also passed and my pension was stopped very quickly. Since I was no longer an IV pensioner, I could not reapply. This opportunity was lst. So my only option was to return to the medical field, which was very difficult after nine years of absence and no reintegration measures. Then there was the accident at the amusement park with the whiplash injury. It seemed to me as if my life train had passed me by, and I had simply not managed to board despite all my efforts.

All the events of my life that I have described in this chapter can point to organized structures of violence. I have experienced many more inconceivable things. Again and again, I tried to be successful. But despite all the good ideas that I also tried to implement, I often did not succeed. Either I had an accident, or my source of income was cut off, or by chance something else happened that prevented me from going my way as planned. I know by now that some of it was not coincidence, but planned. Other things I do not know exactly. It is also a fact that in these Mafia-like circles outsiders who want to help are put under pressure or even threatened. Threats are used often, and unfortunately, successfully. For example, lawyers are threatened when they want to represent a victim. Social workers and physicians are also put under pressure. It is not uncommon that they then refrain from helping out of fear. I had someone who wanted to help me from time to time, but then withdrew again for inexplicable reasons. Victims of organized ritual abuse can hardly take a step without the cult noticing. Everything is controlled. Everything is manipulated. Everything is organized.

18. The Long Way Out and Breaking the Silence

There is the so-called external exit and the internal exit.

The external exit is about no longer living in these settings built by the perpetrators. In my case, this involved changing my place of residence and leaving my job. I also had to withdraw from my family and friends. The few people with whom I remained in contact were carefully selected. And even there, there were changes as the exit progressed. I unsubscribed from all social media accounts. I was no longer to be found on the internet. No Facebook, nothing. For a long time, I did not talk to anyone on the phone and barely wrote any emails. Only in case of emergency. I went to a very remote place that no one knew about. There was hardly any public transportation. So practically no one could come unnoticed, but I also had few opportunities to get away. I chose this way because it was very important for me to distance myself from the perpetrators, but also from possibly unsafe persons. By unsafe persons, I mean people in my environment of whom I did not know exactly who they were in reality and whether they were leading a double life - just as I used to. I did not reveal my whereabouts to anyone, nor was I accessible. Because with a perfectly constructed set, there are always people who serve as informants. It may be that they know, but it may also be that they are used unsuspectingly. A mutual friend can be used to get information without consciously realizing it or wanting it. Perpetrators are always interested in knowing where one is, what one is doing, what one is saying, what one is feeling, how one is thinking, with whom one is in contact, etc. With this information, they can "keep the train on the track". I did not want any bystander to be put in danger, pressured or even threatened because of me. For this reason, I simply left without saying goodbye.

Some victims create a writ of protection. In it, all memories are written with places, deeds, names of the perpetrators and as many other details as possible. This writ is then deposited with notaries and lawyers. In case of further assaults, threats or death, this letter is sent directly to several agencies for prosecution. Experience shows that after that the assaults stop or at least decrease about fifty percent. I myself have also created such writs of protection.

It is even more important to create the inner exit. For this, one must be aware of the dissociations that have taken place. The most important thing of all is to get to know oneself internally, with all one’s parts. Because, as long as perpetrators still have access to other "ego-states" and can trigger them unnoticed, pulling away and breaking off contact may not be of much use. It is known, for example, that reporter components are installed in victims that keep the cult up to date unnoticed (e.g., about the start and progress of therapies or the new place of residence). Retrieval by the perpetrators would then be easy and would pose a great danger, as then punitive measures would most likely be taken, or that torture programming would be renewed.

That is why both are necessary. That has also been my experience. I had already dealt with myself years before, because I noticed that something was not right. I had then taken small steps towards getting out, without actually noticing that I was already getting out. This helped me on the one hand, but also put me in danger. Because I had not noticed in which circles I was effectively stuck. Finally, these many small, inner mini-steps over the years helped me enormously to make the final inner exit. So all the preliminary work I had done was not lost. I had learned a lot in my training sessions and from my experience, and was able to apply it. When I understood how I could get in touch with my inner "ego-states", I was quite quickly able to make the final inner exit as well. Non-judgemental, encouraging people, including various professionals, accompanied me during the inner exit process. This whole process took almost thirty years.

Inner exit means recognizing and deprogramming the programs that have been programmed into one, much like reformatting a computer. The programmed inner "ego-states" can now be found and known. After that, it is imperative that they receive some kind of retraining. They have been lied to. They do not know what real life is. To put it casually, deprogramming means replacing the lie with truth.

When I was in the deprogramming and retraining phase, I encountered an "ego-state" that was thirteen years old. At that time as a thirteen-year old, in a trauma situation, I was asked if I wanted to be a prostitute. I had to say yes, because I knew nothing else. This "ego-state" formed at that time had remained thirteen years old. Then, when I wanted to agree to the retraining of this "ego-state", I noticed a great sadness in me. I perceived depressive feelings and thoughts of "not wanting to live anymore" flashed through my mind. The thirteen-year-old in me knew only prostitution, nothing else. That was her life. Retraining was difficult, because she was afraid of losing her identity, her "raison d'être". So I talked to myself, explained to this other "ego-state", this thirteen-year-old in me, that the assertion that she was made only for prostitution was a lie. Moreover, she had long since ceased to be thirteen, but was an adult, and no longer needed to offer any sexual favors at all. It was over. This thirteen-year-old in me finally understood, and so the long overdue integration could take place.

This is how deprogramming and integration works. Once the thirteen-year-old was integrated and the triggers that evoked this "ego- state" were found, the perpetrators no longer had access to it.

Such inner work can take a very, very long time. However, my experience as a believer is that it goes much faster with God. Since I believe that Jesus Christ is still alive today, I went to these other "ego-states" with Jesus in my thoughts. Sometimes it was quick, and integration happened immediately. Sometimes I needed more time to process it all. During and after the inner exit one may learn to be independent. And above all, learn to trust oneself and one's inner self. To dare to say "yes" and to stick to it. To dare to say "no" and to stick to it.

The Bible says in Matthew 5: "Let your yes be yes and your no be no. What goes beyond that is of evil..."

I had to learn that first! I was allowed to learn that I am free to say "no" or "yes". I am free to have a different opinion! Free to feel what I like! And above all, I am even free to disappoint expectations!

Manipulation consists of telling the other person that he or she does not feel right, does not think right, behaves wrong, etc.... It is a form of control. I have been accustomed to manipulation all my life. Coming into freedom was, and still is, precious and wonderful to me.

The road was long before I had the courage to say to someone, "Listen, I'm distancing myself from what you think about me. And how you think I should act. And I'm going to disappoint you, because I'm not going to do what you're suggesting."

Rejection was the consequence; relationships fell apart. But today I am glad about it. Because that's how I recognized manipulation. And I have come step by step into a completely new freedom.

But then came the even greater work. I had to learn to stand by my "yes" or "no." I had to learn to take responsibility for my "yes" or "no". And the painful thing was: I had to learn to deal with the feeling and the reaction of the other person when my opinion was different. I had to learn to deal with rejection.

If you can't live with someone reacting negatively to your "no", then there is a great danger of being manipulated.

After the external and internal exit has been achieved, a stabilization phase is needed. That was also the case with me. I had withdrawn once again and was living in a shared apartment. The people there knew about my history. So I was able to have myself monitored over a period of time. I also had my cell phone and computer checked. Because victims are always monitored and threatened via telephone and computer. And sometimes - as already mentioned - they also report themselves unconsciously (in a different "ego-state") to the perpetrators, because they have been programmed that way. This was also the case with me for a long time. The stabilization phase was therefore very important. Getting out is good and important; healing is possible. But in order really to have the certainty that nothing more is happening and that there really is no longer an "ego-state" of which one is unaware, such a phase is, in my opinion, necessary. After a certain time, in which nothing more happened, I knew: I am out! I have made it with God's help!

The experience of some of those affected shows the following: Once the inner exit has been achieved and the perpetrators no longer have access to further "ego-states," they usually stop, because it could become too dangerous for them. If violence or pick-ups occurred after healing of the dissociation, victims could witness everything. This is a real danger for the perpetrators. However, there is also a danger for those who leave to be killed, because they are no longer useful for the cult.

18.1 Difficulties with Reports to the Police

The perpetrators are masters in covering up and are organized with police, public prosecutors, and politicians at very high levels. If you want to file a complaint as a victim, you have to make a very difficult decision. First, you are opening a can of worms. But you do not know all the worms. Furthermore, they do not like it at all, so there is danger. Secondly, very often you are not believed at a police station. First of all, this is because many officers are unaware of this kind of crime and cannot even imagine such events. On the other hand, there are unfortunately also those black sheep who report alleged rapes and crimes that later turn out never to have taken place. For this reason, many police officers often no longer have an open ear for such statements. Third, organized ritual abuse does not exist as a criminal offense in this country.

A few years ago, I filed a complaint. I still remember how a police officer waved me off with the following words: "Oh, you and your stories!". This is a big problem. There are indeed so many "stories", most of them sounding so unbelievable that one - even the police - can hardly believe it nor wants to. It is long, complicated, incomplete. Since the perpetrators are professionals at work, there is almost always a lack of solid evidence. But the main problem, in my opinion, is that organized ritual abuse cannot be reported as such because there is no such offense in the criminal code. You can report rape, homicide, domestic violence and the like, but all of that is looked at separately. This does not help the people involved, and they may be put in great danger because they have to be punished as traitors according to the rules of the cult. Even the German BKA[28] says it does not track ritual abuse as a separate phenomenon.

Those affected suffer from the traumata and for this reason often have enormous difficulties in making coherent statements. Since almost everyone has some form of dissociative disorder, it is as if several different people were testifying instead of just one. This can lead - seen from the outside - to incomplete reports that are added to every now and then. If an inner child testifies, he or she will most likely testify differently to a twenty-year-old, even if it is about the same thing. This then leads to a lack of understanding, and those affected are not infrequently simply classified as schizophrenic, and the case is closed. Many people do not know that schizophrenia has nothing to do with Dissociative Identity Disorder or Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, and the people affected are thus done a great injustice. Because one does not know about ritual abuse or does not want to deal with it, delusions are suspected and perhaps even the admission to a psychiatric clinic is recommended.

In my opinion, the police and the judiciary should be able to follow clues and not just evidence. Above all, they should have enough psychologically trained staff who know about dissociation and how dissociative people might tell stories. If they were able to do this, many crimes could be uncovered and victims helped. Also, changes should definitely and urgently be made at the political level! The victims need help!

It was just before the Satanic holiday, when the festival is celebrated with sex orgies. I was called and assigned the job of serving as a guard that evening. The guests would have been able to register with me using the predetermined code, and I would then have to let them in. The orgy was to take place in the basement of a large villa in the middle of a small town in Germany. I knew this villa because I had been dragged there myself as a child.

What certain perpetrators probably had not noticed at the time was that the barrier of amnesia had already partially dissolved in my case, and therefore I could no longer always be accessed. So I had realized what was going on and went to the police accompanied by a psychological specialist. Together we wanted to explain to the police what was about to happen in their city and why I knew about it. Unfortunately, our plan failed. The police officer, who at first listened quite well, distrusted us as time went by; probably because it sounded so unlikely. She turned us away. But I had all the information and knew where and at what time this orgy was planned. I knew that children would be raped and abused there. And I even knew the names of people who might participate there. It was a huge misery. Of course, I did not do my job as a guard. For this reason, my life was in immediate danger. The perpetrators had thereby noticed that I was successfully getting out. I had to leave my place of residence in a hurry and hide. I never returned to my former apartment.

The police already said I could call them at any time if I was threatened or followed, but that was of no use to me. The perpetrators threaten without evidence, or they simply eliminate people. Preferred methods of killing people are staged car accidents or inducing cardiac arrest.

18.2 Surveillance, Threats and Cover-ups

The cult also very often works with actors. Scenes are specially staged to manipulate, confuse and silence a victim again. They send people to threaten victims and show them, "We are here. We always know where you are and what you are doing. You can't escape us. We have the power no matter what you do. Even the power of life and death. "

The affected person is sometimes so harassed that they wonder whether they are normal or not. Helpers of the affected person are also threatened or even killed.

I had a lawyer on retainer. The victim assistance of my canton of residence did not want to cover costs that I had applied for, and this was illegal in my opinion. Along the way, I told her about the abuse on the part of my father and husband. I told her about the police investigations and the "strange things" that happened to me in my everyday life. She said, startled, that there was obviously much more to it than that. She offered to represent me in these matters and said that she would first find out about the status of the police investigations. I agreed verbally, as this conversation took place on the phone. I wanted to meet her later in person to discuss further steps. We never got around to it! She died shortly thereafter. I only know that her heart failed.

My dossier was assigned to another lawyer. I had no influence on this. This lawyer said he was very moved by my life story (I still do not know how he knew it.) and he wanted to help me for free. I considered it godsend at the time, until I realized that suddenly my ex-husband and his brother had obtained certain information about me that they could only have from this lawyer. I immediately terminated the retainer agreement with him. Then his wife, whom I had never seen in the office before, called me privately at home. She was furious with me and found it impossible that I had terminated the retainer agreement with her husband. She wanted answers, but I did not give them. I did not understand her anger. On the contrary, I thought that he could now take on other clients in my place, through which he would earn money. Today I still do not know what really happened to my then- lawyer. I also cannot explain why the lawyer's wife called me in such an agitated state. I can only speculate without having any evidence. But I still ask myself the following questions today:

- Did my lawyer have to die because she took the first steps to help me, opening the can of worms of offenders?
- Could it be that the subsequent lawyer was a perpetrator? And that I put a spoke in his wheel by terminating his retainer agreement?
- In these circles, one is often punished if one cannot fulfill an order. Could his wife's anger be explained by the fact that she feared for her husband because he could not accomplish what he had been assigned to do with me?

I have no choice but to leave these questions unanswered.

When I filed a complaint and later also began to report my experience publicly, many very strange things happened. According to the cult rules, if I talk, I sin and must be threatened and punished. I and other people around me were threatened directly, but also in very unusual ways. These "strange threats" were so subtly orchestrated that usually only I, or perhaps the person I was with at the time, could perceive it. These threats were also so subtle that I could not press charges because the evidence was lacking and the "story" I should have brought to the police would have been extremely curious. Today I read and hear similar things from other victims.

It was nice warm weather and I put on my beige linen pants and a light pink t-shirt. My silver Fossil brand watch with the light pink dial matched it perfectly. Because I liked to be a little different from everyone else, I put my watch on my right wrist each time.

I had decided to go to a good restaurant with a nice garden terrace to have a coffee. After I ordered my drink, a couple came and sat right at the table in front of me. I saw them from behind. The woman was dressed exactly the same as I, wore the exact same watch, and was wearing it on her right hand as I was! The man had dark, curly hair like my former partner. She was stroking his hair on the back of his neck, exactly the same way I had always done.

I was stunned and wondered how this could be - so much coincidence at once? The same clothes? The same watch?

I had a long phone call with a friend, told her that I should like to go back to school and re-train and all the places where I had already inquired. I mentioned the names of various schools and discussed the pros and cons of them with her.

A day or two later, I took a trip on the lake. Already at the harbor, a couple caught my attention because the woman was wearing an extravagant T-shirt with eye-catching writing. She kept coming near me so I should not miss her. Then, when I was on the ship, the couple sat down on the bench in front of me and started talking very loudly. It was impossible not to hear, on the contrary, I had to listen. After a while, I froze inside, because the two of them were reproducing the conversation I had had with my friend about the different schools – practically with the exact same words. It was as if they had listened to it and rehearsed it.

Again I was stunned! I wondered if I was psychotic. However, today I know that, as long as a person asks himself whether he is psychotic or not, he certainly is not. Someone who is really suffering from it does not notice it and does not ask himself this question, but claims to be haunted (for example, by little pink men and green carrots) without ever questioning it.

Perpetrators use this very fear of psychosis or other mental illness and stage such encounters to keep the victim on track, to keep them doubting whether they can trust their perceptions or gut feelings at all.

I was driving with my mother on a narrow side road of a small farming village, usually known only to locals. I know the area well because I grew up there. The landscape there is beautiful. View of lake, mountains and beautiful, lush, green meadows. We admired the landscape and talked about it in the car. A few days later I was sitting in the office of a therapist 220 km from this place. He told me how he loved to travel to that area with his wife. He especially liked the one village. He mentioned the name of the small farming village. Then he described to me the one small side road and how he and his wife used to talk about the beautiful scenery. He used almost exactly the same words my mother and I had used a few days earlier. I was shocked and once again froze inside!

I was sitting in my living room when suddenly I heard a very loud noise. I got up to look. At that moment, a helicopter flew by right in front of my balcony. The door of the helicopter was open, and I saw a man with a big camera. Totally startled, I immediately asked myself: was he filming or photographing me in my apartment now?

All this happened during the time when two of my tormentors were on trial a few years ago. Later, when I started to talk about it publicly, the observations and persecutions became noticeable again.

I had a visit from a friend. She visited me in my apartment. I told her about my life and how I was once kidnapped in a parking lot by a man with an extremely long white beard and a big belly in a white Peugeot station wagon to be punished. A short time later I was out with an acquaintance. She still had to go shopping and I was waiting for her in my car in the parking lot in front of the store. Suddenly I noticed a man with an extremely long, white beard and a fat belly in a side parking lot. He stared at me without looking away once. He was standing next to a white Peugeot station wagon and did nothing but stare at me.

While putting on makeup in the bathroom, I told a friend what type of man I liked, including style of dress. A short time later, we attended a big party abroad. While I was standing at the buffet, a man pushed his way through cheekily, and spoke to me in Swiss dialect. He looked exactly like the kind of man I had been talking about with my girlfriend. Including the style of clothing.

It was really very strange how this man addressed me in my language. How did he know that I was Swiss? We were abroad, and I had not spoken to him in Swiss German.

In the context of a further training course, I had told about my experiences as a victim for the first time. A few days later, I was driving my car over a bridge. I noticed behind me a black Mercedes bus that kept flashing its headlights. I wondered what that was all about. Then, when we stopped at a red light, there were two cars in front of me with the number 666, a Satanic number![29] And in the rearview mirror, I saw the following written on the front of the Mercedes bus: "CHECK-UP YOUR LIMITS." The bumper of the minibus was fully decorated with occult signs familiar to me.

It was clear to me at that moment this message was for me and it was a threat. This is exactly the subtle way they threaten victims. Suddenly one is accompanied on one's drive by a car with a very special identification number that indicates Satanism, or one are followed, filmed, photographed in the city while shopping or on an excursion. They do it in such a way that one can see it, but cannot furnish any proof. Friends of mine who stood by me were also threatened in this or other ways. For example, the same car drives by the house very slowly over and over again, and someone films or photographs it in such a way that it cannot be overlooked. Or friends and family members are called anonymously from home and abroad. Over and over again. I have experienced that as well. Or someone rings the doorbell under some nonsensical pretext and one actually realizes exactly what it is about: control, warning, threat. Or the same car keeps following one when one goes for a walk. Or the person standing in line at the back of the checkout line has bought exactly the same things. Likewise, it happened to me several times that I came home and my apartment door was ajar. Or my car was unlocked several times. Nothing was ever stolen or messed up. This showed that they had power and control over everything. I could list many more such examples. They also like to put dead animals, very often birds or cats, in front of the front door or on the hood of the car at night. You get pictures sent to your cell phone or computer that are a threat. For example, a picture of a person you are close to who is being tortured. These images flash only very briefly. After that, they disappear again immediately. But they are displayed over and over again and thus penetrate the subconscious. A screenshot cannot be made. Therefore, it cannot be proven. The message is clear: YOU WILL NEVER DISAPPEAR FOR US: IF YOU TALK, BLOOD WILL FLOW! YOU MUST BE SILENT! These examples are all situations that I have experienced myself.

I listened to music on the TV and cooked myself something nice in the kitchen. Shortly before, I and the person I lived with had noticed that the cable of the TV was no longer plugged into the same place. We were surprised, because neither of us had moved anything. And that is when I suddenly noticed this discordant music while I was cooking. I could hardly listen, it totally triggered me. It was as when I was a child in the torture chamber, when I was locked in a room for hours with very loud discordant music. It was as if several pieces of music were being played at the same time, with different keys and beats.

Disharmonic music is used as torture to confuse the mind.

I took out my hairbrush to comb my hair. I saw it had many long dark hairs on it. I myself had long blond hair, and I did not know anyone with this hair color and certainly no one with whom I would have shared my hairbrush. The person with whom I shared the apartment also had a different hair color, and neither of us had had any visitors; besides, nobody but us had an apartment key.

My roommate, who supported me, and I were warned very subtly on the street after I started talking about all this publicly as well. For several weeks, every time we left by car, we were accompanied by other cars. Cars with red and white warning- or breakdown signals. It was so conspicuous, because the cars always drove around us. It was clear to us that in this way we were being warned by the perpetrators. After a while they changed tactics, and it stopped.

I lived for a few weeks in a very small, remote village. There was no post office, no bakery, no other infrastructure. A few houses and the people there all knew each other. Nobody knew that I was staying there. I hid there for a few weeks. As a precaution, I lowered the blinds every evening at dusk, except for one evening when I was skyping for a short while. Then I suddenly heard a bang and saw a small fireball flying towards the balcony on the third floor. The balcony was made of wood and belonged to the attic apartment in an apartment building. I jumped up because I was afraid the balcony might catch fire. Another roommate in that building also came running immediately. At that moment, we heard a car, which had apparently parked right in front of the house, drive away very quickly with screeching tires. Someone had tried to start a fire in the apartment or on the balcony, or at least to scare people with it. It could not have been a coincidence, because it took enormous skill to hit just this one balcony, which was well hidden under the roof. Apart from this one car, there was no one around. The village was quiet, as usual at this time of day.

It was winter when I came home late at night. I opened the door, entered the hallway, and noticed light in one of the downstairs rooms of my duplex apartment. I thought I had forgotten to turn off the light before I left. When I went to enter the room to turn off the light, three masked men were standing in front of me. I was shocked and immediately dissociated. After that I woke up again on the sofa of my living room with pains in different parts of my body, but especially abdominal pains. On my knee I had an immense haematoma.

Only after a few weeks did the memory of the incident gradually come back. The men had attacked me and beaten me up. It had probably been a punishment on the one hand, but it served mainly to trigger the birth of my daughter. I was at the beginning of my sixth month of pregnancy at the time, and the cult knew it. The men had kicked me hard in the abdomen. I do not know how these three men got into my apartment and can only speculate. Two or three days later, the pain triggered the birth. I gave birth in the basement of the apartment building. During this process, I was fixed with chains that were attached to the ceiling. Before that, the perpetrators had brought me or another "ego-state" under their control again after my contractions began. The child, a tiny little girl, was immediately taken away from me by a woman.

I went for a walk in the forest. As always, I was extremely careful when I was out and about. I parked my car in a public parking lot and chose a forest path where other people were also walking. Back at my car, I opened my trunk, when a man from the car parked next to me suddenly came over to me, held a knife to my throat in a flash, and then just as quickly got back into his car and drove away.

Thus, victims and not infrequently their helpers are watched, persecuted, threatened, punished.

19. God or Cult?

As a woman of faith, I prayed to God incessantly. When I was in need, I asked God for money, housing, a job, new friends, friendly therapists, etc. Some of these things came true. At that time, my prayers consisted of requests for what I thought was right. My prayers have since changed much because I have a different understanding of them. When I look back today - with the knowledge of my life in the parallel world - I am convinced that many of them were not answers to prayers, but that Satanists, people from the cult, had fulfilled my wishes. In this way, I happily went my way in my life in the outside world, thinking that I had a good God who would take care of me. In this way, the perpetrators encouraged my Christian life, which I wanted to lead, and at the same time maintained my dissociation. I now know that the circles in which I prayed included perpetrators. At the time, I did not perceive that God actually did care for me, although He did so in a way that I was only to understand much later.

20. Inner Struggle and Doubt: Does God Really Help?

Why did God not help me? Why did He allow this to happen? Why did He not protect me? Why did He just watch and do nothing? Is He really a loving God? How can a loving God allow something like this to happen? The Bible says He sends his angels to protect us. Does that not apply to me? Why? What did I do that I did not receive God's protection?

Such questions have troubled me for a long time. I do not want to discuss Biblical theories on this. But I have found answers for myself. I had to and wanted to rewrite my faith in God, to rediscover it. With Jesus Christ. With the Holy Spirit. Then I experienced that God is indeed love.

God is just. God is not fair. I have learned this difference. I prefer to turn to a just God than to a God manipulated according to my ideas of fairness. He loves us humans unconditionally. Freedom belongs to this love. Without freedom there is no love. God loves my tormentor just as He loves me. He gives us free choice over our actions. This means that the tormentor also has his freedom: even the freedom to do evil. I, too, have this freedom. I know that this answer sounds like a cheap excuse, a pious excuse, and I could hardly accept this answer during my great suffering, because I did not understand it. I thought it was so unfair! Hearing that God is just and does not make mistakes did not do anything for me. But still, it is the truth. I was able to approach this truth very slowly, step by step, and in my personal relationship with God, I slowly realized how this very truth, which I could not understand or accept for a long time – which I even considered a cheap excuse - began to heal my wounds. And not just superficially. The truth of God and His love heals deep into the roots.

His nature and love should not be measured by the behavior of fellow human beings. It has nothing to do with that. My relationship with God is an intimate relationship, no matter how other people behave. That is my secret.

Back to the topic: I am convinced that God distinguishes between the perpetrator and the deeds. He loves the perpetrator - but not the deeds. We all have to bear the consequences of our decisions and deeds. My tormentors, as well as I. Often I have not seen that the perpetrators must bear the consequences of their own deeds. But I am gradually coming to see certain things. I can leave that to God today. I am not the one who has to pass judgement. Thank God. I personally believe that right now we are living in the time of grace, not punishment. Because God's focus is on what Jesus, His Son, did for us human beings, which is to take all punishment upon Himself. I believe that we are all in a time of grace, perpetrators and victims.

This does not mean that one should sit back and do nothing. I am clearly of the opinion that such abuse should be reported, and perpetrators should bear the consequences of their decisions! These people are an immense danger to the whole of society and especially to our children! The perpetrators should be held accountable. Absolutely! As a person with my limited vision and incomplete knowledge, I often do not see if justice is being done. On the contrary. Rather I see how these evil people succeed. Nevertheless, I know: God is just. God will bring everything to light! I am sure of that! So I can confidently do what is in my power and leave everything else to God. He will judge it in His time with His justice.

I have experienced God as a God who sets limits. And if He sets limits, then there are no two ways about it, not even for Satanists and Illuminati. The word of God is valid. And by the word of God, I actually mean a word. I have experienced God as a protecting God, despite everything that has happened. He has protected my life. He guided it in such a way that I escaped, quite contrary to the Satanic cult's plan. The whole thing has led me closer to the heart of God, which I shall never regret. This is the greatest gift for me.

I have suffered greatly from the consequences. And others in my environment, because I was a victim, also suffered because of me and certain behaviors. Even today I still notice from time to time that this or that as well as physical pain still have to do with it. But I believe that there is a reality and a truth. It is not the same, there are worlds in between. The truth is that I am healed because the Word of God in the Bible tells us so, even if reality sometimes shows something else. It is important for me to endure this tension and to convince my heart of the truth until the healing also occurs in all areas of my life in the visible. This is my realization and conviction, and this is how I live it. Truth is above reality.

With these lines I do not want to offend anyone who is suffering. I know what it means to suffer and to see no way out. This is about my experience, my thoughts, my faith. I do not want to impose anything on anyone. For me, this was an extremely long process. From the day I realized that there was something wrong with me to the day I am writing these lines, about thirty years have passed. These years were marked by question marks, tears, pain, defeat, hopelessness, but also again by joy, realizations, and victories. After every defeat, I eventually got the strength to get up again. Again and again, I was able to make the decision to go on, even after the suicide attempts. I think that is when I experienced the power of God, which is mighty in the weak. I probably should never have been able to do this on my own nor to continue on my journey. I am proud and deeply grateful for what God has already done in my life and look forward to what is to come! I used to be dependent on cult people, but today I am dependent on God. And that is my hope.

21. The Truth of the Bible

In spiritual abuse, Bible verses are very often misused. Here I should like to share a few Bible verses and passages that gave me faith that God is just, takes care of everything, and that I can let go. He sees everything! Nothing escapes Him. I wish this may serve as encouragement when one has been wronged or forced to wrong others. I personally accept it as truth.

For mine eyes are upon all their ways; they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. (Jeremiah 16:17)

Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. (Jeremiah 23:24)

Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? […] If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. (Psalm 139:7, 11-12)

He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death. (Job 12:22*)*

He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him. (Daniel 2:22)

22 Forgiveness? Forgiveness!

"Yes, I forgive."

That is my answer when I am asked about forgiveness. In it, over the years, I have found a key to inner healing. Forgiveness is a decision that I made at some point. Feelings of powerlessness and despair did not just all disappear immediately. Nor did feelings of anger and sadness. But through that decision, it was as if I had opened a prison door from inside. Instead of keeping justified resentment, anger, or hatred to myself, I allow all those feelings to leave me. They do not have to stay with me and eat away and destroy my heart or have more power and influence in my life. By making this decision, I have been able to take care of myself first and foremost. It is so to speak a selfish step at first. The negative feelings slowly give way and thus can no longer eat me from the inside. Bitterness has no more place because bitter roots destroy me. My father can no longer do anything to me today but if I were to carry around anger and resentment inside me for years to come, I would still be giving him and his deeds power over my life today. I do not want that. I forgive, so that I myself can become free. The Bible instructs us to forgive. Out of love. Out of love for ourselves and for our fellow men. That is God's care for us. The Bible also tells us to forgive our tormentors. Out of love. Why? Because it sets us free, as well as them. Sets them free? Yes, that's right... Sets them free too. Forgiveness means cutting the ungodly umbilical cord with which I was bound to the perpetrators. I decided to take the scissors in my hand and cut it. Thus, the umbilical cord has lost its purpose.

That, too, is a process. It is not as though I was able to forgive everything all of a sudden and then everything was good. I still remember how an offender once told me that I had to forgive. I replied that he could forget about it and that I had no desire to do so. And I also thought that I might never manage to forgive. That I would rather still walk around with the resentment inside me than forgive him for something like that. Until I realized that this resentment was destroying me more than him. But, most of all, I realized that the power of forgiveness is already in me, and I don't even have to look for it. I believe that through Jesus, who is alive and lives in me, this power is already in me. It was just a matter of me deciding whether to accept it or not. I accepted it. Then I called my tormentor and explained to him that I had decided to forgive after all. And I forgave him everything that was, everything I knew about, and also everything I did not know about. Phew! Wow!!!! At that time, I did not know what I was setting off. The perpetrator was unable to say anything more and was very quiet for a while. After that call, I gradually noticed many insanely bad things he had done behind my back. Things like child abuse, child pornography, embezzlement, fraud, etc. I had to take the necessary steps to get away from this person and reported my observations to the police. But I always had to remember how I told him that I wanted to forgive him for everything. This helped me personally to work through these very shocking experiences. Because of my decision to forgive, my heart was saved from feelings of revenge, hatred and excessive anger that would have harmed me.

Forgiveness, however, must never be imposed under any circumstances! Never must a pastor, counselor or therapist force forgiveness on a victim! This is a personal process. And it takes as long as it needs to. Feelings like resentment, anger, and even hatred have their rightful place, and to repress them is unhealthy! Feelings are our guideposts! But they should not determine our lives. Our actions should not be the result of anger or hatred. Feelings should serve us. Not the other way around. To have feelings is not allowed in the cult. Therefore, when feelings finally show up, one may be flooded with them. If forgiveness is imposed in that overwhelming moment, it is like sending the victim back into the cage of silence. Forgiveness is one's own personal decision, and what must be understood first is this: God is love! And love is long-suffering and patient. It bears all things and hopes all things.

23. Repentance

As a victim who was turned into a perpetrator, I inevitably encountered the question of whether I had to repent for what I had done.[30] I know that the question of guilt is a very stressful question for those affected. I had to struggle with it myself. I cannot offer anyone a ready-made solution here, but I can share my experience and my belief. I want to express my opinion knowing that there are other opinions.

This was a hard question for me.

While working through the memories as an adult woman, I stood by that cemetery where I had to murder little Benjamin, when grief, anger, and shame overtook me at the same time. I was so sad about what had happened. I was so sad about his death. But I also felt shame, shame about what I had done, about what I had been forced to do. I felt shame in that moment that I had not had the strength and understanding to say no and refuse. I was ashamed that I could go on living, but that he had to die, and die at my hands. At the same time, I was also enormously angry at those unscrupulous people who had forced me to do this.

At such moments, the question arose in me: Do I now have to apologize for this? If so, to whom? And if so, what exactly should I apologize for? For being abused in order to kill?

I talked about it with a few people. Some said that I should repent before God. Or rather, the "ego-state " that had done this should repent, the "state" that had believed the lie that "killing is necessary". Others thought I should repent before God because I had participated in rituals and thus had given glory to Satan and not to God. Still others were completely of the opposite opinion. I noticed how much one can argue theologically on this subject. From time to time, I was even condemned by someone for the "ego-state " that had become perpetrators. Possibly those counselors were bewildered and unsettled. I was, too, for a long time. But there were also those who sympathized with me, accepted and encouraged me.

At first, I felt as if certain people expected me to confess to a priest about sex before marriage, even though I had been raped. That was definitely going too far for me. That felt completely wrong to me.

However, I know of others who have gone through a completely different internal struggle. I find it infinitely important that everyone finds his own way to deal with it. No one must impose his opinion on others! One thing, however, is in my opinion necessary, even inevitable. Such inner conflicts must be resolved in order for complete healing to take place. The ambivalence is enormous in the beginning. And that is normal. And it is normal that such a process takes time. Every process, every inner conflict, looks different. A victim who has been made a perpetrator should not be forced to repent, because any coercion can be fatal and retraumatizing, as in the case of forgiveness. Victims should be allowed to say for themselves what is right for them, and they must be given the necessary time to go through this process, to find answers for themselves. Cult-exit counselors or therapists are there to provide guidance and support, not to give orders, and certainly not to condemn.

I finally found inner peace with "having to be a perpetrator". Various conflict resolutions contributed to this, sometimes even in the context of professional support. I also knew of someone in the cult who had been the victim of sexual abuse by me. I was able to talk to this person later about all this. Finally, she understood me and all the extreme circumstances at that time. Today I also understand the victim-perpetrators, including older children, who abused me at that time. The consequences of abuse and violence do not disappear in a victim just because you understand what abusers may have gone through, but it makes the healing process easier.

Afterwards, but also during this process, I talked to God about it. I was then able to experience and feel His infinite love for me. I prayed and shared the pain with Him. This pain was great. It is the worst thing for me that I had to become a perpetrator. Although God had seen and experienced everything, although nothing of me was hidden from Him, I told Him everything. I told Him how I was sad, but also angry, and I told Him my feelings and thoughts about the subject of repentance. I told Him how immensely sorry I was for all that had happened. I cried and pleaded for hours, even whole days and nights. In the process, I realized that He was even sadder and more angry than I was about everything that had happened. I talked to my Father in heaven from heart to heart. Not for a single second did I feel condemned by Him. On the contrary, I felt accepted and understood as a child by a loving and good Father.

Then I thanked Him. Thanked Him because He knows me with all my heart, listens to me and is there for me, thanked Him because He understood my inner conflict, and thanked Him because He has never condemned me, thanked Him because nothing can separate me from His love for me, thanked Him that He loves me infinitely, thanked Him because He has preserved my life, thanked Him because His plans and His thoughts about me are so infinitely greater and more wonderful than I can comprehend. After that, a supernatural peace came into my heart.

Peace of heart does not undo what has happened. Grievous wrong was done, also through my own hands, even though being guided by third parties. But I am not the one who must bear the guilt. I believe and know that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, took all the guilt on Himself about 2,000 years ago when He died on the cross and then rose again. He also bore my sins, no matter which one, no matter how it happened.

24. How to Help?

As an outsider, you are not completely incapable of action when you see a child or an adult person suffering! The first step is to ask yourself if you really believe that there is organized Satanic ritual abuse. Many cannot and will not believe such a thing. Probably it has to do with the fact that we live in a traumatized society. Traumata are pushed aside and not looked at. It is a survival strategy. This is, I believe, one reason why it is often overlooked.

Another reason is simply ignorance. And then convenience and selfishness certainly also play a role. However, the subject of ritual abuse is so cruel that it can seem unbelievable. Because it is indeed worse than anything you can imagine worse than any horror movie. For this reason, many people find such things hard to believe. One would rather not believe it.

24.1 Observe

There is a whole range of symptoms behind which ritual abuse may possibly lie. Especially when several of these symptoms manifest simultaneously, one should at least consider the possibility of ritual abuse. The following list is not exhaustive, it is based on my own experience as well as what I have observed in others who have been affected:

- Soreness in the intimate area or on the thighs, even in slim people
- Recurrent cases of chapped lips and cracked corners of the mouth
- Haematomata, especially on the thighs, in the genital area, knees, crook of arms, head

Abrasions, especially on the knees, in the genital area, on the breasts
Pain in the hands
Pain in the wrists and ankles
Pain in the heels
Frequent nosebleeds (consequence of electric shocks)
Frequent headaches, severe migraine
Frequent dizziness
Fatigue for no apparent reason
Earache (consequence of electric shocks)
Bad teeth (consequence of electric shocks)
Severe nausea without being able to vomit (vomiting = weakness. Weakness is not allowed.)
Sleepiness with a coincidental unwillingness to admit it; not wanting to go to bed (tiredness = weakness).
Frequent absent-mindedness
Hyperventilation for no apparent reason
Role-playing with other children or dolls, which may indicate violence
Drawings that indicate violence
Avoiding conflicts with adults or older children
Torturing smaller children or animals
Being sexually open at a very young age or being totally repressed
Being hungry without eating. Being thirsty but not drinking (Needs are not allowed.).
Excessive eating
Aggression
Anxiety about which one is unwilling to talk
Fear of making mistakes
Panic before exams or tests
Fear of water, swimming lessons
Loner or only a few playmates
Unusually early or unusually late menstruation in girls
Refusal ever to wear provocative clothing, or just the opposite: always wearing provocative clothing
Excessive emphasis on cleanliness and personal hygiene, no dirty clothes, or, on the contrary: quite neglected
Urge toward perfectionism

Not being able to talk as a child or adult
Fear of the night
Sleep disorders
Bedwetting
Asthma, shortness of breath, blue tinge
Self-harming behavior
Inexplicable paralysis, even unto an inability to walk
Addictive behavior
Eating disorders
Depression
Recurrent great sadness
Speech impediments, stuttering, speechlessness
Becoming frozen with fear
Overreaction to certain encounters (physician's visit, dentist, police, masked people).
Avoiding black clothes or just the opposite: always wearing only black
Trauma freeze with red, white or black candles, with certain scents, like incense, or with certain music
Panic when Christian rituals with cross, baptism, communion, singing, laying on of hands, etc. are performed.

One might expect that a troubled child with many social problems and problems at school would exhibit these symptoms. That may be, but in many cases it is not true. Victims of ritual abuse can be found everywhere. There are some who are professionals, others who have had learnt a trade. But there are also some who live in a psychiatric hospital or in assisted living. The child is usually expected to perform well in school and to be completely inconspicuous despite all the brutality. For this reason, the situation must be carefully scrutinized.

However, many of the points mentioned can also be found in people who do not experience ritual abuse. There are children who "only" experience sexual abuse or domestic violence. This is also cruel and can cause such symptoms!

Other indications that someone is regularly picked up and abused by the cult may include the following:

Dirty shoes in the morning that were still clean in the evening
Unexplained traces of blood on an article of clothing or on the body Minutes, hours or even days are missing from a person's daily life
Memories are missing
People claim to know the victim without the victim remembering it
Absences on certain days, especially holidays
Often being sick on a Monday
Repeated sudden departure after a phone call, text message or email
Professionally dressed wounds without the need to see a physician
Medications, especially sleeping pills, sedatives and painkillers do not work
Children are overprotected
A person is inexplicably or seemingly absent for 2-3 days, but comes back. This repeats itself again and again.
Wearing coded clothing
Wearing certain colors (e.g. dyed hair with rainbow colors).

24.2 Relationships

A child is kept away from "normal" people as much as possible. The closer relationships are mostly arranged and take place in the cult, or they are tolerated under strict control, often forbidden. First and foremost, I recommend establishing as normal a relationship as possible. This gives stability to the victim, whether child or adult. This enables the person concerned to make comparisons later and perhaps to notice that things are not the same elsewhere as they are in his or her own family circle.

Every healthy contact is important. Even if the child cannot be helped immediately, it is for the good of its inner stability. When I look back on my life, I am grateful for every somewhat normal relationship I have had, because I have learned from them, and these experiences have helped me at a later point in time to come to terms with the traumata. Not all people were perpetrators. After all, I also had relationships in my life that were quite normal.

Take care! Perpetrators do not like it when someone interferes. People can get into danger if they obviously seek contact with victims.

If possible, professionals who have a good knowledge of ritual abuse should be involved, or you can turn to a victim support center or a working group for ritual abuse. But be very careful whom you choose! Among the professionals, unfortunately, there are also many perpetrators, just as among the police. The great misfortune is that just as many perpetrators work as home directors of children's institutions, found an association for disadvantaged people, or are particularly committed to abused children. Such people should be scrutinized quite thoroughly and their motivation examined very closely. Not all that glitters is gold.

PLEASE do NOT turn primarily to the parents or close caregivers, such as teachers, educators, aunts, grandparents. If the child is indeed a victim of organized violence, it can be assumed in the vast majority of cases that many caregivers also belong to the circle of perpetrators, knowingly or unknowingly. They would only endanger the child even more. First, observe the child's environment very closely before deciding whom to consult.

Do not question the victim directly! Remember that a victim must report everything and faces extremely high penalties if he or she should reveal anything.

Never judge! As perverse as it may sound, there is a relationship between the victim and the perpetrators in which love is also lived. This is indeed a perverse relationship, but it exists. If you act too quickly there, you may achieve exactly the opposite of the intended effect. Just listen. Try to be as balanced as possible, no matter how a child or a person involved behaves.

In my mid-twenties, I sought sex therapy because I noticed that something was wrong with me. I realized very quickly that my therapist suspected my father of abusing me. I asked her if she agreed with my perception, and she answered in the affirmative. I then dropped out of therapy. At that time, I said that I could imagine practically any man in the world as an abuser, but certainly not my father! No, he would never do such a thing. He was not interested in sex! Then I added a few more examples to emphasize my point, which certainly confirmed her view even more. Of course, she was right, but it was too early at that time to confront me with it.

Meet the child or adult at the level he or she is on. Victims need to know that they are being served, not dominated! Do not exercise power, even if you think you are in the right!

Before you decide to help, think carefully about what you can offer and where your limits are. Much is demanded of someone who wants to help; excessive demands on the part of a helper with a subsequent break-off of contact can be very fatal and traumatizing for a victim. It is best if a helper network can be created.

Be prepared for a long support period. Victims of ritual abuse have suffered extremely severe traumata. Their identity has been attacked, diminished, and severely damaged. They often do not know who they are. They have to learn how to live.

But the most important thing is: If the child or the person talks about their experience, please trust them! And be prepared to be open-minded about topics that - because they are so incomprehensible - can trigger unexpected emotions.

It is highly traumatizing when a victim finally gets up the courage to talk and then encounters someone who doesn't believe them. Tell the child or adult that you believe them. Show that you trust them, even if it sounds unbelievable - because it is! Thus, it is important to listen and believe. Collect the memories like small pieces of a puzzle. If you do that, in time (It may take years.) the whole picture will emerge.

One assertion of ritual abuse deniers is that we victims only want to attract attention. It may well be that we have experienced something bad, but there is no such thing as organized violence or ritual sacrifice. This is a lie and cannot be proven, they say.

If we victims really only craved attention, why should we seek it with the topic of ritual abuse of all things? In doing so, one encounters many opponents and enemies who want to make one's life difficult. It is even dangerous, and one can be threatened, even killed. One is branded a nutcase or a lunatic. One loses friends and acquaintances. If I really only suffered from a need for attention and wanted to fill this need with lies, then I would definitely choose another topic. Victims need to be heard and to be believed. Whoever gives the bonus of trust to the victim helps to bring these crimes to light.

Two small but very helpful touchstones are as follows:

- A person affected often does not dare to tell what they have experienced because it is so incomprehensible and they know that they may not be understood. Often they apologize to the other person when she tells about it because it is so shocking. This is a characteristic. Liars do not normally apologize.
- Victims usually hope for quite a long time that they are mistaken when a memory arises. Not infrequently, they first look for counter-evidence instead of evidence for the memory.

24.3 Examining Real and "False" Memories

Believing a person is enormously important. But how can one know whether the truth is really being told? As a victim of ritual abuse and MK-Ultra, one is initially so overwhelmed by the memories because everything is so incomprehensible, almost impossible to believe. So it is hard for one to accept what one remembers. At least that is how it was for me. That is why it was important for me to check what was possible.

Deniers of ritual abuse often talk about false memories. The term as such is illogical to me. Memories are memories. If they were false, they would not be memories, but inner images of which one is not sure whether one experienced it or not. Or it would concern an event, which one is convinced that one has experienced, but which did not happen in reality.

Perpetrators also confuse a victim by intentionally creating strange memories or pretending to be real. Very often actors are used to confuse a victimized person. I have memories of a strange creature: A kind of red dragon with crocodile-like skin always put a plate of bland soup or water with stale bread in the cellar where I was locked up.

What might have happened there? It may be that actors dressed up as a dragon or reptile and fed me, the traumatized, freshly tortured child - and later also as an adult. In these circles, victims are very often given drugs. It may therefore also be that I experienced a drug trip with distorted perception, which the perpetrators exploited. In any case, I cannot say conclusively what exactly happened at that time. But I know that I experienced it. I just do not know how the perpetrators managed it.

Other victims report having seen UFOs. I myself have not experienced anything like that, but I do would not question the statements of other survivors at all for the very same reason mentioned above. The perpetrators use all possible means to deceive and confuse. They certainly do not shy away from suggesting to victims that they have been picked up by extraterrestrials and UFOs.

What happens to a child, a victim, who tells that they fed by a dragon or abducted by some Martians in a UFO? It is very likely that they will not be taken seriously. They will be told that they had nightmares, or perhaps even be labeled mentally ill. This serves the perpetrators, and they can continue undisturbed with their acting, drug trips and invoking spirits.

As a devout Christian woman and as a survivor of ritual abuse and mind control, I know that there is not only our earth as a dimension. The Illuminati and Satanists, who had me in their power, invoked spirits and demons. I definitely believe in the possibility that demonic powers might create such dragons and strange, unearthly looking beings to manipulate, exert power, instill fear. However, I personally do not believe that extraterrestrial beings actually exist. I believe in what the Bible says, that God created the heavens and the earth. I believe that Satan is a fallen angel and can torment, manipulate, and lie to people with his demons. Satan, his demons, his worshippers, and followers do have some power, but the Bible declares that Jesus has all the authority over heaven and earth. There is, in my opinion, a huge difference between having only some power and having all the authority.

Now back to checking the memories:

A traumatic memory stored in trauma memory is like a frozen image or movie. The moment it comes up through a trigger, flashback or otherwise, you can examine it closely. Details are recognizable. It feels like a fresh memory. But the photo or film may not be complete at first. Perhaps there are other photos or parts of the film stored in the trauma memory. Since it was not stored chronologically, but was simply "thrown" into the trauma memory on the occasion of the trauma, the impression of chaos and incompleteness may arise at first. In my opinion, there is then a danger of embellishing memories to make them seem coherent and complete.[31] This type of editing is not a memory, of course, but an attempt to put events into an understandable and coherent context. It is important here to recognize the difference between memories and hypotheses.

For example, I distinctly remember being at Amerois Castle in Belgium. But how I got there I am unfortunately unable to say with certainty, even though I wish to. I know that I was sometimes driven there in a police car for certain rituals, but I am not sure whether I was also driven to Belgium or only to other places in Switzerland. With all the knowledge about my life story and about the machinations of the perpetrators, I can very well imagine how I got there. But this is only a hypothesis, and not a memory.

For a victim, it can be a great support simply to accept the memories that come up in the first place, whether they make sense or not, whether parts are missing or not. If they are accompanied by another person in this process, they can be supported in this way. Personally, I first went through many things alone with God. I imagined it as if I were depositing the memories on a shelf. The memories stayed on the shelf until another memory came along that made sense with that specific memory, or until I could check certain details. Only later did I discuss what I had uncovered, first with close friends, and then with the help of trauma specialists.

In my experience, it is possible to distinguish between memories and hypotheses. However, it is difficult at first to accept certain memories as truth. A person affected often doubts the experience himself at first, because it is so unbelievable and inconceivably evil and beyond everything normal. Therefore, it may be advisable to put it aside at first, until further touchstones are added.

How and what can be checked? Checking can mainly concern details.

I suddenly had an inner image in which I saw myself locked in a cage in a cellar. I painted the shape of the cellar. The shape was special, but I saw gaps through which light came in. I also drew these. At first, I did not know exactly what to do with them. Later, other memories came. One was that - seen from my cage - there were men coming into the basement on to the right in front. So I thought there must be a door there. Some time later, I remembered going down two or three flights of stairs to get to that basement and how I used to give medical care to children there when I was a teenager. At some point I remembered hearing voices in the basement, namely, the voices of people singing. Then I assumed it must have been a chapel. When I finally remembered the name of the village where it all happened, I went there and looked for that chapel. I had no memory of ever consciously being in that remote village. However, when I actually found a chapel in the village and saw that the cellar I had drawn before actually corresponded to the particular shape of the chapel and that there was actually a side door on the right and that there were actually some steps leading down, I knew: My memories were right!

I also consciously looked for details in the memory. It was as if I had looked at the memory like a photograph or a film in which I had played a leading role. And I took a close look at that.
